Rowland, J.—The only point for decision is whether as held by the Subordinate Judge, the application presented to him for execution of a mortgage decree by sale of the mortgaged properties was barred by time. The Subordinate Judge was of opinion that s. 48, Civil P. O. was a bar. The plaintiff (now decree-holder) had sued on three mortgage bonds and obtained a preliminary decree dated June 23, 1922, for approximately Rs. 42,000. The decree mentioned as usual a period of grace which having expired, the decree-holder applied for and obtained a decree-absolute for sale dated December 19, 1923. He applied to execute this decree on August 16, 1926, and was met by an objection on behalf of some of the judgment-debtors that the decree in the form in which it had been drawn was not executable because the debts due on the three mortgage bonds were separate debts secured on different items of property and the amounts for which the several properties were liable must be specified in the decree before it could be executed. The Subordinate Judge disallowed this objection, but, on appeal, this Court on August 3, 1928, reversed that decision and said referring to the judgment in the original suit that the decree as it stood could not be executed and the Subordinate Judge must proceed to execute the decree substantially as three decrees. That being so, the order of the lower Court directing execution to proceed was set aside and the case remanded for disposal according to law. Thereafter on September 13, 1928, the decree-holder suffered the execution to be dismissed for default.

He next applied in 1930 for amendment of the decree which was duly ordered to be done on July 16, 1930. Subsequently he found that some further amendment was necessary and obtained orders to that effect on August 27, 1932, and September 24, 1932. On July 8, 1933, he made his second application to execute the decree and this application was dismissed on June 20, 1934, for default in prosecution. The third application to execute the decree was presented on January 2, 1937, and is the application, against which the objection under s. 48, Civil P. O., has been allowed by the Subordinate Judge. The Subordinate Judge was of opinion that the period of 12 years began to run from December 19, 1923, the date of the decree absolute and expired in December 1935.

For the appellants, reference is made to the words in s. 48 "12 years from the date of the decrees ought to be executed" and it is said that when there was no executable decree in existence before July 16, 1930, the decree sought to be executed must be considered to be of that date and 12 years will run from that date and it has further been suggested that September 24, 1932, again gives a starting point available to the decree-holder for computing the period of 12 years laid down in s. 48. In support of this contention reference is made to Baldeo Shukul v. Syed Yusuf, 60 Ind. Cas. 318 (1) where a Single Judge of this Court took the view that the words "decree sought to be executed" must include the amended decree. The learned Judge did not quote authority for his view, but he referred to what was generally understood to be the law under the old Lim. Act when Art. 179 had to be construed. It may be that the learned Judge was referring to such decisions as that in Muhammad Suleman Khan v. Muhammad Yar Khan (2) in which although Art. 179, as it then stood, contained no reference to the date of the amended decree as distinct from the date of the decree itself, the date of decree had been held for the purposes of that Article to mean or at least to include the date of the amended decree where there had been an amendment. It may be noticed here that subsequent to that decision both the Lim. Act of that time and the Civil P. O. have been repealed and their place taken by new enactments Article 182 which takes the place of Art. 179 in the Lim. Act has been amplified and now makes specific provisions for a period of three years' limitation to run from the date of an amended decree where there has been an amendment.

In s. 48 on the other hand the words are "date of decree sought to be executed," without any qualifying reference to possible amendments subsequent to the date of the original decree. It has therefore been argued for the respondents that in construing s. 48 we ought to limit ourselves to examination of the provisions of the Code itself and not import the provisions of other enactments, more particularly Art. 182, Lim. Act, which by its own terms applies only to the period for execution of a decree or order not provided for by s. 48, Civil P. O.

In support of this view we have been referred to decisions of the High Courts in Bombay, Allahabad, Calcutta, Lahore and the Chief Court of Lucknow. In Bombay the matter came under consideration in Narsingrao v. Bando Krishna (3). In this case the decree had been passed under the old Code and the Court considered the words in s. 205 "the decree shall bear the date the day on which the judgment was pronounced." It was said that this language was imperative and was designed to meet precisely a case of this sort where owing to certain oversights or irregularities a delay has intervened between the delivery of the judgment and the formal drawing of a correct decree. This was laid notwithstanding that the decree which was at first drawn was incapable of execution until it was amended. I may in passing mention that this case was not apparently brought to the notice of the learned Judge of this Court who decided Baldeo Shukul v. Syed Yusaf, 60 Ind. Cas. 318 (1). Both those decisions were examined in Faqir Chand v. Kundan Singh (4) where the learned Judges drew special attention to the wording of col. 1 of Art. 182 and held that the amendment of a decree does not give a new date for starting a period of limitation if the application for execution is beyond the period of twelve years allowed by s. 48. That is, the period of twelve years under s. 48 is final and cannot be extended by any amendment of the decree. The view of the Lahore High Court is expressed in Ganesh Das v. Vishan Das (5) in which the above Bombay and Allahabad decisions were also followed by the Chief Court of Oudh in Narendra Bahadur Singh v. Oudh Commercial Bank, Ltd. (6). In Calcutta a similar view was taken in a decision apparently unreported but which was taken on appeal to His Majesty in Council and the judgment of the Judicial Committee is reported in Khulna Loan Co. v. Jnanendra Nath Bose (7). The report shows that the Subordinate Judge had proceeded on the view that the period of twelve years provided in the case of a decree does not certainly begin to run until the decree becomes operative and capable of execution but the High Court took the opposite view observing:

"The terms of s. 48 seem to us to be perfectly clear, and according to that section time runs from the date of the decree. The date of the decree is fixed by O. XX, r. 6, and we cannot understand how there can be any other date of the decree, from which limitation should run."

Their Lordships of the Judicial Committee simply stated that they saw no reason to differ from the judgment of the High Court. I think that we are bound to follow these authorities and cannot hold that time for the purposes of s. 48 is to be calculated from a date prescribed elsewhere than in that section. I should, however, state that we have been referred to a recent decision of this Court in Ram Ranbijaya Prasad Singh v. Kesho Prasad Singh (8) which is said to favour a different view. The facts in that case are not quite on all fours with those before us, for the question there was whether the starting point for the period of twelve years under s. 48 was the date of the decree of the original Court or the date of the final order of the Appellate Court. The point decided was that time would run from the final order of the Appellate Court, and in the course of the judgment reference is made to Art. 182 in support of that proposition. The learned Judges did not say that the decree sought to be executed in s. 48 was the decree of the Appellate Court as has been sometimes held; if that had been their reading of the scope of s. 48, then it would not have been necessary to invoke Art. 182 in the determination of the starting point for limitation under s. 48 in cases where there has been an appeal. But whether the observations in Ram Ranbijaya Prasad Singh v. Kesho Prasad Singh (8) are in their entirety correct or not with reference to Art. 182 (2), I do not think we are to treat those observations as applicable to cases falling within all the sub-clauses of Art. 182. Such a view would have a surprising result if applied to Art. 182 (5), and one which I do not think can have been intended by the learned Judge. So I think we should not regard these observations as applying to sub-cl. (4) or any other sub-clause than No. 2. And in dealing with the matter before us, I feel no doubt that we ought to follow the current of authority in Bombay, Allahabad, Lahore, Calcutta and Lucknow and to hold that the application presented on January 2, 1937, to execute the decree dated December 19, 1923, was barred by s. 48, Civil P. O. I would dismiss this appeal with costs to each act of contesting respondents.

James, J.—I agree to the order proposed by my learned brother and I agree with his view that we must regard ourselves as bound by the current of authority on this question to accept as correct the view of the learned Subordinate Judge, although if the matter were res integra, I should feel more difficulty. In Muhammad Suleman Khan v. Muhammad Yar Khan (2) the Allahabad High Court was dealing with Arts. 178 and 179, Lim. Act of 1877. Sir Sultan Ahmad for the appellants suggests that s. 230 of the former Civil P. O. would also have applied to that case; but the application in execution with which the learned Judges were dealing had been made within twelve years of the original decree, so that whether the provisions of s. 230 applied or whether they did not, the Court in that particular case was not required to consider them. Sir Sultan Ahmad suggests that the remark with which the judgment ends, that with regard to any future application in execution, para. 4 of col. 3 of Art. 179 contains the limitation which will be applicable, implies that the learned Judges had considered the question of whether after twelve years from the date of the original decree execution would or would not be barred by the provisions of s. 230. If it had been clear that s. 230 did apply to that particular case, the decision would have been of considerable authority in support of Sir Sultan Ahmad's view, because any obiter dictum of Sir John Edge is to be treated with respect; but it is not clear that s. 230 did apply in this case at all.

In 1808, when both of these Acts were repealed and re-enacted, a new s. 48, Civil P. O., took the place of the old s. 230; and Arts. 181 and 182 took the place of Arts. 178 and 179 of the Schedule in the Lim. Act. Art. 182 was amended in such a manner as to give statutory authority, to the decision of Sir John Edge and Banerji, J., but applications governed by s. 48, Civil P. O., were excluded from its operation; and s. 48 merely said that limitation was to run from the date of the decree of which execution was sought. In favour of the appellants' view we have the decision of a Single Judge of this Court in Baldeo Shukul v. Syed Yusuf, 60 Ind. Cas. 318 (1); but the Allahabad High Court expressly dissented from that decision in Faqir Chand v. Kundan Singh (4) and the weight of authority in general appears to be against it. I find some difficulty in treating the decision of this Court in Ram Ranbijaya Prasad Singh v. Kesho Prasad Singh (8) in the manner in which Sir Sultan Ahmad suggests, as authority for the view that in looking for the starting point for limitation under s. 48, Civil P. O., we must apply the conditions laid down in Art. 182 of the Schedule to the Lim. Act. In that case the learned Judges were dealing with para. 2 of col. 3, of the Schedule and not with para. 4; but I find it difficult to act upon the general proposition that the provisions of Art. 182 should be held in any way to affect s. 48, Civil P. O.

The provisions of Art. 182 cannot be read into Art. 183, as is clear from the decision of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in Abdul Majid v. Jawahir Lal (9) wherein it was held that the decision of the Appellate Court could only afford a new starting base for limitation under Art. 183 when there was a decree of the Appellate Court in which the original decree merged; and if Art. 182 cannot be invoked to find the starting point for the twelve years' rule of limitation prescribed by Art. 183, it appears to me difficult to hold that it can be invoked to find the starting point for the twelve years' rule under s. 48, Civil P. O., since Art. 182 prescribing the three years' rule for petitions of decree-holders in execution, is expressly excluded from application where the twelve years' rule may apply, under Art. 183 of the Schedule or s. 48, Civil P. O. In Khulna Loan Co. v. Jnanendra Nath Bose (7) their Lordships of the Judicial Committee approved of the decision that the period of twelve years under s. 48 ran, not from the date when the decree became operative and capable of execution, but from the date of the decree; and I consider that the decisions of the Allahabad High Court in Faqir Chand v. Kundan Singh (4) of the Bombay High Court in Narsingrao v. Bando Krishna (3) and of the High Court at Lahore in Ganesh Das v. Vishan Das (5) leave us no option but to hold that the view taken by the learned Subordinate Judge was right and to dismiss the appeal.

Mrs. VIOLET PETERSON—APPLICANT
versus

In the matter of THE ESTATE OF THE LATE MRS ADELAIDE ELIZABETH
FORBES—OPPOSITE PARTY

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 10—Applicability to proceedings for probate of will—Two rival applications for probate—Date of institution, whether date when application was filed or date when caveat was entered—Succession Act (XXXIX of 1925), ss 295, 273.

Proceedings for obtaining probate of a will are not suits. The direction in s. 295, Succession Act, is only that the procedure of a suit shall be followed and not that proceedings, on becoming contentious, shall "become" regular suits instituted on the date of their becoming contentious. Section 10 of the Civil P. O. is, therefore, not strictly applicable to such proceedings. Even assuming, however, that it is applicable in principle, it is clear that as between rival applications for probate it is by no stretch of reasoning possible to treat as the date of institution the date on which the caveator may choose to allow the proceedings to become contentious. The only date which can be regarded as the date of institution with a view to deciding which of two rival "suits" is "previously instituted" must be the date on which the petition was filed and not the date on which the caveat was entered.

Order.—On September 26, 1939, my learned brother Bennett, J. declined to take into consideration an application* for stay of proceedings in this Court under s. 10 of the Civil P. O. on the ground that Mr. Forbes and Mr. O'Neill not having filed any caveat or affidavit had at that time no right to be heard in the case. Subsequently on October 13, Mr. O'Neill alone filed a caveat supported by an affidavit, but did not present any fresh application under s. 10. November 24 being fixed for the evidence on behalf of the caveator, on November 20, that is to say, only four days ago, Mr. Walford on behalf of Mr. O'Neill presented a fresh application under s. 10 of the Civil P. O.

The facts which give rise to the consideration of this application are as follows:

It is common ground between the parties that the late Mrs. Forbes had executed a will on January 23, 1938. She apparently left Lucknow for Mussoorie on June 5, 1939 but died at Dehra Dun on the morning of June 6. Mr. Forbes returned to Lucknow not long afterwards, but took no immediate action with a view to obtaining probate of his mother's will of which he and the applicant Mrs. Peterson were co-executors. On July 12, Mrs. Peterson filed the present application for probate as executrix under the will. It is said that prior to her doing so, she had been approached by her brother with a view to their making a joint application in the Calcutta High Court, which was more suited to Mr. Forbes as a forum because he had business in that part of India and is not at the present time ordinarily a resident in India. It is not disputed that on July 4, Mr. O'Neill informed Counsel for the petitioner that on or about June 22, 1939, Mr. Forbes had discovered among the late Mrs. Forbes's papers a codicil in the terms of which the petitioner Mrs. Peterson ceased to be an executrix. It is said by the learned Counsel on his behalf that Mr. Forbes after that date instructed his solicitors to file an application in the Calcutta High Court for the probate of the will and codicil. On July 12, as mentioned above, Mrs. Peterson filed her application in this Court and on July 26, having come to know that her brother was intending to file an application at Calcutta, she entered a caveat in the Calcutta High Court, a course of action said to be permissible under the rules of that Court. It was not till August 3, that Mr. Forbes filed his application in the Calcutta High Court. On August 9, Mrs. Peterson followed up her caveat by filing an affidavit in support of it in the Calcutta High Court with the consequence that the proceedings in that Court became contentious and the provisions of s. 295 of the Indian Succession Act (Act XXXIX of 1925) came into effect. Meanwhile citations had been served on Mr. Forbes and Mr. O'Neill, who is an executor under the terms of the alleged codicil though not of the original will, on August 17, 1939. They did not, however, as mentioned above enter a caveat or take any action in this Court.

It is important to note that notice to produce the will had been served on Mr. O'Neill and Mr. Forbes on July 14, 1939, and that on July 17, Mr. Forbes somewhat disingenuously wrote on the back of the summons that the will which he was asked to produce had been sent to Calcutta in connection with his application for probate "made" in the Calcutta High Court that application in fact not having been made, a fact of which he could not but be aware. It was not indeed until July 28, that he himself at Calcutta signed the necessary papers so that the application could be made on August 3.

Subsequently Mrs. Peterson filed an application in the Calcutta High Court under s. 10 of the Civil P. O. asking for the proceedings in that Court to be stayed pending the disposal of the proceedings in this Court. That application was dismissed on August 30. I have nothing before me except a copy of the formal order. It appears that several points were argued but the main ground was probably the fact that at the date when this matter was argued at Calcutta, there being no caveat or affidavit filed in this Court the proceedings in this Court, were without any defendant and it could not be said that the proceedings at Calcutta were between the same parties. In fact the application to the Calcutta High Court under s. 10 of the Civil P. O. was obviously premature.

The matter came up for hearing again in this Court on September 4, and again on September 26, when Mr. Forbes and Mr. O'Neill sought to oppose the application in this Court without filing a caveat or affidavit, and it was for that reason that my learned brother on September 21 declined to hear them in the case and in consequence Mr. O'Neill did ultimately file the caveat on October 13, on which date, as the will was then before the Court, having been procured from Calcutta, evidence in formal proof of the will was taken and put on the record.

Learned Counsel for the caveator Mr. O'Neill has sought to argue before me really only one point. After reciting the sequence of events he contends that there is a previously instituted suit within the meaning of s. 10 of the Civil P. O. between the same parties proceeding in the Calcutta High Court and that therefore this Court should not proceed with the trial of the present suit, the matter in issue here being directly and substantially the same as that which is in issue in the Calcutta High Court. Put in simple words he says that there is a prior suit pending in the Calcutta High Court and that therefore this Court should stay these proceedings until the matter has been finally decided by the Calcutta High Court. He suggests that that Court is already dealing with the whole matter and the application before this Court only relates to half of it. This, however, is scarcely a correct statement because the caveat itself brings the second half of the matter into issue before this Court. He suggests that there is a danger of contradictory decisions and he remarks that the petitioner has not again moved the High Court at Calcutta under s. 10 of the Civil P. O. after the proceedings became contentious in this Court. Learned Counsel has referred to a number of cases which are reported in 14 O. W. N. 924 at 9 [Ramani Debi v. Kumud Bandhu Mookerjee (1)] I. L. R. 41 Cal 819 [Saroja Sundar Basak v. Abhoy Charan Basak (2)] O. W. N. 541 [Radhashyam Das v. Ran Sundari Dassi (3)] I. L. R. 22 Bom. 261, pages 263, 264 and 266, Chotalal Chunil v. Bai Kabubai (4)] and I. L. R. 53 Bom. 8 [Venidas Nemchand v. Bai Champav (5)]. In none of these cases, however, was the question considered at what date an application for probate was to be considered to have become a suit. The use of the term "become suit" is itself a very loose use of language and not supported by the terms of s. 295 of the Indian Succession Act. In those cases it was merely considered in a general way that an application for probate became contentious only on the filing of a caveat supported by an affidavit, and thus became a suit in the sense that it had to be tried as a suit. The gist of the learned Counsel's argument is that when a caveat and affidavit are filed the proceedings then become a suit and it is to be taken that the suit is instituted on the date on which the proceedings become contentious. In effect this amounts to saying that the date of institution of such so-called suit is entirely at the mercy of the caveator, a proposition which is absurd when thus baldly stated. One might almost as well say that a suit becomes instituted only when the written statement is filed by the defendant, a proposition which is patently absurd.

To my mind it is clear on the analogy of a pauper application under O. XXXIII, r. 8, of applications under s. 47 of the Civil P. O. when those proceedings are treated as suits, and of an application under s. 95 subsequently treated a plaint in a suit such as was discussed in 16 Ind. Cas 443 [Bhut Nath Pal Mistry v. Chandra Binode Pal Chowdhary (6)] that any application which is subsequently converted into a plaint or is to be treated as a plaint and the foundation for a suit, must be considered to date back as a plaint to the date on which it was filed as an application.

In point of fact the conduct of the caveator and the other applicant to the Calcutta High Court, Mr. Forbes, in this case is, to my mind, open to criticism. Section 279 (1) of the Indian Succession Act provides that :

"Every person applying to any of the Courts mentioned in the proviso to s. 273 for probate of a will or letters of administration of an estate intended to have effect throughout British India."

As is the case with reference to the present application shall state in his petition, in addition to the matters respectively required by s. 276 and s. 278, that to the best of his belief no application has been made to any other Court for a probate of the same will or for letters of administration of the same estate, intended to have such effect as last afore-said :

"Or, where any such application has been made, the Court to which it was made, the person or persons by whom it was made and the proceedings (if any) had thereon."

Sub-section (2) provides that :

"The Court to which any such application is made under the proviso to s. 273 may, if it thinks fit, reject the same."

The clear intention of this section was to prevent from arising the very situation which has arisen in the present case and the Courts having to decide a question of priority between competitive applications made to different Courts. No copy of the application to the Calcutta High Court is before me and it is not possible to say whether compliance has been made with the provisions of the section, but I am inclined to suppose that it cannot have been complied with because the application to this Court had been made three weeks before the application was made at Calcutta, and the bulk of the property is situated in this province, and if those facts had been brought to the notice of the Calcutta High Court in the application itself, that Court would perhaps have declined to take up the application made to it in the light of sub-s. (2) of s. 279.

As a result of the action taken by the caveator, however, this question, which does not seem ever to have come up for decision before, has now to be decided as to whether the application of the caveator of this case to the Calcutta High Court though later in date does take priority in view of the fact that the proceedings there became contentious before it become so here.

In the first place it is clear that s. 10 of the Civil P. O. is not in terms applicable to cases of this kind. My attention has been drawn to a long series of cases in which it has been held that proceedings in s. 295 of the Indian Succession Act are not suits, as indeed is apparent from the wording of the section. The following cases have been referred to : 68 Ind. Cas. 671 [Maung Tun Yin v. Ma Sein Yin (1)], I. L. R. 8 Rangoon 474 [Ko Maung Gyi v. Daw Tok (8)], I. L. R. 50 All. 238 [Kanhaiya Lal v. Gendo] (9) I. L. R. 33 Bom., 256 [Sundrabai Sahab v. The Collector of Belgaum (10)] and 7 O. W. N. 373 at p. 375 [T. Nathan v. Mrs. A. S. Nathan (11)].

The wording of s. 295 is in any case quite clear. It provides that :

"In any case before the District Judge in which there is contention, the proceedings shall take, as nearly as may be, the form of a regular suit, according to the provisions of the Civil P. O. 1908 in which the petitioner for probate ... shall be the plaintiff, and the person who has appeared to oppose the grant shall be the defendant."

It is quite clear that the direction here is only that the procedure of a suit shall be followed and not that proceedings on becoming contentious, shall "become" regular suits instituted on the date of their becoming contentious. Section 10 of the Civil P. O. is, therefore, not strictly applicable. Even assuming, however, that it is applicable in principle, I am clear that as between rival applications for probate, it is by no stretch of reasoning possible to treat as the date of institution the date on which the caveator may choose to allow the proceedings to become contentious.

(7) 68 Ind. Cas. 671; 11 L B R 331; A I R 1923 Rang 9.

The only date which can be regarded as the date of institution with a view to deciding which of two rival "suits" is "previously instituted" must, in my opinion, be the date on which the petition was filed. Applying the principles stated in s. 10 of the Civil P. O. on that basis, I am not able to hold that the matter in issue in these proceedings before me is also directly and substantially in issue in a previously instituted suit between the same parties litigating under the same title, etc., etc.

The application accordingly fails and is dismissed.

ACCUSED—RESPONDENT.

Criminal trial—Evidence—Witness—Statement to Police—Repudiation of portion—Duty of Court.

When a witness is confronted with a portion of his Police statement which he repudiates, the Police Officer recording his statement should be questioned specifically with regard to that portion of the statement. The practice of merely asking the Police Officer perfunctorily whether a particular document represents the witness's statement as a whole should be condemned. It is the obvious duty of the Judge to apply his mind to the question whether he is satisfied that the denial is to be rejected.

Or. A. from an order of the Sessions Judge, Mianwali, dated May 28, 1938.

Mr. Mohammad Monir, the Assistant Advocate-General, for the Crown.

Mr. B. R. Puri, for the Respondent.

Blacker, J.—Jiwan Das was tried by the learned Sessions Judge of Mianwali on charges under ss. 302 and 307, I. P. C., for the murder of Rahman and the attempted murder of Mst. Fatto at Manda Khel on March 16, 1938. The assessors gave a unanimous verdict of guilty on both charges, but in spite of this, the learned Sessions Judge acquitted him. The Crown has appealed against this order of acquittal and the respondent has been represented by Counsel before us. The facts of the case are that the deceased and his mother, Mst. Fatto who has given evidence in this case were neighbours of the accused. There was some dispute between them about a boundary but this had been ostensibly patched up by a compromise between the parties some days before the occurrence. On the day of occurrence, however, there was an altercation between two of the children of the families in which their mothers Mst. Fatto, the injured person and Mst. Dewan, the wife of the respondent were implicated. These two women abused each other and then the respondent came and also abused Mst. Fatto. He then went up the roof of his house and taking a double-barrelled shot gun, fired a shot at her which wounded her. This attracted to the spot her son Rahman who was working in his loom a short distance away and he was also shot and killed. Karamullah and his mother, Mst. Pathani were standing by watching the occurrence and the accused also aimed his gun at them but as they took shelter behind the wall the pellets struck the wall. Karamullah then went to the Police Station which is about four miles away and promptly reported this incident. In this report, however, he implicated Jetha Nand, the son of the respondent also. Jetha Nand was not implicated by the other witnesses in Court. Karamullah was accompanied when he went to the Police Station by Nawaz Khan, one of the prosecution witnesses and his mother Mst. Pathani who is also a prosecution witness. The Sub-Inspector who was questioned on this point states that the report of Karamullah in which he falsely implicated Jetha Nand was not recorded in their presence as he was taken inside a room and they stayed outside. There is no reason to disbelieve this witness on this point. Other witnesses to the occurrence are Hidayat-Ullah, Khan Zaman, Ghulam Hussain, Mohammad Khan and Suleman. The reason why the learned Sessions Judge has acquitted the respondent appears to be that he has been influenced by the medical evidence in thinking that the story that the Respondent fired from a higher level is false. He has accordingly subjected all the prosecution witnesses to a very severe criticism and has come to the conclusion that none of them can be relied upon. He is therefore of opinion that he cannot tell the circumstances in which Rahman met his death and he has accordingly acquitted the respondent. In coming to this conclusion, the learned Sessions Judge has not, in our opinion, fully appreciated the weight of the undoubted facts that this occurrence took place in daylight, that Mst. Fatto must know who fired at her and that no conceivable theory has been put forward by any

Be that however as it may, the findings of the learned Sessions Judge appear to us to be based on false inferences drawn from the evidence. (His Lordship then examined the evidence and proceeded). There is only one circumstance which tells in any way against the evidence of Nawaz Khan and Mst. Fatto, and that is that their story in Court is inconsistent with their Police statements in one particular, namely that after she was shot Mst. Fatto ran away into her house. They have both denied making such statements and it must be confessed that it seems unlikely that the woman, at any rate, would have made such a statement as it would be quite inconsistent with the rest of her story that she had witnessed the firing upon her son. In this connection we consider it necessary to comment upon the slipshod manner in which it has been attempted to prove that these witnesses did make the statements which they deny having made. A mere perfunctory question was put to the Sub-Inspector of Police whether the statements as a whole were recorded correctly by him during the investigation, to which he replied in the affirmative. No effort was, however, made to ask him the specific question whether the witnesses did make those two particular statements which they now deny having made and whether their actual statements accurately and could not in any way have misunderstood them. This is very important in this case first because, the witnesses deny having made the statements, and secondly, because it seems to us unlikely that they did make them in the exact form in which they appear in the record, and thirdly, because there is not such a very great difference between them and the statements given in Court as to put it beyond the bounds of reasonable possibility that the Police Officer who was not examining them with a view to extracting every detail of the story with meticulous accuracy could not have misunderstood them on this point. We consider that in every such case when a witness is confronted with a portion of his Police statement which he repudiates, the Police Officer recording his statement should be questioned specifically with regard to that portion of the statement. We cannot but condemn the practice of merely asking the Police Officer perfunctorily whether a particular document represents the witness's statement as a whole. Whenever a witness denies having made a previous statement, it is the obvious duty of the Judge to apply his mind to the question whether he is satisfied that the denial is to be rejected. But even giving this discrepancy the fullest possible weight in favour of the accused, the utmost result to which we could come would be that these witnesses are slightly improving their story in order to make it fit in with the position that Mst. Fatto was a direct eye-witness of the shot fired at her son. If she were not an eye-witness, the effect of her evidence would be just as good. If she is herself shot and within a few seconds her son rushes out and is also shot, in the absence of very strong evidence to the contrary, the presumption is overwhelming that the same person fired both shots.

We are therefore of the opinion on considering all the evidence that there is no reason whatever to reject the story told by Mst. Fatto, Mst. Pathani and Nawaz Khan. Mst. Fatto was certainly there; Mst. Pathani was a neighbour and obviously must have been there; and Nawaz Khan has given good reasons for being there. The credit of these persons is also enhanced by the fact that they have refused to endorse the false implication of Jetha Nand and it is impossible to understand the position taken up by the learned Sessions Judge when he assumes that they would have falsely implicated Jetha Nand if the Sub-Inspector had not already told them that Jetha Nand had an alibi. There is no evidence that when they made that statement at the Police Station either they or the Sub-Inspector knew that Jetha Nand could prove an alibi and the probabilities are strongly against this. We are of the opinion therefore that the acquittal of the respondent is totally unjustified and amounts to a miscarriage of justice. We therefore agree with the assessors in this case and not with the learned Sessions Judge and we accept the Government appeal. Jiwan Das, respondent, is accordingly found guilty on both charges of the murder of Ranman and the attempted murder of Mst. Fatto. We are unable to see any extenuating circumstances in the case justifying our passing any sentence lesser than the death penalty. We accordingly order Jiwan Das to be hanged by the neck till he is dead. We do not consider it necessary to pass a separate sentence under s. 307, I. P. C.

May 9, 1939

B. J. WADIA AND KANIA, JJ.
EMPEROR—PROSECUTOR

JHINA SOMA—ACCUSED

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 297, 537—Omission of Judge to explain to jury all essential elements of offence charged against accused, when vitiates trial—Prosecution, if can urge in appeal that Sessions Judge omitted to explain law to jury—Criminal trial—Trial by jury—Defences taken by accused in alternative, inconsistent—Whether proves that evidence led on behalf of prosecution should have been believed by jury—Verdict—Interference.

Under s. 297, Criminal P. C., it is the duty of the Judge to explain to the jury all the essential elements of the offences charged against the accused and to give directions on the law so as to make the law clear in relation to the facts of the case and the evidence adduced. Even the mere reading of the sections to the jury does not amount to an explanation of the law. Nor can the Judge rely on the fact that Advocates on both sides had explained the law to the jury. The Judge must lay down the law by which the jury is to be guided. This provision is imperative. It is the clear duty of the Judge to explain what in law are the essential requisites of an offence and what must be proved to constitute that offence. An important non-direction to the jury or an omission to direct them on an important point, amounts to misdirection; but s. 297 must be read along with the provisions of s. 537 of the Code. It is necessary, however, that the misdirection should be such as to occasion failure of justice, such failure of justice as would vitiate the trial or proceedings. There is no ground for broadly assuming that if even a mandatory provision of the Code is infringed, the result in all cases must be to vitiate the trial irrespective of whether it has or has not occasioned failure of justice. 160 Ind. Cas. 1060 (1), referred to. [p. 334, col. 1.]

Omission by Govt. to take a ground that the Sessions Judge omitted to explain the law to the jury, would not debar the prosecution from urging it in the appeal.

In a criminal trial the presumption of innocence is always in favour of the accused till he is found guilty, and he is also entitled to the benefit of a reasonable doubt. Even if the defences taken up by the accused in the alternative were inconsistent, that would not necessarily prove that the evidence led on behalf of the prosecution, who must establish the guilt of the accused, should have been believed by the jury. [p. 334, col. 2.]

No Court will interfere with the verdict of a jury, even if it may itself think differently of the evidence, or because it thinks that another jury may have come to a different conclusion. To lightly interfere with the verdict of a jury with which the Sessions Judge has agreed would be to reduce trial by jury in this country to a farce. 139 Ind. Cas. 272 (2), referred to. [ibid.]

Or. A. against an order of the Sessions Judge, Surat.

Mr. B. G. Rao, Assistant Government Pleader, for the Crown.

Messrs. G. C. O'Gorman and V. N. Chhatrapati, for the Accused.

B. J. Wadia, J.—This is an appeal by the Govt. of Bombay against the acquittal of the accused on the charge of murder and abetment of the commission of the offence of murder. The third accused is the father of the first and second accused who are brothers. The charge against them was that first accused on or about May 5, 1938, at about 9-30 P. M. at Malvan did commit murder by intentionally causing the death of Ranchhod Bhula of Vasan, and that the second and third accused abetted the commission of the said offence of murder by the first accused, and thereby committed an offence under s. 302, I. P. C., so far as the first accused was concerned, and under ss. 302 and 114, I. P. C., so far as the second and third accused were concerned. The accused were tried by the learned Sessions Judge at Surat with the help of a jury. The jury unanimously came to the conclusion that the accused were not guilty of the offences with which they were charged, and the learned Judge agreeing with the verdict of the jury acquitted and discharged the accused on August 5, 1938.

The facts leading up to the alleged offence are that on the day in question (May 5, 1938) there was a marriage procession proceeding from the village of Vasan towards Malvan at about lamplight. Vasan is in the Ohikhli Taluka, while Malvan is in the Taluka of Bulsar. The occasion of the procession was the marriage of one Jogi, son of Bhangia Lala. Several persons from Vasan joined the procession including the wife of the deceased, her parents and her aunt. The deceased who had gone to Billimora to get a wedding present for the bridegroom joined the procession later. The procession was on the move after lamplight, but as the little child of the deceased wanted to ease herself, the deceased, his wife, her parents and her aunt stayed behind. Thereupon the three accused came up along with one Chankka, followed by another person, Ukadia Lala. It is alleged that the first accused shouted, "Where is the Khandhad?" The deceased Ranchhod said that he was there. It is further alleged that thereupon the third accused caught the deceased by the neck, and the second accused held his hands, and the first accused started giving him blows with a penknife; the deceased fell down and died almost instantaneously. The defence of the accused was that they were not the aggressors; the aggressors were the deceased and Chankka; that there was a scuffle, and that the deceased was hit accidentally by a thrust of the penknife in the hand of Chankka who really intended the blow for the first accused. In the alternative, the accused alleged that they killed the deceased in exercise of their right of private defence, viz., defending their person against the attacks of the deceased and Chankka. Accused No. 1 in the afternoon of the next day made a complaint in which he charged Chankka and the deceased, not knowing that he was dead, with having attacked his brother (accused No. 2) and also himself when he went to help his brother. There was a long trial, several witnesses were examined on behalf of the prosecution, but no evidence was led on behalf of the accused, and the learned Sessions Judge summed up the case at great length to the jury. As I have stated before, the jury came to the unanimous conclusion that the accused were not guilty, and the learned Judge agreeing with the verdict of the jury, ordered their acquittal and discharge.

The main grounds of appeal are: (a) that the direction given by the Judge to the jury as to the consideration of the alternative defences was not proper and should have been placed more clearly; (b) that the point whether there was occasion for reasonable apprehension in the mind of the opponents (accused) justifying the killing of the deceased was not explained to the jury in a proper way; (c) that having regard to the medical evidence and to the conduct of the first and second opponents after the commission of the murder, and to the facts stated in the counter-complaint of the first opponent, the verdict of the jury was unreasonable and unjust; and lastly, (d) that the point as to why the opponents happened to be on the spot was not put to the jury in respect of its bearing on the possible guilt of the opponents. The Govt. therefore pray that the order of acquittal be set aside and the accused dealt with according to the law, and if necessary, process be ordered to issue against the accused under s. 427, Criminal P. O.

The Govt. have lodged this appeal under s. 417, Criminal P. O., which lays down that the Local Govt. may direct the Public Prosecutor to present an appeal to the High Court from an original or appellate order of acquittal passed by any Court other than a High Court. It is provided by

s. 418 (1) that an appeal may lie on a matter of fact as well as a matter of law, except where the trial was by a jury in which case the appeal shall lie on a matter of law only. Under s. 423 (2), it is provided that nothing contained in the section shall authorize the Court to alter or reverse the verdict of the jury, unless it is of opinion that such verdict is erroneous owing to a misdirection by the Judge or to misunderstanding on the part of the jury of the law as laid down by him. An appeal therefore lies in cases tried by the jury on questions of law only, and under the criminal procedure, the verdict of the jury is to be considered final where there is no error of law or misunderstanding on the part of the jury of the law as laid down by the Judge, or any misdirection by the Judge, and the Judge has agreed with the verdict of the jury.

It was contended on behalf of the Crown that there was a misdirection in so far as the learned Judge did not expound the law relating to the offences to the jury. It is true that in the heads of the charge to the jury there is no reference to the sections under which the accused are charged. Under s. 257, Criminal P. O., it is the duty of the Judge to explain to the jury all the essential elements of the offences charged against the accused and to give directions on the law so as to make the law clear in relation to the facts of the case and the evidence adduced. Even the mere reading of the sections to the jury does not amount to an explanation of the law. Nor can the Judge rely on the fact that Advocates on both sides had explained the law to the jury. The Judge must lay down the law by which the jury is to be guided. This provision is imperative and it cannot be too emphatically stated that in cases tried with the help of a jury it is the clear duty of the Judge to explain what in law are the essential requisites of an offence and what must be proved to constitute that offence. That the provision of the Code is mandatory was again laid down recently by the Full Bench in Emperor v. Puttan Hassan (1), and it is indeed surprising how a Sessions Judge who is usually a man of considerable experience, can proceed to charge the jury without, in the first instance, explaining the law on the subject. Such explanation is necessary in all cases and is certainly very important.

in a case where the charge is one of murder. It is incumbent upon the Judge to explain what is culpable homicide under s. 292, I. P. C., and under what circumstances culpable homicide amounts to murder, and under what circumstances it does not, under s. 300. An important non-direction to the jury or an omission to direct them on an important point, amounts to misdirection; but we must read s. 297 along with the provisions of s. 537 of the Code. In that section it is laid down that "subject to the provisions hereinbefore contained, no finding, sentence or order passed by a Court of competent jurisdiction shall be reversed or altered on account of any error, omission or irregularity (as mentioned in sub-cl. (a) of that section) or of the omission to revise any list of jurors or assessors in accordance with s. 324 or of any misdirection in any charge to a jury unless such error, omission, irregularity, or misdirection, has in fact occasioned a failure of justice."

There are therefore three categories coming under this section, first, where there is an error, omission, or irregularity, in any stage of a trial or enquiry or proceeding; secondly, where there is an omission in revising the list of jurors or assessors; and thirdly, in the case of misdirection in the charge to the jury. It is necessary, however, that the misdirection should be such as to occasion failure of justice, such failure of justice as would vitiate the trial or proceedings. The misdirection causing failure of justice may at times arise in relation to the case for the prosecution; but in the majority of cases the effect of a misdirection to the jury comes up for consideration on the ground that it has prejudicially affected the accused. There is, however, no ground for broadly assuming that if even a mandatory provision of the Code is infringed, the result in all cases must be to vitiate the trial irrespective of whether it has or has not occasioned failure of justice. It was undoubtedly the bounden duty of the Sessions Judge to explain the law to the jury before dealing with the evidence, but I do not think that the omission to read and explain the relevant sections in this case has been such as can be said to have occasioned a failure of justice. It was pointed out to us by the learned Counsel for the accused that this ground was not even taken by Govt., but that would not debar the prosecution from urging it in the appeal.

The only other ground that was mentioned to us was that the alternative defence, viz., that the accused acted in self-defence or defence of their person, was not fully and properly explained to the jury. The learned Judge, however, clearly pointed out the alternative defence to the jury, and we find it stated by the Judge in para. 4 of his charge to the jury that it was suggested that it was the deceased who was the aggressor and caused serious injuries to accused No. 2, and that a reasonable apprehension arose in the mind of the accused about their own safety, and that on account of that apprehension they attacked the deceased in self-defence and killed him. At the end of his long summing-up the learned Judge also told the jury that, although the defence of self-defence was not raised by the accused and was not suggested in the cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses, and although it was inconsistent with the other defence put forward by the accused, it was still open to the jury to consider it and to see whether, in the circumstances of the case, it was made out or not. The learned Judge was right in putting this alternative defence to the jury for their consideration in the way he did. It was, however, open to the jury to come to the conclusion on the evidence of the witnesses, whom they had seen and whom they had heard, that the prosecution had failed to establish the case against the accused. In a criminal trial the presumption of innocence is always in favour of the accused till he is found guilty, and he is also entitled to the benefit of a reasonable doubt. Even if the defences taken up by the accused in the alternative were inconsistent, that would not necessarily prove that the evidence led on behalf of the prosecution, who must establish the guilt of the accused, should have been believed by the jury. It was for the jury to consider what weight they should attach to the evidence that was led before them. Apart from the omission to explain the law, the learned Judge summed up the evidence very clearly and fairly on both sides, and left the matters which were within the province of the jury entirely for their consideration. Under the circumstances, we see no reason to interfere with the verdict. No Court will interfere with the verdict of a jury, even if it may itself think differently of the evidence, or because it thinks that another jury may have come to a different conclusion. To lightly interfere with the verdict of a jury with which the Sessions Judge has agreed would be to reduce trial by jury in this country to a farce. There is a case reported in Emperor v. Bai Lali (2) where the Sessions Judge had disagreed with the verdict of the jury and submitted the case under s. 307, Criminal P. O. to the High Court, and yet the High Court held that, unless there was any perversity in the verdict or any misdirection there was no reason why they should interfere with the verdict. Taking all the facts of the case and the evidence into consideration, I am of opinion that the appeal fails and must be dismissed.

Kanla, J.—I agree. Section 297, Criminal P. O., in very clear terms enjoins the Sessions Judge to charge the jury by summing up the evidence for the prosecution and defence, and laying down the law by which the jury is bound. The omission to do this may or may not cause a miscarriage of justice. Section 537 of the O de provides that if a misdirection (and an omission to lay down the law would be a misdirection) causes a failure of justice, it would vitiate the trial. Therefore, in the present case we have to find whether the Court failed to lay down the law as provided in s. 297, and if so, whether there was a miscarriage of justice. Unless both those questions were answered in the affirmative, the verdict should not be disturbed.

On going through the record it appears that the learned Sessions Judge has not re-capitulated the relevant sections of the I. P. O. To that extent it may be stated that there was omission to lay down the law. It appears very clearly, however, that in different portions of his summing up he had stated to what extent and under what circumstances the right of private defence of person could be exercised by the accused. He had also pointed out that this defence was not put forward in the cross-examination of the witnesses, but was seriously urged in the course of the argument of the Advocate for the accused. He also properly pointed out at the close of the summing up that, in spite of the failure of the Advocate for the accused to set up this defence and to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses on that point, and although the defence was inconsistent with the other defence, if the jury on the materials before them thought that a case of self-defence of person was established, it would be their duty to consider it, and give effect to their conclusion. To that extent therefore the learned Judge considered the evidence and gave directions on the point of private defence, and I do not think therefore that the charge suffers from any serious omission. On going through the whole record, I do not think that there has been any failure of justice occasioned in this case, and therefore I do not think this Court should interfere with the unanimous finding of the jury.

I cannot allow this case to pass without emphasizing that the provisions of s. 297, Criminal P. O. are emphatic, and overlooking the same is likely to give rise to a miscarriage of justice and considerable waste of public time and money. It is necessary that the provisions of this section should be rigidly adhered to and not overlooked. Even at the cost of repetition, the law should clearly be expounded, especially when the charge is one of murder; otherwise serious consequences are likely to ensue which a high judicial officer could and should avoid.

MADRAS HIGH COURT Criminal Revision Case No. 54 and

Petition No. 50 of 1939

August 25, 1939

PATANJALI SASTRI, J.

In re O. KANNIAH MAISTRY AND OTHERS—PETITIONERS

Madras Gaming Act (III of 1930), ss. 3, 4, (ii), 6—Payment or sharing profits in fulfilment of betting on horse race, whether gaming—No particular person found guilty under s. 4 (ii)—Conviction of accused under s. 109, Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), read with s. 4 (ii) Madras Gaming Act, propriety of—S. 6, scope of—Finding of instrument of gaming in place searched under s. 5.

The definition of 'gaming' in s. 3 of the Mad. Gaming Act has included only the actual wagering or betting on a horse race, and payments in fulfilment of such agreement cannot be regarded as part of such betting and is consequently not gaming. Bradford v. Dawson (1), relied on.

Where no particular person is found to have committed the offence under s. 4 (ii) of the Act, which the accused could be said to have abetted, his conviction under s. 109, I. P. O. read with s. 4 (ii) Mad. Gaming Act as accessories either before or after the betting is wrong.

Section 6, Mad. Gaming Act only enacts, that gaming instruments found in any place entered or searched under the provisions of s. 5 shall be evidence that the persons found therein were there present for the purpose of gaming, although no play was actually seen by the Police Officer. But, the section, does not say that the mere finding of gaming instruments in such a place shall be evidence of gaming. There is obviously a wide difference between a person being present at a particular place for the purpose of gaming and his gaming at the place. It is only the latter act that is constituted an offence under s. 4 (ii) of the Act and not the former.

Or. R. Case and P. to revise order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Saidapet, dated September 10, 1938.

Messrs. K. S. Jayarama Ayyar, G. Gopalaswamy and M. C. Rajagopalan, for the Petitioners.

The Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.

Order.—The petitioners were prosecuted in this case for an alleged offence under s. 4 (ii), Mad. Gaming Act, 1930. The learned Appellate Magistrate, however, observed that there was no betting at the time of the night when the instruments of betting were seized by P. W. No. 1 under s. 5 of the Act and that the petitioners were there only for the purposes of payment or sharing of profits. But he has held that the petitioners must be regarded as accessories either before or after the betting and found them guilty under s. 109, I. P. C. read with s. 4 (ii), Gaming Act. This is clearly wrong as no particular person is found to have committed the offence under s. 4 (ii) of the Act, which the petitioners in this case could be said to have abetted. The learned Public Prosecutor has not attempted to support the conviction on this ground. He urged, however, that the conviction could be upheld on two other grounds. First, he contended that payment of money or sharing of profits in pursuance of betting on a horse race is also gaming as such distribution of prizes and dividends to winners is a fulfilment of the betting or wagering agreements. But the definition of 'gaming' in s. 3 of the Act has included only the actual wagering or betting on a horse race, and payments in fulfilment of such agreement cannot be regarded as part of such betting; see Bradford v. Dawson (1).

The learned Public Prosecutor next contended, that having regard to the statutory rule of evidence enacted in s. 6 of the Act, the conviction of the petitioners can be sustained as supported by evidence. S. 6 only enacts, so far as it is material for the purposes of the case, that gaming instruments found in any place entered or searched under the provisions of s. 5 shall be evidence that the persons found therein were there present for the purpose of gaming, although no play was actually seen by the Police Officer. But, as I understand this section, it does not take the prosecution in this case far enough, for it does not say that the mere finding of gaming instruments in such a place shall be evidence of gaming. There is obviously a wide difference between a person being present at a particular place for the purpose of gaming and his gaming at the place. It is only the latter act that is constituted an offence under s. 4 (ii) of the Act and not the former. I am therefore of opinion that s. 6 of the Act cannot be invoked to sustain the conviction in the circumstances of this case. I set aside the conviction and sentence as well as the order of confiscation. The fine paid by the petitioners as well as the amount seized from them will be refunded.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 54—Prohibitory order on judgment-debtor—Personal service, if essential.

The Code does not require personal service of the prohibitory order on the judgment-debtor. The omission to require service of a notice on the judgment-debtor in person in r. 54, O. XXI, was intentional. No notice other than the publication of the order is necessary. Except in the cases covered by O. XXI, r. 22, and except where the Court issues of grace of its own motion, notice to the judgment-debtor to show cause against attachment, the judgment-debtor has no notice, actual or constructive, of attachment before a prohibitory order is issued under O. XXI, r. 54, as that is the first stage in execution by attachment of immovable property. 164 Ind. Cas. 1044 (2), 50 Ind. Cas. 261 (4) and 89 Ind. Cas. 107 (7), referred to, 120 Ind. F. A. from an order of the Assistant District Court, Hanthawaddy, in Civil Execution No. 7 of 1936.

Mr. P. B. Sen, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Aiyar and Wan, for Respondents Nos. 1 and 4.

Mosely, J.—This is an appeal by the S. T. R. M. Chettyar Firm of Pyawbwe, Hanthawaddy District, whose property was sold in execution by its partner Somasundaram Chettyar against the decree-holder-respondent No. 1 and respondents Nos. 2, 3 and 4, the auction-purchasers. In Civil Regular No. 30 of 1933 of the Assistant District Court of Hanthawaddy, the plaintiff sued the firm in question carrying on business by its partner Somasundaram Chettyar, and also sued the four partners in their personal capacity, namely the above Somasundaram Chettyar whose address is given as Mogul Street, Rangoon, Thenappa Chettyar deceased, by his legal representative Subbiah Chettyar of Ramnad, Madras, Visvanathan Chettyar, and Meenatchi Achi of Madras. The suit was decreed against the firm and partners. In the execution case in question, No. 7 of 1936, the judgment-debtors were: (1) the firm; (2) Somasundaram Chettyar; (3) Subbiah Chettyar as legal representative; (4) Nachiappa Chettyar, minor son of Visvanathan by his guardian ad litem, the bailiff, Hanthawaddy; and (5) Meenatchi Achi. It appears that the last two judgment-debtors had been adjudged insolvent in Madras. One of the grounds of objection in the present case is that notice to the Official Receiver as their legal representative was not issued under O. XXI, r. 22. I note that the trial Court went astray in quoting Maung Ohn Tin v. P. R. M. P. S. R. M. Chettyar Firm (1) as authority for the proposition that notice was unnecessary to the Official Receiver. That case was a case where the Official Receiver was impleaded in his capacity as an ordinary receiver in administration and not as Official Receiver. However, in the present case, these notices under O. XXI, r. 22 are altogether immaterial, as execution was applied for against the property of the partnership firm and not against the personal property of the partners: vide O. XXI, r. 50 (a). The next objection is that the prohibitory order (O. XXI, r. 54) was not served on Somasundaram Chettyar, the managing partner. It is objected by Mr. Aiyar for respondent No. 1 that such notice is unnecessary. That has been laid down in First Appeal No. 22 of 1936 Nayasha Kursoon Bee Bee v. S. P. S. T. R. M. Chettyar Firm (2) which I note has been reported in an unauthorized report. We have been invited by Mr. P. B. Sen for the appellant to have this ruling re-considered. It has been given effect to in Burma Courts Manual, Circular No. 30, Item No. 18, and it is therefore desirable to re-consider it if there are grounds for doing so, though that may not be essential for the decision of this case. Order XXI, r. 54, sub-rr. (1) and (2), read as follows:

"(1) Where the property is immovable, the attachment shall be made by an order prohibiting the judgment-debtor from transferring or charging the property in any way, and all persons from taking any benefit from such transfer or charge.

(2) 164 Ind. Cas. 1044; A I R 1936 Rang. 403; 9 R Rang. 172.

(2) The order shall be proclaimed at some place on or adjacent to such property by beat of drum or other customary mode, and a copy of the order shall be affixed on a conspicuous part of the property and then upon a conspicuous part of the court-house, and also, where the property is land paying revenue to the Government, in the office of the Collector of the district in which the land is situate."

Sub-r. (3) need not be considered. It was added by this Court to deal with the date form which the order is effective. First, Appeal No. 22 of 1936 Nayasha Kursoon Bee Bee v. S. P. S. T. R. M. Chettyar Firm (2) quotes four decisions: Sinnappan v. Arunachalam Pillai (3), Ramanayakudu v. Pedda Basappa (4), Abdul Ghafur Khan v. Akram Hasan (5) and Ganga Din v. Khushali (6) and says that these are no authority for the contention that personal service of the prohibitory order on the judgment-debtor is necessary. These cases are directed to the point, it is said, that an attachment is effective not from the date of ordering it but from the date of publishing it. No doubt, it is said, there are, in these cases, dicta to the effect that the judgment-debtor must receive notice of the attachment, but he does receive such notice, either actual or constructive, because before the order for attachment is made, he is called up to show cause against it, and therefore he must either be present before the Court at the time when the order is made, or he must have had an opportunity of being present. The form of the notice is addressed to the judgment-debtor personally as well as to the public. I agree that the section of the Code does not require personal service of the notice on the judgment-debtor. A perusal of the rules of O. XXI which deal with the attachment of other descriptions of property, rr. 43, 44, 46, 47, 48 and 51 to 53, of which r. 46 (2) and r. 47 are the only ones which particularize notice to the judgment-debtor as the requisite method of informing him of the attachment, is sufficient to show that the omission to require service of a notice on the judgment-debtor in person in r. 54 was intentional. As was said in a case quoted to us, Sher Khan v. Misri Lal (7), which is only available in an unauthorized report, no notice other than the publication of the prohibitory order (wrongly styled there "sale notice") is necessary. Ramanayakudu v. Pedda Basappa (4) says, at p. 566, that O. XXI, r. 54, sub-r. (2) contemplates that the person prohibited must have the opportunity afforded by the application (affixing?) mentioned in sub-r. (2) of r. 54 of knowing that he is so prohibited.

Except in the cases covered by O. XXI, r. 22, and except where the Court issues of grace of its own motion notice to the judgment-debtor to show cause against attachment, the judgment-debtor has no notice actual or constructive of attachment before a prohibitory order is issued under O. XXI, r. 54, as that is the first stage in execution by attachment of immovable property. It may be in some cases that notice to the judgment-debtor, though not obligatory under r. 54, is desirable. A case of this kind might be where the property is attached in the non-cultivating season, and lies so far from any village that the judgment-debtor may not know of the attachment. In any case the evidence and the materials on record show that notice in this execution case was served on Vyravan who was living in the firm's house at Pyawbwe and was working and collecting rents on behalf of the firm. In my opinion until the contrary is proved, he must be held to have an ostensible authority to accept notice on behalf of the managing partner (O. V, r. 12). It is unnecessary to consider the evidence, that of Ohidambaram, and the affidavit of service of the prohibitory order itself that a prohibitory order was issued to Somasundaram Ohettyar in another execution case, No. 15 of 1936, of the same Court, by another decree-holder attaching the same land in question, which was sold in execution at the same sale, that decree-holder being allowed rateable distribution, for that attachment would not fix this debt on the property.

Another objection is that notice to verify the sale proclamation issued under O. XXI, r. 66 by substituted service was obtained under false pretences; but there is nothing on the record to satisfy me that this was so. It is true that the address of the judgment-debtor had once been given as Mogul Street; but there is evidence that he was also residing at Pyawbwe from time to time, and he appears to have kept himself out of the way, and Vyravan refused to accept service of any summons or notice to him. It would have been more satisfactory perhaps if the process-server had been called by the decree-holder, but his affidavit was evidence and it was always open to the present appellant to call him. The last objection is one under O. XXI, r. 90, that there is a material irregularity in publishing or conducting the sale in that the property was misdescribed in the proclamation. We have heard Mr. P. B. Sen at length on the point and it appears to me that the schedule gave all the particulars of the property sold that could be reasonably required. It was not necessary to give the amount for which the houses in question were rented, nor was it necessary to describe one plot of land as suitable for a mill site when there is no evidence that it was peculiarly suitable therefor and all that is said is that a proposal for its use as such had once been abandoned.

The evidence on the record that the granary was sold for a wholly insufficient price is, in my opinion, quite unreliable. There is evidence that judgment-debtor, throughout knew of the sale, and it was not shown that he suffered any substantial injury by reason of any irregularity. What is more, the grounds put forward by him could have been put forward before the sale was conducted (O. XXI, r. 90, sub-r. (a) as amended by Schedule Notification No. 44 of January 27, 1937). No irregularities were disclosed which went to the root of the proceedings, or affected the auction-purchasers. I would therefore dismiss this appeal with separate costs against the decree-holder and the auction-purchasers, Advocate's fee in each case five gold mohurs.

Miscellaneous Case No. 553 of 1939

ALLSOP, J.

In the matter of BENARES BANK, LTD.,
BENARES

Companies Act (VII of 1913), s. 277-N—Order under, when should be passed, stated.

It was never the intention, of the Legislature in enacting s. 277-N, Companies Act, that a company in an insolvent position should be allowed to continue its operations under the protection of the Court and that those who had dealings with the Company should be prevented under the orders of the Court from seeking legal remedies to which they would otherwise have been entitled. It may be that the directors and the Chairman of a Company are actuated by the best of motives and that they think and hope that their arrangements are those best suited to meet the liabilities of the Company, but that is no ground in law for passing an order under s. 277-N, Companies Act, unless the Court really is satisfied that the position of the Company is embarrassed only temporarily.

Mr. B. Malik, for the Applicant.

Messrs. H. S. Muhammad Hussain, R. K. Malaviya, Shah Habeeb, J. Swarup, M. A. Kasmi and Raj Bahadur Jaini, for the Opposite Party.

Order.— This is an application filed on July 11, 1939, that this Court should pass an order under s. 277-N, Companies Act, staying the commencement or continuance of all actions and proceedings against the applicants for a period of one year with liberty to apply for an extension of time. The application is made on behalf of the Benares Bank, Ltd. A learned Judge of this Court passed an interim order during the vacation on July 12, 1939. He had before him a report of the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies as required by sub-s. (2) of s. 277-N. This report recommended that proceedings should be stayed as contemplated by s. 277-N for a period of four months upon certain conditions and the learned Judge passed an order accordingly, but he directed that notice should be published in certain newspapers which he indicated and that the matter should be put up again before me after a month so that any creditors or depositors might make objections to the application. He made it clear that the order which he passed was liable to be recalled or modified upon the basis of any objections that might be filed. I may mention that one of the conditions under which the order for stay of proceedings was passed was that the bank should have three representatives of the depositors upon its Board.

The matter is before me now in pursuance of the order passed by the learned Judge on July 12, and certain applications have been put in by depositors and creditors. There are three applications on behalf of three persons who request that the Board should be directed to pay them sums of money which they deposited in order to obtain drafts on other banks in Bombay. These drafts were dishonoured because the bank suspended payment and it is urged that the money should be paid back. Then there are three applications that the number of directors representing the depositors should be increased from 3 to 6 or 8. Learned Counsel who appears on behalf of the applicants has, however, in the course of arguments, urged that the interim order for staying proceedings should be recalled. There is finally an application on behalf of Bate Krishna Das directly urging that the order for stay of proceedings should be withdrawn. This is supported by Mr. Malaviya who has put in vakalatnama on behalf of a number of other persons who are alleged to be depositors in the bank. I may say at once that I cannot pass any order to the directors to make payments of money deposited in order to obtain drafts for payment upon other banks. This is a matter which must be decided in the proper way in the proper Court.

I have to consider the main question whether the order staying proceedings under s. 277-N, Companies Act, should be withdrawn or whether it should be confirmed under the same conditions or under different conditions. This question really turns upon the answer to the further question whether the bank is entitled to ask the Court to pass an order of this kind. In order to do so, it must establish that it is temporarily unable to meet its obligations and I consider that the intention of obtaining a report from the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies is that he should examine and inform the Court of the true financial position of the Company. The Registrar's report, in spite of his recommendation, is on the facts absolutely against the Company on this point because he has undoubtedly found that the Company is not liable to meet its obligations and that its assets are about Rs. 7 lacs less than its liabilities. It has been argued on behalf of the bank that the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies and the accountant who assisted him have under-estimated the assets of the bank and a reference has been made particularly to a sum alleged to be due from a firm called Laik and Banerji. It may be that the estimate of the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies is too conservative, but if I reject that estimate, there is nothing else before me which could satisfy me that the position of the bank is essentially secure. Even if it is true that the assets of the Company have been under-estimated in the report, it still seems at least likely that the capital has been wholly or in part dissipated and that the bank is not really in a solvent condition. In these circumstances I do not think that it can fairly be said that the Company is unable to meet its obligations only temporarily. The Chairman of the Board of Directors was present in Court and was permitted to present arguments himself in favour of the Company's application. In the course of these arguments he said that the Company wished to call meetings of creditors and to enter into some scheme of composition with them. He gave an outline of the scheme.

The Company is to pay at the rate of 1½ per cent. per annum on sums deposited with them. There are said to be about 400 depositors who have sums of Rs. 100 or less in deposit with the Company. These are to be paid off within two years. The remaining 4,000 depositors who have larger sums in deposit are to be offered payment of 6½ per cent. in 1939 and 1940, 12½ per cent. in 1941 and 1942 and higher percentage in the three following years during which their claim will finally be met. Even on this scheme, it is obvious that the Company have no hope of meeting all its liabilities for another period of six years and these liabilities are liabilities only to the depositors. It does not appear whether anything will be left over for the shareholders of the Company; it may be that the directors and the present Chairman are actuated by the best of motives and that they think and hope that their arrangements are those best suited to meet the liabilities of the Company, but although that may be so, that is no ground in law for passing an order under s. 277-N, Companies Act, unless the Court really is satisfied that the position of the Company is embarrassed only temporarily. I am very far from being convinced of this fact from the material before me. I must at least suspect very strongly that the financial position of the Company is very far from being secure. It was never the intention, I am sure, of the Legislature in enacting s. 277-N, Companies Act, that a company in an insolvent position should be allowed to continue its operations under the protection of the Court and that those who had dealings with the Company should be prevented under the orders of the Court from seeking legal remedies to which they would otherwise have been entitled. The Court could only undertake the responsibility of barring these legal remedies to which people would ordinarily be entitled if it was certain within reasonable limits that they would not suffer any real loss by being deprived of these remedies. I cannot say that I am satisfied that the Company is in a solvent condition essentially and therefore I am unable to maintain the order passed for the time being under s. 277-N, Companies Act. I direct that the order shall be withdrawn and that the application made by the Company shall be dismissed. I make no orders as to costs.

Order accordingly.

Muhammadian Law—Marriage—Shafi sect of Sunnis——Marriage of adult virgin without her consent——Validity.

Under the Muhammadian Law, marriage is a contract, and even among the Shafi sect of Sunnis, the marriage of an adult virgin is invalid if it is performed without her consent and against her wish. 113 Ind. Cas. 306 (1), relied on, Mahomed v. Zahiroodin (3), referred to.

S. A. from the decision of the Assistant Judge, Dharwar, in Appeal No. 7 of 1936.

Mr. S. R. Parulekar, for the Appellant.

Mr. G. P. Murdeshwar, for Respondent (Defendant No. 1.)

Judgment.—This second appeal arises out of a suit filed by the plaintiff for restitution of conjugal rights against defendant No. 1 whom he alleges to have married on May 30, 1934. The parties belong to the Shafi sect of Sunni Muhammadans. Defendant No. 1 contended that as she was an adult virgin at the date of the marriage, that as the marriage was performed without her consent and against her wishes, the marriage was invalid, and that the plaintiff was not entitled to claim restitution of conjugal rights against her. Both the lower Courts upheld her contention, and the suit was dismissed. It is not disputed in this Court that the parties are Sunni Muhammadans belonging to the Shafi sect, that at the date of the alleged marriage defendant No. 1 had attained puberty, and that the marriage was performed by her father against her wishes and without the consent either of herself or of her mother with whom she was then living in her maternal uncle's house. The only issue argued is whether such a marriage is valid according to the law by which Shafi Muhammadans are governed. The only pertinent case to which my attention has been drawn is that in Hussan Kutti v. Jainabha (1). In that case Odgers and Madhavan, Nair, JJ. have discussed the views of the accident text-writers as well as the views of the modern jurists and have come to the conclusion that the consent of an adult virgin is essential for the validity of her marriage among the Shafi sect of Sunnis. It is true that according to the ancient texts, which have been cited in that case, not only female minors, but also adult women who are virgins, may be disposed of in marriage by the father or paternal grandfather without their consent, and the following is quoted at p. 41 from the Minhaj :

"Not only female minors, but adult women who are virgins may be disposed of irrevocably in marriage by the father, or failing him by the paternal grandfather with or without their consent; but their consent is nevertheless considered desirable."

Later on, the same text says (p. 42):

"It is, however, always commendable to consult her as to her future husband, and her formal consent to the marriage is necessary if she has already lost her virginity."

As observed by Jenkins, O. J. in Mahomed v. Zuhirooddin (2), the Shafi school itself possesses a substantive system, as one inter partes, and is not a subordinate offshoot from co-existing schools, the special characteristic of the Shafi school being adherence to precedent, a conservative tendency that would resist modification by fluctuating customs. Hence, if there is a clear dictum in any ancient text that the consent of an adult virgin is not required for the validity of her marriage, then the views of modern writers ought not to be given effect to. But after considering the views of all the ancient texts, Ameer Ali has thus recapitulated the law at p. 303 of his Muhammadian Law, Edn. 5, Vol. 2 :

"Under the Maliki and Shafei Law, the marriage of an adult girl is not valid unless her consent is obtained to it, but such consent must be given through a legally authorized wali, who would act as her representative. Under the Hanafi and Shiah Law, the woman can consent to her own marriage either with or without a wali."

This is the only distinction between the necessity of consent as required by the Maliki and Shafei Law and that as required by the Hanafi and Shiah Law. The learned Judges of the Madras High Court have accepted this opinion and held that even among the Shafis, the marriage of an adult virgin is invalid if it is performed without her consent. In this case not only did defendant No. 1 not give her consent, but she had actually approached the Police to have the marriage prevented, and the marriage was ultimately forced upon her against her wishes. Under the Muhammadan Law marriage is a contract, and the marriage thus celebrated under compulsion cannot be regarded as valid. I therefore agree with the findings of the lower Courts and dismiss the appeal with costs.

Stamp Act (II of 1899), ss. 2 (16), 6—Document held lease as well as agreement.

Held, on construction that the document executed by the lessee was a lease as well as an agreement and was, therefore, chargeable only as a lease under s. 6, Stamp Act.

Misc. Case from reference submitted by the Inspector of Stamps, Allahabad, dated April 30, 1938.

Mr. A. M. Khwaja, for the Applicant.

Messrs. Inam-ullah and Shabban Ali, for the Opposite Party.

Mr. S. K. Dar, for the Crown.

Bajpal, J.—This a reference under s. 61, Stamp Act, and the question that we have got to decide is whether paper No. 7-U is a lease as well as an agreement or only an agreement. The learned Judge of the Small Cause Court was of the opinion that the document was an agreement only, whereas the Inspector of Stamps held the view that it was a lease as well as an agreement. We have perused the document and we have come to the conclusion that it is a lease as well as an agreement. It is executed not by the lessor but by the lessee, and the latter covenants that he would take certain premises from the lessor, make certain alterations in the premises at his own cost, pay Rs. 9 a month as rent and the period of occupation was fixed as five years. It was also stipulated that the executant will not leave the premises for five years and if he did vacate the premises within five years, he would be liable for the rent of five years. The document was executed on December 11, 1927, on a general stamp of 8 annas. As we said before, the terms of the document leave no room for doubt that it is a lease as well as an agreement. 'Lease' under the Stamp Act "includes a kabuliyat or other undertaking in writing... to occupy or pay or deliver rent for immovable property." Under s. 6, Stamp Act, if an instrument is so framed as to come within two or more of the descriptions in Sch. I and if the duties chargeable thereunder are different the instrument will be chargeable only with the highest of such duties. The document, is a lease as well as an agreement, and as the duty for a lease is higher, it will be chargeable only as a lease. The annual rent reserved is Rs. 108, that is to say, it exceeds Rs. 100 and does not exceed Rs. 200. As a conveyance, a duty of Rs. 2 is chargeable. In case of a lease, where the lease purports to be for a term in excess of three years, as it is in the present case, the duty is the same as on a conveyance for a consideration equal to the amount or value of the average annual rent reserved. We therefore declare that the document is chargeable as a lease, and we determine the amount of duty thereon as Rs. 2. Annas 8 having already been paid, the deficiency is Re. 1-8-0. Under s. 35 of the Act, a penalty is also leviable and such a penalty shall be ten times the amount of the deficiency, that is Rs. 15. We make the above declaration and we direct that a copy of our judgment will be sent to the Collector.

Bombay District Police Act (IV of 1890), s. 39-A—Rules under—R. 17—Order of District Magistrate under—Interference by High Court under s. 435, Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898).

When the District Magistrate passes orders under r. 17 of the Rules for licensing and controlling places of public entertainment framed under s. 39-A, Bombay District Police Act, the District Magistrate or Magistrate of the District whichever he may be called, is not acting as an inferior Court within the meaning of s. 435, Criminal P. C. He is acting as an executive officer in the exercise of powers conferred upon him under s. 39-A, Bombay District Police Act. High Court cannot, therefore, under s. 435, Criminal P. C., interfere with this order.

Cr. R. App. to revise an order of the District Magistrate, Hyderabad, dated October 15, 1938.

Mr. Hardasmal Vishensingh, for the Applicant.

Mr. Partabrai D. Punwani, Advocate-General, for the Crown.

Davis, J. C.—This is an application in revision against an order of the District Magistrate of Hyderabad asking this Court to set aside an order purporting to have been passed by the District Magistrate of Hyderabad, whereby he ordered the applicant to close a hotel for a period of six months. It is intelligible that a certain confusion attached to this order, because not only did it appear from the notice served upon the applicant that the order was not even signed by the District Magistrate, but when we called for the papers and looked at the order ourselves, we found ourselves quite unable to decipher the handwriting in which the order was written; nor was the learned Advocate-General, despite his best endeavours, more successful. We therefore returned the papers and asked the learned District Magistrate to decipher the order for us and to inform us under what Act, or section of the Act, or statutory rule his order was made. We have now been favoured by the learned District Magistrate with a copy of the order as deciphered by him and he also informs us that the order was made by him under r. 17 of the Rules for licensing and controlling places of public entertainment framed under s. 39-A, Bombay District Police Act. We would suggest in future not only to save himself but other people trouble, the learned District Magistrate might put at the head of his order, as is customary or should be customary, the section of the Act and the Rule under which it is made and he might see when a copy of the order is served upon the parties who are to obey it, the copy of that order should show that the order was signed by him and not by a subordinate in his office.

These questions apart, however, the learned Advocate-General has taken a preliminary objection, and we think a quite proper preliminary objection, that this Court has no jurisdiction to deal with this order of the District Magistrate, now its nature and contents have been disclosed to us; for, it is an order passed by him as an executive officer under the Bombay District Police Act. For the applicant, however, it is contended that the District Magistrate, when he passed this order, was acting as a Court and was therefore subject to our jurisdiction in revision under s. 435 and the following sections of the Criminal P. O.; but, though it is true that in the District Police Act under s. 3 (d) a district is defined as "territorial division constituting a district for the purposes of the Criminal P. O." and a District Magistrate is nowhere specifically defined but is referred to, for instance, in s. 13 as a Magistrate of the District who is presumably the same person as a District Magistrate appointed under s. 10, Criminal P. O., nevertheless it does not appear to us to follow that every act of the Magistrate of the District under the Bombay District Police Act is the act of an inferior Criminal Court within the meaning of s. 435, Criminal P. O. Section 32, Criminal P. O., and the following relevant sections refer clearly to Courts. The District Magistrate is under s. 10, Criminal P. O., also a Magistrate of the First Class, and ss. 32, 33 and 34 refer to the Courts of Magistrates.

It therefore appears to us clear that before we can exercise our jurisdiction in revision under s. 435, Criminal P. O. we should be satisfied that the act of the District Magistrate which we are asked to revise is an act of the Court of the District Magistrate. It appears on the face of it impossible to say that when the District Magistrate passes orders under r. 17 of the Rules for licensing and controlling places of public entertainment framed under s. 39-A, Bombay District Police Act, the District Magistrate or Magistrate of the District whichever he may be called, is acting as an inferior Court within the meaning of s. 435, Criminal P. O.; in our opinion it is clear that he is acting as an executive officer in the exercise of powers conferred upon him under s. 39-A, Bombay District Police Act.

If his order is extra vires and is disobeyed and accused be prosecuted, convicted and punished, then doubtless this Court would have jurisdiction over the inferior Court which so convicted or punished, then doubtless the question as to whether the order of the District Magistrate was extra vires or intra vires of the powers conferred upon him under the Bombay District Police

Act, could be inquired into and determined; but until that stage we do not see how we can exercise powers over the orders of the Magistrate in this matter as an inferior Criminal Court. Presumably the applicants consider themselves aggrieved by the order of the Magistrate of the District which they contend is ultra vires. They can seek an appropriate remedy in a Civil Court unless the Legislature has by its enactment barred any remedy in a Civil Court. That aspect of the matter we are not now called upon to deal with in any way. We therefore reject this revision-application accordingly.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 58 (c)—Mortgage by conditional sale and sale with condition of re-purchase—Difference—Bengal Agricultural Debtors Act (VII of 1936), ss. 34, 2 (8)—"Liability" in definition of "debt"—Debt secured by mortgage by conditional sale, whether debt within s. 34.

A mortgage by conditional sale is transaction essentially different from a sale with a condition of re-purchase. In a sale with a condition for re-purchase, the ownership vests in the transferee from the date of the document and there is no question of any debt being in existence after the transaction. In a case of mortgage by conditional sale, the debt subsists and a right to redeem remains with the debtor.

The definition of "debt" found in s. 2 (8), Ben. Agricultural Debtors Act includes "secured and unsecured" liabilities. All mortgage-debts are secured liabilities, although in a simple mortgage there is a personal liability flowing from the covenant to pay, while in a mortgage by conditional sale, there is no such covenant and consequently there is no personal liability. Consequently, a debt secured by mortgage by conditional sale is a debt within the meaning of s. 34, Ben. Agricultural Debtors Act.

O. Rule issued from an order of the Munsif Sandwip (Noakhali), dated March 17, 1939.

Mr. Obaidul Haq, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Nripendra Chandra Das, for the Opposite Party.

Nasim Ali, J.—This Rule is directed against the order of the Munsif at Sandwip, dated March 17, 1939, rejecting the defendant-petitioner's application for vacating his order, dated April 5, 1938, staying the hearing of a certain suit for foreclosure on the basis of a mortgage by conditional sale executed by him in favour of the plaintiff-opposite party. The only point for determination in this Rule is whether a suit for foreclosure of a mortgage by conditional sale executed for the purpose of securing the payment of money advanced by way of loan is a suit in respect of a "debt" within the meaning of s. 34, Ben. Agricultural Debtors Act, 1935. "A mortgage" as defined in s. 58, T. P. Act, "is the transfer of an interest in specific immovable property, for the purpose of securing the payment of money advanced or to be advanced by way of loan, an existing or future debt, or the performance of an engagement which may give rise to a pecuniary liability."

A mortgage by conditional sale is a transaction essentially different from a sale with a condition of re-purchase. In a sale with a condition for re-purchase the ownership vests in the transferee from the date of the document and there is no question of any debt being in existence after the transaction. In a case of mortgage by conditional sale, the debt subsists and a right to redeem remains with the debtor. The provisions of O. XXXIV, r. 2, Civil P. C., support this view. The person entitled to the benefit of an obligatio was in Roman law termed creditor, while he who was bound by it was called debtor. Every obligation, of whatever nature, as vested in or belonging to a creditor, and availing against a debtor is an obligation arising out of a debt.

"There is of course a narrower sense, in which these terms are applicable only to those obligations which constitute debts; that is to say, obligations to pay a definite or liquidated sum of money: Salmond's Jurisprudence, 4th Edn., p. 423."

Section 2, cl. (8), Ben. Agricultural Debtors Act, defines the word "debt" thus:

"Debt" includes all liabilities of a debtor in cash or in kind, secured or unsecured, whether payable under a decree or order of a Civil Court or otherwise, and whether payable presently or in future."

The word "liabilities" in this definition is not confined to "personal liabilities of the debtors," as the word "personal" is not mentioned in the definition. The definition includes "secured and unsecured" liabilities. All mortgage debts are secured liabilities, although in a simple mortgage there is a personal liability flowing from the covenant to pay while in a mortgage by conditional sale there is no such covenant and consequently there is no personal liability. There is nothing in this definition to suggest that the words "liabilities of a debtor" in the definition are to be given a restricted meaning. My conclusion therefore is that a debt secured by mortgage by conditional sale is a debt within the meaning of s. 34, Ben. Agricultural Debtors Act, 1935. The result therefore is that this Rule is made absolute. The order complained of is set aside. The hearing of this suit is stayed under s. 34, Ben. Agricultural Debtors Act, 1935. The petitioner will get his costs. Hearing fee is assessed at one gold mohur.

Narsing Rau, J.—The main question in this case is whether a loan secured by a mortgage by conditional sale constitutes a debt within the meaning of the Ben. Agricultural Debtors Act, 1935. The term "debt" as used in the Act is defined in s. 2(8) as including all liabilities of a debtor in cash or in kind, secured or unsecured, whether payable under a decree or order of a Civil Court or otherwise and whether payable presently or in future. There are certain exceptions, of which the only relevant one is that the term does not include any amount, the liability for the payment of which is only contingent.

The contention on behalf of the creditor is that the words "of a debtor" in the above definition imply a personal liability of the debtor. In a mortgage by conditional sale, the mortgagor does not bind himself to re-pay the mortgage money. All that he does is ostensibly to sell the mortgage property on condition that on default of payment of the mortgage money on a certain date, the sale shall become absolute or on condition that on such payment being made, the sale shall become void, or on condition that on such payment being made the buyer shall transfer the property to the seller. In none of these cases, so the argument proceeds, is there any covenant by the mortgagor to re-pay the loan to the mortgagee. It is true that in certain contingencies mentioned in s. 68 (1), T. P. Act, the mortgagee may have a right to sue for the mortgage money even in the case of a mortgage by conditional sale. But the liability of the mortgagor in these events, it is argued, is only a contingent liability and as such, specifically excluded from the definition of debt in the Ben. Agricultural Debtors Act.

I do not think that the term "debt" can be given this narrow interpretation for the purposes of the aforesaid Act. There is no reason why we should limit the expression "liabilities of a debtor" to mean certain liabilities of a debtor and not others. Even in the case of a mortgage by conditional sale, it is quite clear that there is certain date on which the mortgage money becomes due. Under s. 60, T. P. Act, at any time after the principal money has "become due" the mortgagor has a right of redemption. This applied to all mortgages, whether by conditional sale or in any other form. It follows therefore that even in the case of mortgage by conditional sale there is a certain date on which the principal money "becomes due." The language of s. 67, T. P. Act, leads to the same conclusion. It seems to me that when money becomes due, it is a liability of the debtor, whatever may be the precise manner in which the liability can be enforced. In a mortgage by conditional sale the manner of enforcement is by a suit for foreclosure. But this does not alter the fact that there is pre-existing liability for the mortgage money. If the framers of the Ben. Agricultural Debtors Act intended to exclude from the definition of "debt" money advanced on a mortgage by conditional sale, as distinguished from other forms of mortgage, they would have said so in unequivocal terms in one of the many exceptions that have been inserted in the definition in question. I therefore agree that the question must be answered in the affirmative, and that the Rule must be made absolute.

March 22, 1939

ADDISON AND RAM LALL, J.J.

RANJIT SINGH AND OTHERS—APPELLANTS
versusChaudhri NAWAB KHAN AND OTHERS—
RESPONDENTS

Custom (Punjab)—Village—Tests—Sohna, if village or town—Landlord's right to challenge alienation of house belonging to non-proprietor—Such alienations taking place for long period—Effect on onus—Second appeal—Finding of fact based on evidence—If can be set aside—Question of fact at issue—Case depends on evidence.

A place which has got the public buildings which has had a population for 70 years or more of over five thousand, which has got paved streets and which collected octroi dues over 50 years ago, must be regarded as a town. The mere fact that the tenure is the place bhaisachara does not in any way conflict with its being a town and not a village. On these tests, Sohnā is not a village. [p. 396, col. 2.]

Sohnā is not a village but a town. The landlords there have no right to challenge an alienation of a house belonging to a non-proprietor unless the landlord can show that the house was built on land granted by the proprietary body out of the shamilat deh.

Broadly stated, it may be taken as a rule that where a large number of unchallenged alienations by non-proprietors have been taking place for a very long period, the onus should be placed on the landlords to show that they have a right to control those alienations. This they may be able to show by proving a grant and then the case would be governed by the terms of that grant. To hold otherwise would be to hold that a rule of custom had been established and before a finding of fact on such a point could be upset, a certificate as regards custom must first be obtained from the District Judge. [p. 400, col. 1.]

It is true that once the onus is placed on the landlords, it is an onus which is almost impossible to discharge but that is no ground for shifting the onus when a large number of instances of sales and mortgages extending over a century have been established and in not one case has there been a successful challenge. The conclusion is almost inevitable that the landlords had no right to challenge an alienation of a house belonging to a non-proprietor unless the landlord could show that the house was built on land granted by the proprietary body out of the shamilat deh. [p. 399, col. 2.]

The fact that the lower Court has omitted to mention a certain piece of evidence does not show that it did not consider it and in any case where the finding is based on evidence, the finding is not liable to be set aside in second appeal, even if the High Court is inclined, to come to a contrary conclusion. [p. 399, cols. 1 & 2.]

Where a question of fact is at issue, each case must depend on its own merits and on the evidence led in that case.

L. P. A. against the judgment of Mr. Justice Abdul Rashid, dated October 27, 1938.

Messrs. Jagan Nath Aggarwal, Asa Ram Aggarwal and D. N. Aggarwal, for the Appellants.

Dr. Khalifa Shuja-ud Din, for the Respondents.

Ram Lall, J.—On October 19, 1925, Lekh Ram mortgaged with possession his half share of the house in dispute to Qutab-ud-Din. On December 9, 1939, Bidhu, defendant No. 3, who owned the other half of this house, mortgaged his share also to Qutab-ud-Din. On August 19, 1932, both Lekh Ram and Bidhu sold the equity of redemption to Jahangiri Mal, defendant No. 1. On July 3, 1933, the present suit was instituted by the proprietors of Sohnā, where this house is situate, on the ground that Sohnā was a village and that the alienors, Lekh Ram and Bidhu, were non-proprietors in the village and that therefore they had not acquired any right which they could transfer by sale. The issues framed in the case were :

"1. Whether Sohnā is a village or whether the houses in suit were built on village common land ?

2. In case the above issue is proved, whether defendants Nos. 2 and 3 were full proprietors or complete owners of the houses in dispute ?

3. In case Issue No. 1 is not proved, whether defendants Nos. 2 and 3 had no power to alienate the houses in dispute under law and custom?"

The trial Court held that Sohna was a town and not a village but that the house in question stood on common land. In the face of this decision on Issue No. 1, a decision on Issue No. 2 was not necessary, and regarding Issue No. 3, it held that Sohna being a town, defendants Nos. 2 and 3 had succeeded in proving that they had a right to alienate a house built on the abad-i-deh by virtue of many alienations which had admittedly taken place and this almost amounted to a custom. On appeal, the learned District Judge also held that Sohna was a town and therefore the burden of proving that the non-proprietors had not the right to alienate the sites of their houses lay heavy on the proprietors which the proprietors had failed to discharge. The learned District Judge further held that the ancestors of these non-proprietors had settled in Sohna along with the founder and had been in possession of their houses since times immemorial and that therefore they were not bound by any entries in a subsequent wajib-ul-ars restricting their rights of alienation. In other words, on this part of the case, the learned District Judge held that the portion on which the house in suit stood had been proved to be any longer a part of the shamilat deh. In this view the learned District Judge dismissed the appeal of the plaintiffs before him who then preferred a second appeal to the High Court. The learned Single Judge, before whom this case was argued in second appeal, held that the question whether Sohna was a town or a village was one of fact and that finding could not be disturbed in second appeal ordinarily, but he was of the opinion that the learned District Judge had ignored oral and documentary evidence in arriving at his conclusion and, that this consideration vitiated his finding on the question of fact.

The learned Judge then proceeded to examine the evidence which, in his view, the learned District Judge had ignored and came to the conclusion that the non-proprietors in Sohna had not the right to sell the sites of their houses and accepted the appeal, making no order as to costs throughout. An appeal has been preferred under the Letters Patent and the principal ground urged by Mr. Jagan Nath Aggarwal for the appellants before us has been that the findings arrived at by the learned District Judge were findings of fact after a consideration of the whole evidence and were therefore not liable to be disturbed in second appeal. The learned Counsel has argued further that the evidence referred to by the learned Single Judge is either of a perfectly neutral character or, if properly construed, helps him and supports the findings of fact arrived at by the learned District Judge. We have heard lengthy arguments in this case and are of the opinion that there is considerable force in this contention. The basic findings in the case are: (1) that Sohna is a town and not a village; and (2) that the non-proprietors settled in Sohna with the founders and that for a period of over a century they had been alienating the sites of their houses, which they could have acquired by purchase of the shamilat lands and that these alienations had in some cases been witnessed by the proprietors and in any case were made without any objection by the proprietors.

As to whether Sohna is a town or a village, the census reports from the year 1868 on to the year 1931 indicate that the population has varied roughly between five and seven thousand during these decades. The test adopted by the Census Commissioner as to whether a place was a town or not, was that a place was a town in which there was a continuous collection of houses with about five thousand population. Sohna was declared to be a town within the meaning of s. 3, Punjab Pre-emption Act, vide Notification No 677 of November 10, 1908, printed as Appx. 3-A to Ellis's Law of Pre-emption, Edn. 6 at p. 465. At p. 245 of the Gurgaon District Gazetteer for the year 1910, Sohna is described as a thriving town, prettily situated in a well wooded country:

"The streets are mostly narrow and tortuous, but picturesque and well paved with flag-stones. An old ruined mosque has been converted into a resthouse. . . . The other public buildings are the school, dispensary, Police Station and post office. . . . The town is of considerable antiquity and has been occupied in succession by three different races, the Kamboh, Khanzadas and Rajputs."

The present town was apparently founded in the early part of 17th century A.D. In the 1883 Gazetteer, it appears there was income derived from octroi. It appears to me that a place which has got the public buildings which Sohna has got, which has had a population for 70 years or more of over five thousand, which has got paved streets and which collected octroi dues over 50 years ago, must be regarded as a town. The evidence of Prabhu Dial, draftsman, who is the first witness for the plaintiffs, shows that there are two or three bazars and 300 or 400 shops which are all pacca and that the main bazar road is metalled. The evidence of P. W. No. 3 Chaudhri Ochan Singh, Secretary, District Board, Gurgaon, is to the effect that there is a civil hospital, a veterinary hospital and a school at Sohna. The learned Single Judge laid some stress on the fact that Prabhu Dial, draftsman, produced a number of plans of houses and vacant sites which the proprietors of Sohna had acquired by the non-proprietors abandoning the village and on the fact that Abdul Rahman Patwari (P. W. No. 2) said that Sohna was a village. The learned Judge, however, omitted to make a distinction between a house built by a non-proprietor on village land with the consent of the proprietors and a house built by such a non-proprietor on a site purchased by him. In the first case the site would revert to the proprietors on abandonment by the non-proprietor but in the second case it would be transferred by sale. Regarding the evidence of the Patwari, the learned Single Judge ignored his cross-examination which clearly showed that in the latest jamabandi Sohna was shown as a Qusba and that in the misal haquiyat of 1906-07 it was also shown as a Qusba. The learned Single Judge then referred to the evidence of the Revenue Assistant (P. W. No. 10) Mir Muhammad Hassan wherein he stated that in the revenue records the word "Qusba" was not used. This is obviously incorrect and in cross-examination this witness had to admit that the word was used in relation to Sohna but he said that it had been wrongly used without giving any reason therefor. He admitted that from the point of view of census Sohna was a town. It appears to me, therefore, that of the three witnesses, whose oral evidence has been referred to by the learned Single Judge, the statement of each one corroborates the finding that Sohna is a town and not a village.

So far as the documentary evidence referred to by the learned Single Judge is concerned, the first document examined is Ex. D. W. 55/30 which, in his view, indicated that Sohna was a village. This document (Ex. D. W. 55/30) is an extract from the pedigree table showing the rights of the proprietors of Qusba Sohna attached to the Record of Rights prepared at the time of the 1877 settlement. All that this document shows, after giving the early history of Sohna, is that the tenure prevalent there is bhaiachara gheir mukammil and this merely indicates, in my opinion, that the settlers in the village comprised a miscellaneous collection of people and not one family or tribe. In para. 135 (p. 65) et seq. of the Punjab Settlement Manual by Sir James Douie, Edn. 4, it is stated that bhaiachara gheir mukammil means that possession is the measure of right. In para. 137 it is stated as follows:

"Pattidari was once applied only to estates held on ancestral shares, and villages in which other kinds of customary shares prevailed were called bhaiachara. But in the Punjab bhaiachara is restricted to tenures in which possession has become the measure of right, and all villages held on ancestral or any other well-known scheme of shares are classed as pattidari."

In para. 139 the remark occurs:

In perfect bhaiachara tenures all the lands are held in severalty, but customary shares, if they ever existed, have disappeared and each man's holding or rather the portion of the total revenue which he pays, has become the sole measure of his rights and liabilities. In a pattidari tenure, the share regulates the revenue payable, in a bhaiachara tenure the revenue payable regulates the share."

The fact that the tenure in Sohna is bhaiachara does not, in any way, conflict with its being a town and not a village. The learned Single Judge appears to me to be incorrect when he says that all the inhabitants of the village live on agriculture, for, as I have pointed out already, a place which has several hundred pacca shops must have other means of livelihood than agriculture only. The learned Single Judge then went on to say that it was not very material for the decision of the case whether Sohna was a village or a town, once it was established that the site in dispute was a part of the shamilat deh. He said that the trial Court had come to the conclusion that it had been established beyond doubt that the site in dispute was a portion of the village common land and the proprietary body of Sohna was its owner, a finding which according to him, was not disturbed by the learned District Judge on appeal. It appears to me that the learned Single Judge is wrong in holding that it is immaterial whether Sohna is a town or a village because the whole frame of the issues is based on this assumption and the finding on the question whether it was a town or a village would have a very important bearing on the onus. It was only if Issue No. 1 was proved in the affirmative that Issue No. 2 arose at all and in that case only would the non-proprietors have to show that they had full proprietary rights and in case it was not proved to be a town, then the onus of proving Issue No. 3 would be on the proprietors to show that the non-proprietors had not the power to alienate. The learned Single Judge also appears to me to be wrong in holding that the District Judge did not disturb the finding of the trial Court that the site in dispute formed a part of the village common land; for the learned District Judge says in his judgment that there is no proof that the alienors got the site of their house from the proprietors. The District Judge held that he was not concerned in this case with the rights of other non-proprietors who might be proved definitely to have obtained sites from the proprietors after 1877 with permission to build over them as their case would be governed by grant. In the present case, however, he held it proved on the evidence that the ancestors of defendants Nos. 2 and 3 (Lekh Ram and Bidhu) had settled along with the founders and had been in possession since times immemorial. In the earlier part of his judgment he held that as the ancestors of defendants Nos. 2 and 3 had settled with the founders of Sohna and had been in possession of their holdings long before 1877, the wajib-ul-arz prepared subsequently did not touch them or their rights.

The learned Single Judge then went on to consider the wajib-ul-arz of Sohna both for the year 1863 and for the year 1877. In the 1863 wajib-ul-arz it was stated that nobody had the power to make new abadi in and build a house on the shamilat land without the consent of all the proprietors and that those living in the land owned by the proprietors had no power to alienate. In the 1877 wajib-ul-arz it is stated that the malba of the house of a non-proprietor shall be possessed by the proprietors in case he leaves the house and goes away, but it is significant that seven tribes mentioned by name were given the right of alienating the sites of their houses. The learned Single Judge was of the opinion that from the fact that the restriction on the rights of the proprietors was in favour of only seven tribes which included Brahmins, Mahajans and Kayasths, it was apparent that the proprietors were anxious to see that the number of these excepted tribes was not enlarged. It is clear that a large number of alienations by non-proprietors have been taking place from time immemorial. A judgment, dated November 24, 1922, by Lala Kashmiri Lal, Munsif of Gurgaon, gives a number of instances of such alienations and mentions a number of such instances in which the proprietors attested such alienations by non-proprietors. The learned Single Judge has referred to this judgment (D. W. No. 55/18 at p. 707 et seq of the record of this case) as showing that the wajib-ul-arz for the year 1907-08 was the same as that prepared in 1877 and has held that the burden of proving that the Kumbars had the right to alienate the sites of their houses lay heavily on them. The learned Judge admits that a large number of instances had been established but considers that it had to be established, and it had not been successfully established, that the old custom had been replaced by a new one whereby the non-proprietors had acquired full rights of alienation of the sites of their houses. He refers to 56 sales by non-proprietors, 15 of which were for sums less than Rs. 100, another 15 were made in favour of biswedars. As to the mortgages, he found that out of 42, 8 were for amounts below Rs. 100, 10 were open to challenge at the date of the institution of the suit and 6 were made by members of the seven privileged tribes mentioned above. The truth appears to me to be that from time to time the non-proprietors during the course of 300 or 400 years that Sohna has been in existence have been making alienations of their village sites, in some cases to the proprietors and in other cases to others, and between 1863 and 1877, the seven tribes had by instances established their right to make alienations. The 1877 wajib-ul-arz (Ex. P-26) throws a very instructive light on the situation. It says:

"If any non-proprietor wants to build a new house other than the house in which he resides, he is competent to do so in the ikata of his house, or on the land purchased by him. The remaining land belongs to us. The non-proprietor cannot build houses on it without our consent or permission."

The obvious meaning of this appears to me to be this: if a non-proprietor builds a house on the shamilat deh with the permission of the proprietary body, the right in the land vests in the proprietors, and if and when the non-proprietor abandons the house, both the land and the malba belong to the proprietors and neither the land nor the malba is, therefore, alienable. Where, however, a non-proprietor elects to purchase land, anything that he builds on this land together with its site belongs to him exclusively and can always be made the subject of a sale or other alienation without any challenge from the landlords. It is significant that during the 300 or 400 years that this class of alienation has been taking place, there is not one successful instance brought on the record in which such a sale of a house built by non-proprietor on land purchased by him has been challenged. As I have said already, there is a conclusive finding of fact that the ancestors of defendants Nos. 2 and 3 settled with the founders, perhaps 300 years ago long before any wajib-ul-arz was recorded, and the onus was very heavy on the proprietors to show that the site of the house in question was not acquired by any one of the ancestors of defendants Nos. 2 and 3 by purchase and unless and until they could show this, they could not succeed. The only instance relied upon is Ex. D. W. No. 55/18 and there the ratio decidendi was that there was not an iota of evidence on the file to show that the house was given by the proprietors to the alienors or their ancestors.

The learned District Judge examined the large number of alienations cited including sales and mortgages and found on an examination of this evidence that the Kumbars had been selling and mortgaging their houses as full owners. In some of these cases the amounts involved were as much as Rs. 400: vide mortgage deed (Ex. D. W. No. 55/1) at p. 633 of the present record in which two shops were mortgaged for Rs. 450 in Sambat 1891 corresponding to the year 1834. Another sale was made in this Qusba (vide Ex. D. W. No. 15/6 on 24th May 1856) of a passage in front of a shop, and on September 10, 1866 (vide Exhibit D. W. 15/2), one Musammam Rahiman, caste Mughal of Qusba Sohna, mortgaged a haveli to one Kallu Mal Mahajan for Rs. 200. There are numerous such instances and having regard to the fact that the value of money was much more 70 years ago than it is to day, the consideration for these alienations cannot be said to be inconsiderable.

It appears that the learned District Judge recorded distinct findings based on evidence a good part of which he mentioned in his judgment. The first of these findings was in agreement with the lower Court that Sohna was a town. No piece of evidence mentioned by the learned Single Judge or in arguments before us materially disturbs this finding, even if we assume that some pieces of evidence were not given full weight by the learned District Judge. The fact that he omitted to mention them does not show that he did not consider them and in any case where the finding is based on evidence, the finding was not liable to be set aside in second appeal, even if we were inclined, which we are not, to come to a contrary conclusion. The second finding the learned District Judge arrived at again after full examination of the evidence but in disagreement with the first Court was that the non-proprietors defendants in this case or some of their ancestors could, according to the riwaj-i-am, have purchased the sites of these houses and may have done so. This again was a finding of fact which was based on good evidence and indeed no evidence has been placed before us which would shake the conclusion arrived at by the learned District Judge.

Here again even if we were inclined to come to a contrary conclusion, the finding was one which was not liable to be disturbed in second appeal. It is true that once the onus is placed on the landlords, it is an onus which is almost impossible to discharge but that is no ground for shifting the onus when a large number of instances of sales and mortgages extending over a century have been established and in not one case has there been a successful challenge. The conclusion is almost inevitable that the landlords had no right to challenge an alienation of a house belonging to a non-proprietor unless the landlord could show that the house was built on land granted by the proprietary body out of the shamilat deh.

The learned Single Judge has relied on a decision reported in Sewa Singh v. Ghulam (1), where a Division Bench of this Court upheld the proposition that there was no presumption in favour of the right of alienation by a non-proprietor in the village and it was held on the facts of that case that the place in question was a village and not a town. In Sewa Singh v. Ghulam (1), no question of principle was decided but the custom to transfer a tenancy without the consent of the landlord was held to be not proved. It was only held there that a certain quantum of evidence was not sufficient. A place with a population of five thousand souls was there held to be a village, but there was neither a Municipality nor a notified area; neither a hospital nor did the place possess any commercial importance, but was only a centre for the supply of troops generally inhabited by blacksmiths, carpenters, weavers, etc., besides the proprietors—a place which had never been described as having achieved the dignity of a Qusba. On these facts, too, that decision is distinguishable. That decision largely followed the rule stated in Ram Bilas v. Lal Bahadur (2), a case based only on all instances and in Tajammul Husain v. Banwari Lal (3), different view appears to have prevailed to that laid down in the earlier Allahabad case. But it must be remembered that where a question of fact is at issue, each case must depend on its own merits and on the evidence led in that case. Broadly stated, it may be taken as a rule that where a large number of unchallenged alienations by non-proprietors have been taking place for a very long period, the onus should be placed on the landlords to show that they have a right to control those alienations. This they may be able to show by proving a grant and then the case would be governed by the terms of that grant. To hold otherwise would be to hold that a rule of custom had been established and before a finding of fact on such a point could be upset, a certificate as regards custom must first be obtained from the District Judge.

Lastly it appears to me that there is corroboration for the view that the landlords in this case cannot contest the alienation owing to the fact that Jahangiri Mal, the purchaser of the house in dispute, was a Mahajan and Mahajans are one of the seven privileged castes who were excepted in the wajib-ul-are of 1877. If a Mahajan non-proprietor can transfer the site of his house without objection, a fortiori it appears that he can also acquire one without such an objection from the proprietors unless indeed the proprietors can show that in that particular case they have an interest of a proprietary character in the site in question, an interest which they derive from the terms of the grant of the site to a non-proprietor. In this view of the matter I would accept this appeal and leave the parties to bear their own costs throughout.

for perjury in a case, when should be lodged—Interest of justice—Proper considerations.

Though it is ordinarily in the interest of justice to bring the perjurer to book and check such offences, it is the duty of the Court to see whether it would ultimately promote the interests of justice if the perjurer is prosecuted. Where it is transparent that the criminal case is calculated to hamper the fair trial in the Civil Court, no prosecution for perjury should be lodged till after the case is decided by the Civil Court. 90 Ind. Cas. 445 (1), relied on.

Or. A. from the order of the Court of the Sessions Judge, Hoshangabad, dated June 27, 1939.

Mr. T. J. Kedar, for the Appellant.

Mr. W. R. Puranik, Advocate-General, for the Crown.

Judgment.—This is an appeal under s. 476-B of the Criminal P. O. against an order passed by the Sessions Judge, Hoshangabad, directing a complaint to be laid against the appellant for the offence of perjury punishable under s. 193, L.P.O.

The case is an off-shoot of a Session case arising out of the murder of one Ugra Patel. Six persons were put on trial; 3 of them were acquitted in the Court of Session and the rest in the High Court. In that case it was alleged that Ugra Patel after his dying declaration had been recorded executed a will on June 26, 1938, a copy of which was filed as Ex. P-43. The will was admittedly scribed by the appellant. He, when examined as P. W. No. 39 in the Sessions case, stated that he had never gone to the hospital and had neither scribed the will in the presence of the testator nor the latter signed it in his presence. His statement contradicted his endorsement: "signed; scribe Rewashankar Moolchand Dube of Harda, read over". It is also contradicted by the testimony of Vishnupant (P. W. No. 42) who was an attesting witness to the will.

At the instance of the District Magistrate, the learned Sessions Judge ordered a complaint to be filed as already stated against the appellant.

I do not disagree with the learned Sessions Judge that it is ordinarily in the interest of justice to bring the perjurer to book and check such offences, but the question is whether it would ultimately promote the interests of justice if the appellant is prosecuted at this stage. In the first instance it must be borne in mind that the issue as to the execution of the will was, as observed by the High Court, not material in the criminal case. It would be material in the Revenue and Civil Courts where there is bound to arise a controversy as to the genuineness of the will. The final decision will rest with the Civil Court. Nothing should be done to anticipate or prejudice the result of the civil litigation that is sure to ensue at no distant future. Is the contemplated criminal prosecution of the appellant likely to promote the ultimate ends of justice? That is, in my opinion, problematic. In the Criminal Court, all efforts would on one side be concentrated on securing the conviction and on the other acquittal of the accused. The witnesses, who would be produced to depose to the execution of the will, are apt to be influenced more by the considerations as to fate of the accused than by the desire to prove the genuineness or otherwise of the will itself. The forces that would operate on the mind of the witnesses in the Criminal Court are calculated to warp their attitude in the witness-box and commit them to a course which they would find it impossible to rectify in the Civil Court. It is transparent that the criminal case is calculated to hamper the fair trial of the issue in the Civil Court. It is on similar considerations that in Faujdar Rai v. Emperor (1), the order passed in that case making a complaint was set aside.

The lower Court's order is set aside and the complaint is directed to be withdrawn.

Stamp Act (II of 1899), ss. 60 (1), 40 (2)—Reference under s. 60 (1)—Proper time for—If competent after certificate by Collector under s. 40 (1) (a):

The proper time for making the reference under s. 60 (1), Stamp Act, is before the Court passes an order impounding the document. Where the document has been impounded and sent to the Collector under s. 38, the certificate of the Collector is conclusive of the matter under s. 40 (2) and subsequent reference under s. 60 (1) is incompetent and High Court has no jurisdiction to entertain it. 177 Ind. Cas. 733 (1), relied on.

C. Ref. made by the Munsif, Kheri.

Mr. R. N. Shukla, for the Applicant.

Mr. R. N. Shukla, for Opposite Party No. 4.

Judgment.—This reference by the learned Munsif of Kheri purports to be under s. 60 of the Stamp Act (II of 1899).

In a Small Cause Court Suit (No. 1660 of 1936 Himayat Ullah v. Parbhu Dayal and others), the plaintiff brought a suit on the basis of a promissory note and a receipt, Exs 1 and 2. It appears that the promissory note was executed by one Mahraj Bahadur in favour of Ohhote, defendant No. 4, who transferred his rights to Himayat Ullah by making the following endorsement on the receipt Ex. 2.

"To-day July 23, 1936, I having sold the claim including interest under the pro-note for Rs. 100 due against Mahraj Bahadur to Himayat Ullah... received its full consideration. The aforesaid vendee will have the right to recover the entire pro-note amount including interest from Mahraj Bahadur to which I will have no objection".

The learned Munsif held that the above endorsement amounted to a sale of an actionable claim and not a mere negotiation of a promissory note. He therefore ordered it to be impounded. The plaintiff paid the duty and penalty and the document was admitted in evidence. After the case had been decided, the impounded document was sent to the Collector under the provisions of s. 38 of the Stamp Act for necessary action, who obtained the opinion of the Stamp Officer, which is as follows:

"The endorsement on the pro-note is exempt from stamp duty under s. 14 (proviso) and Exemption 1 (a), Art. 62 of Sch. I of the Stamp Act. The Impounding Officer has wrongly realised Rs. 11"...

The Collector accepted the opinion of the Stamp Officer and directed that the learned Munsif may be accordingly informed.

In the opinion of the learned Munsif the opinion of the Stamp Officer is incorrect.

In our opinion it is not necessary for us to decide this question as we are of opinion that the reference made by the learned Munsif is incompetent.

Section 60 (1) of the Stamp Act provides:

"If any Court, other than a Court mentioned in s. 57 feels doubt as to the amount of duty to be paid in respect of any instrument under proviso (a) to s. 35, the Judge may draw up a statement of the case and refer it, with his own opinion thereon, for the decision of the High Court or Chief Court to which, if he were the Chief Controlling Revenue authority, he would under s. 57 refer the same."

The reference before us does not fall under s. 60 (1) and so far as we have been able to find out, there is no other section which covers this reference. There was no doubt in the mind of the Court as to the amount of duty which was to be paid in respect of this instrument. In our opinion the proper time for making the reference was before the learned Munsif passed the order impounding the document. Under s. 40 (1) of the Stamp Act when the Collector receives any instrument sent to him under s. 38, sub-s. (2) not being an instrument chargeable with a duty of one anna only or a bill of exchange or promissory note, he shall adopt the following procedure :

"(a) if he is of opinion that such instrument is duly stamped or is not chargeable with duty, he shall certify by endorsement thereon that it is duly stamped or that it is not so chargeable, as the case may be."

Under cl. (2) of the same section "every certificate under cl. (a) of sub-s. (1) shall, for the purposes of this Act, be conclusive evidence of the matters stated therein." By this reference the learned Munsif is really asking us to open the question which has become conclusive. We are supported in the above view by a Full Bench decision of this Court reported in 1938 O. W. N. 983, (Sita Ram v. Gaya Din) (1). Under the circumstances the reference is not competent, and we have no jurisdiction to entertain it.

We accordingly reject the reference and direct that the papers be returned to the Court concerned. The amount of Rs. 11 which has been realised by the impounding Officer will be returned to the plaintiff as pointed out by the Stamp Officer.

U. P. Encumbered Estates Act (XXV of 1934), ss. 4, 13—Proceedings before special Judge—Creditor dying during pendency of proceedings—Failure to bring his legal representatives on record—Effect—Whether extinguishes creditor's claim—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 5—Applicability, to applications under O. XXII, rr. 3 and 4, Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908).

U. P. Encumbered Estates Act was passed with a view to provide for the relief of encumbered estates in the United Provinces. The Preamble indicates that the relief under the Act is given to the landlord who is the owner of the encumbered estate. Ordinarily in a suit, relief is granted to the plaintiff in the suit. The landlord must, therefore, in view of the wordings of the Preamble, be regarded as the plaintiff in the proceedings under the Act, and the position of the creditor is that of the defendant. If therefore a claimant creditor dies during the pendency of the proceedings before the Special Judge, r. 4 and not r. 3 of O. XXII, Civil P. C., applies. The omission to bring on record the legal representatives of the deceased creditor has the effect of causing an abatement of the debtor's application only so far as the legal representatives of the deceased creditor are concerned and not of extinguishing the claim of the creditor.

The provisions of s. 5, Lim. Act are applicable to applications for substitution of names under O. XXII, rr. 3 and 4 of the Civil P. C.

F. A. from an order of the Special Judge, Shahjahanpur, dated July 19, 1937.

Mr. L. N. Gupta, for the Appellant.

Mr. N. C. Vaish, for the Respondents.

Iqbal Ahmad, J.—This appeal arises out of proceedings under the U. P. Encumbered Estates Act (XXV of 1934), and the cardinal question that arises for decision in the appeal is as to whether in proceedings under the Act, the debtor-applicants or the creditor-claimants are to be treated as plaintiffs in proceedings before the Special Judge. The facts are undisputed and are as follows: Thakur Gokaran Singh, appellant, filed an application before the Collector under s. 4 of the Act and the Collector in accordance with s. 6 of the Act forwarded the application to the Special Judge. The appellant then, in pursuance of the provisions of s. 8 of the Act, filed a written statement before the Special Judge, embodying the particulars of the debts due from him, and one of the creditors named in the written statement was one Mulu Singh. The notices prescribed by s. 9 of the Act were then published and Mulu Singh on April 18, 1936, filed a written statement embodying the particular of his claim. Thereafter Mulu Singh died on October 30, 1936, and no application to bring upon the record the legal representatives of Mulu Singh was filed within ninety days of the death of Mulu Singh. More than three months after the death of Mulu Singh his legal representatives filed an application for being brought upon the record. This application was opposed by Gokaran Singh appellant who contended that as no application for substitution of names was filed within ninety days of the death of Mulu Singh, the proceedings so far as Mulu Singh was concerned, abated, and as such, in view of the provisions of s. 13 of the Act the claim of Mulu Singh must be deemed to have been duly discharged. This contention of the appellant was overruled by the learned Special Judge who granted the application filed by the legal representatives of Mulu Singh and ordered their names to be brought on the record. In our judgment, the decision of the learned Judge is perfectly correct and ought to be affirmed.

By r. 6 framed by the Local Govt. under the Act, proceedings under the Act are to be governed by the provisions of the Civil P. O. of 1908, for the time being in force so far as they are applicable and not inconsistent with the provisions of the Act and of the rules framed by the Local Govt. In view of this rule, the provisions of O. XXVI, Civil P. O., are applicable to proceedings under the Encumbered Estates Act, and the controversy between the parties in the Court below centered round the question whether r. 3 or r. 4 of O. XXII, Civil P. O., was applicable to the case. It was contended by Gokaran Singh, appellant, that as Mulu Singh was creditor and had filed a written statement preferring his claim against Gokaran Singh, Mulu Singh's position was that of plaintiff in the proceedings and the omission of his legal representatives to have themselves brought upon the record in place of Mulu Singh within the time limited by law had the effect of causing an abatement of the claim embodied by Mulu Singh in his written statement. In support of this contention reliance was placed on r. 3 of O. XXII, Civil P. O., which provides about proceedings for substitution of names on the death of one of several plaintiffs or of sole plaintiff in an action. Clause 2 of r. 3 lays down that where within the time limited by law no application is made for substitution of names as regards the deceased plaintiff, the suit shall abate so far as the deceased plaintiff is concerned. The legal representatives of Mulu Singh, on the other hand, placed reliance on r. 4 which provides about substitution of names of the legal representatives of a deceased defendant. Clause 3 of r. 4 lays down that where within the time limited by law no application is made to bring upon the record the legal representatives of the deceased defendant, the suit shall abate as against the deceased defendant. Mulu Singh's representative contended that the position of Mulu Singh was that of a defendant and the omission to bring upon the record his legal representatives within the time limited by law had the effect of causing an abatement of Gokaran Singh's application so far as Mulu Singh's legal representatives were concerned. They, however, submitted that they did not desire to take advantage of the omission of Gokaran Singh to apply for substitution of names within limitation and that, as they were anxious that the controversy between the parties be decided once and for all, they themselves had made an application for substitution of names.

In order to decide as to whether the application of Gokaran Singh abated so far as Mulu Singh was concerned, or whether the claim of Mulu Singh became extinguished in consequence of the omission to bring upon the record his legal representatives, it was necessary to determine whether the position of Gokaran Singh or the position of Mulu Singh was that of the plaintiff in the proceedings. It appears from the Preamble to the Act that the Act was passed with a view "to provide for the relief of encumbered estates in the United Provinces." The Preamble indicates that the relief under the Act is given to the landlord who is the owner of the encumbered estate. Ordinarily, in a suit, relief is granted to the plaintiff in the suit. The landlord must therefore in view of the wordings of the Preamble, be regarded as the plaintiff in the proceedings. Further, the initiation of legal proceedings rests with the plaintiff and as the machinery of the Act can be set in motion only on an application by the landlord, the landlord's position must be that of a plaintiff in proceedings under the Act. This conclusion is supported by the provisions of s. 20 of the Act which provides that under certain circumstances the landlord applicant can ask the Special Judge to quash the proceedings initiated on the application filed under s. 4 of the Act. A plaintiff in an action can put an end to the action by withdrawing the same, but this cannot be done by a defendant. There is no provision in the Act entitling a creditor to terminate the proceedings initiated under the Act. This also shows that the position of the landlord applicant is that of the plaintiff and the position of the creditor is that of the defendant.

The learned Counsel for Gokaran Singh argued that as in accordance with s. 9 of the Act 'claim' is preferred by a creditor he must be looked upon as plaintiff in the proceedings, and in this connection he invited our attention to ss. 10 and 14 of the Act where a creditor is described as a 'claimant.' He argued that as the creditor is the claimant, his position is that of the plaintiff. We are unable to agree with this contention. As we have said before, it is the landlord who claims relief and it is with a view to grant relief to the landlord that the creditors are called upon to submit their respective claims before the Special Judge. The proceedings before the Special Judge are primarily with a view to grant relief to the landlord applicant and the decrees that are passed in favour of the creditors in accordance with s. 14 of the Act are wholly and solely with the object of granting relief to the landlord-applicant. It is further to be noted that the landlord is described in the Act as the 'applicant' and an applicant can be more fittingly described as a plaintiff than a creditor who in pursuance of the provisions of the Act is called upon to submit a written statement embodying the particulars of his claim. We therefore hold that Gokaran Singh's position in the proceedings was that of the plaintiff and the omission to implead Mulu Singh's legal representatives had the effect of causing an abatement of Gokaran Singh's application so far as Mulu Singh was concerned. Mulu Singh's legal representatives, however, filed an application for substitution of names. This application was beyond time. But the provisions of s. 5, Lim. Act, are applicable to applications for substitution of names under O. XXII, rr. 3 and 4 of the Code. It was therefore open to the learned Special Judge to extend to Mulu Singh's legal representatives the benefit of s. 5, Lim. Act, and to order the legal representatives of Mulu Singh to be brought on the record. We therefore take it that in granting the application of Mulu Singh's legal representatives, the Special Judge did intend to, and did, as a matter of fact, extend the period of limitation for the application under s. 5, Lim. Act. For the reasons given above, we dismiss this appeal with costs.

Bihar Money-lenders (Regulation of Transactions) Act (VII of 1939), ss. 13, 14—Applicability—Whether apply where execution sale is completed before passing of Act—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 66 (as amended by Patna High Court)—Held, that there was no irregularity in entering valuation in sale proclamation.

There is nothing either in the Bihar Money-lenders (Regulation of Transactions) Act, 1939, or in the Bihar Money-lenders Act, 1938, to express the intention of the Legislature to invalidate a completed sale which was otherwise good. In order that ss. 13 and 14 of the Bihar Money-lenders (Regulation of Transactions) Act, 1939, may be applicable, it is necessary that the execution should be still pending. On the sale of immovable property being confirmed, execution is complete. Hence where the execution sale has been completed before the passing of the above Act, ss. 13 and 14 of that Act have no application. 185 Ind. Cas. 129 (1) and 160 Ind. Cas. 105 (2) (2), distinguished.

In the execution the sale proclamation contained an entry of the value as given by the decree holder and also mentioned the valuation arrived at in the High Court in earlier proceeding by an agreement between the decree-holder and the judgment-debtor. The sale took place on April 7, 1937.

Held, that it was not open to the judgment-debtor to contend that the entries regarding valuation in the sale proclamation constituted a substantial irregularity in the proceedings for sale.

A. from an order of the Subordinate Judge, Muzaffarpur, dated February 9, 1938.

Mr. Rai T. N. Sahay, for the Appellant.

Messrs. S. N. Bose and K. Dayal, for the Respondents.

Rowland, J.—This is an appeal by the judgment-debtor, four of whose properties were sold in execution of a mortgage decree. On an application to set aside the sale of all the properties on the ground of alleged irregularities and inadequacy of price, the Subordinate Judge set aside the sale of two properties Lots Nos. 2 and 4 of the sale and refused the application and confirmed the sale of the other two, namely Lots Nos. 1 and 3 of the sale. This appeal is against the confirmation of the sale of Lots Nos. 1 and 3. It was objected in the Court below that the processes in execution had been suppressed. This point was found against the judgment-debtor and that finding is not challenged in appeal.

The objection pressed here is that too low a valuation was entered in the sale proclamation in consequence of which the properties have been sold below their value causing loss to the judgment-debtor. The decree-holder had taken out execution of his decree in 1930 and the case came before this Court in Civil Revision No. 36 of 1931. In that case the valuation to be set by the Court on the properties was fixed by the agreement as follows :

Lot No. 3 400

At that time O. XXI, r. 66 of Civil P. O. required a value assessed by the Court to be entered in the sale proclamation. This rule was amended with effect from January 1, 1936. Thereafter its requirements were that the Court should enter in the sale proclamation the valuation placed on the property by the decree-holder and by the judgment-debtor, respectively, and no other valuation. In the present execution the sale proclamation contained an entry of the value as given by the decree-holder and also mentioned the valuation arrived at in the High Court. The decree-holder's valuation of Lot No. 1 was Rs. 1,200 and of Lot No. 3 Rs. 45. These figures as well as the valuation put down in the High Court in the earlier proceeding were entered in the sale proclamation. This was done in pursuance of an order of the Court, dated October 10, 1936, in Miscellaneous Case No. 199 of 1936 and the order shows that the two valuations were entered in the sale proclamation by agreement of both parties. In my view it is not now open to the judgment-debtor to contend that the entries regarding valuation in the sale proclamation constituted a substantial irregularity in the proceedings for sale. This I say with reference to the state of the law as it was then at the time of the sale proclamation and of the sale itself which took place on April 7, 1937; Lot No. 1 was purchased by a third party at Rs. 3,000 and Lot No. 3 at Rs. 50.

As regards the adequacy of the price fetched, the Subordinate Judge refers to the evidence regarding the value of Lot No. 1 and appears to be of opinion that apart from the valuation on which the parties agreed in the High Court the remainder of the evidence did not support the view that the property was worth more than Rs. 3,000 or that the judgment-debtor had suffered any material loss. He seems, however, to have thought himself bound to hold that the property was worth Rs. 7,000 because this value had been placed on it in the High Court six years earlier.

As regards Lot No. 3, this consisted of 4 bighas 7 kathas 11 dhurs of railway khanta land regarding which there seems to have been practically no evidence before him except the fact that its value had been fixed at Rs. 400 in the High Court. The Subordinate Judge may perhaps have relied on his own experience of the value of arable land and he expresses the opinion that the price seems to be rather a low price. When the proceedings leading up to the sale were found to have been free from irregularity, he held that the sale could not be set aside. Assuming that the law remained as it was at the time of the sale, I think we should clearly be bound to affirm the decision of the Subordinate Judge.

But it is argued for the appellant that we ought to have regard to the provisions of the Bihar Money-lenders (Regulation of Transactions) Act, 1939, ss. 13 and 14 and that the sale not being held in accordance with the provisions of those sections ought to be set aside—s. 13 requires the Court executing the decree to make an estimate of the value of the property of the judgment-debtor which is sought to be sold and of that portion of the property, the proceeds of the sale of which are likely to be sufficient to satisfy the decree. Section 14 requires that the proclamation of the intended sale shall include only so much of the property, the sale of which will be sufficient and shall state the value of the property, or portion of the property to be sold as determined under s. 13. Further it enacts that the property is not to be sold at a price lower than the price specified in the sale proclamation unless the decree-holder consents to forego so much of the amount decreed as is equal to the difference between the highest amount bid and the price specified for the property in the sale proclamation. It is contended that these sections of the Act being retrospective, apply to an execution instituted before the commencement of the Act and that an execution though commenced earlier must be continued in accordance with the provisions of the Act. If indeed the sale proclamation was still to be issued at the time when the Act came into force, I have no doubt that the Act would be applicable and the sale proclamation would have to be framed in accordance with its provisions. Even if a sale proclamation had issued and the sale were still to be held and the judgment-debtor asked that the sale should be held in accordance with the provisions of the Act and for that purpose a fresh sale proclamation should be issued, it would be the duty of the Court to comply with that request and issue the sale proclamation and hold the sale in accordance with that Act. This is the effect of the decision in Bishun Singh v. Palakdhari Singh (1), but in the present case the sale was completed before either the Bihar Money-lenders (Regulation of Transactions) Act, 1939, or the Bihar Money-lenders Act, 1938, was passed and there is nothing in either of those Acts to express the intention of the legislature to invalidate a completed sale which was otherwise good. We are referred for the appellant to the Privy Council decision in K. C. Mukerjee v. Ramratan Koer (2) but in my opinion what was there decided does not apply to the case before us. Their Lordships were considering the effect of the words in s. 26 (N) of the Bihar Tenancy Act. The words are "shall be deemed to have given", and their Lordships held that the substantive rights of landlords and their accrued causes of action were being abrogated by this provision in the enactment in the circumstances. It was said "respect for pending suits over old transfers cannot be assumed". In the Bihar Money-lenders (Regulation of Transactions, Act, s. 13 is no doubt made applicable to applications for execution whether made before or after the commencement of the Act and this section with s. 14 gives directions as to the preliminaries which are to precede a sale and the manner in which the sale is to be held. But in order that these sections may be applicable, it seems to be necessary that the execution should be still pending and it has been held that on the sale of immovable property being confirmed, execution is complete. The order confirming the sale was passed on February 9, 1938, before either of the Acts which have been referred to were enacted. I am, therefore, of opinion that those provisions do not operate to invalidate the sale.

In the result, I would dismiss the appeal

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XLIV, r. 1—Application for leave to appeal as pauper—Notice issued to respondent—Right of respondent to be heard on merits of appeal—Notices—Provisions of O. XXXIII regarding notice to be understood as incorporated in O. XLIV, r. 1, so far as applicable.

The wording of the proviso to O. XLIV, r. 1, Civil P. O., directs the Court to reject the application unless upon a perusal thereof and of the judgment and decree, certain matters appear to the Court. The word "perusal" implies that this is not to be the subject of argument by Counsel and that there is no right of Counsel to argue on the merits of the proposed appeal. The amendment of the Allahabad High Court directing notice to issue to the respondent does not give him any right to be heard on the point. All that he can argue is on the question of whether the proposed appellant is or is not a pauper. 153 Ind. Cas. 195 (1), explained.

Although there is no express provision in O. XLIV, Civil P. O., applicable to appeals for the issue of a notice yet the provisions, in so far as they are applicable, contained in O. XXXIII ought to be understood to be incorporated inasmuch as it is expressly laid down in O. XLIV, r. 1. 153 Ind. Cas. 195 (1), followed.

Mr. Sri Narain Sahai, for the Applicant.

Mr. Baleshwari Prasad, for the Respondents.

Mr. S. K. Dar, for the Crown.

Bennet, J.—This is an application of an unsuccessful plaintiff to appeal as a pauper. She was allowed to sue as a pauper in the Court below. By our order of September 5, 1938, we stated:

"We have gone through the judgment of the Court below and the application for leave to appeal as a pauper. We consider that it has been established that the case does come within the provisions of the order of pauper appeals. Accordingly, we direct that notice should issue to the opposite party to show cause why this application should not be allowed. The notice will be solely on the question as to whether the appellant is or is not a pauper," and notice was also to issue to the learned Govt. Advocate. To-day the Standing Counsel for Govt. states that he does not desire to oppose the application. In fact, under the provisions of O. XLIV, r. 2, no notice need have been issued. Mr. Baleshwari Prasad for the respondents has objected to the previous order and claims that he is entitled to argue on the merits of the proposed appeal and to show that it does not come under the proviso to O. XLIV, r. 1. He refers for this proposition to a Full Bench ruling, Powdhari v. Ram Sanwari (1), in that case, p. 962* shows:

"By the order issuing notice, the Division Bench did not express any opinion as regards the question whether the decree appealed from is contrary to law or to some usage having the force of law or is otherwise erroneous or unjust."

The Full Bench decided that, under these circumstances, the mere issue of notice did not preclude the Bench hearing the matter after the issue of notice from considering the question whether the decree appealed from is contrary to law or to some usage having the force of law or is otherwise erroneous or unjust. On p. 965* the Full Bench further observed:

"We do not of course mean to lay down that the Court is bound to issue notice to the opposite party, nor do we lay down that once notice has been issued, the Court is compelled to hear the opposite party and cannot change its mind and review its previous order under s. 151, Civil P. O."

The Full Bench therefore does not support the proposition advanced by Mr. Baleshwari Prasad. Mr. Baleshwari Prasad, however, points out that the book of rules framed by this High Court has an amendment to this O. XLIV, r. 1, as follows:

"Provided further that no application under this rule shall be allowed unless a notice of the application has been given to the proposed respondents."

This amendment, he states, is not mentioned by the Full Bench ruling and he argues that it was not brought to the notice of the Full Bench. The amendment is dated prior to the Full Bench ruling as the amendment is dated January 14, 1933, and the Full Bench ruling is of September 3, 1934, almost two years subsequent. There is a passage on p. 964* in the Full Bench ruling which states:

"No doubt there is no express provision in O. XLIV, applicable to appeals for the issue of a notice but the provisions, in so far as they are applicable, contained in O. XXXIII, ought to be understood to be incorporated inasmuch as r. 1 expressly lays down."

This refers to the words in r. 1:

"Subject, in all matters including the presentation of such application, to the provisions relating to suits by paupers, in so far as those provisions are applicable."

*Pages of (1934) A L J—[Ed.]

Obviously, the provisions in O. XXXIII, r. 6, in regard to notice are applied in this manner to O. XLIV, r. 1. The amendment on which Counsel lays stress makes provision only for notice to the respondent and makes no provision for notice to the learned Govt. Advocate or Standing Counsel, which is contained in O. XXXIII, r. 6, and which is the practice of this Court in cases where the proposed appellant has not been permitted to appear as a pauper in the Court below. The Full Bench therefore was perfectly correct, in our opinion with due respect, in referring to the provisions of O. XXXIII, for the issue of notice. Now the argument of learned Counsel is that the amendment directing notice to issue to the respondent implies that the notice shall entitle the respondent to argue the matters referred to in the proviso to r. 1. If this had been the intention of this High Court in adding an amendment to O. XLIV, r. 1, we consider that the amendment would have stated this matter plainly and that the amendment would have altered the wording of proviso 1. The wording of the proviso has not been altered and it directs the Court to reject the application unless upon a perusal thereof and of the judgment and decree, certain matters appear to the Court. Now the word "perusal" implies that this is not to be the subject of argument by Counsel and that there is no right of Counsel to argue. At the most it may be argued that the Full Bench ruling states that the Court may, if it desires, obtain the assistance of Counsel. But the Full Bench ruling nowhere lays down that the Court is bound to hear Counsel on the point. The procedure in O. XXXIII, shows that there is rejection of an application to sue as a pauper under r. 5 and this may be based on r. 5, sub-r. (d) "where his allegations do not show a cause of action;" that is the trial Court may examine the merits of the proposed plaintiff, but it does not examine those merits after hearing Counsel for each side on the subject. To hear Counsel for each side on the merits of the proposed appeal would be tantamount to giving some decision on the merits of the appeal. In our opinion, this is exactly what O. XLIV, r. 1 proviso is designed to avoid. The course is objectionable. Firstly, because such an expression of opinion by an Appellate Court after hearing Counsel is something which will prejudice one party or the other, and secondly, this would introduce a difference between the procedure of the trial Court and of the Appellate Court.

For these reasons, we think that there are no merits in the argument of the learned Counsel for the respondents and that he has no right whatever to be heard at any stage of the proceedings under O. XLIV, r. 1 on the merits of the proposed appeal. All that he can argue is on the question of whether the proposed appellant is or is not a pauper and on that point, he has not brought any affidavit or other materials. He asked for further time. The order was dated, nearly a year ago on September 5, 1938. We think there are no merits in the request for further time. As already pointed in the present case the appellant sued as a pauper and under O. XLIV, r. 2 proviso, the issue of notice was not necessary. We accordingly hold that the applicant is a pauper and we allow the applicant to appeal as a pauper.

Adverse possession—Possession of wrong-doer, nature of—His possessory right, whether heritable and transferable—Possession after his death by heir, if on behalf of all heirs.

The possession of a wrong-doer held for a term less than the period of limitation is a good title against the whole world with the exception of the true owner. This possessory right even though it has not ripened into ownership by lapse of the statutory period, is a right in immovable property which is heritable and transmissible according to law. The possession continued by some of his heirs would be regarded as possession on behalf of the whole unless and until it is shown that there is an exclusion or ouster of the other co-sharers. Mere exclusive possession by a co-sharer is not sufficient to extinguish the rights of the other co-sharers unless and until definite ouster is found. *Asher v. Messrs. Priya Nath Dutta and Himangshu Chandra Chaudhury, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Upendra Kumar Roy and Nani Gopal Das, for the Respondents.

B. K. Mukherjee, J.—This is an appeal on behalf of the plaintiffs and it arises out of a suit for partition. The plaintiffs' case is that the properties in suit with the exception of plots Nos. 13 and 14 in village Warup belonged to one Kadir Sarkar who was the common ancestor of the plaintiffs and defendants Nos. 1 to 4. The two plots Nos. 13 and 14 were acquired with the profits of those properties after the death of Kadir. Kadir died in the year 1892 leaving a wife Pearjan, three sons and three daughters born of her and another son named Jaha Bux, born of a pre-deceased wife. Plaintiffs Nos. 1 to 10 claimed their title through these three daughters of Kadir and plaintiffs Nos. 11 to 15 are the descendants and heirs of one of the sons of Kadir, named Aserabali, whereas plaintiffs Nos. 16 to 18 are the heirs of Jaha Bux, the son of Kadir by his first wife. Defendant No. 1 is Elim Ali, the only son of Kadir who is still living, and defendants Nos. 2 to 4 are the heirs and successor of Abbas Ali, the remaining son. Defendants Nos. 5 to 7 purported to have acquired the interest in the suit properties by reason of their purchase at a sale in execution of a money decree obtained against defendants Nos. 1 to 4. The plaintiffs' case is that they were in possession of this property jointly with defendants Nos. 1 to 4 and joint possession being found inconvenient, they now claim their shares according to Muhammadan Law.

The suit was contested primarily by defendant No. 7 and his case was that with the exception of plots Nos. 8 and 9 of Sch. II, the rest of the properties did not belong to Kadir but were acquired by his three sons, Elim, Abbas and Aserab, either jointly or severally. It is said that Aserabali made a gift of his shares in the properties to his two daughters and the daughters in their turn sold them to their uncles Elim and Abbas. The interests of these persons were put up to sale in execution of a mortgage-decree and was purchased by defendants Nos. 5 to 7. The trial Court on a consideration of the evidence came to the conclusion that plots Nos. 1 to 12 of village Warup and plot No. 1 of village Shibpur were the properties left by Kadir. With regard to the rest, the finding was that the plaintiffs failed to show that they had any interest in them. The trial Court gave the plaintiffs a preliminary decree in respect of these thirteen items of property and directed that a Commissioner should be appointed to make the partition in accordance with the shares set out in the plaint.

Against this decision there was an appeal taken to the lower Appellate Court and the lower Appellate Court has reversed the decision of the trial Judge and has dismissed the plaintiffs' suit. The learned District Judge did not dispute the finding of the Subordinate Judge that the thirteen items of property with regard to which a decree was given by the latter were the properties of Kadir. He held, however, that Kadir's interest in these properties was sold in execution of a money decree in the year 1888 and it was purchased by one Wajuddi. Wajuddi did not take possession of those properties and Kadir remained in occupation of these lands till his death in the year 1892. The learned Judge was of opinion that as Kadir's possession was merely of a wrong-doer and he had not acquired any title to these properties by adverse possession continued for a period of twelve years, he had no interest in the property which could devolve upon his heirs on his death and although after his death the possession was continued by his three sons, their possession was on their account as independent trespassers and they themselves acquired a good title to the property to the exclusion of the other heirs of Kadir. In this view of the case the Court was of opinion that neither the daughters nor Jaha Bux acquired any title to the properties in suit. It is against this decision that the present second appeal has been preferred.

It seems to me that in coming to his decision the learned Judge misdirected himself on a question of law. The possession of a wrong-doer held for a term less than the period of limitation is a good title against the whole world with the exception of the true owner. This possessory right even though it has not ripened into ownership by lapse of the statutory period, is a right in immovable property which is heritable and transmissible according to law: vide Asher v. White Lock (1), Gossain Dass Chunder v. Issur Chunder Nath (2) and Ram Piari v. Budh Sen (3). On the death of Kadir, therefore, whatever right he had in the property did devolve upon all his heirs, and the possession that was continued by some of his heirs would be regarded as possession on behalf of the whole unless and until it was shown that there was an exclusion or ouster of the other co-sharers. In this case the trial Judge came to the conclusion that the possession of the three sons of Kadir was not in any way adverse to his other heirs. The question of ouster has not been considered by the District Judge, who was of opinion that the possession of the three brothers was that of independent trespassers and consequently on their own account. It is true that the lower Appellate Court has referred to certain acts of possession which were exercised by these three sons of Kadir and they might show that they were enjoying the properties exclusively but nevertheless mere exclusive possession by a co-sharer is not sufficient to extinguish the rights of the other co-sharers unless and until definite ouster is found. I think that the lower Appellate Court has not considered the case from that aspect at all. In these circumstances the decree of the lower Appellate Court should be set aside and cases should be sent back to that Court in order that the appeal should be re-heard in the light of the observations made above.

The Court below will proceed on the footing that all the heirs of Kadir succeeded to his possessory right after the death of the latter, and it will decide on evidence as to whether the three sons were possessing the property to the exclusion of other co-sharers on assertion of a hostile title. If such adverse possession is proved, the order of dismissal passed by the lower Appellate Court will stand except with regard to plots Nos. 8 and 9 of Sch. II, which are not claimed by defendants Nos. 5 to 7. The plaintiffs in that case would have a decree in respect of these plots only. If on the other hand, no ouster or exclusion is found, the plaintiffs would be entitled to a decree as passed by the trial Court. The appeal is thus allowed and the case is remanded. There will be no order as to costs in this appeal. Future costs will abide the result.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XLV, r. 7—Privy Council Rules, r. 9—Time for lodging security, if can be extended under r. 9 beyond limit specified in O. XLV, r. 7.

The discretion given to the Court by r. 9 of the Privy Council Rules is a general one, which does, if the justice of the case requires it, enable the Court to extend the time for lodging security to any extent; but in exercising that discretion, the Court must have regard to the fact that under O. XLV, r. 7, the extension of time for giving security is strictly limited, and it would require a strong case to induce the Court to hold that justice requires an extension of time beyond the limit specified in that Rule. 101 Ind. Mr. R. A. Jahagirdar, Government Pleader, for Opponents Nos. 1 and 3.

Beaumont, C. J.—This is an application to allow the applicant to give substituted security for the cash payment, which he was required to make in relation to an appeal to the Privy Council. The application raises a point of practice, which has led to a difference of opinion between this High Court and other High Courts. Under O. XLV, r. 7, Civil P. O., an applicant desiring to appeal to the Privy Council is required, within 90 days or such further period, not exceeding 60 days, as the Court may, upon cause shown, allow from the date of the decree complained of, or within six weeks from the date of the grant of the certificate, whichever is the later date, to furnish security in cash or in Govt. security. The decree in the present case was passed on January 19, 1938, and the certificate was issued on December 14, 1938. Therefore it seems to me clear that under O. XLV, r. 7, no extension of time could be given beyond six weeks from December 14, 1938. But it is argued that an extension can be allowed under r. 9 of the Privy Council Rules, which came into force on the same day as the amendment to O. XLV, r. 7, which prescribed the period which I have referred to. Rule 9 is in these terms :

"Where an appellant, having obtained a certificate for the admission of an appeal, fails to furnish the security or make the deposit required (or apply with due diligence to the Court for an order admitting the appeal), the Court may, on its own motion or on an application in that behalf made by the respondent, cancel the certificate for the admission of the appeal, and may give such direction as to the costs of the appeal and the security entered into by the appellant as the Court shall think fit, or make such further or other order in the premises, as in the opinion of the Court the justice of the case requires."

Under s. 112, Civil P. O., the rules made by the Privy Council prevail in any conflict between them and the provisions of the Code, so that, if r. 9 of the Privy Council Rules conflicts in any way with O. XLV, r. 7, the provisions of r. 9 must prevail. The view which has been taken by a Full Bench of this Court in Nilkanth Balwant v. Vidya Narsinha Bharati (1), is that under r. 9 a general discretion is given to the Court to make such order as the justice of the case requires, and if the justice of the case requires the extension of time for giving security beyond that specified in O. XLV, r. 7, the Court has jurisdiction to make the order. That case has been followed by a Division Bench of this Court in Reianshidaya v. Gudnaya (2). However the Madras High Court in Poornananthachi v. Gopala-swami Odayar (3), and the Allahabad High Court in Bahadur Lal v. Judges of the High Court, Allahabad (4), take a different view. They think that r. 9 of the Privy Council Rules does not empower the Courts to extend the time beyond the limit specified in O. XLV, r. 7.

The learned Govt. Pleader has suggested that the matter should be referred to a Full Bench of five Judges, but as at present advised, I think the view taken by this Court in Nilkanth Balwant v. Vidya Narsinha Bharati (1), is the correct view. It seems to me that the discretion given to the Court by r. 9 of the Privy Council Rules is a general one, which does, if the justice of the case requires it, enable the Court to extend the time for lodging security to any extent; but in exercising that discretion we must have regard to the fact that under O. XLV, r. 7, the extension of time for giving security is strictly limited, and I think that it would require a strong case to induce the Court to hold that justice requires an extension of time beyond the limit specified in that Rule. In the present case apparently an order was made (rightly or wrongly) ex parte extending the time to February 25 next, that is to say, for a period which still has three days to run, but it is obvious that if we are to accede to this application on the merits, a further extension will have to be allowed. The applicant, who is a minor, says that he is unable to provide the Rs. 4,000 in cash which is required of him. But he says that he can raise the money on the security of immovable property worth at least Rs 40,000. Obviously, there would have to be an inquiry as to the value of the property which he proposes to substitute. But whatever the value of that property may be, I can see no reason why this application should not have been made within the period limited by O. XLV, r. 7. The applicant has known his financial position ever since the decree was passed. If the property is really worth as much as he alleges, I should have thought he would have had no difficulty in raising the sum which he requires on the security of that property. In my opinion, on merits, no case is made out for authorizing the applicant to give substituted security.

In the special circumstances of this case we grant under r. 9 an extension of fourteen days to give the security in cash. If it is not deposited, the application will be dismissed with costs. If it is deposited, costs will be costs in the appeal.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 182 (5)
—Application for execution to Court which passed the decree and not to transferee Court, whether to proper Court—Transferee Court not taking steps towards execution—Decree re-transferred to Court passing it—Order of re-transfer, if final.

After a decree has been transferred to another Court for execution, the proper Court to which a subsequent application for execution should be made is the transferee Court, as that is the Court whose duty it then is to execute the decree so far as it can be executed by that Court. Consequently, an execution application to the Court transferring the decree is not one made to a proper Court. 38 Ind. Cas 682 (1), relied on.

Where the transferee Court has taken no steps towards the execution and the decree is re-transferred by it to the Court passing it, the order of re-transfer is not the final order on an application within the meaning of Art. 182 (5), Limitation Act.

O. A. from the Appellate order of the District Judge, Murshidabad, dated July 29, 1937.

Messrs. Gopendra Nath Das and Sambhurnath Banerjee, for the Appellants.

Mr. Urukram Das Chakravarty, for the Respondents.

Judgment—A preliminary objection has been put forward to the effect that no appeal lies in this case, having regard to the provisions of s. 102, Civil P. C. In view of the fact that the suit with reference to which this appeal arises appears to have been valued at Rs 403, the preliminary objection must prevail. An alternative application has, however, been filed to the effect that the appeal may be treated as an application for revision, and this application has been granted.

It appears that the plaintiffs obtained a decree in the Court of the Munsif at Rampurhat on February 25, 1931. This decree was put into execution at Rampurhat and a sum of Rs. 80 was realized. On February 1, 1933, the decree-holders applied to the Munsif at Rampurhat for a certificate of non-satisfaction and for the transmission of the decree for execution to the Jangipur Court in accordance with the provisions of s. 39, Civil P. C. The decree was duly transmitted for execution to the Jangipur Court, but it appears that no further steps were taken at the Jangipur Court towards the execution of the decree with the result that on March 2, 1936, the decree was returned to the Court of the Munsif at Rampurhat. In the meantime, on January 31, 1936, the decree-holders filed a further application for execution at Rampurhat. This application appears to have been registered at Rampurhat on March 18, 1936, and it was subsequently transferred to the Munsif at Jangipur for execution. The application was ultimately dismissed on July 11, 1936. Subsequently, another application for execution was filed on January 30, 1937, and it is with this last application that we are now dealing. The first Court held that the application dated January 30, 1937, had been filed in time. The lower Appellate Court held, however, that the application in question was time-barred on account of the fact that the previous application for execution dated January 31, 1936, had not been filed in the proper Court in accordance with law as required by the provisions of Art. 182 (5), Lim. Act.

It has been argued by the learned Advocate for the petitioners in this case that the application for execution, dated January 31, 1936, was properly received by the Munsif at Rampurhat, even although the decree had been transferred for execution to the Court of the Munsif at Jangipur. In my opinion, however, this case is governed by the principles which have been laid down by the Privy Council in Maharajah of Bobbili v. Narasaraopeda Baliara Simhulu Bahadur (1). In that case their Lordships of the Judicial Committee pointed out that after a decree had been transferred to another Court for execution, the proper Court to which a subsequent application for execution should be made was the transferee Court, as that was the Court whose duty it then was to execute the decree so far as it could be executed by that Court. It is quite clear from the facts of the case now before me that on January 31, 1936, the decree was actually pending for execution in the Court of the Munsif at Jangipur and it was in that Court that any further application for execution should have been filed. It was not until March 2, 1936, that the execution case was re-transferred by the Jangipur Court to the Rampurhat Court. The learned Advocate for the petitioners contends that this date, namely March 2, 1936, should be taken as the date of a final order passed on an application for execution within the meaning of Art. 182 (5), Lim. Act, and that if this contention is accepted, he argues that the present application for execution would be in time. In my opinion, however, it cannot be said that any final order with reference to the application for execution was passed on March 2, 1936. All that happened on this date was that the Jangipur Court re-transferred the execution proceedings to the Rampurhat Court and these particular proceedings remained in the same condition as they were, when they were transferred to the Jangipur Court on February 1, 1933. It certainly cannot be said therefore that any final order was passed on March 2, 1936, with reference to these proceedings. To my mind, it is quite clear that the application for execution, which was filed on January 31, 1936, was not made to a proper Court within the meaning of Art 182 (5), Lim. Act. It follows, therefore, that this case has been rightly decided by the Court below. The appeal is, therefore, dismissed. This application for revision is, therefore, rejected. I make no order with regard to costs.

MUNICIPAL COUNCIL, TANJORE—

SUNDARESAN—RESPONDENT.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 182—Failure to represent execution petition returned for rectification, whether extends limitation.

It is not permissible for a decree-holder to extend the period of limitation by simply failing to represent an execution petition returned for rectification. The proper way to deal with such a petition as that is to treat it as not having come into existence at all.

A. against the order of the District Court, West Tanjore, dated June 29, 1934.

Mr. K. P. Ramakrishna Iyer, for the Appellant.

Judgment—The lower Courts are in my opinion right. It is not in my judgment permissible for a decree-holder to extend the period of limitation by simply failing to represent an execution petition returned for rectification. The proper way to deal with such a petition as that is to treat it as not having come into existence at all.

In this case the Municipal Council having presented an execution petition on August 15, 1929, which was returned for some defect, waited till August 14, 1932, and then filed a new execution petition. Allegation was made that the execution petition of 1929 had been "lost," but there was no pretence that the execution petition of 1932 was a revival or continuation of it. In fact, the execution petition of 1932 was not a revival or continuation of the execution petition of 1929; it was a new petition altogether. Now I do not think that Municipal Councils should be encouraged to indulge in such dilatoriness and neglect, as has been shown by the plaintiff Council in this case. The decree was passed in 1922 and it ought to have been executed long ago. The first execution petition was in 1924 and there were properties brought to sale but for some reason the sale was not held. The next petition was filed in December 1927 and that was returned and finally dismissed as "not pressed." Then came the petition of August 1929 and after that, full three years were allowed to pass, with nothing done. In such circumstances, the learned District Munsif would, in my opinion, have been liable to grave censure if he had used any discretion he possessed in favour of the Council. This appeal is accordingly dismissed. There will be no costs as the respondent does not appear.

Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (IX of 1887), s. 17—Purpose of security.

It is clear from the language of s. 17, Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, that the purpose for which security has to be furnished is to ensure the performance of the ex parte decree in case that decree is not set aside. The security to be furnished is not for the performance of the ultimate decree that might be passed in the event of the ex parte decree being set aside. 178 Ind. Cas. 181 (1), relied on.

Mr. Phanibhusan Chakravarty, for the Petitioner.

Dr. Pal and Mr. Panchanan Pal, for the Opposite Party.

Order.—From the record in this case it appears that the Court accepted as sufficient security under s. 17, Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, some property which was under attachment. It is urged on behalf of the petitioner that security such as this could not be regarded as security for the performance of the decree because with the setting aside of the ex parte decree, the attachment would come to an end. It appears, however, from the clear language of s. 17, Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, that the purpose for which security has to be furnished is to ensure the performance of the ex parte decree in case that decree is not set aside. I do not think it is possible to hold from the language of the section that it was the intention of the Legislature that the security to be furnished was for the performance of the ultimate decree that might be passed in the event of the ex parte decree being set aside. This was the view which was accepted by the Bombay High Court in Maganlal Pitambar Das v. Dahyabhai Chhaganlal (1), and in my opinion the interpretation placed on s. 17, Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, in that case is correct. Having regard to the considerations mentioned above, this Rule must be discharged with costs. The hearing-fee is assessed at one gold mohur.

BOMBAY HIGH COURT

Criminal Sessions Case No. 10 of 1939

July 20, 1939

LOKUR, J.

EMPEROR—PROSECUTOR

versus

LAVJI MANDAN—ACCUSED

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 115, 117, 109—Accused abetting commission of murder by public—Whether should be sentenced under s. 115 or s. 117—Such murder committed—Appropriate section of such offence is s. 109—Criminal trial—Sentence—Offence punishable under two different sections of Penal Code—Punishment should be under section imposing higher penalty.

Abetment has a reference both to the person or persons abetted, and to the offence or offences the commission of which is abetted. Section 117, I. P. O., deals with the former whatever be the nature of the offence abetted, while s. 115 deals with the latter, without having regard to the person or persons abetted. Section 115 is not confined to the abetment of a single person or a specified individual or individuals, and covers the case of the abetment of a class of persons also. It does not apply only if "no express provision is made by this Code for the punishment of such abetment." The words "such abetment" evidently refer to the abetment of the offence specified in the section itself, namely an offence punishable with death or transportation for life, and only ss. 121 and 131, provide for the punishment of the abetment of such offences. There is no express provision in the Code for the punishment of the abetment of murder. Hence, the abetment of the commission of murder, whether by a single individual or by a class of persons exceeding ten, falls under s. 115. In the latter case, it may fall under s. 117 also; but as s. 117 prescribes a lesser punishment, s. 115 is the more appropriate provision for such an offence. 146 Ind. Cas. 222 (1), not followed, 141 Ind. Cas. 578 (8), relied on.

Obiter.—If a person abets the commission of murder by the public, and murder is committed in consequence of the abetment, it cannot be said that the offence does not fall under s. 117, but the appropriate section for such an offence would be s. 109.

Where a person is found guilty of a criminal act which is punishable under two different sections of the I. P. O., he may be convicted under both the sections, but should be punished only under that section which imposes the higher penalty.

Messrs. S. D. Vimadlal and N. K. Petigara (Public Prosecutor), for the Crown,

Mr. K. H. E. Tarapore, for the Accused.

Judgment.—The offence said to have been committed by the accused consists in his publication of the cover page of his periodical called Garjana, containing an exhortation to the "Hindu society" that a "human beast" like the complainant "ought to be done to death like a dog." The question is whether this instigation of the Hindu public to murder the complainant falls under s. 115, I. P. C. Admittedly, it falls under s. 117, which prescribes punishment for abetting the commission of an offence by the public generally, or by any number or class of persons exceeding ten. Section 115 runs as follows:

"Whoever abets the commission of an offence punishable with death or transportation for life shall, if that offence be not committed in consequence of the abetment, and no express provision is made by this Code for the punishment of such abetment, be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to seven years, and shall also be liable to fine."

It is contended that this section applies only if no express provision is made by the Code for the punishment of abetment, and since the abetment of the commission of an offence by a class of persons exceeding ten is punishable under s. 117, s. 115 cannot apply. This contention finds support in the ruling of the Lahore High Court in Sania Singh v. Emperor (1). In that case, Bhide, J. (sitting alone) held that if s. 117 applied, the offence would not fall under s. 115; but he observed (p. 660*);

"In the present instance, the speech was addressed to a large audience, and in this aspect of the question, it might be said that s. 117, I. P. C., is more appropriate. No direct authority is cited and the point is perhaps not free from doubt."

It seems that the ruling of the Calcutta High Court in Emperor v. Dwarkanath Goswami (2), which had then been recently published in Emperor v. Dwarkanath Goswami (2), was not brought to his notice. That ruling is of a Division Bench and is just the opposite of the view taken by him. There Jack and Ghose, JJ. held that the words "express provision" in s. 115 referred to sections (like ss. 121 and 131) in which specific cases of abetment of offences punishable with death or transportation for life were dealt with, and s. 117 was not an express provision for the abetment of such an offence. With respect, I prefer to agree with this view. Abetment has a reference both to the person or persons abetted, and to the offence or offences the commission of which is abetted. Section 117 deals with the former whatever be the nature of the offence abetted, while s. 115 deals with the latter, without having regard to the person or persons abetted. It is not disputed that s. 115 is not confined to the abetment of a single person or a specified individual or individuals, and covers the case of the abetment of a class of persons also. It does not apply only if "no express provision is made by this Code for the punishment of such abetment." The words "such abetment" evidently refer to the abetment of the offence specified in the section itself, namely an offence punishable with death or transportation for life, and only ss. 121 and 131, I. P. C., provide for the punishment of the abetment of such offences. There is no express provision in the Code for the punishment of the abetment of murder. Hence, the abetment of the commission of murder, whether by a single individual or by a class of persons exceeding ten, falls under s. 115. In the latter case, it may fall under s. 117 also, but as s. 117 prescribes a lesser punishment, s. 115 is the more appropriate provision for such an offence. Although both the sections be applicable, there cannot be separate sentences under the two sections for the same criminal act, and the conviction should properly be under that section which inflicts the higher punishment.

Section 116, I. P. C., is similarly worded, and it applies where the offence abetted is punishable with imprisonment. If a class of persons exceeding ten be abetted to commit such an offence, s. 117 also would be applicable. If the offence abetted be theft, and the offence is not committed in consequence of the abetment, the punishment under s. 116 would be only a quarter of three years, that is to say, nine months, but under s. 117 it would be three years. Hence one who abets the public or a class of persons exceeding ten to commit theft, should be charged under s. 117 rather than under s. 116. In other words, where a person is found guilty of a criminal act which is punishable under two different sections of the I. P. C., he may be convicted under both the sections, but should be punished only under that section which imposes the higher penalty.

It may also be pointed out that if a person abets the commission of murder by the public, and murder is committed in consequence of the abetment, it cannot be said that the offence does not fall under s. 117, I. P. O. But the appropriate section for such an offence would be s. 109, though it contains a similar proviso that the section would be applicable if no express provision is made by the Code for the punishment of such abetment. Similarly, if in consequence of such abetment, murder is attempted but only hurt is caused, the appropriate section would be para. 2 of s. 115. In the present case the accused is charged under ss. 115 and 117 in the alternative, and if it be found proved that he abetted the Hindu public to commit the murder of the complainant, the appropriate section under which he should be convicted is s. 115, I. P. O.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 530, 561-A—Complaint under s. 420, Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), disclosing offence under s. 477—Accused tried and acquitted under former section—Magistrate having no jurisdiction to try under s. 477, Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860)—Proceedings, validity of—Fresh trial, necessity of.

Where the fact disclosed in the complaint under s. 420 constitutes an offence under s. 477 and it is found that the Magistrate trying the case and acquitting the accused under the former section had no jurisdiction to try the same under the latter section, the proceedings before him are void and the accused should be re-tried under the latter section but he should not be allowed to adduce fresh evidence so as to fill in gaps under s. 561-A, Criminal P. O.

Cr. R. from an order of the Session Judge, Ambala, dated June 15, 1938.

Mr. D. N. Aggarwal, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Vishnu Datta, for Respondent No. 1.

Mr. Nazir Hussain, Assistant Legal Remembrancer, for the Crown.

Order.—One Ram Pershad lodged a complaint under s. 420, I. P. O. against Dhanna and Sardara. The allegations made in the complaint were that the accused owed the complainant certain amount of money, that on a false representation being made to the complainant that the accused wanted to settle their account, the complainant was induced to produce his bahi and that when the bahi was opened for the inspection of the account, the accused tore away that part of the page of the bahi which bore their thumb-impressions and decamped. The trial Magistrate acquitted Sardara but convicted Dhanna under s. 420, I. P. O. and sentenced him to three months' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 50. On appeal, the Sessions Judge acquitted Dhanna, too. He, however, very rightly remarked towards the end of his judgment that the fact disclosed in the complaint constituted an offence under s. 477 and not under s. 420, I. P. O. Thereupon, Ram Pershad presented a petition to this Court urging that the acquittal of the accused was bad in law and that all proceedings taken before the trial Magistrate were void inasmuch as he had no jurisdiction to try the case. On going through the record I have come to the conclusion that the petitioner's objection must prevail. The trial Magistrate was not competent to exercise any jurisdiction in the matter. The offence of destroying any document which is a valuable security is punishable under s. 477, I. P. O. and this offence is under Sch. II to the Criminal P. O. triable by a Court of Sessions only. Section 530, Criminal P. O. enacts that if any Magistrate not being empowered by law in this behalf tries an offender, his proceedings shall be void. I have no option therefore but to declare the trial to be illegal.

Counsel for Dhanna argued that inasmuch as the Sessions Judge had come to a definite conclusion on the merits that no offence was committed by the accused, even if the original trial was held to be bad in law, no re-trial should be ordered. I agree so far as Sardara is concerned as even the complainant has made no such allegation against him as would connect him with the offence and his re-trial in these circumstances would cause him unnecessary trouble and harassment. The case of Dhanna, however, is distinguishable and in his case the normal course must be followed. His acquittal proceeds on the finding recorded by the Sessions Judge and inasmuch as the trial is being held illegal, the finding will ipso facto vanish.

Counsel has further urged that even if a re-trial is to be ordered, the complainant should not be allowed to produce fresh evidence in the case as this would defeat the ends of justice. In my view, the Counsel is on firm ground here. The object of the re-trial is, so to say, to legalize the proceedings that have already taken place and not to give further opportunity to the complainant to fill in the gaps. Under s. 561-A, therefore, with a view to secure the ends of justice and to prevent abuse of the process of the Court, I direct that the complainant should not be allowed to lead any evidence in the case which had not been adduced before. I accordingly accept this petition, set aside the orders of the trial Magistrate and the Sessions Judge so far as Dhanna is concerned, and send the case to the Court of a Magistrate of the First Class with enhanced powers under s. 30, Criminal P. O. for disposal in accordance with law.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), ss. 187, 145—Gomasta, if can conduct zemindari cases—Right conferred by s. 187, whether restricted

If a gomasta who is an authorized agent appears, the suit cannot be dismissed for default. But a recognized agent has no right of audience. There is nothing in the Ben. Ten. Act which lays down that agents have a right of audience or a right to plead. The word "appearance" in s. 187, Ben. Ten. Act is far too restricted for such a meaning to be attributed to it. All that s. 145 does is to give slightly wider powers to naibs and gomastas than are given to recognized agents under the Civil P. O. But they cannot plead and conduct cases. 28 Ind. Cas. 838 (1), followed.

The right conferred by s. 187 is not an unrestricted right, and it would always be open to the Court to direct the plaintiff's appearance in person.

O. Rule issued from the order of the First Court, Munsif of Maldab, dated June 1, 1939.

Dr. Radha Benode Pal and Bankim Chandra Banerji, for the Petitioner.

Messrs. Nagendra Nath Ghose and Shilendra Nath Mazumdar, for the Amicus Curiae.

Order.—This is a Rule calling on the opposite party to show cause why the order of the Munsif rejecting the petitioner's petition should not be set aside. As the opposite party has managed to get the suit stayed by an application to a Debt Settlement Board, he is no longer taking any interest in the matter and has not appeared. Mr. Ghosh, however, argued the case against the Rule as amicus curiae in order to put forward the point of view of the legal profession. The petitioner is a zamindar who has instituted several rent suits. His contention was that his gomasta, who was an authorized agent within the meaning of s. 145, Ben. Ten. Act, was entitled to conduct his cases in Court. The reason he put forward was that he wished to minimize the costs of litigation, and he proposed to follow this procedure in his conduct of uncontested suits. The learned Munsif pointed out correctly, that it does not make the slightest difference whether the suit is contested or not. If he is entitled to conduct his case in this way in uncontested suits, he is equally entitled to do so in contested suits. Dr. Pal has appeared in support of the Rule, and puts forward the case, that there is something peculiar about rent suits which will entitle the parties, perhaps I had better say plaintiffs, to conduct their cases in what would otherwise be a highly irregular manner. I need not stress the disastrous effects which any such thing would have on the administration of justice.

The first section relied upon is s. 187, Ben. Ten. Act. Under that section any appearance in Court required or otherwise authorized by the Act to be made by a landlord, may be made by an agent empowered in a particular manner. This provision is obviously of no help to the petitioner. It is quite true that, if an authorized agent appears, the suit cannot be dismissed for default. It was, however, laid down in the clearest terms in Harchand Ray Gobordhon Das v. B. N. Ry. Co. (1) that a recognized agent has no right of audience. It is perfectly true that that decision is concerned with a case in a Small Cause Court. But there is nothing in the Ben. Ten. Act, which lays down that agents have a right of audience, or a right to plead. The word "appearance" is far too restricted for such a meaning to be attributed to it. I agree with the view taken by the learned Munsif on this point. This, however, would not be sufficient to dispose of the petitioner's claim. The right conferred by s. 187 is not an unrestricted right, and it would always be open to the Court to direct the plaintiff's appearance in person. The other section is s. 145. All that this section does is to give slightly wider powers to naibs and gomastas than are given to recognized agents under the Civil P. O. For example, they may verify pleadings without obtaining the permission of the Court. They certainly cannot plead and conduct cases. The Rule is discharged.

LEACH, C. J., MOCKETT AND KRISHNASWAMI
AYYANGAR, JJ.In re S., AN ADVOCATE STRUCK OFF THE ROLLS—PETITIONER*Legal practitioner — Re admission — Name struck off from roll for misappropriation — When can be re-admitted.*

Before the Court can re-admit an Advocate who has been struck off the rolls for misappropriation, the Court must be fully satisfied that he has fully regained his character and is fitted for re-admission into the ranks of an honourable profession. Mere opinion is not sufficient. The Court requires solid facts and cogent reasons, not merely the opinions expressed by gentlemen who had given him certificates. Re-admission does not depend on the fact that he has been suspended or struck off the rolls for several years. He can only be re-admitted if he can show that he has become worthy to act as an Advocate. In deciding such matters the Court has a duty to the public and where an Advocate has been guilty of misappropriation, it must be shown that there is no likelihood of such an offence being committed again.

[After considering all the facts, the Court thought it fit not to re-admit the Advocate.]

C. Misc. P. to re-consider orders of the High Court, dated October 21, 1938.

Leach, C. J.—The petitioner applies to be re-admitted as an Advocate of this Court. In August, 1930, he was suspended from practice for misappropriation of moneys belonging to a client. On February 9, 1931, his name was struck off the rolls as the result of further misappropriation of client's money. He was adjudicated an insolvent on October 29, 1925. His liabilities were Rs. 90,000 and he had no assets. On April 11, 1938, my learned brother, Mockett, J., granted him his discharge on the grounds that he would be condemned to insolvency for life if it were not granted. The petitioner had no prospects of being able to pay anything to his creditors and the discharge was unopposed. In 1933 the petitioner applied to the Court to review its order striking his name off the roll of Advocates, but the application was dismissed on September 29, 1933, by a Full Bench composed of Beasley, C. J. and Sundaram Chetti and Stone, JJ. In support of that application the petitioner filed three certificates of character, two of them being signed by individual members of the Bar and the third being a joint certificate signed by 46 members of the Bar. The Bench refused the petition for two reasons. The first was that the Court required before re-admitting a person to the profession solid facts and cogent reasons, not merely the opinions expressed by gentlemen who had given the petitioner certificates. It was not enough to say that the petitioner was a fit and proper person for re-admission without stating the grounds on which the opinion was based. The second reason was that the petitioner was still an insolvent.

The petitioner has now obtained his discharge, but the first ground of the Full Bench for refusing to re-admit the petitioner still exists. The petitioner has filed three further certificates, but these do not carry the matter further. Since he was suspended from practice in 1930 the petitioner has had no employment. According to his statement in Court, he has throughout been supported by his daughter. Before the Court could re-admit an Advocate who has been struck off the rolls for misappropriation the Court must be fully satisfied that the petitioner has fully regained his character and is fitted for re-admission into the ranks of an honourable profession. Mere opinion is not sufficient. Here there are no cogent reasons for the Court holding that the petitioner has become fitted to be re-admitted as an Advocate. He has not attempted to obtain any employment. In fact he has stated that he refused two offers of employment made to him. One offer was employment as manager of an estate and the other was employment in an insurance company. The re-admission of an Advocate who has been struck off the rolls for misappropriation does not depend on the fact that he has been suspended or struck off the rolls for several years. He can only be re-admitted if he can show that he has become worthy to act as an Advocate. In deciding such matters the Court has a duty to the public and where an Advocate has been guilty of misappropriation, it must be shown that there is no likelihood of such an offence being committed again. In view of the previous decision and the fact that the position is now the same as it was then except that the petitioner has obtained his discharge, I consider that the Court would not be justified in allowing this petition.

O. P. Debt Conciliation Act (II of 1933), Rules under—Rr. 18, 47, s. 8—R. 18, if cures illegality occurring under r. 47—Due notice to minor creditor and guardian—Board and debtor failing to appoint proper guardian—Proceedings held null and void.

Rule 18 made under O. P. Debt Conciliation Act does not cure illegality occurring under r. 47 but deals with a notice sent in an irregular form.

Where after due notice to minor creditor and his guardian the Board and the debtor failed to have a proper guardian appointed, the proceedings are initially illegal and if this has resulted in failure to submit a statement of debt due to minor, the minor is gravely prejudiced. In such a case the minor is entitled to a declaration in Civil Court that the proceedings are null and void.

O. R. App. for revision of the decree of the Court of Small Causes, Nagpur, dated February 15, 1938.

Mr. T. B. Pendharkar, for the Applicant.

Mr. B. R. Mandlekar, for the Opposite Party.

Order.—This is an application to revise the judgment of the Judge of the Small Cause Court, Nagpur, in Civil Suit No. 125 of 1937, decided on February 15, 1938.

The non-applicant Saheb Chand Harakchand Shop represented by the proprietors Kasturchand and Kapurchand, both minors, filed the suit out of which this application arises to recover a debt due on an instalment bond, dated June 16, 1933, for Rs. 487 executed by the defendant in favour of the shop (Sahebchand Harakchand) then represented by the proprietor Premchand Punamchand, the father of the plaintiffs. Prior to the suit there were proceedings before the Debt Conciliation Board initiated by the defendant for settlement of his debt. The plaintiff was described there by the name of the shop Sahebchand Harakchand as being represented by the owner Kasturchand Premchand who was shown as a major. Notice was issued by the Board in the name of Sahebchand Harakchand, proprietor Kasturchand Premchand. Although Premchand had died and his sons Kasturchand and Kapurchand were minors, no guardian was appointed to represent the minors. The notice issued in the name of the shop as above was received by Hemkaran who was one of the agents appointed under a power-of-attorney executed by the minors' mother. It is not known whether Hemkaran was present at the proceedings before the Board but from the fact that a note is made in the order sheet as to the presence of all the creditors, it may be presumed that somebody on behalf of the shop Sahebchand Harakchand was present at the proceedings. The plaintiff's mother died during the pendency of the proceedings. That was on November 2, 1936. That fact was apparently brought to the notice of the Debt Conciliation Board, but no attempt was made to appoint a guardian for the minors. It appears one Panmal became the natural guardian. No notice was sent to Panmal or to anybody else on behalf of the minors. According to s. 8(1) of the Debt Conciliation Act, statement of debt owed by the minors ought to have been submitted to the Board but that was not done with the result that the Board declared that the debt owed to the shop of Sahebchand Harakchand was discharged.

In view of that order the defendant contended that the suit was not maintainable. The lower Court overruled the contention on the ground that the minor had not been served in accordance with law and that the proceedings before the Board were null and void. It therefore passed a decree in plaintiff's favour.

On behalf of the applicant it is urged that although there has been irregularity, that was only technical and that it did not prejudice the minors' interest in any way. Reliance is placed on O. XXX, r. 10, Civil P. O., s. 99, Civil P. O. and r. 18 of the rules framed under the O. P. Debt Conciliation Act, 1933. It is true that the agents appointed by the minors' mother were fully aware of the proceedings before the Debt Conciliation Board as is clear from a telegram, Ex D-5, and the letter dated May 31, 1936. There was, however, an irregularity in not issuing notice to the minor Kasturchand whose name was mentioned as the proprietor of the shop Sahebchand Harakchand. He was there described as a major and his brother Kapurchand was not impleaded at all. Under r. 47 of the rules framed under the O. P. Debt Conciliation Act, 1933, the Board and the debtor were bound to follow the procedure laid down in O. XXXII, Civil P. O., 1908. They have ignored that rule altogether. Rule 18 of those rules only deals with a notice sent in an irregular form but does not cure the illegality occurring under r. 47. Under O. XXXII, r. 3, it was incumbent on the debtor first to have a proper guardian appointed after due notice to the minor and to the guardian. The proceedings were initially illegal as this important step to secure the minors' representation in the proceedings was not taken. Even on the death of the minors' mother no step was taken to have a fresh guardian appointed. In short, the parties who were intended to be affected by the proceedings of the Debt Conciliation Board were not properly brought before the Board. The fact that Hemkaran appeared in the Court is non squitur as he happened also to be one of the creditors and had notice to appear before the Board. It is not clear from the record whether Hemkaran appeared on his own behalf or on behalf of the minors. Even if he had appeared in the latter capacity, it was imperative on him to submit a statement of debt due to the minors and his failure to do so has resulted in grave prejudice to the minors' interest in that the debt due to them was declared to be discharged. The proceedings before the Board were so irregular as to entitle the minors to a declaration in Civil Court that the proceedings were null and void and inoperative to affect their interest. Consequently the lower Court was right in holding that the order discharging the plaintiffs' debt made by the Debt Conciliation Board was void and of no avail. The Civil Court has under s. 8 (2) power to revive the debt which has been illegally declared by the Debt Conciliation Board to have been discharged.

I may add that this is particularly a case in which the Civil Court cannot overlook serious irregularities in the procedure of the Debt Conciliation Board on the ground that they were of a technical character. If the irregularity is condoned in this case, the minors' debt would be wiped off and that would result in great injustice to them. On the other hand to take serious notice of these irregularities and regard them as invalidating, the order of the Debt Conciliation Board would induce a sense of responsibility in the mind not only of the parties but also the Board when the minors are arrayed as parties before it. Rule 47 lays the responsibility of securing the due representation of minor parties on the Board as well. Weighing the considerations advanced on either side, there is no doubt that the interests of justice would be served better by exacting a stricter standard of procedure before the Board as the lower Court has done than otherwise. This will not mean any injustice to the debtor as it is open to him even now to move the Board, if in existence, or to move its successor for settlement of the debt. The fact that a decree has been passed does not impair his right to have the debt settled.

The application is dismissed with costs. Counsel's fees Rs. 20.

M. S. MENOKI—ACCUSED

Criminal trial—Evidence—Privileged communication—Letters written by accused to another accused, in possession of latter's lawyer—Whether privileged communication under s. 126, Evidence Act (I of 1872)—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 94 (3)—Documents protected under s. 126, Evidence Act (I of 1872), whether exempted under s. 94 (3).

Letters written by accused to another accused alleged to be in possession of latter's lawyer are not prima facie privileged communications by accused to his lawyer under s. 126, Evi. Act.

Clause 3 of s. 94, Criminal P. C., does not exempt documents protected under s. 126, Evi. Act, and the production of such documents is incumbent under s. 162, Evi. Act, notwithstanding any objection which there may be to the production or admissibility. 159 Ind. Cas. 524 (1), relied on.

Or. R. Case and P. to revise the order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Vizagapatam, dated February 10, 1939.

Mr. Kasturi Seshagiri Rao, for the Accused.

Order.—The application was for issue of summons to the lawyer for accused No. 6 under s. 94, Criminal P. C., to produce certain letters written by accused No. 1 to accused No. 6, alleged to be in his possession and prima facie those letters are not privileged communications by accused No. 6 to his lawyer under s. 126, Evi. Act. Further, as held in Gangai Ram v. Habib Ullah (1), cl. 3 of s. 94, Criminal P. C., does not exempt documents protected under s. 126, Evi. Act, and the production of such documents is incumbent under s. 162, Evi. Act, notwithstanding any objection which there may be to the production or admissibility. The validity of the objection has to be decided by the Court after production and the dismissal of the application for issue of summons for production of the letters is unsustainable. The order of dismissal is therefore set aside and the Magistrate is directed to issue the summons under s. 84, Criminal P. C., for production of the letters and deal with the documents according to law when produced.

BENNET AND VERMA, JJ.

Mst. JANAK DULARI—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANTversusSRI GOPAL AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—*RESPONDENTS

Government of India Act, 1935, (25 & 26 Geo. V, Ch. 42), ss. 317 (1), 321, Sch. IX—S. 317 (1) and Sch. IX provide that provisions of Part VI, Government of India Act 1919, (9 & 10 Geo. V, Ch. 101) should continue to have effect—Hindu Women's Right to Property Act (XVIII of 1937), is therefore valid—Enactment, when becomes an Act.

Section 317 (1) and Sch. IX, Govt. of India Act, 1935, provide that the provisions of Part VI, Govt. of India Act, 1919, in regard to the Indian Legislature should continue to have effect notwithstanding the repeal of that Act by the Govt. of India Act of 1935. Hence Hindu Women's Right to Property Act is perfectly a valid Act although passed by the Legislature before the Govt. of India Act came into force and assented to by the Governor-General after its coming into force.

According to the provisions of s. 68, Govt. of India Act of 1919, which appear continued in Sch. IX, Govt. of India Act, 1935, the enactment is a Bill when passed by the Indian Legislature but does not become an Act until the assent is given by the Governor-General.

F. A. from the decision of the Civil Judge, Bareilly, dated August 18, 1938.

Messrs. P. L. Banerji and S. N. Katju, for the Appellant.

Dr. S. N. Sen and Mr. G. S. Pathak, for the Respondents.

Bennet, J.—This is a first appeal by Mst. Janak Dulari, the plaintiff, whose suit has been dismissed on a preliminary issue of law. Musammat Janak Dulari claimed that she was entitled to one quarter share of the family property which had been held by her husband who died on July 26, 1937. She claimed this alternatively, either on the ground that her husband died possessed of this one quarter share as his separate property, or that, if the family was not proved to have been divided, the plaintiff was under Act XVIII of 1937, entitled to have this one quarter share. The written statement pleaded that "Act XVIII of 1937 was in no way valid and enforceable. It had not been validly passed by the Legislature. The Govt. or the Legislature had no power to enforce such an Act."

For some reason not stated no issue was framed on the question of whether the husband of the plaintiff died joint or separate. An issue was framed, No. 1:

"Whether the Act XVIII of 1937 was not validly passed by the Legislature and is unenforceable and not binding upon defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 4."

In the Court below the plaintiff apparently relied on s. 292, Govt. of India Act, 1935, as applying to this Act. The Hindu Women's Right to Property Act (Act XVIII of 1937). It was pointed out on behalf of the defendants that Act XVIII of 1937 was passed by the Indian Legislature before April 1, 1937, the date on which Part III, Govt. of India Act of 1935 came into force, and that the assent of the Governor-General was given to this Bill on April 14, 1937, after April 1, 1937. It was therefore argued for the defence that this Act was not a law in force immediately before the commencement of Part III, Govt. of India Act and therefore that s. 292 did not apply to Act XVIII of 1937. The Court below accepted this argument and held that Act XVIII of 1937 was not valid and therefore dismissed the suit of the plaintiff. In this first appeal Mr. Banerji for the appellant has not based his argument on s. 292, Govt. of India Act, 1935, but he has based it on the provisions of s. 317 of that Act and Sch. IX to that Act. There is only a brief mention in the judgment of the Court below; "Nor does s. 317 too of the Govt. of India Act, 1935, help her in any way," and there is no mention at all of Sch. IX of that Act. Therefore the point now raised has not been considered by the Court below. Under the Govt. of India Act, 1919, Part VI, s. 63 onwards dealt with Indian legislation and the powers of the Indian Legislature. It is for the defence to show that those powers have terminated and that the Legislature did not have power to pass this Act XVIII of 1937. It is true that s. 321, Govt. of India Act, 1935, states that the Govt. of India Act shall be repealed to the extent specified in col. 3 of Sch. X and that Sch. X does provide for the repeal of the Act including Part VI. But there is another section of the Govt. of India Act of 1935, s. 317, which provides of follows:

"(1) The provisions of the Govt. of India Act set out, with amendments, consequential on the provisions of this Act, in Sch. IX to this Act (being certain of the provisions of that Act relating to the Governor-General, the Commander-in-Chief, the Governor-General's Executive Council and the Indian Legislature and provisions supplemental to those provisions) shall, subject to those amendments, continue to have effect notwithstanding the repeal of that Act by this Act:

Provided that nothing in the said provisions shall affect the provisions of the last but one preceding section."

Schedule IX to which reference is made in s. 317 (1), sets out the provisions for the Indian Legislature contained in s. 63 onwards of the Govt. of India Act of 1919. Apparently, the section and Sch. IX provide that the provisions of Part VI, Govt. of India Act, 1919, in regard to the Indian Legislature should continue to have effect notwithstanding the repeal of that Act by the Govt. of India Act of 1935. We are unable to read any other meaning into these provisions. The language is particularly clear and not open to any doubt whatever in our opinion, and we cannot conceive that Parliament in enacting s. 317 and Sch. IX, Govt. of India Act of 1935, could have used language that could be more clear and definite. Dr. Sen for the respondents has, however, advanced the argument that the Act XVIII of 1937 was passed as a Bill by the Legislature before April 1, 1937, when the new Govt. of India Act, Part III came into force, and the assent of the Governor-General was given on April 14, 1937, after the new Govt. of India Act came into force. He argues therefore that s. 317 and Sch. IX cannot apply to Act XVIII of 1937. We asked him to explain what there was in the wording of s. 317 and Sch. IX which would not apply to the present case of Act XVIII of 1937 and he was quite unable to specify any wording in s. 317 or Sch. IX which would not apply. We may note that the provisions in regard to Federal Legislature, are contained in Part II, Govt. of India Act, 1935, and these provisions have not yet come into force as there has not yet been any proclamation bringing them into force under s. 320, sub-s. (1). Therefore no Federal legislation has as yet been brought into force as part of the law of India and under the provisions of the Govt. of India Act, s. 317 and Sch. IX the law in regard to the Indian Legislature contained in the Govt. of India Act, 1919, has all along continued to be the law for British India. It was natural that the framers of the Act should provide for such a course as it was not intended to bring Part II of the Act into force until a proclamation was made under s. 320. It appears to us that the provisions made in s. 317 and Sch. IX are intended to continue the validity of the functions of the Indian Legislature. Dr. Sen has not been able to show that there is any defect in the wording of s. 317 or in Sch. IX which fails to carry out that obvious intention.

Some reference was made to the question of whether this enactment, Act XVIII of 1937, was an Act when passed by the Legislature and before assent. The provisions of s. 63, Govt. of India Act of 1919, which appear continued in Sch. IX, Govt. of India Act, 1935, are quite clear and the enactment is a Bill when passed by the Indian Legislature but does not become an Act until the assent is given by the Governor-General. For these reasons we hold that the Act XVIII of 1937 is a perfectly valid Act and that the plaintiff is entitled to rely on it in the present case as a perfectly valid Act. We therefore allow this first appeal and we reverse the finding of the Court below on Issue No. 1, and as the Court below has not disposed of the remaining issues, we remand this suit for disposal by the Court below, on the remaining issues. As this plea of invalidity was taken by defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3, we direct that they shall pay the costs of this appeal to the plaintiff-appellant. Dr. Sen for the respondents asked that this Bench should certify that the case involved a substantial question of law as to the interpretation of the Govt. of India Act or orders in Council made thereunder in accordance with the provisions of s. 205 (1) for such certificates. As Dr. Sen has failed to show us any justification in s. 317 or Sch. IX for the argument which he put forward, we cannot say that this question was a substantial question of law and therefore we regret that we cannot grant the respondents the certificate under s. 205 (1).

—Affidavits—When can be acted upon.

Affidavits cannot properly be acted upon unless both parties agree to have them treated as evidence.

O. R. P. to revise order of the District Court, Bellary, dated March 12, 1937.

Facts.—The petitioner filed an application in the lower Court for leave to sue in forma pauperis and the respondent contested the application and stated that the petitioner was not a pauper and in support of that contention filed affidavits from two villagers stating that the petitioner had raised crops in the previous years of considerable value. The petitioner wanted the villagers to be summoned and examined and objected to the affidavits being received as evidence. The District Judge overruled the contention of the petitioner and accepted the affidavits and dismissed the application for leave to sue in forma pauperis. Against this order the present application for revision was filed.

Mr. A. Gopalacharulu, for the Petitioners.

The Government Pleader and Mr. K. R. Gupta, for the Respondent.

Order.—The learned District Judge ought, I think, to have summoned the witnesses, since the petitioners objected to the statements of the Reddi and the karnam. Affidavits cannot properly be acted upon unless both parties agree to have them treated as evidence. The order will be set aside and the petition restored to file for disposal according to law as provided for in O. XXXIII, Civil P. C. The costs of this petition will abide and follow the result.

Custom (Punjab)—Alienation—Widow—Reversioner, however distant, whether competent to challenge—Legal necessity—Pilgrimage to Gaya, if valid legal necessity—Punjab Pre-emption Act (I of 1913), s. 4—Agricultural land—Land not used for agricultural purposes for over 20 years—Land held not agricultural.

A reversioner, however, distant would be competent to challenge a widow's alienation. The exact degree of relationship is not material in a suit for declaration by reversioner that a sale by a widow should not affect his reversionary rights.

According to Hindu ideas a pilgrimage to Gaya by a widow is for the spiritual benefit of the husband and would constitute valid necessity for an alienation by her. [p 473, col. 2.]

The expression "agricultural land" in the Punjab Pre-emption Act has a technical meaning in that Act—the definition of the expression being practically the same as in the Punjab Alienation of Land Act. According to that definition, the land must have been used for agricultural purposes or purposes subservient to agriculture. When the land was not so used for a period of nearly 20 years, but has been lying uncultivated except for one year, when there was a garden on a portion of it, it cannot be held to fall within the said definition. 78 Ind. Cas. 443 (1), referred to.

S. A. from the decree of the Senior Sub-Judge, Karnal, dated June 8, 1938.

Mr. Jaggan Nath Aggarwal, for the Appellant.

Messrs. V. N. Sethi and C. L. Aggarwal, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—The plaintiff sued in this case for a declaration that the sale of one-half share in 4 bighas 4 biswas of land in mauza Dara Kalan, Tehsil Thanesar, by Mst. Manohari, defendant No. 2 for Rs. 99 in favour of defendant No. 1 shall not affect his reversionary rights. In the alternative he also sued for pre-emption of the property. The trial Court dismissed the suit but on appeal the learned Senior Subordinate Judge has granted a decree for pre-emption only on payment of Rs. 99. From this decision a second appeal has been preferred by defendant No. 1 and cross-objections have been filed on behalf of the plaintiff. So far as the claim for pre-emption is concerned, the plaintiff alleged that the land in suit was "agricultural land" within the meaning of the Punjab Pre-emption Act and in the alternative also sued for pre-emption on the footing that the property was in any case "village immovable" or "urban immovable" property. Unfortunately no distinct issues were framed on these points the only issue on the claim for pre-emption which was framed being "Has the plaintiff a preferential right to pre-empt?" However, evidence appears to have been led with regard to the different bases for the right of pre-emption as stated above. The trial Court found that the land in dispute was not agricultural (according to the judgment it appears that this was admitted before the trial Judge) and he held further that the land was urban immovable property and no custom of pre-emption with respect to such property had been proved. On appeal the learned

Senior Subordinate Judge has held that it was admitted in the written statement that the land in dispute was "agricultural land" (arazi zarai) and therefore the plaintiff was entitled to succeed on that footing as he was a co-sharer along with defendant No. 2 in the said land according to the entries in the revenue records. He accordingly decreed the claim for pre-emption though he upheld the trial Court's dismissal of the claim as regards the declaration sought by the plaintiff on the ground that the sale was without necessity and consideration.

It will be convenient to deal first with plaintiff's claim for a declaration which has been dismissed by both the Courts, but with regard to which cross objections have been filed by the plaintiff. The learned Judges of the Courts below have held that the plaintiff had failed to prove that he was a reversioner of the vendor, Mst. Manohari. This is a finding of fact. But the learned Counsel for the plaintiff-respondent has urged that the learned Senior Subordinate Judge has failed to consider properly the legal effect of the admission of Mst. Manohari herself and the documentary evidence in support of it. Musammam Manohari who was produced as a witness for the plaintiff, has admitted that her deceased husband was related to the adoptive father of the plaintiff in 8th or 10th degree. She has further admitted that her property is also joint with him. These admissions of Mst. Manohari who is supporting the defendants are sufficient prima facie proof of the relationship to shift the burden to the other side. It is true that Mst. Manohari has not given a complete pedigree table but that is no ground for rejecting her statement as regards the alleged relationship of which she may be expected to have knowledge. Her statement in Court receives further corroboration from a previous statement made by her (which was admitted) as also by the mutation Ex. P-8. The learned Senior Subordinate Judge has not referred to this evidence. I am therefore unable to agree with the finding of the learned Senior Subordinate Judge as regards the relationship of the plaintiff to Mst. Manohari and hold it to be proved that he is her reversioner. The exact degree of relationship is not material. It was conceded that a reversioner, however distant, would be competent to challenge a widow's alienation. I am, however, unable to agree with the learned Senior Subordinate Judge's finding on the question of necessity. Musammam Manohari deposed that she sold the land for Rs. 99 which sum was required for a pilgrimage to Gaya. Her statement is supported by the statements of D.W. No. 2 and D.W. No. 6. It appears from the evidence that she actually did go on pilgrimage to Gaya. Such a pilgrimage is, according to Hindu ideas, for the spiritual benefit of the husband and would constitute valid necessity for the alienation. The sum for which the land was sold was not unreasonable for the object in view. It was urged that it was not proved that Mst. Manohari's income was insufficient for the purpose. But all that is brought out in evidence is that she has an income of Rs. 50 per year from other property. This cannot be sufficient even for her food, much less for other requirements. It was said that she gets a share of the birt, but this consists only of occasional small presents at the time of performance of religious ceremonies, etc. The widow herself cannot perform any priestly functions and there is nothing on the record to suggest that she has any substantial income from this source. I am therefore of opinion that necessity for the sale has been proved.

I shall now deal with the claim for pre-emption on the basis that the land in dispute was agricultural land. In para. 1 of the plaint, it was merely stated that the land in dispute was the property of the plaintiff and defendant No. 2 and this is what was admitted by defendant No. 1. It is true that the land was described as arazi zarai but this was a general description which was not used with reference to the provisions of the Punjab Pre-emption Act. The expression "agricultural land" has a technical meaning in that Act—the definition of the expression being practically the same as in the Punjab Alienation of Land Act. I do not think the reply of defendant No. 1 to para. 1 of the plaint be reasonably taken to be tantamount to an admission that the land in dispute was "agricultural land" in the same sense of the definition of that expression as given in the Punjab Pre-emption Act. In reply to the paragraph in the plaint in which the plaintiff claimed a right of pre-emption, defendant No. 1 denied the right and joined issue on the point. This shows clearly that defendant No. 1 did not intend to admit that the plaintiff had any right of pre-emption with respect to the property in suit on the ground of its being "agricultural land." Apart from the above so-called admission of defendant No. 1, there is no other evidence worth the name on the record to prove that the property in dispute is agricultural land. The entries in the revenue records show that for nearly 20 years the land had been lying uncultivated except in the year 1925-26 when there was a garden on a small portion of it. In view of these entries in the revenue records, the oral evidence on the point cannot be believed. I am therefore of opinion that the land in dispute cannot be held to be agricultural land within the meaning of the Punjab Pre-emption Act; for, according to that definition, the land must have been used for agricultural purposes or purposes subservient to agriculture. When the land was not so used for a period of nearly 20 years, it cannot be held to fall within the said definition: cf. Gopimal v. Muhammad Yasin 78 Ind. Cas. 443 (1). The learned Senior Subordinate Judge has, however, given no finding on the other questions arising with reference to the claim for pre-emption, namely, whether the land was village immovable property or urban immovable property, and whether the plaintiff had proved that there was any custom of pre-emption in the locality where the land is situated in case the property was found to be urban immovable property. Similarly, Issues Nos. 6 and 7 with respect to the question of improvements and adverse possession, have been left undecided.

The case will, therefore, have to be remanded for re-decision after disposal of the following points, namely, 1. Is the land in dispute village immovable property and has plaintiff a superior right of pre-emption with respect to it? 2. If not, is it urban immovable property? 3. Does the custom of pre-emption obtain in the locality where the land in dispute is situated in case it is found to be urban immovable property? 4. What improvements have been made by defendant No. 1 and at what expense, and is he entitled to claim compensation for the same? It was alleged on behalf of the appellant that the land was already in possession of defendant No. 1 for over 12 years and the possession had been adverse. But there is no tangible evidence to prove this and the very fact that a formal sale was effected in 1936 is, I think, sufficient to show that defendant No. 1 had not acquired any valid title prior to the sale. I accordingly remand the case to the learned Senior Subordinate Judge for re-decision after disposing of the above points. Costs will follow final decision. Parties are directed to appear before the learned Subordinate Judge on May 1, 1939.

HEM CHANDRA MUKHERJEE

AND ANOTHER—OPPOSITE PARTY

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 102—Transfers whether voluntary or otherwise, if covered—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 52.

The general doctrine of lis pendens under s. 52, T. P. Act, has been extended to involuntary alienations and the same principle should apply in the case of transfers which are covered by r. 102 of O. XXI, Civil P. C. The transfer of property belonging to the judgment-debtor, whether such transfer be voluntary or involuntary, nevertheless operates as a transfer by the judgment-debtor and, the language of r. 102 is sufficiently wide to cover both kinds of alienations by a judgment-debtor.

O. Rule issued from an order of the First Munsif, Asansol (Burdwan), dated July 27, 1938.

Mr. Asoke Nath Mukherjee, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Jagdish Chandra Ghose, for the Opposite Party.

Order.—This Rule is directed against the order of the First Munsif of Asansol, dated July 27, 1938, in which he allowed a petition filed by the opposite party under O. XXI, r. 100, Civil P. C. The facts with which we are concerned in this case are briefly as follows: The petitioner Bepin Chandra Gorain instituted a suit, Title Suit No. 1165 of 1928, in the Court of the First Munsif of Asansol for a declaration of his title and for possession of certain plots of land including plots Nos. 1044 and 1599 in Mouza Damra. The defendants in the petitioner's suit were: (1) Matilal Marwari, (2) the Maharaja of Cossimbazar and also a number of other people, Promothanath Chatteraj and others, who may be described conveniently as the Chatterajas. The petitioner obtained a decree in the trial Court in respect of plots Nos. 1044 and 1599 against Matilal Marwari and the Maharaja of Cossimbazar, but his suit was dismissed against the Chatterajas. There were subsequently appeals with regard to this matter which culminated in an appeal to this Court, which was finally decided on July 5, 1935. In spite of all these appeals, however, the position as regards plots Nos. 1014 and 1599 remained unaltered. The position, therefore, was that, as far as these two plots were concerned, Bipin Chandra Gorain had obtained a decree only against Matifal Marwari and the Maharaja of Cossimbazar. In due course the petitioner put his decree into execution in Title Execution Case No. 20 of 1938 and obtained delivery of possession of the two above-mentioned plots on March 27, 1938. Thereupon, opposite party No. 1 Hem Chandra Mukherjee, filed a petition under O. XXI, r. 100, Civil P. C., asking that he might be restored to the possession of the two plots in question on the ground that he had purchased them in a certificate sale which had been held on December 21, 1935, at the instance of the Cossimbazar Raj Wards Estate. According to his sale certificate the tenants of the plots whose right, title and interest were purchased by him were some of the Chattoirajas who were defendants in the petitioner's Title Suit No. 1165 of 1928. He took possession of the said plots through the Court on March 24, 1936. The petition under O. XXI, r. 100, Civil P. C., was challenged by the petitioner on the ground that the transfer to the opposite party has taken place pendente lite and that this being the case, O. XXI, r. 102, must be regarded as a complete bar to such an application. The case was decided by the learned Munsif upon the footing that O. XXI, r. 102, Civil P. C., does not apply to involuntary alienations pendente lite.

It has been contended during the course of the arguments that this view is erroneous. The general provisions of the law with regard to the principle of lis pendens are contained in s. 52, T. P. Act. Having regard, however, to the terms of s. 2 (d), T. P. Act, the provisions of s. 52 would not directly apply as regards the matter with which we are now dealing. At the same time, as regards transfers in the course of execution proceedings, the rule of lis pendens is expressly recognized in O. XXI, r. 102, Civil P. C. The precise effect of this rule must, therefore, be considered. Rule 102 is as follows:

"Nothing in rr. 99 and 101 shall apply to resistance or obstruction in execution of a decree for the possession of immovable property by a person to whom the judgment-debtor has transferred the property after the institution of the suit in which the decree was passed or to the dispossession of any such person."

During the course of the argument there was some discussion on the question whether the rule was at all applicable in the present case. In order to ascertain the precise meaning of this rule some reference is necessary to some of the preceding rules of O. XXI. If there is resistance or obstruction to the execution of a decree for the possession of immovable property, the decree-holder may complain under r. 97. Rule 93 of O. XXI, provides that, when the resistance or obstruction was occasioned without any just cause, the decree-holder will be put into possession of the property. If, however, there is any just cause for the resistance or obstruction of the nature mentioned in r. 99 of O. XXI, the decree-holder's application is rejected. But, having regard to the provisions of r. 102, the person in possession cannot be said to have a right to be in possession if he has received the property on transfer from the judgment-debtor, after the institution of the suit in which the decree was passed. In such a case the decree-holder's application would be allowed under r. 93. The two succeeding rr. 100 and 101, relate to applications which may be made by the person (other than the judgment-debtor) in possession of the property which is the subject-matter of the execution proceedings. If any person in possession of such property other than the judgment-debtor is dispossessed, he may complain under r. 100 of O. XXI. If it is found that he was in possession on his own account, the Court will order him to be restored to possession, unless, in view of the provisions of r. 102, the judgment-debtor has transferred the property to him after the institution of the suit in which a decree was passed. The terms of r. 102 are therefore, such as to exclude from the benefit of r. 99 a transferee, pendente lite from the judgment-debtor who has resisted or obstructed the execution of the decree and from the benefit of r. 101 any such transferee who has been dispossessed of the transferred property.

It has been argued that the words "a person to whom the judgment-debtor has transferred the property" can only refer to a voluntary alienation on the part of a judgment-debtor and not to a transfer by a Court sale or a sale under the Public Demands Recovery Act. Admittedly, the general doctrine of lis pendens under s. 52, T. P. Act, had been extended by judicial decision to involuntary alienations and I see no reason why the same principle should not apply in the case of transfers which are covered by r. 102. The transfer of property belonging to the judgment-debtor, whether such transfer be voluntary or involuntary, nevertheless operates as a transfer by the judgment-debtor and, in this view of the case, I think that the language of r. 102 is sufficiently wide to cover both kinds of alienations by a judgment-debtor. In the case with which we are now dealing, it appears that the transfer of the two plots took place after the institution of the petitioner's suit and before the satisfaction of the decree. If it can be shown that these plots were transferred pendente lite by Matilal Marwari in favour of the opposite party, the petitioner would be entitled to succeed. On the facts, however, which appear from the record it has not been shown that the transfer to the opposite party by reason of the certificate sale operated in any way as a transfer by either of the judgment-debtors in respect of these two plots with which we are concerned. As already stated the tenants whose right, title and interest were transferred to the opposite party under the certificate sale were members of the Chatteraja family. The petitioner's suit had been clearly dismissed against the Chatterajas and it cannot be said that these people were in any sense judgment-debtors within the meaning of r. 102 of O. XXI. It follows, therefore, that r. 102 of O. XXI, can have no application to the facts of this case and the opposite party is, therefore, entitled to be put into possession of the property under r. 101 of O. XXI. I arrive, therefore, at the same conclusion as the learned Munsif although I do not agree with the line of reasoning which has been adopted by him. The Rule is accordingly discharged with costs, the hearing fee being assessed at four gold mohurs.

Negotiable instrument, transfer of, otherwise than by* Section 137, T. P. Act, is no bar to the transfer of a negotiable instrument otherwise than by endorsement. The T. P. Act not being in force in the Punjab an oral assignment is valid in this province.

[Case-law relied on.]

S. A. from the decree of the District Judge, Jullundur, dated October 20, 1938.

Mr. Mela Ram Aggarwal, for the Appellant.

Mr. Charanjiva Lal Aggarwal, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—The plaintiff sued in this case for recovery of Rs. 1,000 on the basis of a pro-note executed for defendant No. 1 in favour of defendant No. 2 which was alleged to have been orally assigned by the latter in favour of the plaintiff. The suit has been decreed by the Courts below and defendant No. 1 has preferred a second appeal. The appellant had resisted the suit on a number of grounds in the Courts below, but his learned Counsel has pressed only one point before me, viz., that a negotiable instrument can only be transferred in favour of another person by endorsement as required by s. 48, Negotiable Instruments Act, and that an oral assignment thereof was invalid as a transferee without the requisite endorsement is not a "holder" within the meaning of s. 8 of the Act and he would not therefore be entitled to sue as he cannot give a valid discharge (cf. s. 78 of the Act). The learned Counsel relied in support of his argument chiefly on Har Kishore Barua v. Gura Mia Chowdhury (1) and contended that Lacha Ram v. Hem Raj (2), Panna Lal Lachman Das v. Har Gopal Khubi Ram (3) and certain other rulings which are followed therein do not lay down correct law as the effect of s. 137, T. P. Act, which exempted negotiable instruments from the operation of s. 130 of the same Act, has not been considered in those rulings.

The learned Counsel for the respondent has on the other hand referred to a recent Full Bench decision of the Patna High Court reported in Ghanshyam Das v. Ragho Sahu (4), in which the Case-law has been discussed and it has been held that s. 137, T. P. Act, is no bar to the transfer of a negotiable instrument otherwise than by endorsement. The learned Counsel drew attention further to the wording of s. 118, cl. (a), Negotiable Instruments Act, which shows that the Act contemplates other modes of transfer of negotiable instruments besides endorsements. As regards the ruling relied on by the learned Counsel for the appellant, he pointed out that that ruling as well as certain other rulings referred to by the learned Counsel, [e.g., Subba Narayana v. Ramaswami Iyer (5), Jaswant Singh v. Gobind Ram (6), etc.] were cases of benamidars in which no question of the validity of any assignment arose and those cases were therefore distinguishable.

In my opinion, the contentions of the learned Counsel for the respondent are sound. The case reported in Har Kishore Barua v. Gura Mia Chowdhury (1), which was strongly relied on by the learned Counsel for the appellant, was one in which plaintiff sued on the basis of a negotiable instrument, alleging that the person in whose favour it was drawn was a benamidar. There was no question of assignment of the instrument in that case, whether oral or written, and the case was distinguished on this ground in a later Calcutta case reported in Surath Chandra v. Kripanath Choudhury (7), in which the conflict of rulings on this point was noted and explained. Virappa v. Mahadeappa (8), on which the learned Counsel for the appellant particularly relied was no doubt not a case of a benamidar, but it merely noted the conflict of authorities and followed the decision in Har Kishore Barua v. Gura Mia Chowdhury (1), without any independent decision of the point. Following the decision in Ghanshyam Das v. Ragho Sahu (4) and Surath Chandra v. Kripanath Choudhury (7), I hold that s. 137, is no bar to the transfer of a negotiable instrument otherwise than by endorsement. As pointed out in these rulings the incidents of a transfer by endorsement and those of a transfer by assignment are different, but there seems to be no good reason for holding that assignment of a negotiable instrument otherwise than by endorsement is not valid at all. The T. P. Act not being in force in this province, there seems to be no reason why an oral assignment should not be valid in this province. This was the view taken in Panna Lal Lachhman Das v. Har Gopal Khubi Ram (3) and adopted in Lacha Ram v. Hem Raj (2). A similar view was taken in Palawan v. B. Kanu (9). In the present instance an oral assignment has been held to be proved and there is no valid ground for disturbing this finding of fact in second appeal. I accordingly affirm the decision of the learned District Judge and dismiss the appeal, but in view of the conflict of authorities, leave the parties to bear their costs.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 11, Proviso—Maintenance decree creating charge on certain properties—Decree-holder transferring portion of arrears but stipulating that assignee shall not bring to sale charged properties—Restrictions held valid.

In a decree for maintenance there was a charge upon certain property for the payment of the amount. Upon certain arrears falling due, the decree-holder transferred a portion of such arrears, but in order to safeguard his rights in regard to the realization of the rest of the arrears the decree-holder while transferring a portion of the arrears clearly stipulated that the assignee, should not have the right to bring the charged property to sale:

a portion of the decree to the respondent's assignor. The decree itself was a decree for maintenance obtained by the appellant as one of the junior members of the Kalahasthi family against the estate of Kalahasthi. The decree provided for payment of Rs. 400 a month charging the whole estate of Kalahasthi for payment of the said amount. The maintenance was never paid regularly and it was always in arrears. On September 11, 1922, there was a large amount of arrears due and payable to the appellant. He transferred a portion of the said arrears by Ex. I in favour of one Radhakrishna Chetty who assigned his interest therein to the respondent. The question now turns upon the construction of the deed of transfer, Ex. I. The decree being a maintenance decree with a specific charge on a certain property, the decree-holder was entitled not only to bring the properties to sale in realization of the amount due to him but also to get a Receiver appointed over specific portions of the charged property and also to proceed against the judgment-debtors personally if the decree allowed it. On the date of this transfer the appellant was entitled to these remedial rights. As he was transferring a portion of the decree, he wanted to safeguard his rights in regard to the realization of the rest of the arrears which were still due to him and which he wanted to realize in execution of the decree. Therefore while transferring a portion of the arrears he clearly stipulated that the assignee, the said Radhakrishna Chetty, should not have the right to bring the village to sale. It was certainly competent to the decree-holder to impose the said restriction. The learned Subordinate Judge seems to have thought that as there was a transfer of the right to receive a portion of the amount due under Ex. I the stipulation that the transferee shall not bring the properties to sale operated as a restriction in regard to his absolute enjoyment of the property and was therefore forbidden by s. 10, T. P. Act.

It seems to us that s. 10 is obviously a slip. Apparently he wanted to rely on s. 11, which is the section which deals with restriction to the employment. Even if s. 11 were to apply, the restriction imposed would be covered by the Proviso to the section and would therefore be valid. In the result, we set aside the order of the learned Subordinate Judge directing sale and give leave to the petitioner to amend his execution petition by praying for the appointment of a Receiver of any other relief which he thinks he is entitled to and which he is advised to pray for. Civil Miscellaneous Appeal is allowed with costs but there will be no order as to costs in Civil Revision Petition.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 439 (6), 562—Release under s. 562 on probation of good conduct—Order set aside and sentence in lieu thereof passed under s. 562 (3)—Whether amounts to enhancement of sentence—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 379—Cattle theft—Proper punishment.

Under s. 562, Criminal P. C., when an accused is released on probation of good conduct, no sentence is passed by the Court. Therefore, when, under s. 562 (3) the High Court sets aside an order and passes a sentence in lieu thereof, it cannot be said that it enhances a sentence within the meaning of s. 439 (6), Criminal P. C. An enhancement of sentence pre-supposes that there is a sentence to be enhanced.

Offences of cattle theft are particularly mean and despicable offences in a community where so much depends upon cattle. They are inspired by no other motive than the ordinary motive of gain which, in many other cases, prompts a thief to steal, and it must be made plain to young men who steal cattle that if they are not going to prison, they will have at least to pay a heavy fine. The fine must be such as to make it clear that cattle lifting is not profitable. 142 Ind. Cas. 544 (1), relied on.

Or. Ref. made by the District Magistrate, Sukkur.

Mr. Partabrai D. Punwani, Advocate-General, for the Crown.

Mr. Rewachand V. Thadhani, for the Accused.

DAVIS, J. C.—This is a reference to us by the learned District Magistrate of Sukkur, in which he asks us to pass a sentence upon one Miro who has been convicted by the First Class Magistrate of Mirpur Mathelo of the theft of a bullock and released on probation of good conduct under s. 562, Criminal P. O. The learned District Magistrate states that cattle lifting is very common in his District and requires a deterrent sentence, and we might also refer him to the case of this Court in Emperor v. Jhanaji (1), at p. 35, in which (1) 27 S L R 34 at p. 35; 142 Ind. Cas. 544; A I R 1933 Sind 44; (1933) Or. Cas. 190; 3 Or. L J 420; Ind. Bul. (1933) Sind 113 (1).

two Judges of this Court set out good reasons why in cases of cattle thefts which are prevalent in a district sentences of imprisonment should be passed and why first offences of this nature should not ordinarily go unpunished. The learned Advocate who appeared for this Miro, who is a young man of, as the Magistrate says, about 25 years of age, claimed to be heard on the merits of the case, because he said that under s. 439 (6), Criminal P. O., he could show, in case of enhancement of a sentence, cause against the sentence itself. But we do not see how it can be said here that we are enhancing a sentence or acting under s. 439 (6) because the enhancement of a sentence presumes there is a sentence to be enhanced, but under s. 562, Criminal P. O., it is clear that what is done is done in lieu of sentence. It says;

"...if it appears to the Court before which he is convicted, regard being had to the age, character or antecedents of the offender, and to the circumstances in which the offence was committed, that it is expedient that the offender should be released on probation of good conduct, the Court may instead of sentencing him at once to any punishment, direct that he be released on his entering into a bond."

So it is clear to us that under s. 562, Criminal P. O., when an accused is released on probation of good conduct, no sentence is passed by the Court. Therefore, when, as under s. 562 (3) we are entitled to do, we set aside an order and pass a sentence in lieu thereof, it cannot be said that we enhance a sentence within the meaning of s. 439 (6), Criminal P. O., and however unfair this may appear to the learned Advocate, we are here to interpret the law and not to make it. Therefore we are not prepared to hear the learned Advocate upon the merits of the case, though we have heard him on all matters material to the question before us, that is the passing of a sentence of imprisonment in lieu of the order passed by the Magistrate under s. 562, Criminal P. O.

The learned Advocate pointed out to us that though in Emperor v. Jhanaji (1), at p. 35* the Court expressed its disapproval of leniency in cases of cattle lifting, nevertheless it did not interfere because of the time that had elapsed between the order of the Magistrate and the date on which the Court was hearing the reference. But apart from the question that the lapse of time in that case was far greater than the lapse of time in this, we do not think that we can allow offences of this nature to pass upon an order of a Magistrate of release on probation of good conduct under s. 562, Criminal P. O. Offences of cattle theft are particularly mean and despicable offences in a community where so much depends upon cattle. They are inspired by no other motive than the ordinary motive of gain which in many other cases prompts a thief to steal, and we think it must be made plain to young men who steal cattle that if they are not going to prison they will have at least to pay a heavy fine: and we are willing in this case under the circumstances to give this method of a fine a trial, though if subsequent cases show that even this leniency is misunderstood, there may be no alternative for us but to follow in practice the reasoning and conclusions in Emperor v. Jhanaji (1), to which we have referred. We do not wish to impose a fine that is too heavy to be paid. On the other hand, the fine must be such as to make it clear that cattle lifting is not profitable. The learned Advocate says that the father of the accused is a poor Mulla, though he previously stated that the father had lands. But assuming that the father is poor, we do not think it will be beyond the capacity of the accused or those closely interested in him to pay a fine of Rs. 150 and we think therefore that we should set aside the order of the Magistrate under s. 562, Criminal P. O., and pass upon the accused in lieu of the order a fine of Rs. 150, or direct him in default, to undergo rigorous imprisonment for six months. The accused can be given a fortnight to pay the fine. The father should execute a bond for the payment of the fine or for the appearance of the accused in this Court on failure to pay the fine within the time allotted, so that sentence imposed in default of fine may be undergone. The fine may be paid in the trial Court.

Section 72, Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act, applies to a suit falling under both cls. (w) and (y) of s. 3 of the Act. A suit may include several reliefs, some of which may be in time and the others time-barred. The question whether a suit is in time or not, cannot be decided unless each relief claimed in the suit is separately considered. In a mortgage suit where the relief claimed by the mortgagee is the recovery of the mortgage money by the sale of the mortgaged property and a personal decree is claimed in case the sale proceeds are found insufficient, the claim to recover the mortgage debt by the sale of the mortgaged property is governed by the provisions of the Lim. Act. But the other relief for a personal decree falls under s. 3, cl. (w), Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act, and the period of limitation is twelve years under s. 72 of the Act. 130 Ind. Cas. 590 (2), applied.

C. A. from the order passed by the Assistant Judge, Sholapur, in Appeal No. 346 of 1936.

Mr. M. G. Chitale, for the Appellant.

Mr. B. N. Gokhale, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—This second appeal is filed against a personal decree passed against the appellant for the recovery of the deficit, out of a mortgage decree passed against him, that remained due after the sale of the mortgaged property. The appellant mortgaged his property to the deceased father of the respondents for Rs. 2,500, on February 23, 1923, agreeing to re-pay that amount within one year. The respondents filed Suit No. 445 of 1931, on February 23, 1931, to recover the amount due under the mortgage-deed by the sale of the mortgaged property, and the deficit from the appellant in person. The usual mortgage-decree was passed on November 23, 1931, which reserved to the respondents liberty to apply for a personal decree if the sale proceeds from the mortgaged property be found insufficient, provided such claim for a personal decree was "legally admissible." In execution of that decree, the mortgaged property was duly sold and the sale proceeds fell short by Rs. 888-6-6. The respondents then made this application for a personal decree against the appellant to recover that amount. The appellant's contention with which we are concerned in this appeal was that when the suit was filed by the respondents against him, their claim for a personal decree was already time barred under Art. 116 of Sch. I, Lim. Act, 1908. The trial Court upheld this contention and rejected the respondents' application. In appeal it was held that the respondents' claim for a personal decree was governed by s. 72. Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act, and as the agreement was contained in a registered document, the period of limitation for a suit on that document was 12 years and not 6 years under Art. 116 of Sch. I, Lim. Act. The cause of action accrued one year after the date of the mortgage, i. e., on February 23, 1924, and as the suit was filed on February 23, 1931, the respondents' claim for a personal decree would be time-barred if the period of limitation was only six years. The question therefore is whether that claim is governed by s. 72, Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act, which extends the period of limitation to 12 years. Section 72 says:

"In any suit of the description mentioned in s. 3, cl. (w), for the recovery of money from a person who at the time when the cause of action arose was an agriculturist in any of the Districts of Poona, Satara, Sholapur and Ahmednagar, ...

(a) when such suit is founded on a written instrument registered under this Act or any law in force at the date of the execution of such instrument, 12 years."

It is not disputed that the claim for a personal decree against the appellant is founded on an instrument registered under the Registration Act, nor is it disputed that when the cause of action arose the appellant was an agriculturist. But it is urged that s. 72, Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act, would not be applicable since the suit in which a personal decree was claimed is not a suit of the description mentioned in s. 3, cl. (w), for the recovery of money from a person. The suit was primarily based on a mortgage-deed and the principal relief claimed by the respondents was the recovery of the mortgage debt by the sale of the mortgaged property, and a personal decree was claimed only in case the sale proceeds were found insufficient. It is true that a suit by a mortgagee to recover his mortgage dues falls under cl. (y) of s. 3, Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act (vide Gulamhussein v. Clara D'Souza (1)) but it is possible that a suit may contain different reliefs and may therefore fall under different clauses of s. 3. This aspect was considered in Essa Abdulla v. Khatijabai (2) where a question arose whether the High Court had jurisdiction to try a suit on a mortgage against an agriculturist who was not residing in Bombay. In that case their Lordships had to construe s. 11, Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act, which lays down:

"Every suit of the description mentioned in s. 3, cl. (w), may, if the defendant, or, when there are several defendants, one only of such defendants, is an agriculturist, be instituted and tried in a Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction such defendant resides, and not elsewhere."

In that suit also, as in the present case, three distinct reliefs were claimed, viz., (a) recovery of the mortgage amount from the defendants, (b) in case of failure, recovery of that amount by the sale of the mortgaged property, and (c) if the proceeds of sale were insufficient, then liberty to apply for a personal decree for the balance. Discussing the nature of the suit with regard to these reliefs, the learned Chief Justice observed (p. 538*);

".....it seems to me clear that an ordinary action to enforce a mortgage may fall within cl. (w) and cl. (y). Where a mortgage contains a covenant for payment and a conveyance of property as security for the debt, an action to enforce the mortgage may involve a claim for a money judgment which would fall under cl. (w) and it may include a claim to enforce the mortgage by foreclosure or sale which would fall under cl. (y). But those two forms of relief are really quite distinct. In many cases you may have a mortgage without any covenant for payment, in which case your only relief is for foreclosure or sale or you may desire to enforce a mortgage by an originating summons, in which case you must confine your relief to foreclosure or sale, and you cannot ask for a money judgment. So that the two forms of relief which you can ask for in the action seem to me to be quite distinct."

On this ground it was held that the suit in that case consisted of two distinct parts, one falling under cl. (w) and the other under cl. (y). It was held that the part of the suit which fell under cl. (w) was beyond the jurisdiction of the High Court as under s. 11 it had to be filed within the jurisdiction of the Court where the agriculturists defendant lived; but it was held that the other part of the suit which fell under cl. (y) could be tried by the High Court. The same principle will also apply to the present case. Just as s. 11 was made expressly applicable only to a suit of the description mentioned in s. 3, cl. (w), so also s. 72 is made applicable only to suits of the description mentioned in s. 3, cl. (w). As in that case, here also the suit asked for two distinct reliefs, one falling under cl. (w) and the other under cl. (y); and as s. 11 was held applicable to that part of the suit which fell under cl. (w), so, too, in the present case that part of the suit which seeks the relief falling under s. 3, cl. (w), must be held to be governed by s. 72. A suit may include several reliefs, some of which may be in time and the others time-barred. The question whether a suit is in time or not, cannot be decided unless each relief claimed in the suit is separately considered. So far as the respondents' claim to recover the mortgage debt by the sale of the mortgaged property is concerned, it is governed by the provisions of the Lim. Act. But as regards the other relief for a personal decree which falls under s. 3, cl. (w), Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act, the period of limitation is twelve years under s. 72 of the Act. It is argued that the section does not apply to a suit which falls under both cls. (w) and (y) of s. 3 of the Act and that it must be confined only to those suits which fall only under s. 3, cl. (w), Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act. This argument is inconsistent with the reasoning adopted in Essa Abdulla v. Khatijabai (2). There the different parts of the suit with regard to the different reliefs were considered to be distinct and were held to be governed by different considerations. Section 11 was held to apply only to that part which fell under s. 3, cl. (w), although the suit as a whole fell under both cls. (w) and (y). Following that reasoning, I agree with the view taken by the lower Appellate Court that, so far as the respondents' claim for a personal decree was concerned, the suit falls under s. 3, cl. (w), and is governed by s. 72, Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act. That claim was therefore in time when the suit was filed. The appeal is, therefore, dismissed with costs.

Succession Act (XXXIX of 1925), ss. 291, 263 (d),—Surety to administration bond—Discharge—Default of administrator—Surety, if discharged—Administration completed—S. 263 (d), if applies.

A surety to an administration bond cannot discharge himself without an order of the Court. He is not a common law surety and cannot be regarded in the light of surety under the Contract Act, 98 Ind. Cas. 508 (3), relied on.

His liability is immediate and permanent and is only to disappear on the fulfilment of the obligations by the administrator. Default by the latter is no ground for discharging the bonds; it may be ground for revoking the grant or taking other steps to control the administration. [p. 433, col 2.]

Section 263 (d), Succession Act does not apply to cases where the administration has been completed.

Judgment.—In this matter I am much indebted to the assistance of Mr. Mitra whom I asked to argue the matter and I will consider the judgment now given after further perusal of the note which he has handed in. This is an application by the administratrix for her own discharge and the discharge of her surety, the Alliance Assurance Co. from the bonds given to the Court. The administratrix filed her inventory and her account and the petition states that the estate has been duly administered. The practical difficulty involved is that the Assurance Co., like other companies doing suretyship work, continues to charge an annual premium until some order of Court is obtained.

I have repeatedly expressed a doubt whether such orders should or can be made by this Court and I asked the office in this case to report upon the practice. The office reported that orders of this kind have become the practice either in an unconditional form or without prejudice to anything done or undone by the administrator up to the date of the order. I have looked into the matter further and I am the more convinced subject as I say to a further perusal of Mr. Mitra's note that the practice is erroneous. The bonds are given under s. 256, now s. 291 (1) of the Succession Act, read with rr. 15 and 16 of Chap. XXXV. The forms of the bonds are given in Appendix M, Forms 6 and 8.

I have a printed form of the bond before me supplied by the office and this contains the words "the said administration account, the same being first examined and allowed by the said High Court." The first thing to note is that these words are wholly inappropriate to our practice. We have no procedure for examining or checking these accounts and we have never done it. The words have remained in the bond. So far as I am aware, they do not appear in the English bonds for administration.

Now, the questions dealt with by the Indian Courts relating to administration bonds are of two categories to which I have added a third: (1) Discharge from or vacating the bond at the instance and at the will of the surety; (2) Discharge from or vacating the bond by order of Court on the ground of default by the administrator; (3) Discharge from or vacating the bond by the Court because of the fulfilment of the obligations by some form of declaration or finding that the estate has been properly administered. The last category is the one with which I have especially to deal.

Dealing with class (1) the view taken by this Court in Rajnarain Mookerjee v. Fulcoomari Bibi (1), to the effect that the surety or giver of the second bond is to be regarded in the light of a surety under the Contract Act and that he may therefore discharge himself by notice (see s. 130, Contract Act) was differed from by the Madras High Court Subroya Chetty v. Ragammal (2), and has now been definitely disposed of by the Privy Council in Mahomed Ali Mamooji v. Howeson Brothers (3). It is now clear that the surety, using that word throughout this judgment in a neutral sense, cannot discharge himself without an order of Court. That ruling, however, did not indicate the circumstances under which the Court would or could make an order for discharge.

Class (2). The Court was applied to for such an order in the following cases, Bai Somi v. Chokshi Ishvardas Mangaldas (4), was the case of a surety for a guardian. The Court refused the order on the ground that default by the guardian was the very object of taking and retaining the security. In Kanhaiya Lal v. Manki (5), the surety for an administrator applied for cancellation of the bond without giving reasons. This was during the course of the administration. The Court held that it had no jurisdiction to make such an order. The matter was dealt with by this Court on the appellate side in Rizdhika Nath v. Rati Kanta, 16 Ind. Cas. 1009 (6). The Court did not decide on the question of jurisdiction but Sir Ashutosh Mukherji and Rankin, J. held in that particular case that charges of improper administration were not sufficient ground for the Court's order.

Class (3) dealing with the last category, discharge by reason of the fulfilment of the obligations, we have, I think, only two cases, Arthur Gerald Norton Knight v. Emperor (7), where notwithstanding evidence that the administration was complete, the Court refused to make an order on the ground of want of jurisdiction. The case in In re Kanailal Khan (8), is peculiar; evidence was given of the satisfactory completion of the administration and of the acceptance of the accounts by the persons entitled to the estate. Nevertheless, after representations by the Registrar, the Court held that neither the administrator nor the sureties could be discharged. The order made was that the security given by the sureties could be released in the particular circumstances of the case.

The above cases lead me to the conclusion that the orders which have been very frequently made on these applications so far as they are applications for discharge, should not be made. To-day, I have had the benefit of Mr. Mitra's arguments and he has dealt mainly with the second category of cases, namely where the Court is applied to for discharge on the ground of mal-administration or similar grounds. He suggests, and it is a very ingenious suggestion, that the law and the rules of this Court can be reconciled by using as a key to the whole matter s. 263, Succession Act. Let me first quote r. 18-A of Chap. XXXVI of our rules. Rule 48 of Chap. XXXVIII may also be referred to but the rules in Chap. XXXVI are those which immediately apply :

"(18-A). The surety shall be entitled to bring to the notice of the Court any act, omission or neglect of duty cast on the administrator by law or any other circumstances which would entitle the surety to be discharged from the obligation created by the bond, and the Court may then make such order as it thinks fit."

Mr. Mitra has suggested that this means nothing more than an application lending to the revocation of the letters of administration; and it does not imply that the surety can be discharged or released from the obligation, but that read with s. 263, it is intended merely to bring about a cessation of the administration, which would have the practical result of protecting the surety. If that is the correct reading, I have nothing to say. But in my opinion, the language of the rules cannot be so limited. It is apparently assumed: (i) that there are a number of "circumstances which entitle the surety to be discharged from the obligation created by the bond;" (ii) among those circumstances is to be included "any omission or neglect of duty cast on the administrator by law;" (iii) that the Court may make an order for the discharge of surety.

It is quite true that the rule does not categorically state that the surety is entitled to be discharged by reason of the administrator's default, but this is clearly the implication. It is also true that it leaves the order at the discretion of the Court. But again it implies that an order of discharge can be made. If this is the correct reading of the rules, it may be well argued that the rules, of themselves place the surety in the position of a surety under the Contract Act, and of themselves give jurisdiction to the Court to discharge the surety. In my opinion the wording of those rules requires re-consideration. It seems to me that when drawn it was erroneously assumed that the giver of the second bond is a Common Law surety and nothing else. This, in my opinion, he is not. In my opinion his liability is immediate and permanent and is only to disappear on the fulfilment of the obligations by the administrator. Default by the latter is no ground for discharging the bonds; it may be ground for revoking the grant or taking other steps to control the administration.

Mr. Mitra has also assisted me on the question of discharge when the administration is completed, and has suggested that the solution suggested by him can be applied to this case also by reason of cl. (d) of s. 263, i. e., revocation of the grant on the ground that "the grant has become useless and inoperative." Here we have no rule to help or to confuse us. In my opinion, this does not apply to cases where the administration has been completed. I do not think that in circumstances such as the present applications for revocation can be made. I am quite aware of the practical difficulty of the annual premium, and that it is felt that under the present system some limit should be put to the period during which the Insurance Co. should continue to take an interest in the matter and continue to charge their premium. But as a matter of law it seems to me that what is asked of the Court is not logically justified. The order asked for, either amounts to a discharge or it amounts to a declaration by the Court that the estate has been properly administered. Either it has been properly administered or it has not. If it has, the bond does not operate. If it has not, a default has taken place and is taking place and that is one of the very things in respect of which the bond is given.

It is suggested that there can be no harm in making an order for discharge "without prejudice to past acts or defaults." In my view there is harm in so doing because in the case of administration it is meaningless and may give a false sense of security. The Court is not able to declare the administration complete. If it is complete, it is only for past acts, that the surety can be liable. If it is not complete, that is either past default, or not. In the latter case, the Court has no right to relieve the administrator or his surety of the consequences. It seems to me that the logic of the law must be followed and that a practical remedy must be found for a practical difficulty. I am aware the guardians and others under special provisions of law are able to get their accounts passed and consequently obtain in some form or other orders for discharge. The above judgment is given on the basis that, notwithstanding the phrase as to passing accounts in the bonds, there is no provision or machinery in our Courts for discharging or vacating the bond after enquiry.

Order accordingly.

THUMMALAPALLI KRISHNAMURTHI

AND OTHERS—RESPONDENTS

Mortgage—Suit on—Costs—Suit against mortgagors—Purchaser of mortgage property in execution of simple money decree made party—Suit not necessitated by any conduct on his part—His only defence being that he was not personally aware of mortgage—Whether can be made personally liable for costs of suit.

No doubt there is jurisdiction for the Court to award costs personally against a subsequent encumbrancer or a subsequent purchaser of the mortgaged property. But before the Court can do so, there must be a finding that the suit was necessitated by any improper conduct on their part as having repudiated the title of the mortgagee or as having raised frivolous defences in the suit thus enabling the plaintiff to incur more costs than were necessary.

In a suit against the mortgagors the purchaser of the mortgage property in a Court sale held in execution of a simple money decree was made a party. In the plaint the plaintiff alleged that before suit he called upon the purchaser to pay the debt due under the mortgage but he did not pay the same. The plaintiff prayed for a personal decree against the purchaser enabling him to recover the costs of the suit from him. The purchaser did not set up any defence in answer to the mortgage except stating that he was not personally aware of the mortgage and that he was obliged to add a plea that he was not personally liable for costs because the plaintiff claimed a personal decree against him. The Court awarded costs against him:

Held, that the suit was not necessitated by any conduct on the part of the purchaser and hence there was no justification for awarding costs against the purchaser. The mere fact that he did not comply with the notice of demand made upon him was not a reason recognised by law for awarding costs against him.

A. against the decree of the Sub-Judge, Narasapur, in O. S. No. 51 of 1933.

Mr. P. Panini Rao, for the Appellant.

Mr. B. V. Ramanarasu, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—The question in this appeal is whether defendant No. 9 is personally liable to pay the costs of the suit. The suit is upon a mortgage executed by defendants Nos. 1 and 3 and their father in favour of the plaintiff. Defendants Nos. 2 and 4 are the sons of defendants Nos. 1 and 3, respectively. Defendant No. 5 is one of the subsequent mortgagees and defendant No. 6 is the son of defendant No. 5. Defendants Nos. 7 and 8 are the grandsons of defendant No. 5. Defendant No. 9 is impleaded as a party to the suit as being the purchaser of the mortgage property in a Court sale held in execution of a simple money decree in O. S. No. 87 of 1930 on the file of the District Munsif's Court of Bhimavaram. Defendants Nos. 10 and 11 are the sons of defendant No. 9. The rest of the defendants are persons who claim under defendant No. 9. In the plaint the plaintiff alleged that before suit he called upon defendant No. 9 to pay the debt due under the mortgage but he did not pay the same. In the actual prayer portion the plaintiff prayed for a personal decree against defendant No. 9 enabling him to recover the costs of the suit from him. Defendant No. 9 filed a written statement alleging that he was only a purchaser in execution of a simple money decree subject to the mortgage and that he was not personally aware of the mortgage and that there was no reason why he should be made liable personally for the costs of the suit. The reason assigned by the learned Subordinate Judge is that defendant No. 9 did not comply with the notice of demand made upon him. That is not a reason recognised by law for awarding costs against an alienee of the property. Defendant No. 9 is not personally liable for the debt. There is no privity of contract between him and the mortgagee. In this case there is also a puisne mortgagee, defendant No. 5. The plaintiff was anyhow obliged to file a suit against the mortgagors and defendant No. 5 and the suit was therefore not necessitated by any conduct on the part of defendant No. 9. No doubt there is jurisdiction for the Court to award costs personally against a subsequent encumbrancer or a subsequent purchaser of the mortgaged property. But before the Court could do so, there must be a finding that the suit was necessitated by any improper conduct on their part as having repudiated the title of the mortgagee or as having raised frivolous defences in the suit thus enabling the plaintiff to incur more costs than were necessary. It will be seen from the defence of defendant No. 9 that he has not set up any defence in answer to the mortgage except stating that he was not personally aware of the mortgage and that he was obliged to add a plea that he was not personally liable for costs because the plaintiff claimed a personal decree against him. In the circumstances of this case, there seems to be no justification for the learned Judge awarding costs against defendant No. 9. Mr. Ramanarasu urged before me that defendant No. 9 decided to be the guardian for his minor sons, defendants Nos. 10 and 11, and that a Court guardian was appointed and he raised certain defences as a result of which the litigation was protracted. It may have been open to the Court to award costs personally against the Court guardian for having raised frivolous defences; but that is not a ground for awarding costs against defendant No. 9 personally. I therefore set aside the order of the learned Judge and allow this appeal with costs. Vakil's fee Rs. 50. So far as the lower Court is concerned, each party will bear his own costs.

SECRETARY OF STATE—APPLICANT*versusSADHO LAL JAISWAL—OPPOSITE PARTY.Railway—Risk-notes, Forms A and H—Case of non-delivery of consignments—Liability of Railway Company, if can be assumed—Onus.*

The language of risk-notes (Forms A and H) clearly shows that even in the case of the non-delivery of the consignment, it cannot be assumed that the Railway Co. is liable to pay damages to the consignor. It is true that the onus in a case of non-delivery of consignment lies on the Railway Co. in the first instance to disclose how the consignment was dealt with throughout the time it was in its possession or control and if it is found upon the evidence adduced by the Railway Co. that there was misconduct on the part of its servants, the Railway Co. would be liable to damages without any further evidence on behalf of the consignor. If it is found, however, that the evidence produced on behalf of the Railway Co. does not fairly lead to the inference that there was misconduct on the part of its servants, the burden of proving such misconduct shall then shift on to the consignor. [p. 437, col. 1.]

O. R. against an order of the Small Cause Court Judge, Allahabad, dated April 25, 1938.

Mr. A. M. Khwaja, for the Applicant.

Mr. Ram Nama Prasad, for the Opposite Party.

Order.—(February 3, 1939).—This is an application in revision under s. 25, Small Cause Courts Act. The applicant is the Secretary of State for India in Council through the Collector of Allahabad who was the defendant in the suit. The suit was brought by the opposite party Sadho Lal Jaiswal to recover a sum of Rs. 300 by way of damages from the applicant in the following circumstances:

The opposite party is the proprietor of a firm at Allahabad. The firm has dealings in the ordinary course of business at Bombay through a firm of commission agents there. It appears that the agents made over to the G. I. P. Ry. at Bombay a consignment of 27 tins of cocoanut oil for being carried to Allahabad. The consignment was addressed to self, but it is admitted that the R/R was sent to the opposite party through a bank and that the opposite party proceeded to take delivery of the consignment at Allahabad on March 14, 1937. It may be mentioned here that the consignment in question was accepted by the Railway Co. at Bombay under risk-notes (Forms A and H). As the main point which arises for consideration in this case turns upon the correct interpretation of the provisions contained in these notes, it is necessary to point out that under risk-note Form H the Railway Co. accepts a consignment at a special reduced rate at the owner's risk and in consideration of this reduction in the rate, the consignor undertakes to hold the said Railway Administration harmless and free from all responsibility for any loss, destruction or deterioration of or damage to all or any of such consignments from any cause whatever except upon proof that such loss, destruction, deterioration or damage arose from the misconduct of the Railway Administration's servants. This is the general term of agreement between the consignor and the Railway Co. as embodied in the risk-note Form H, but there is a further provision for two particular cases. The proviso runs as follows :

"Provided that in the following cases:

(a) Non-delivery of the whole of a consignment or of the whole of one or more packages forming part of a consignment packed in accordance with the instructions laid down in the tariff or where there are no such instructions, protected otherwise than by paper or other packing readily removable by hand and fully addressed, where such non-delivery is not due to accidents to train or to fire.

(b) Pilferage from a package or packages forming part of a consignment properly packed as in (a) when such pilferage is pointed out to the servants of the Railway Administration on or before delivery, the Railway Administration shall be bound to disclose to the consignor how the consignment was dealt with throughout the time it was in its possession or control, and, if necessary, to give evidence thereof before the consignor is called upon to prove misconduct, but if misconduct on the part of the Railway Administration or its servants cannot be fairly inferred from such evidence, the burden of proving such misconduct shall lie upon the consignor."

Under risk-note Form A the consignor admits that the consignment which he delivers to the Railway Co. is in bad condition liable to leakage or waste in transit and agrees and undertakes to hold the said Railway Administration over whose railway the said goods may be carried in transit harmless and free from all responsibility for the condition in which the aforesaid goods may be delivered to the consignee at destination and for any loss arising from the same except upon proof that such loss arose from misconduct on the part of the Railway Administration's servants.

As stated above, the consignment in question in the present case was accepted by the Railway Co. at Bombay under risk-notes (Forms A and H). The fact that the consignment was accepted under risk-note Form A undoubtedly raises a presumption that it was in bad condition and liable to damage, leakage or wastage at the time when it was delivered to the Railway Co. When the opposite party went to the Goods Shed at Allahabad to receive delivery of the consignment, he found that of the 27 tins offered to him, 20 had no oil left in them while the remaining 7 were also damaged to a certain extent. He found further that none of the tins bore any mark either of the Railway or of the consignor at Bombay to establish the identity of the consignment. He therefore refused to take delivery of the consignment in spite of being assured by the Railway Authorities that the consignment was in fact the same which had been delivered to the Railway Co. at Bombay by the consignor. From the evidence on the record it appears that the Railway Co. tried to satisfy the opposite party by a reference to certain documents in their possession that there could be no doubt about the identity of the consignment but the opposite party refused to accept delivery. The opposite party then proceeded to file the suit for damages out of which the present application in revision arises.

When the suit was originally tried, the learned Small Cause Court Judge dismissed it on two grounds: firstly that the opposite party was not the owner of the consignment in question and was not, therefore, competent to maintain the suit: secondly, that the opposite party had taken delivery of the consignment and it was consequently a case of short delivery and as the evidence did not establish any misconduct on the part of the Railway Co.'s servants the opposite party was not entitled to any damages. The opposite party came up in revision to this Court. The learned Judge of this Court who heard the case came to the conclusion that the opposite party was the owner of the consignment in question and that he was justified in refusing to take delivery of the consignment on the ground that its identity had not been established, so that it was not a case of short delivery but that of non-delivery. Having arrived at these conclusions, the learned Judge proceeded to pass the following order:

"It is therefore ordered that the revision be allowed and as the issue about the price has not been decided, the case be remanded to the lower Court to admit it under its original number and to dispose of it according to law."

When the case went back to the lower Court, it appears that the applicant wanted to produce some evidence on the question of his liability for damages, but the learned Small Cause Court Judge held that under the order passed by this Court he was authorized to decide the amount of damages only upon the evidence which was already on the record. He interpreted the order passed by this Court as an order decreeing the suit subject to the finding on the question of the amount of damages to which the opposite party was entitled. Proceeding upon that assumption he has fully decreed the opposite party's claim, hence the present application in revision.

The question which arises for consideration in this case is whether upon the finding of this Court that it was a case of non-delivery of a consignment, it necessarily followed that the opposite party was entitled to a decree. Upon a very careful consideration of the judgment of a learned Judge of this Court, I do not find anything in it to show that this question was really considered at that time. Apparently, it was assumed at the time that the necessary result of the non-delivery of the consignment in dispute was that the Railway Co. was liable to pay damages to the opposite party. A careful consideration of the language of risk-notes (Forms A and H) which I have set out above will show that this assumption is not correct. Proceeding upon the finding that it was a case of non-delivery of a consignment, the question still remains for consideration whether the Railway Co. is liable for damages. It is true that the onus in view of the above finding now lies on the Railway Co. in the first instance to disclose how the consignment was dealt with throughout the time it was in its possession or control and if it is found upon the evidence adduced by the Railway Co. that there was misconduct on the part of its servants, the Railway Co. would be liable to damages without any further evidence on behalf of the opposite party. If it is found, however, that the evidence produced on behalf of the Railway Co. does not fairly lead to the inference that there was misconduct on the part of its servants, the burden of proving such misconduct shall then shift on the opposite party. It appears from the record that the Railway Co. produced some evidence to show how it dealt with the consignment in question during the time it was in its possession and control and the learned Small Cause Court Judge who first dealt with the suit definitely found that misconduct on the part of the Railway Co's. servants had not been established. The learned Counsel for the opposite party has strenuously argued that it is necessarily implied in the finding arrived at by the learned Judge of this Court that the evidence adduced by the Railway Co. does not relate to the consignment which was delivered to the Co. by the opposite party's agent at Bombay but to some other consignment. The argument is no doubt ingenious but not very convincing. All that the learned Judge of this Court considered at the time was the question whether any marks of identification made by the Railway or by the consignor were present on the tins making up the consignment when they were offered to the opposite party at Allahabad, and it was found upon the evidence that there were no such marks and it was consequently held that the identity of the consignment had not been proved and hence the opposite party was justified in refusing to take delivery of it. The question as to what is the legal effect of the non-delivery of a consignment does not appear to have been argued before the learned Judge on the previous occasion and does not appear to have been considered by him. In my judgment, it is a vital question upon which the liability of the Railway Co. depends and as the case has not been considered from that point of view by the lower Court, I consider it necessary to send it back to the lower Court with the direction that it shall proceed to decide the point in the light of the observations which I have made above regarding the interpretation of risk-notes (Forms A and H). The parties shall be at liberty to produce fresh evidence if they care to do so. The finding will be submitted to this Court within two months from this date. The parties will have the usual ten days' time for filing objection, if any.

Order.—(September 8, 1939).—In continuation of my order dated February 3, 1939, by which I remanded this case to the lower Court for its finding upon a particular issue, I need only state that the lower Court has now found that the identity of the consignment in dispute which was refused by the plaintiff at Allahabad with the consignment that was delivered to the Railway Co. at Bombay by the consignor has not been established and upon the evidence produced by the Railway Co. to disclose how the consignment was dealt with throughout the time it was in its possession or control. It may fairly be inferred that there was misconduct on the part of the Co's. servants. This finding has been challenged by the learned Counsel for the defendants on various grounds. I have heard the learned Counsel at considerable length and have myself perused the material portion of the evidence upon which the lower Court's finding is based. Having done so, I do not find much force in the learned Counsel's contention and am inclined to accept the finding of the Court below. It is true that the lower Court allowed its mind to be influenced by its own interpretation of the order passed by this Court in a previous revision; but the fact remains that it considered the evidence upon its merits and ultimately arrived at the finding referred to above. Upon that finding which I accept, it is evident that the plaintiff's claim must be decreed. It was strenuously urged by the learned Counsel for the defendants that he should have been given a further opportunity by the Court below to produce evidence on the question of the amount of damages to which the plaintiff was entitled. I do not find much force in this contention. When the suit was first tried, there was a clear issue framed by the Court on the question of damages and it was open to the defendants to produce their evidence relating to that question. They failed to do so, and there was no sufficient reason why when the suit was remanded by this Court, the defendants should have been allowed a further opportunity of producing evidence which they could easily have adduced at the first stage. The Court below accepted the sworn testimony of the plaintiff of that point and passed a decree upon that basis. I see no sufficient reason for interference. The result therefore is that I dismiss this application in revision with costs.

e. Application dismissed.

The special provisions of the Ben. Waqf Act, 1934, cannot be read as meaning that s. 70 of that Act will have operation in proceedings outside the Province of Bengal.

Section 80-A (3), Govt. of India Act, cannot be interpreted to mean that the local Legislature is authorized to make laws regulating a central subject for peace and good government of territories lying outside the province. 167 Ind. Cas. 615 (1), referred to.

Mr. Abul Quasam (No. 2), for the Petitioner.

Messrs. Atul Chandra Gupta, Rabindra Nath Choudhury and Provash Chandra Basu, for the Opposite Party.

S. K. Ghose, J.—Civil Revision Cases Nos. 633 of 1938 and 679 of 1938 have been brought up together. It has been pointed out to us that the former case has become infructuous by reason of the fact that the suit out of which the matter arose was withdrawn by the plaintiff even before the Rule was issued by this Court on May 6, 1938. That being so, the Rule must stand discharged. In the other Civil Revision Case No. 679 of 1938, the question that arises for decision is, whether s. 70, Ben. Waqf Act, 1934, has application outside the province of Bengal. The relevant facts are these. The opposite party is the mutwali of a waqf created by a resident of Dacca with respect to properties situated partly in Bengal and partly in Assam. The said waqf has been duly enrolled under s. 44, Ben. Waqf Act, 1934, in the Office of the Commissioner of the Waqfs who is the petitioner in this case. The waqif had a firm operating at Dhubri in Assam. The decree-holder opposite party obtained a decree against that firm and filed an execution case No. 281 of 1936 in the Court of the Munsif at Dhubri. Some properties were sold without notice being issued to the petitioner under s. 70, Ben. Waqf Act. On June 16, 1937, the petitioner applied to the Munsif under s. 70 (5) of the Act for a declaration that the aforesaid sale was void. The learned Munsif by his order dated February 3, 1938, dismissed the application holding, first that the Ben. Waqf Act does not apply to Assam; secondly, that in any case, the Act does not apply to the present execution case which was instituted before the Ben. Waqf Act came into force; and thirdly, that the application was time-barred.

It is stated in para. 5 of the petition before us that at the hearing, the parties confined their contention to the question of the petitioner's locus standi and that on that understanding the Pleader of the petitioner did not adduce any evidence on the merits or on the question that the application was made within one month of his coming to know of the sale. Mr. Gupta appearing for the auction-purchaser opposite party does not dispute this statement. The decision of this rule therefore turns upon the question whether s. 70, Ben. Waqf Act applies to proceedings in Assam. If we hold that the section does apply, then the matter will have to be referred to the lower Court for further enquiry on other points. In support of his decision the learned Munsif has referred to the Preamble of the Act which states: "whereas it is expedient to make provision for the proper administration of waqf property in Bengal;" s. 1 (2) further provides that the Act extends to the whole of Bengal. The Advocate for the petitioner has placed strong reliance on s. 3, part of which runs as follows:—

"Save as herein otherwise specifically stated, this Act shall apply to all waqfs, whether created before or after the commencement of this Act, any part of the property of which is situated in Bengal."

His contention is that the Act operates in personam and in respect of the waqf as a whole and therefore all the provisions of the Act apply to all parts of the property of the waqf even if such parts are situated outside Bengal. Reliance has also been placed upon the fact that the Act has been passed with previous sanction of the Governor-General under sub-s. (3) of s. 80-A, Govt. of India Act. We have been referred to various provisions of the Waqf Act, such as, ss. 27, 38, 44, 45, 48, 55 and 59 for the purpose of showing that the Commissioner has been authorized to deal with the waqf as a whole which necessarily implies that he is to deal with the entire property even though part of it may be situated outside the province. Now, so far as s. 80-A, Govt. of India Act, is concerned, it may be relevant to point out that under sub-s. (1) of that section the local Legislature may make laws for the peace and good government of the territories for the time being constituting that province and this provision is made subject to the provisions of the Act. Under sub-s. (3), sub-cl. (e), the local Legislature may, with the previous sanction of the Governor-General, make laws regulating any central subject. This refers back to the provision in sub-s. (1) and it cannot be interpreted to mean that the local Legislature is authorized to make laws regulating a central subject for peace and good government of territories lying outside the province. No contrary interpretation was put upon the section by this Court in Debendra Narain Roy v. Jogendra Narain Deb (1). On the contrary, it was pointed out in that case that in the Bijni Succession Act, there was no definition of local extent and, having regard to the provisions of that Act, it was held that it applied to the status of the holder of the raij wherever the properties appertaining to the raij might be situated, even though some of the properties might be outside the Province of Assam. The Advocate for the petitioner has contended that the definition of extent in s. 1 (2), Ben. Waqf Act, does not take the matter any further, because in any case the local Legislature cannot make laws to operate for the peace and good government of the territories outside the province. But this argument does not also advance the case of the petitioner any further. So far as the status of the Commissioner is concerned, it is conferred by the Bengal Act to operate even outside the province. Therefore the Commissioner may bring suits under s. 72 or s. 73, Bengal Act, in Courts outside the province. But s. 70 lies in a different category, because it imposes an obligation on the Court to issue notice to the Commissioner in certain circumstances.

Mr. Gupta has contended that it is not within the province of the local Legislature to make any law which will affect the jurisdiction of the Court situated outside the province. Section 70 (1) refers to a suit or proceeding in respect of any waqf property, etc., and if this waqf property is situated outside the province, so that the Court having jurisdiction over it is also outside the province, then the Act cannot operate beyond its extent, that is to say, outside the province of Bengal. Otherwise, as Mr. Gupta points out, conflict of jurisdiction is inevitable, since it is suggested that every province may have a Waqf Act of its own. Leaving aside the larger question as to the interpretation of s. 80-A, Govt. of India Act, it seems to me that the special provisions of the Ben. Waqf Act, 1934, cannot be read as meaning that s. 70 of that Act will have operation in proceedings outside the Province of Bengal. I think, therefore, that the view taken by the learned Munsif is right. The Rule must stand discharged. There will be no order as to costs.

Criminal trial—Case under s. 379, Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860)—Property seized—After investigation case referred as of civil nature—Property should be returned to persons from whom it was seized and not to complainant.

In a case under s. 379, I. P. C., against five persons in respect of articles used in cultivation, the Police seized the property and after investigation referred the case as one of civil nature. The Magistrate struck off the case from the Police file but on the recommendation of the station house officer ordered that the property be returned to the complainant:

Held, that the subsequent order was wrong and the property had to be returned to the persons from whom it was seized.

Cr. R. Case and Case referred by the District Magistrate, Guntur, dated November 17, 1938.

Mr. K. Kottaya, for the Accused.

The Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.

Facts.—On the complaint of one B. B. of Tangutur village, the station house officer registered a case under s. 379, I. P. C. against five persons in respect of articles used in cultivation. The Police seized the property and after investigation, referred the case as one of civil nature. The stationary Sub-Magistrate struck off the case from the Police file but on the recommendation of the station house officer, ordered that the property be returned to the complainant. Against this order the District Magistrate referred the case to the High Court on the ground that the order of the stationary Sub-Magistrate was wrong and that he has no power to reverse the order.

Order.—The property was seized from accused No. 5 and it has to be returned to him. The order of the Sub-Magistrate is therefore set aside and the property will be returned to accused No. 5.

Mortgage—Interest—Stipulation for payment of, in nature of penalty—Stipulation held in nature of penalty and not binding on mortgagor—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 74.

A mortgage deed provided that the sum of Rs. 2,000 which was borrowed thereunder should be re-paid in eight annual instalments of Rs. 250 each, such instalments to count both towards principal as well as interest on the entire sum. The stipulation for payment of interest ran as follows: that in default of payment of sums due in any instalment, the sum remaining unpaid on that date shall be added to the principal and the entire amount become payable at once irrespective of future instalments, the entire sum carrying interest at 1 per cent. per mensem compound with yearly rests:

Held, that there was a clear penalty which the parties could not have intended to be enforced as damages for breach of the contract to pay annual instalments. The stipulation which required payment of compound interest at 12 per cent. per annum was therefore not binding on the mortgagor.

A. and C. Misc. P. against the decree of the District Court, East Godavari at Rajahmundry, in O. S. No. 46 of 1934.

Mr. D. Suryaprakasa Rao, for the Appellants.

Mr. P. V. Vallabhacharyulu, for the Respondent.

Pandrang Row, J.—The only point that arises in this case is whether the stipulation for payment of compound interest at the rate of 12 per cent. per annum found in the suit mortgage deed is in the nature of a penalty and ought to be relieved against. The mortgage deed provided that the sum of Rs. 2,000 which was borrowed thereunder should be re-paid in eight annual instalments of Rs. 250 each, such instalments to count both towards principal as well as interest on the entire sum. The stipulation that is objected to runs as follows:

"And that in default of payment of sums due in any instalment, the sum remaining unpaid on that date shall be added to the principal and the entire amount become payable at once irrespective of future instalments, the entire sum carrying interest at 1 per cent. per mensem compound with yearly rests".

There was, as it were, a double penalty put upon any default in payment of the annual instalments, namely the entire sum will become immediately re-payable irrespective of future instalments, and secondly, interest had to be paid at 1 per cent. per mensem compound with yearly rests. The latter penalty is, in our opinion, a clear penalty which the parties could not have intended to be enforced as damages for breach of the contract to pay annual instalments. The stipulation in question which requires payment of compound interest at 12 per cent. per annum is, therefore, not binding on the defendants, the appellants, and we think the proper and reasonable provision to make as regards interest is 12 per cent. simple interest as is provided earlier in the document.

The decree of the Court below must be varied in accordance with this finding, namely by allowing the plaintiff only simple interest at 12 per cent. per annum and not compound interest as claimed in the plaint and allowed by the Court below. In view of the fact that the interest is fairly high and the security was quite good and also in view of the fact that over Rs. 4,000 has actually been paid by the mortgagees to the mortgagor, we are not prepared to award any compensation to the mortgagee except not to interfere with the award of costs in the Court below and not to compel him to pay the costs of the appeal in this Court. Beyond this, we are of opinion, the case does not require any award of compensation to the mortgagee. The appeal is allowed as indicated above and the parties will bear their own costs in this appeal. O. M. P. No. 5029 of 1938, an application filed by the appellants for scaling down the debt under ss. 8 and 9, Mad. Act IV of 1938, will be remitted to the Court below for disposal according to law and the decree in this appeal will be subject to the final orders on that application.

Order accordingly.

It is of the essence of special usages modifying the ordinary law of succession that they should be ancient and invariable, and it is further essential that they should be established to be so by clear and unambiguous evidence. It is only by means of such evidence that the Courts can be assured of their existence and that they possess the conditions of antiquity and certainty on which alone their legal title to recognition depends. 108 Ind. Cas. 413 (2), relied on [p. 449, col. 1.]

The mere exclusion of the names of the daughters from the khewat does not go very far to establish that they were by recognised custom excluded from any share in their father's inheritance. [p. 451, col. 2.]

The custom of exclusion of daughters from any share in their father's inheritance does not exist amongst all the Sheikhs of Pargana Mangalsi of Fyzabad District.

Where a pardanashin lady executes a sale deed and her husband hands it over to the Sub-Registrar, who then comes out of his office where the lady is on an ekka and there ascertains from her if she had executed it and had received its consideration and having satisfied himself goes back to his office and makes an endorsement on the back of the deed that the lady presented it for registration, the deed is not invalid on account of the defect in its registration. 58 Ind. Messrs. M. Wasim, Faiyaz Ali and Ali Hasan, for Appellants Nos. 2 and 3.

Messrs. S. N. Srivastava and Naimullah, R. B. Ram Prasad Varma, for Respondents Nos. 1 to 3.

Judgment.—First Appeals Nos. 16 and 40 of 1936 were preferred by the defendants and plaintiffs, respectively, in a suit which was brought for possession of a fifth share in certain property specified in lists A, B. and C, attached to the plaint.

There were three plaintiffs, the first, Mst. Akbari, being the principal plaintiff and the other two being transferees from her of a half share in the property claimed by her. Mst. Akbari sued for her share in the property left by her father Chaudhri Masum-ul-Raza and also in the property left by her brother Chaudhri Qutub Raza, these shares being respectively 1-7 and 2-35, totalling one-fifth. Chaudhri Masum-ul-Raza died in 1924 and Chaudhri Qutub Raza in 1933. Mst. Akbari claimed that the family was a Syed family. The defendants were the two brothers of Mst. Akbari, Chaudhri Barq Raza and Chaudhri Yaqub Raza, and her two nephews, Jamiluddin and Kamaluddin, the pedigree put forward by the plaintiffs being as below:—

Jamiluddin died during the pendency of the suit and his mother Mst. Amjad-un-nisa and his sister Mst. Majid-un-nisa were impleaded as his representatives.

The defendants did not admit the correctness of the pedigree. They claimed that Mst. Amjad-un-nisa was the wife of Chaudhri Qutub Raza and that Jamiluddin, Kamaluddin and Mst. Majid-un-nisa were their issues. They asked that Mst. Amjad-un-nisa and Mst. Majid-un-nisa be made parties to the suit.

Certain interrogatories were put by the plaintiffs and in reply thereto it was said on April 5, 1935, that Mst. Amjad-un-nisa had been originally married to Chaudhri Barq Raza. He had divorced her about 24 years before and Chaudhri Barq Raza had not remarried. A few days after the expiry of the period of iddat nikah of Mst. Amjad-un-nisa had been performed with Chaudhri Qutub Raza.

Apart from this denial of the pedigree the defendants (including Mst. Amjad-un-nisa and Mst. Majid-un-nisa who were impleaded later) set up a family custom that in the presence of male issue a daughter does not get a share in the assets of her father. Further by custom and right of inheritance Chaudhri Qutub Raza's sons would succeed to his property. They also said that even if it was found that Chaudhri Qutub Raza died issueless, his widow Mst. Amjad-un-nisa would succeed to his property, his sister not getting any share. In any case Mst. Akbari would not be entitled to a share in the presence of her brothers.

The defendants alleged that Chaudhri Masum-ul-Raza was a Sheikh belonging to the Hanafi School of the Sunni sect, as against the plaintiffs' contention that he was a Syed.

They further alleged that Chaudhri Qutub Raza executed a deed of waqf on July 30, 1930, by which he disposed of all his property with the exception of that given in list A.

The defendants denied the validity of the sale-deed executed by plaintiff No. 1 in favour of plaintiffs Nos. 2 and 3 on February 26, 1934, contending that it was fictitious and without consideration and that the transaction was champertous and contrary to law.

It is not in dispute that the family of Masum-ul-Raza has lived in the village and Pargana of Mangalsi in the Fyzabad District for a long time.

The only other member of the family who requires mention is another son of Mst. Amjad-un-nisa named Sirajuddin. He is not referred to in the pleadings as he died issueless before the institution of the suit, and we only mention him because his name appears in evidence to which we shall refer later in connection with the question of the paternity of Mst. Amjad-un-nisa's children.

The suit gave rise to the following issues:—

1. Did Masum-ul-Raza also leave properties shown in list C annexed to the plaint and did defendants Nos. 1, 2 and Qutub Raza take possession of them?

2. Did Qutub Raza die issueless and did the plaintiff No. 1 inherit 1-5 of 2-7 share as alleged in the plaint?

3. Are the plaintiffs Nos 2 and 3 transferees from the plaintiff No. 1 as is alleged by the plaintiffs?

4. Is the suit champertous as is alleged by the defendants? Its effect on the claim of the plaintiffs?

5. Is the suit bad for want of necessary parties?

6. Did Qutub Raza make a waqf of all his properties excepting those detailed in list A annexed to the written statement and cannot the plaintiffs therefore claim a share in what is the subject of the waqf?

7. Is the plaintiff No. 1 excluded from the inheritance of Masum-ul-Raza and Qutub Raza by local, tribal and family custom as is alleged by the defendants in paras. 19, 22, 23 and 24 of the written statement?

8. To what relief is the plaintiff entitled?

On the first issue the learned Subordinate (Civil) Judge of Fyzabad held that Chaudhri Masum-ul-Raza left the movables mentioned in the list O, and defendants Nos. 1, 2 and Qutub Raza took possession of them and that the plaintiffs had failed to prove that Qutub Raza also left the movables.

On the second issue the finding was that Qutub Raza died a bachelor leaving only two brothers, defendants Nos. 1 and 2 and a sister, plaintiff No 1, who was not excluded by any custom from claiming her legal-share in his inheritance.

The finding on the third issue was in the affirmative, the sale-deed, Ex. 1, being held to be valid.

Issue No. 4 was not pressed and the finding was in the plaintiffs' favour.

The fifth issue did not require determination as Mst. Amjad-un-nisa and Mst. Majid-un-nisa were added as defendants after the other defendants had pleaded that they were necessary parties.

The waqf (Ex. C-1) referred to in the sixth issue purports to have been executed by Qutub Raza in respect of a 1-3 share of his father's share in certain mahals this presumably being the share to which he considered himself entitled in these mahals. The Civil Judge held that he was entitled to 2-7 only (on the finding that Mst. Amjad-un-nisa was entitled to 1-7). He also held that it had not been proved that Qutub Raza left any of the property mentioned in list C.

On the seventh issue the Civil Judge held that the custom set up had not been proved, and on the eighth issue that the plaintiffs were entitled to a decree for possession of a 1-7 share in the properties shown in lists A, B and C, and of a 2-35 share in the properties shown in lists A and B after excluding those mentioned in the waqf deed, Ex. C-1.

The defendants' appeal contests principally the findings of the Court below that Qutub Raza died without issue and that the alleged family custom excluding daughters from inheritance was not proved. It has been pressed only on these two issues and on the issue relating to the title of plaintiffs Nos. 2 and 3. The defendant Barq Raza died during the pendency of the appeal.

The contention in the plaintiffs' appeal is that the finding in regard to the waqf is not justified and that there were clerical mistakes and mistakes of calculation in the decree.

The defendants' case is that Barq Raza married Mst. Amjad-un-nisa in 1909 and divorced her two years later as they did not get on well together. She was married again to his younger brother, Qutub Raza, five or six months later, and all four children, Majid-un-nisa, Sirajuddin, Jamiluddin, and Kamaluddin, were the issue of this marriage.

The only documentary evidence produced by the defendants in support of their story was the deed of waqf, Ex. C-1, executed by Qutub Raza in 1930, in which he referred to Mst. Amjad-un-nisa as his wife and the four children as his children; and extracts from registers of the Government Intermediate College, Fyzabad, (Exs. C-24 and C-25) showing Qutub Raza as the "parent or guardian" of Jamiluddin and Kamaluddin, respectively. We shall consider later what value should be attached to these extracts, but it may be mentioned here that the periods to which they relate are from July 16, 1929, to July 10, 1934, in the case of Jamiluddin and from July 15, 1931, to July 10, 1934, in the case of Kamaluddin.

The principal witnesses to the alleged divorce and remarriage in 1911 were Barq Raza and Mst. Amjad-un-nisa themselves, both of whom were examined on commission. All that Barq Raza says about the reason for divorce is that their relations were strained: Mst. Amjad-un-nisa says nothing on the point. She says that her husband divorced her, but there was no desire on her part for divorce. There was no talk of her marriage to Qutub Raza prior to the divorce: her father-in-law suggested it a month or two afterwards, and she at once fell in with the suggestion. She did not inform her father or her brothers of the proposal, though she informed them after the divorce and second marriage had taken place. She did not visit her father between the divorce and her second marriage. Her father was displeased at not being informed about the divorce and second marriage (that is presumably before they took place) and did not visit Masum-ul-Raza afterwards in consequence.

(After examining the evidence of witnesses of both the parties their Lordships proceeded).

We are not at all impressed by either the plaintiffs' or the defendants' witnesses on this question and do not feel that we can place reliance on any of them. The motive given by Barq Raza for the alleged divorce of 1911 seems singularly inadequate, and indeed this has been conceded by the defendants' Counsel. On the other hand, the plaintiffs seem to have been reluctant to probe the matter deeply, judging by the slight cross-examination of Barq Raza and Mst. Amjad-un-nisa on the point.

The plaintiffs have produced documentary evidence, the authenticity of which is not disputed, to prove that up till about 1929 the children were shown as the children of Barq Raza. There is evidence of defendants' witnesses that Mst. Amjad-un-nisa was born first, then Sirajuddin, then Jamiluddin, and lastly Kamaluddin (vide statements of Abdul Aziz (D. W. No. 14) and of Mst. Amjad-un-nisa herself).

Exhibit 66 is an extract from an official birth register and shows that Barq Raza was the father of a male child born on June 21, 1914.

Exhibits 133 to 135 are school leaving certificates of the three boys given by the head master of the Mangalsi School. In all of them Barq Raza is shown as the father, but in Ex. 135, relating to Kamaluddin, the name of Barq Raza has been struck out and the name of Qutub Raza substituted. The dates of birth are respectively September 14, 1915, September 14, 1917, and August 6, 1921, and the dates when they left this school are February 2, 1926, April 30, 1929, and April 2, 1931. There is nothing to show when Qutub Raza's name was substituted for that of Barq Raza in Ex. 135 but the certificate must have been given in 1931.

It will be observed that the date of Sirajuddin's birth given in Ex. 133 does not agree with the date given in the birth certificate. There is a difference of nearly 15 months. We do not attach much importance to this, since dates in school registers are notoriously unreliable. We find in Ex. C-25 that the date of Kamaluddin's birth is given as May 5, 1924, a difference of nearly three years. We must, however, note that Barq Raza admitted that he had connection with a prostitute for some time and that his wife made a general accusation against him of having connection with prostitutes. There was a mutation case in 1925 in which one Ahmad Raza claimed to be his son, the evidence of a Patwari, Ganesh Prasad (Ex. 73) showing that Ahmad Raza was the son of a prostitute. At the same time Ganesh Prasad said that he did not know the name of his father. We merely mention this to show that there is some doubt as to the identity of the child whose birth is recorded in Ex. 66.

The school-leaving certificates were issued by Sultan Husain Khan (P. W. No. 2), teacher at the Mangalsi school, and were prepared from the original register which he brought to the Court. Objection has been taken to the defendants' certificates from the Fyzabad Intermediate College (Ex. C-24 and C-25) on the ground that they were not proved by similar evidence. We see no reason, however, to doubt their genuineness. Nor do we regard the entry showing Qutub Raza as 'the parent or guardian' of Jamiluddin and Kamaluddin as ambiguous. If Barq Raza was at that time still being held out as their father, there was no reason why Qutub Raza should be entered as their guardian. We cannot doubt that Qutub Raza was represented as their father from about the year 1929, as the deed of waqf, executed by him in 1930 indicates.

The next two documents, Exs. 64 and 65, are in our opinion very important and furnish a clue to the solution of the problem. They are extracts from sale registers of stamps and their genuineness is not disputed. Exhibit 64 shows that Barq Raza purchased a stamp (that is stamped paper) for the execution of a talaqnama or deed of divorce on September 8, 1928, and that Mst. Amjad-un-nisa (who is recorded as his wife) made a similar purchase on the same date for the execution of a deed relinquishing her dower.

The defendants suggest that these purchases were made with the intention of giving formal effect to the divorce of 1911. We find it difficult to accept this explanation. We do not think it at all likely, if there had been a divorce and second marriage as far back as 1911, that the parties concerned would have contemplated 17 years later executing formal deeds of divorce and relinquishment of dower.

The plaintiffs could not show what action, if any, was afterwards in connection with these purchases. They summoned the original documents from the defendants, but the defendants did not produce them. Their Counsel made statements to the Court denying that there was any deed of divorce or relinquishment of dower in existence.

Having regard to the fact that it was not long after this that Qutub Raza appears for the first time as the husband of Mst. Amjad-un-nisa and the father of the four children, we consider it by no means improbable that if Mst. Amjad-un-nisa was divorced by Barq Raza and married to Qutub Raza, this took place either towards the end of 1928 or in 1929 and not in 1911.

Some other points may also be considered in this connection. Qutub Raza did not marry anyone else nor did Barq Raza. The explanation given by the plaintiffs for Qutub Raza's not marrying is that he was suffering from tuberculosis, but we doubt whether this explanation is sufficient, though the Court below has accepted it.

The age of Qutub Raza is given in the registration endorsement on the waqf deed as about 37, and if this is correct, he would be only about 18 years old in 1911.

In 1934 Mst. Majid-un-nisa in a document executed by her (Ex. 137) gave her age as 25 years. If this is correct, she was born in 1909 some time before the alleged divorce of 1911.

The Patwari Ganesh Prasad, who gave evidence in February 1925 (Ex. 72) and who stated that he had also been a teacher in the school at Mangalsi, deposed that Sirajuddin was then about 11 or 12 years old, which agrees rather with the entry in the birth register than with the entry in the school certificate. We do not, however, rely much on this.

We find it quite impossible to believe the story of the divorce and second marriage in 1911 on the evidence produced by the defendants. It is remarkable that to support this story, they could produce only witnesses of relatively low status. Defendants themselves belong to a respectable and apparently well-to-do family, and, had the facts been as alleged, it is difficult to believe that better evidence would not have been forthcoming; and if the story is true, there is no apparent reason why Barq Raza should have been recorded anywhere as the father of the children.

We are not concerned with the actual paternity of the children or the motive which induced the parties to contemplate a divorce in 1928. It is clear that all the facts have not come to light. We are faced with the position that Barq Raza abandoned apparently quite willingly, all claim to the children, that Qutub Raza as willingly assumed responsibility for them, and that Mst. Amjad-un-nisa has acknowledged that he is their father. We can only say that we see no reason to doubt that had the full facts been elicited, they would have explained why it was not until 1928 that a divorce was proposed. But whatever the explanation may be, we must hold on the finding that no divorce or second marriage prior to that year has been proved, that the children were born while the marriage of Barq Raza and Mst. Amjad-un-nisa still subsisted and that they are therefore legally the sons of Barq Raza. We agree therefore with the Court below that Qutub Raza died issueless and that the plaintiff is entitled to a share in his property, so far as it has not been disposed of by the waqf deed. It is conceded by the learned Counsel for the defendants that on the finding that Qutub Raza died issueless he cannot dispute this.

We now turn to the more important and perhaps not less difficult question whether Mst. Akbari is excluded from the inheritance of her father Masum-ul-Raza by local, tribal and family custom. The issue on this point also raised the question of her exclusion by custom from the inheritance of her brother. The Court below answered this question in her favour and though this finding has been disputed by the defendants in the memorandum of appeal, their learned Counsel has not contested it.

It is necessary first of all to examine somewhat closely the allegations of the defendants with regard to the alleged custom. In para. 13 of the written statement of defendants Nos. 1 and 2 it was said that there had been a custom obtaining for a very long time among the Sheikhs of village Mangalsi, Pargana Mangalsi, District Fyzabad, in the family clan and brotherhood of Chaudhri Masum-ul-Raza that in the presence of male issue a daughter gets no share in her father's estate. Paragraphs 23 and 24 also make it quite clear that the custom is predicated for Sheikhs only, it being the defendants' contention that the family is a Sheikh and not a Syed family. This written statement was filed on January 15, 1935. In the proceedings of March 25, 1935, however, we find a statement by the defendants' Counsel that even if Chaudhri Masum-ul-Raza was not a Sheikh, the custom set up governed his family. On September 13, 1935, a further statement was made by another Counsel of the defendants, Mr. Faiyaz Ali, that the custom was a family custom and that it applied to the biradars of Chaudhri Masum-ul-Raza and also the Sheikhs and Syeds of village Mangalsi as well as pargana Mangalsi and to the Sheikhs and Syeds residing within the District of Fyzabad. We may observe here that in view of this statement it has been argued by the learned Counsel for the plaintiffs that the inquiry should be restricted to the custom obtaining in the family, instances of such custom obtaining in other families in this village or pargana being ruled out as irrelevant.

The proceedings of September 18, 1935, also show that the defendants attempted further to explain the custom set up by stating that they meant to exclude full sisters and not step-sisters, and that they meant to exclude daughters in the presence of sons only if they had the same mother. The Civil Judge did not, however, allow them to depart from the position originally taken by them in their written statement.

Yet another statement was made by Mr. Faiyaz Ali during the examination of one of the defendants' witnesses. It was that the custom pleaded governed all the Sheikh Siddiqis irrespective of their place of residence.

Of some interest, too, are certain statements made by the defendant Chaudhri Barq Raza on the point. After explaining that he was a Sheikh Siddiqi on both his father's and his mother's side, he said that it was an old custom in his family and also in the families of other Sheikh in pargana Mangalsi that sons exclude daughters from inheritance. There were four kinds of Sheikhs, he said: (1) Siddiqi, (2) Qureshi, (3) Faruqi, and (4) Ansari. So far as he knew, the custom applied only to Sheikh Siddiqis. He further explained that by the word biradari he meant Sheikh Siddiqis who were on visiting terms with him. He did not include Syeds in his biradari.

It is clearly necessary to determine first of all whether the family is a Sheikh or a Syed family.

The chief difficulty in connection with this question arises from the fact that in the khawat, Ex. A-11, of the first settlement, the heads of two families of zamindars, Qazi Ladan and Qazi Ziauddin, are shown as Syeds, although a number of their descendants, including Qazi Ladan's son, are shown as Sheikhs. There is a very long pedigree of Qazi Ziauddin's family and we find both the prefix "Mir", which is a Syed prefix, as well as the prefix "Sheikh" among his descendants. Masum-ul-Raza was a descendant of Qazi Ziauddin, and appears in the pedigree under the name of Ghulam Qutubuddin. It is proved by the evidence of Barq Raza and also by the evidence of Masum-ul-Raza himself in a previous case in 1924 (Ex. A-24) that he had this alias.

Masum-ul-Raza was described, when he gave evidence in 1924, as a Sheikh, aged 64, mukhia of Mangalsi, and other members of the family, including the plaintiff Mst. Akbari in the plaint in the present case have described themselves as Sheikhs.

The question came before a Bench of this Court in another case relating so it was alleged, to other members of the same family in 1927, Mohammad Zafar v. Mst. Kaniz Saiyada and others (A. I. R. 1927 Oudh, 598) (1). The judgment of this Court has been exhibited as Ex. 37. The suit in this case was brought by a brother against his sisters and mother for the inheritance of his father with the allegation that there was a special custom in his family by which females were excluded from inheritance in the presence of male issue. It was in this case that Masum-ul-Raza gave evidence in 1924. He then described Bahadur Husain, the grandfather of the plaintiff Mohammad Zafar as the first paternal cousin of his own maternal uncle. He also said that Mohammad Zafar was the descendant of Qazi Ladan, and that Qazi Ziauddin and Qazi Ladan were of the same family.

The pedigree of Qazi Ladan's family in Ex. A-11 is incomplete, the paper of the original having been torn, and although its condition may have been rather better at the time of the previous suit, this Court was unable to determine from it in 1927 that Bahadur Husain was the descendant of Qazi Ladan.

As regards the question of the castes of Muhammadans to which the plaintiff, Mohammad Zafar, belonged it was said:—

"The plaintiff was in great difficulty over the caste of Muhammadans to which he belongs. He wished to take advantage of Ex. 4, which, he asserted, shows the custom of his family as a Sheikh family, but at the same time was in the difficulty of claiming to be a descendant of Qazi Ladan who is described as a Syed, in order to obviate this difficulty it is now asserted that he is an Alwi, a descendant of Ali, but not a descendant of Ali through the lady Fatima, the daughter of the Prophet. He argues that in those circumstances he is either a Syed or a Sheikh. The point is not very important in the view which we take upon the general evidence."

The question was not therefore decided in 1927. In the present case the Civil Judge held that Chaudhri Masum-ul-Raza belonged to a Syed and not to a Sheikh family. He said:—

"Exhibit A-11 clearly gives the castes of Qazi Ladan and Qazi Ziauddin as Syed and it was prepared at the time of the first regular settlement and the customs governing the Syed will apply to them at least in so far as the riwaj-i-am prepared during the same Settlement are concerned. However, it is simply a technical matter because so far as the riwaj-i-am, Exs. A-3 and A-5 are concerned, they are practically the same. It has been conceded by the learned Counsel for the parties that a Syed cannot become a Sheikh and a Sheikh cannot become a Syed. The plaintiffs have led oral evidence to prove that Chaudhri Masum-ul-Raza was a Syed and the defendants have examined witnesses to prove that he was a Sheikh. As the plaintiffs' contention is borne out by Ex. A-11, I decide that Chaudhri Masum-ul-Raza belonged to a Syed and not a Sheikh family."

We would merely observe here with reference to the remark that Exs. A-3 and A-5 are practically the same that there is one very important difference between them to which we shall recur later.

Apart from the fact that several persons are shown as Sheikhs in the pedigree of Qazi Ziauddin in Ex. A-11, there is other documentary evidence which supports the view that the family was a Sheikh family. Separate inquiries were made about Sheikh and Syed custom at the first regular settlement and lists of villages were prepared inhabited respectively by Sheikhs and Syeds. These are Exs. A-12 and A-13. Mangalsi appears in the list of Sheikh villages and it is further shown as a Sheikh Siddiqi village. There are only two villages which appear in both lists, these being Raunahi and Sheikhpur Jafar.

Questions relating to the customs obtaining in pargana Mangalsi were addressed separately to Sheikhs and Syeds in Exs. A-2 and A-4, the replies being given in Exs. A-3 and A-5, respectively. Exhibit A-3 purports to be signed by several zamindars, including three of Mangalsi, but for two of the latter Masum-ul-Raza actually signed. One of these was Khadim Ali, lambardar of Mangalsi, who was stated by Masum-ul-Raza in 1924 to be his cousin. He appears in the pedigree of Qazi Ziauddin. This is clearly very strong evidence in favour of the defendants' contention, since Ex. A-3 contains the replies of the Sheikhs.

The Fyzabad Settlement Report published in 1880 (p. 261) refers to the Sheikhs as holding Mangalsi, these being the only people, it is said, met with in the pargana who possessed documentary evidence of any great antiquity of family.

It is proved that various members of the family have described themselves as Sheikhs at various times. We have mentioned instances of Masum-ul-Raza and of the plaintiff Mst. Akbari herself, having done so. In his evidence in 1924 Masum-ul-Raza said:

"Only Saddiqis are Sheikhs and I am a Saddiqi Sheikh, as are all the Sheikhs of my village. The Syeds of my village are Alawi."

The registration endorsement on the sale-deed, Ex. 1, executed by Mst. Akbari in favour of the other plaintiffs describe her as a Sheikh.

Qutub Raza gave evidence in 1916 in the Court of the Munsif of Fyzabad in the case of Hasrat-un-nissa v. Zaib-un-nissa and was then described as a Sheikh. The wagf deed Ex. C-1 also describes him as a Sheikh.

In addition to this evidence, there is the evidence of a large number of defendants' witnesses that Masum-ul-Raza was a Sheikh Siddiqi. There is also the evidence of one of the plaintiffs' own witnesses, Wazir-ul-Hasan (P. W. No. 6), that he himself is a Sheikh Siddiqi, and that Masum-ul-Raza, who belonged to his family, was a Sheikh Siddiqi.

Only one witness was produced by the plaintiffs to give evidence to the contrary, this being Murtaza Husain (P. W. No. 1), the husband of Mst. Akbari. He said that he himself was a Sheikh, but that Masum-ul-Raza was a Syed, though he only found this out after his marriage.

In face of this overwhelming evidence to support the defendants' case on this point we cannot but hold that the family is a Sheikh family and that the entry in Ex. A-11, recording their ancestor as a Syed is incorrect. It was remarked by this Court in Mohammad Zafar v. Kaniz Saiyada (1) in 1927 that the khevat had been extraordinarily badly prepared, the same name appearing in different places. It was also said that when stress was laid upon the evidence afforded by the pedigree, the admitted carelessness in its preparation is of very great importance. In these circumstances we cannot agree with the Court below that the entry in it showing the family as a Syed family is conclusive on the point. On the contrary we must regard this evidence as relatively weak. Any presumption that it raises has been very clearly rebutted by other evidence.

Our finding on this point makes it unnecessary to consider whether the custom pleaded obtains among Syeds. Numerous instances relating to Syeds were given by both parties in support of their contention and this was natural, since they could not anticipate the finding of the Courts on the point, but on the finding at which we have without hesitation arrived, it is unnecessary to examine these witnesses.

There still remains, however, a difficulty in determining the scope of the inquiry, this being caused by the different statements which have been made about the custom 'by or on behalf of the defendants at different times. It has to be decided whether the inquiry should be restricted to

Sheikh Siddiqis or extended to Sheikhs generally, whether it should be restricted to members of this family and whether it should be restricted to residents of the village of Mangalsi or extended to residents of pargana Mangalsi. We think in view of the rather general allegations in the written statement that we must extend it to all Sheikhs of this pargana.

Learned Counsel for the defendants has made it unnecessary for us to consider the other custom put forward by them in their written statement, that Mst. Akbari was debarred by custom from claiming a share in the property of her brother Qutub Raza in the presence of other brothers. The finding on this point was against them, and they contested it in the first ground of their appeal, but their Counsel has not argued against this finding, and on the contrary, he has made it clear that his sole contention before this Court with regard to custom is that daughters are not entitled to any share in their fathers' property in the presence of sons. We may rule out therefore instances which indicate that custom was or was not followed in other circumstances as irrelevant.

The defendants' plea that daughters are debarred by custom from inheriting any share in their fathers' property in the presence of sons is based primarily on the Settlement khewat Ex. A-11 and on the riwaj-i-am of the Sheikhs, Ex. A-3, to which reference has already been made. The third paragraph of the khewat is called a statement as to the division of inheritance and the transfer of rights in the land and it is said that "customs obtaining in our family have been recorded in the dastur-ul-amal riwaj-i-am."

The defendants' contention was that Exs. A-2 and A-3, the inquiries addressed to and the answers given by the Sheikhs of pargana Mangalsi, constitute this dastur-ul-amal riwaj-i-am. It was said in reply to question No. 9 of Ex. A-2 that in the presence of male issue daughters do not get any share by inheritance and that in the absence of male issue daughters inherit the entire property. The Civil Judge thought it doubtful whether Exs. A-2 and A-3 constituted the dastur-ul-amal riwaj-i-am. In the previous case of Mohammad Zafar v. Mst. Kaniz Saiyada (1) referred to as the Isauli case, Mohammad Zafar's grandfather having gone to live at Isauli with his wife a copy of a dastur-ul-amal was filed and marked Ex. 5. This has not been filed in the present case. The Civil Judge has laid some stress on this; but we do not think that it is material. As his judgment shows Ex. 5 of the previous case was merely an abstract of questions put to and answers given by different lambardars and zamindars of the pargana. We have referred to it and find no difference between it and Exs. A-2 and A-3 so far as Sheikhs are concerned. Exhibit 5 embodies their answers and also shows the answers given by other castes, Hindu and Muhammadan. We see no reason to doubt therefore that these documents constitute the dastur-ul-amal riwaj-i-am.

We have, however, to consider what value should be attached to the evidence of custom furnished by Ex. A-3. Prima facie it would appear to be somewhat strong evidence, for its signatories include three zamindars of village Mangalsi, two of these being lambardars. One of these lambardars is Khadim Ali, cousin of Masum-ul-Raza, and Masum-ul-Raza himself signed for Khadim Ali and another zamindars. It is true that these signatories note their objection to cl. 20, but this relates merely to the right of a man to transfer his property if he had a son or daughter, the answer being that he could transfer it for necessity. In Ex. A-5, the answers given by the Syeds, we find a dissentient note to the custom now under consideration, this being by Qazi Syed Mohammad Akbar, and to this extent the case for the existence of the custom among Syeds is weaker than the case for its existence among Sheikhs.

But although at first sight Ex. A-3 appears to afford strong evidence of the existence of the custom there are certain facts which suggest a contrary view. We may note in the first place that Masum-ul-Raza deposed in 1924 (Ex. A-24) that the custom had been existing for a year or two before the riwaj-i-am was recorded and he did not know if it existed before that, although Khadim Ali told him that it was an old custom. Masum-ul-Raza signed Ex. A-3 for Khadim Ali in 1883 and in 1924 his age was given as 64 years. He was therefore 23 years old in 1883 and, though young, might have been expected to possess more knowledge of the custom than he professed, if actually it was an ancient custom.

Secondly, the Settlement operations were completed in 1878, but signatures were not taken on Ex. A-3 till 1883. That is to say, though the document may have been prepared during Settlement operations, it was not completed until several years afterwards, and the Civil Judge remarked that as it was not prepared during Settlement operations it ceased to have any evidentiary value as a Record of Rights prepared in due course by a Settlement Officer. This objection was not directly mentioned by this Court in the Isauli case, and possibly the date was not brought to its notice. It was, however, remarked that the inquiry into custom must have been taken up at a later stage. We think that the criticism of the Civil Judge is not without force, but as for other reasons, we are of opinion that we cannot infer from Ex. A-3 that the signatures did more than express their assent to the customs referred to therein, we need not consider this objection further.

The other objections regarding to this riwaj-i-am as strong presumptive evidence of a legal custom are given in the judgment of this Court in the Isauli case in 1927. Before citing the observations of this Court in that judgment we would refer to a pronouncement of their Lordships of the Privy Council on the essential requirements of a custom before legal recognition can be accorded to it. In Ramalakshmi Ammal v. Sivanantha Perumal Sethurayar (14 Moore's Indian Appeals, 570) (2) it was said :

"It is of the essence of special usages modifying the ordinary law of succession that they should be ancient and invariable, and it is further essential that they should be established to be so by clear and unambiguous evidence. It is only by means of such evidence that the Courts can be assured of their existence and that they possess the conditions of antiquity and certainty on which alone their legal title to recognition depends."

This passage was cited in a later case decided by the Judicial Committee in 1922 Muhammad Ibrahim Rowther v. Sheikh Ibrahim Rowther (49 I. A. 119), (3) as a correct and authoritative pronouncement of the law.

In the Isauli case it was observed by this Court that Mangalsi village was one village out of a large number of villages—more than 100—in the Mangalsi pargana. The method of recording customs in this pargana was not the method generally in use in the North West Provinces and Oudh. The ordinary method of recording customs was to record them in a document known as the wajib-ul-arz which was prepared separately for each village. In eight parganas of the Fyzabad district out of thirteen, however, a different procedure was adopted, this being known as the Punjab system. Under this system no wajib-ul-arz was prepared, only a record known as the misl riwaj-i-am or the record of general customs. The Settlement Report is silent as to the exact manner in which this misl riwaj-i-am was prepared. The report suggests that the rules for its preparation were not finally adopted until 18 years after the Settlement had been commenced, that is until the Settlement had been nearly completed, and there is no material available to show how orders for the preparation of this misl riwaj-i-am were issued.

We may observe here that the above suggests an explanation why the riwaj-i-am was not signed until 1883. The explanation suggested by the defendants' Counsel was that although the riwaj-i-am had been prepared during the course of Settlement operations, the officials concerned had by oversight omitted to take the signatures of the zamindars responsible for the answer. We feel some doubt whether this is correct. It rather looks as if the inquiry may not have been made until 1883 or shortly before. The report on the Settlement, we may mention, was submitted by the Settlement Officer in 1879.

In para. 1703 of the Settlement Report we find the following statement :—

"In the Punjab system, indeed, the substitutes for the wajib-ul-arz do not profess to be anything else than ikrar malikan (translated by this Court in 1927 as 'agreement of owners')."

It was added by this Court in 1927 that :

"the peculiarity of the system was that it attempted to lay down general rules for succession in respect of a whole pargana instead of for an individual village, and in these circumstances the prospect of the record giving an accurate account of the custom of an individual family in one of the villages in the Mangalsi pargana was less likely to be accurate."

Reference was also made by this Court in 1927 to the preamble to Ex. A 3 (Ex. 4 in the Isauli case). This has been translated in the present case as follows :—

"As the regular settlement of our villages has been made by the Govt. we have got all the rights of our clan which specially appertain to our hagias entered in the papers of our villages in detail, but with regard to the rights which are prevalent among our clan but have not been entered we stipulate as follows."

The concluding words ikrar karte hain were translated by this Court in 1927 as "we agree" and this translation has been disputed in the present case. Learned Counsel for the defendants relies on a later ruling of this Court in Tirathpati v. Ranjit Singh (7 O. W. N. 1120) (4) where the words were translated by Bisheshwar Nath, J. "we declare". He expressly dissented from the contention put forward in that case that what was entered in the riwaj-i-am under consideration in that case was merely the record of an agreement and he regarded the evidence afforded by an entry in that riwaj-i-am as valuable evidence of the existence of the custom suggested by it.

No doubt the expression ikrar karna means "to declare as well as to agree", but in view of the statement which we have quoted from para. 1703 of the Fyzabad Settlement Report and of the manner of preparation of a riwaj-i-am under the Punjab system we are of opinion that the construction placed on the expression by this Court in 1927 was warranted. It is to be noted that the other learned Judge of this Court (Hasan, C. J.) who was a party to the decision in Tirathpati v. Ranjit Singh (4) observed that but for the absence of any evidence indicating that the custom set up had not been followed, he would have agreed with the view taken as to the evidential value of the riwaj-i-am generally in the case of Muhammad Zafar v. Kaniz Saiyada (1).

For these reasons we are of opinion that the answers given in Ex. A-3 do not do more than indicate the customs which some of the Sherks of Mangalsi accepted. They may possibly indicate what was a common practice, but we cannot presume that they disclose what was the fixed and invariable custom in force from time immemorial.

We come now to the instances which have been cited by the parties in support of their respective contentions, but before considering their effect, we think that the passage quoted by the Court below from the judgment in Mirabivi and another v. Vellayanna and others, (I. L. R. 8 Madras, 464) (5) should be borne in mind. It is in our opinion very opposite in this connection. It reads:—

"It must be admitted that instances have been adduced in which the claims of daughters and sisters to a share have been ignored, or they have been allotted maintenance, though the cases mentioned by the Judge of a partition in the father's lifetime are not inconsistent with Muhammadan Law. There are also cases in which married daughters have been treated as estranged from the family. But instances of this kind will be found to occur where there is no doubt that the family is governed by pure Muhammadan Law. Indeed, in many parts of the country it is unusual for Muhammadan ladies to insist on their unquestioned rights. They will often prefer being maintained by their brothers to taking a separate share for themselves, and when they are married, the marriage expenses and presents are often, by express or implied agreement, taken as equivalent to the share which they could claim. Moreover, Muhammadan females are so much under the influence of their male relations, that the mere partition of the property among the males without reference to them cannot count for much. A single instance to the contrary would outweigh many such partition deeds when the existence of a binding custom is in question. Instances to the contrary have been established, and notably two quite in which women of the class in question have recovered their shares, and the custom now set up was not even pleaded against them. The District Munsif describes these instances as interruptions; but, in our opinion, they deprive of all force those partition deeds and other similar agreements in which voluntarily, or for some consideration, or under advice of mediators, the females may have simply abstained from pressing their claims."

We will deal first with cases which have come before the Courts in which copies of judgments have been filed, taking these in chronological order. Some of these cases are included in the list of instances subsequently given in the judgment of the Court below.

The earliest judgment on the record (of 1869 Ex. 60) as the Civil Judge observed, is not relevant, as it is a case of sisters obtaining a share in their brother's property. There is a decree certificate of 1871 (Ex. 71) which, the Civil Judge says, shows that one Amir Bakhsh sued for and obtained a share in the inheritance of his wife, presumably meaning that he successfully pressed his wife's claim to a share in her father's property. But the facts are by no means clear.

There is another case of 1871 (Ex. 43), but this again is of no help, as it is a case of a widow claiming a share in the property of her husband who was joint with his nephew, the latter contesting her claim. Reference was made in this case to the general statement of one Farzand Ali (Ex. 42) that a woman gets a share according to Muhammadan Law, but the judgment shows that the family had been recently converted to Islam and that the members had not fully grasped its tenets.

Exhibit 44 is a copy of a judgment of 1880, but it only shows that the parties came to an agreement: it does not indicate that any custom was set up.

There are judgments on the record of 1917 (Ex. 123), 1918 (Ex. 124) and 1923 (Ex. 34), but they relate to Syeds, and are consequently of no help.

The earliest case in which the question was raised by Sheikhs appears to be the Isauli case which was brought in 1923. That case was brought by Mohammad Zafar as a Syed (vide plaint Ex. 31), but the question whether he was a Syed or a Sheikh was left undetermined. It was said in the appellate judgment of this Court (Ex. 37) that there was nothing in the documentary evidence to justify the conclusion that the custom set up existed.

This ruling has been generally followed since and we have been asked both to dissent from this ruling and also to disregard the decisions in later cases as they were naturally influenced by it.

Coming now to the instances adduced by the parties, we will consider first the case of Sarfaraz Ali of Sheikhpur Jafar, this being one of the earliest instances cited and also one on which the plaintiffs strongly rely. According to the judgment of the Court below his property was inherited by his son Murad Ali and his three sisters, Mst. Rahim-un-nisa, Ummat-un-nisa and Najm-un-nisa. This is supported by Ex. 92 which is described as copy of register No. 3. The entry indicates that under orders of 1880 and 1882 the three daughters inherited a half share of their father's property.

The defendants cited the case of Murad Ali, son of Sarfaraz Ali, in support of their contention, alleging that Murad Ali, who died in 1915, left five sons and one daughter, the latter not getting a share in his property. They produced two witnesses to support this allegation, as well as some documentary evidence. The witnesses were Abdul Haq (D. W. No. 13) and Abdul Kadir (D. W. No. 26), the latter being husband of the daughter. Both these witnesses supported the allegation that Murad Ali's property was inherited by his sons only. Abdul Kadir was not born at the time of the death of Sarfaraz Ali and was not therefore in a position to depose to the succession to his property. Abdul Haq was cross-examined on this point for the plaintiffs and he admitted that on the death of Sarfaraz Ali mutation was effected in the name of the daughters only. He added that Murad Ali sued them and obtained a decree for one-half of the property. He also said that Murad Ali was born from one wife and the daughters from another wife.

It is said, however, that the family is a Syed, not a Sheikh family, and there is some doubt on the point. The village of Sheikhpur Jafar contains both Sheikhs and Syeds. Exhibit 92 only shows that one of the daughters of Sarfaraz Ali was married to a Sheikh. Abdul Haq (D. W. No. 13) (who said that the custom obtained among both Sheikhs and Syeds) is described as a Syed. On the other hand Abdul Kadir (D. W. No. 26), who is married to Murad Ali's daughter, is described as a Sheikh and he is shown in the evidence as referring to "Sh." Murad Ali.

The litigation referred to must have taken place soon after 1880. The custom was apparently not set up: if it was, it was not upheld. This makes it doubtful whether it was generally followed at that time. The succession to Murad Ali's property suggests that if there can be said to be a custom at all, it is of relatively modern development. Few instances of it are forthcoming, prior to 1883 when it was set up in an official record for the first time. This is rather remarkable when we remember the statement in the Settlement Report that the Sheikhs of Mangalsi are the only people in the pargana who have documentary evidence of any great antiquity of family.

The defendants have, however, established that in a few cases dating back more than 50 years the claims of daughters were ignored.

Husain Bakhsh of Kola (a village near Mangalsi) is said to have died in 1842 leaving four sons and two daughters, the former only succeeding to his property (vide the evidence of Fazal Haq (D. W. No. 19) and the khewat Ex. A-29).

Fakir Ali is said to have died in 1887, also leaving four sons and two daughters, the former only succeeding to his property (vide the evidence of Altaf Husain (D. W. No. 22) and Ex. A-85).

A few other old instances have been cited, but the evidence to support them is generally vague, as shown in the previous judgment of this Court, Ex. 37, and the mere exclusion of the names of the daughters from the khewat does not, in our opinion, go very far to establish that they were, by recognised custom, excluded from any share in their father's inheritance.

The majority of the instances cited by the defendants are of recent date, that is of the present century. As regards those of about 1882 or not long afterwards we would observe that it is not improbable that instances should be forthcoming of about that time if it was about then that the custom was first set up. We can find no is no clear indication that it was an ancient custom prevailing among all the Sheikhs of this pargana or among all the Sheikhs of this family. The question did not come before the Courts prior to the Isauli case. It was observed by this Court in that case that :

"There is not any instance of a pronouncement of a Court in favour of the existence of this custom...
...in the family of any semindar in the Mangalsi Pargana."

Subsequent decisions have followed the finding in that case. After giving full consideration to the arguments advanced by on the point. The husband, it is said, did not hand the sale deed to the Sub-Registrar by way of presentation for registration, but merely to explain to him the position, namely that his wife, who is pardanashin was waiting outside in an ekka and wished to present the document for registration. Had the point been raised by the defendants in their pleadings and an issue struck on it, it is said, this could have been made clear in Murtaza Hussain's evidence: this was not done as the point was not raised until arguments were heard by the Civil Judge. To support the explanation with regard to the procedure followed reference is made to the endorsement of the Sub-Registrar on the deed, showing that it was presented by Mst. Akbari.

We find that in para. 26 of their written statement defendants Nos. 1 and 2 denied the correctness and validity of the sale deed. If it was proved to have been executed, they said that it was fictitious and without consideration and the transaction champertous and illegal. The other defendants merely denied the correctness and validity of the deed.

There was therefore no issue on the question whether the registration was a valid registration and the plaintiffs could not have anticipated this objection. We are of opinion therefore that the defendants were not entitled to raise it after the evidence in the case had been recorded, the actual facts relating to presentation not having been fully examined.

Learned Counsel for the plaintiffs also relies on another and more recent pronouncement of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Bharat Indu v. Hamid Ali Khan (47 L. A. 177) (7). In this case the document was brought to the Registration Office by a servant Wazir Beg, stating that his Master Wilayat Ali Khan was ill and asking that the document might be registered. The Sub-Registrar went to the executor's house and read the document to him. He admitted execution and the Sub-Registrar registered the document. Their Lordships observed:—

"Now it appears from the endorsement that the Sub-Registrar when he reached the house, read the power-of-attorney through to Wilayat Ali Khan, who admitted the execution and completion of the instrument. The Sub-Registrar went there because Wilayat Ali Khan desired it to be registered; and he knew from the message by the servant and Wilayat Ali Khan knew that he knew that Wilayat Ali Khan desired it to be registered, and that he had been sent for and had come for the purpose of completing the registration."

Their Lordships also remarked that it was probably an irregularity on the part of the Sub-Registrar to accept the document as presented by Wazir Beg, but the presentation by Wazir Beg was inoperative and not injurious to the validity of the subsequent presentation. Wilayat Ali Khan was the real presenter, and was so treated by the Sub-Registrar. Their Lordships concluded that this objection to the registration failed.

The case under consideration is very similar: there appear to be no essential distinguishing features, and we cannot therefore agree that the sale deed is invalid on account of a defect in its registration.

The plaintiffs put forward a large number of objections to the waqf deed in their appeal. They said inter alia that it was a fictitious document not intended to have any effect: that if it is held that Jamil-ud-din and Kamal-ud-din are not the sons of Qutub Raza the waqf deed which benefits them in this capacity has no legal effect: that the waqf was legally invalid because it disposed of a larger share in the property than was owned by the waqif and that the Court below was not justified in holding it valid in respect of his actual share: that on the findings a 2-35 share in list O should also have been decreed: and that many of the provisions of the waqf deed are against law and the Mussalman Waqf Validating Act.

Remarkably little attempt was made, however, to support these contentions in arguments before us. It was conceded that the waqf could not be held invalid by reason of the nature of its dispositions of the property. No authority was produced to support the contention that the waqf must fail because Jamil-ud-din and Kamal-ud-din were incorrectly described as the waqif's sons. It was contended that the waqf is invalid because the deed shows that the property is incumbered by two debts (of Rs. 1,500 and Rs. 500) and disposes of the profits remaining after payment of interest on these debts. The case of Mst. Rahiman v. Mst. Baqridan (1936 O.W.N. 165) (8), is cited in support of this contention, the argument being that as the taking of interest is opposed to the principles of Muhammadan Law, a waqf deed which provides for payment of interest must be held invalid. But in Mst. Rahiman v. Mst. Baqridan (8), the waqf was held invalid on the ground that mortgage rights were the subject of the waqf, that is the property disposed of by the waqf was the interest due on a mortgage. The two cases are clearly distinguishable. We are not therefore prepared to hold that the waqf in the present case is invalid either on this ground or on any of the other grounds put forward.

The last ground taken in the plaintiffs' appeal is that there are clerical mistakes and mistakes of calculation in the decree, four instances being given. The learned Counsel for the appellants was not, however, able to show us that there was any foundation for these assertions. He admitted that there was no mistake in the order passed in the judgment; he said that the mistakes are only in the decree. We find, however, that the judgment and decree are similarly worded and he was unable to show us in what way any mistake had occurred. He argued that the item of Rs. 534 on account of Pleader's fee should not have been included, in the memorandum of costs, as no certificate had been filed before arguments. It is true that it is not stated on the certificate that it was filed before arguments, but it is stated that it was filed before 10-30 A. M., and we consider that this justifies the presumption that it was filed before arguments. We find no force therefore in this ground of appeal.

In the result, both appeals fail and we dismiss them accordingly with costs.

S. Appeals dismissed.

DISTRICT BOARD, RANGPUR—

PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), s. 106—Suit under—Plaintiff not admitting that he is out of possession—Whether can establish that possession of the other party is possession of his—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 80—Notice under s. 80—Subsequent discovery that certain plot had been omitted—Another notice adding that plot—Suit more than two months after first notice, whether premature—Record of Rights—Preparation of—Duty of Revenue Officer—Must see nature of possession—Principle and agent—Admission by Eastern Bengal Railway is on behalf of Government—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 13—Scope and applicability—Bengal Local Self-Government Act (III of 1885), s. 73—Scope of—Title of District Board in land held under ss. 73 and 75, whether different.

The determination of a question of bare title is outside the scope of a suit under s. 106, Ben. Ten. Act. A suit under that section relates to the Record of Rights and to the correction of the entries therein. A suit for the determination of a bare question of title divorced from possession is not one which falls within the purview of s. 106. But this does not mean that the Assistant Settlement Officer is not under any circumstances to consider questions involving the title of the rival parties. Where a plaintiff admits that he is out of possession and seeks to recover possession after a declaration of his title to the land, he cannot obtain these reliefs in a suit framed under s. 106, because such a suit would involve the determination of a question of bare title unaccompanied with possession. But where the plaintiff does not admit that he is out of possession of the land in suit, it is open to him to establish in a suit under s. 106, that the possession of the other party is really the possession of the plaintiff. [p. 457, col. 1.]

A notice under s. 80, Civil P. C., was served on the Secretary of State for India but when subsequently it was discovered that a certain plot was omitted from the notice, another notice adding that plot to the subject-matter of the suit was sent. The suit was brought more than two months after the first notice.

Held, that s. 80 was complied with and the suit could not be said to be premature so far as it related to the other plots mentioned in the first notice.

The duty of the Revenue Officer at the time of preparing the Record of Rights is not confined merely to ascertain who is in actual occupation of the land and to record the land in his khatian. The Revenue Officer has to ascertain and record very much more than that. He has to ascertain not merely who is in physical occupation of the land but he has to ascertain further whether such occupation amounts to possession and the nature of such possession. [ibid.]

Admissions by the Eastern Bengal Railway are admissions by the agents of the Govt. and are therefore binding on the latter.

Section 13, Evi. Act, consists of two parts. The first part deals with transactions and the second part with instances.

Section 73, Ben. Local Self-Government Act, merely transfers the control of roads hitherto under the control of certain authorities to the District Board. It does not say that the title of the District Board in the land held by it under ss. 73 and 75, respectively would be different.

As. from the appellate decrees of the Special Judge, Rangpur, dated March 23, 1937.

Mr. Ramaprasad Mookerjee and Dr. S. C. Basak, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Atul Chandra Gupta and Apurba Charan Mukherjee, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—The District Board of Rangpur instituted three suits being Suits Nos. 496, 497 and 498 of 1935, against the Secretary of State for India in Council. The suits were instituted under s. 106, Ben. Ten. Act, for correction of the Record of Rights. All the suits were heard together and partially decreed. No appeal has been filed against the decision in Suit No. 497, and therefore I am not concerned with the decision in that suit. The defendant, the Secretary of State for India in Council through the Agent of the Eastern Bengal Railway appealed against the decision of the Assistant Settlement Officer in the other two suits to the Special Judge; he upheld the decision of the trial Court with a small modification in Suit No. 496. He held that so far as that suit was concerned, the plaintiff's case had failed with respect to one of the plots, namely plot No. 669. Against this decision, the Secretary of State for India-in-Council has filed two appeals to this Court and the plaintiff has filed a cross-objection relating to that part of the decision of the Special Judge which related to plot No. 669. The appeals have been heard together and this judgment will govern both the appeals. After the case of the appellant had been argued for some time, Mr. Gupta appearing on behalf of the respondent stated that he does not press the cross-objection. It is accordingly dismissed. The case of the plaintiff is as follows: O. S. plots Nos. 6077, 5328 and 4340 which form the subject-matter of Suit No. 495 and O. S. plot Nos. 144, 143, 141, 138, 669, 668, 129, 126 and 777 which form the subject-matter of Suit No. 496 are claimed by the plaintiff as forming part of roads belonging to the District Board; as I have stated before, the plaintiff has now given up its claim to plot No. 669. The plaintiff's case further is that these plots were in the permissive occupation of the Eastern Bengal Railway under an arrangement between the plaintiff and the railway. When the settlement record of the area was prepared, these plots were recorded in the khatians of the Eastern Bengal Railway as belonging to the railway and were omitted from the khatians of the plaintiff. The plaintiff accordingly brought these suits for the correction of the settlement record by inserting these plots in the plaintiff's khatians.

The position taken up by the defendant was that these plots have been properly recorded as belonging to the Eastern Bengal Railway. Another defence taken was that Suit No. 496 was barred by reason of the provisions of s. 80, Civil P. O. The contention on this point briefly is this: The suit being against the Secretary of State for India-in-Council, it is necessary under s. 80 that a notice should be served upon the Secretary of State for India in Council; the section also provides that the suit should not be brought until the expiry of two months next after the notice in writing has been served. The notice in this case was served on August 17, 1935. Thereafter, it was discovered by the District Board that plot No. 669 had been omitted from the notice. On August 23, 1935, another notice including this plot was served. The suit was filed on October 23, 1935.

The contention of the defendant is that the time must be computed from the date of the second notice and that as the suit has been filed one day before the expiry of the period of two months from that date the suit is premature. The other defences taken in the Courts below have now been abandoned. Both the Courts have held that suit No. 496 is not premature. They have also held that the land which forms the subject-matter of these appeals belongs to District Board and not to the railway. They have found that the railway is in possession of the land with the permission of the District Board for certain limited purposes. The final order passed by the lower Appellate Court is that the land which forms the subject-matter of these appeals shall be recorded in the khatians of the District Board and that in the remarks column of the khatians there should be a remark that the land is in the permissive possession of the Eastern Bengal Railway.

Against this decision, the defendant has appealed. The learned junior Govt. Pleader appearing on behalf of the appellant urged three points before me. First, he said that the suit is premature by one day inasmuch as it has been brought before the expiry of two months from the delivery of the notice which had to be served on the appellant by reason of the provisions of s. 80, Civil P. O. Secondly, he says that as the railway is admittedly in possession of the land which formed the subject-matter of both the suits, the Revenue Officer was bound to record it in the appellant's khatians. He argues that the settlement record is prepared with reference to actual possession only and not with reference to title and that therefore even if it be conceded that the title is in the District Board, nevertheless, the District Board can get no relief in a suit framed under s. 106, Ben. Ten. Act. The third point taken is that the plaintiff has failed to establish its title to the land of these two suits. In my opinion, there is no substance in the first point taken. The first notice with respect to Suit No. 496 was served on August 17, 1935, and the suit has been brought on October 23, 1935. If the first notice be considered as subsisting then the suit is not premature as it has been brought after the expiry of two months from the date of service of the notice. The contention of the learned junior Govt. Pleader is that the first notice has been annulled by the second one and that the suit must be considered as having been whether the plaintiff or the defendant is in actual possession of the land and that when it was found that the railway was in actual possession, the matter was concluded and the Courts had no authority to embark upon an investigation into the question whether the plaintiff or the defendant had title to the land. In support of this contention, my attention was drawn to the cases in Mohunt Padmalay Romanuja Das v. Lukmi Rani (1), and Brojo Mohan Pal v. Darasan Pal (2). Mr Gupta on the other hand relied on the cases in Asrafannessa Khatun v. Heramba Chandra (3), Chandi Charan Law v. Sreemati Lal Bewa (4), and also in Brojo Mohan Pal v. Darasan Pal (2) which was cited by the learned junior Govt.

the parties and that when the Revenue Officer proceeds to hear and decide the dispute, he is to determine not merely whether certain words shall or shall not remain unchanged in the record, but whether the facts described by those words are correct; if he is satisfied that the entry does not describe the facts correctly, he will, as a corollary, cause an alteration to be made."

In order to determine the nature of the possession of a party with respect to a particular piece of land, it may be necessary for the Assistant Settlement Officer in a suit under s. 106, Ben. Ten. Act, to enter incidentally into questions of title. I entirely agree that where a plaintiff admits that he is out of possession and seeks to recover possession after a declaration of his title to the land, he cannot obtain these reliefs in a suit framed under s. 106, Ben. Ten. Act, because such a suit would involve the determination of a question of bare title unaccompanied with possession. In the present case, the position is entirely different. The District Board does not admit that it is out of possession of the land in suit. It claims that the land belongs to it and that the railway is in possession thereof with its permission. In other words, the District Board claims to be in possession of the land through the railway. It does not seek to recover possession on establishment of its title. The question involved therefore relates to the nature of the possession of the railway. If the argument of the learned junior Govt. Pleader were right, then it must be held that the duty of the Revenue Officer at the time of preparing the Record of Rights is confined merely to ascertain who is in actual occupation of the land and to record the land in his khatian; but that certainly is not so. The Revenue Officer has to ascertain and record very much more than that. He has to ascertain not merely who is in physical occupation of the land but he has to ascertain further whether such occupation amounts to possession and the nature of such possession. If I may say so with respect, the learned junior Govt. Pleader has given the word 'possession' too narrow an interpretation. He considers that the words "possession" and "occupation" are synonymous. The word 'possession' is not used in that narrow sense in the cases relied upon by him. A person may be in possession of land although he is not in physical occupation of it and mere occupation would not necessarily connote that kind of possession upon the basis of which entries in the Record of Rights are made. It is wrong to say therefore that once it is found that the Eastern Bengal Railway was in occupation of the land in these suits, it is not open to the District Board to establish in a suit under s. 106, Ben. Ten. Act, that the possession of the railway is really the possession of the District Board. I hold, therefore, that the learned junior Govt. Pleader has not been able to establish that the suit is misconceived or that the Court below has gone into questions which it was not empowered to do in a suit under s. 106, Ben. Ten. Act. The Court has considered the circumstances and the oral and documentary evidence and it has come to the conclusion that although the railway is in physical occupation of the land, the title to the land is in the District Board and the railway is in possession with the permission of the District Board. In my opinion, the Court was entitled to investigate these matters and to come to these conclusions if the evidence establishes them.

This takes me to the next question, namely, whether the Court below was right in directing the record to be corrected by including the plots of land which form the subject-matter of these two appeals in the plaintiff's khatian with the remark in the remarks column that they are in the possession of the Eastern Bengal Railway with the permission of the District Board. There can be no manner of doubt whatsoever that before the railway got possession of the land in these two suits, it was in the possession of the District Board. There is also no doubt that the railway has not attempted to show that it ever acquired the land by any land acquisition proceedings and indeed it is not even suggested before me that the railway acquired the land by these means. In fact there is no evidence to show that the railway acquired title to the land. The evidence discloses that at one time there was a proposal that the railway would acquire the land from the District Board but that proposal fell through. The documentary evidence consists of a series of letters written to the District Board by the railway authorities, by the Collector of the District, by an Under-Secretary of the Govt. and various other Govt. Officials. In almost all these letters, it is either expressly stated or tacitly assumed that the land in these two suits belongs to the District Board and in these letters permission is asked from the District Board on behalf of the railway to do certain things on the land.

It has also been found by the Courts below that the lands in the two suits are portions of roads which admittedly belonged to the District Board. The land is at present used as road over which the public have a right of way. It is clear from the correspondence that the railway took charge of the land from the District Board for the purpose of metalling and maintaining it and that the railway always admitted that the land belonged to the District Board. The learned junior Govt. Pleader suggested that the correspondence containing these admissions could not bind the Govt. I cannot understand why they should not be binding on the Govt. The admissions are made by the agents of the Govt. I shall give a few instances of these admissions. Exhibit 1 is a letter from the Executive Engineer of the Eastern Bengal Railway to the Collector of Rangpur. He says in this letter "the road belongs to the District Board and runs for nearly the whole of this length through railway land." He then asks for permission to metal the road. Exhibit 1 (e) is a letter from the Under Secretary to the Govt. of Bengal to the Commissioner, Rajshahi Division, wherein it is admitted that the road is a District Board road. Exhibit 1 (f) is a letter from the Collector, Rangpur, to the Chairman of the District Board also admitting that the road is a District Board road. Exhibit 1 (g), 1 (h) are similar letters in which it is admitted that the land in suit belonged to the District Board. These admissions are by the railway, by the Collector of the District and other officers of Govt. These documents clearly indicate that the admissions are made by the agents of the Govt. and, in my opinion, the Govt. is bound by these admissions.

Mr. Gupta on behalf of the District Board contended further that these letters were admissible in evidence not only as admissions made on behalf of the appellant but also as evidence of transactions and particular instances in which the right of the District Board with respect to the land was asserted and recognized. In other words, he says that these letters constitute evidence which is admissible under s. 13, Evi. Act. The learned junior Govt. Pleader contends that these letters cannot be considered as transactions and he says that s. 13, Evi. Act, has no application. I cannot agree with this view. Section 13, Evi. Act, consists of two parts. The first part deals with transactions and the second part with instances. I do not decide whether the correspondence between the District Board and the different officials would constitute a transaction but the letters certainly are instances in which the right of the District Board to the land which form the subject-matter of these suits was recognized. The correspondence establishes beyond doubt that the railway has no title to the land and that it is in occupation of it with the permission of the District Board to whom the land belongs.

My attention was drawn to the provisions of ss. 73 and 75, Local Self-Govt. Act (Act III of 1885) by the learned junior Govt. Pleader for the purpose of showing that although the District Board may be in control of certain lands used as roads, the property in the land would not necessarily vest in the District Board. He points out that s. 75 enacts that any road constructed by the District Board from the district fund shall be vested in the District Board by which it was constructed and says that there is nothing to show that the roads which form the subject matter in these suits were constructed by the District Board. He argues that it is such roads and such roads only that vest in the District Board. In support of this view, he refers me to s. 73 of the aforesaid Act which is in the following terms:

"From and after the establishment of a District Board in any district, all roads, bridges, channels, buildings and other property, movable or immovable held by, or under the control and administration of, the District Road Committee or any Branch Committee in such district for the purposes of the Cess Act, 1880, shall, for the purposes of this Act, (but subject to the provisions of Chap. III of Part III thereof) be under the control and administration of such District Board."

He says that the other roads shall be merely under the control and administration of the District Board and will not vest in the District Board. In my opinion these two sections do not bear this interpretation. Section 73 merely transfers the control of roads hitherto under the control of certain authorities to the District Board. It does not say that the title of the District Board in the land held by it under ss. 73 and 75, respectively, would be different. The Explanation to s. 73 says that the roads, bridges, etc., referred to in the section shall include and shall be deemed to have always included the soil and sub-soil beneath those properties excluding the minerals therein. It is really unnecessary for this case to determine the exact rights of the District Board in the soil of the roads which belong to them. To do this would be to enter upon an investigation foreign to the subject-matter of a suit under s. 106, Ben. Ten. Act. What has to be determined is whether the District Board is the owner of the land in its own right and whether the railway is occupying the land with the permission of the District Board. The evidence establishes that the District Board is in possession of the land in its own right and that the railway is in occupation with the permission of the District Board. The learned lower Appellate Court was, therefore, perfectly correct in holding that the land should be recorded in the khatian of the District Board and not in the khatian of the railway and in directing a note to be made in the remarks column that the railway is in permissive occupation of the land. The appeals are accordingly dismissed with costs.

Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), Art. 17-B, s. 7 (v) as amended by Madras Act V of 1922—Mortgagee of portion of house obtaining decree, purchasing that portion and obtaining symbolical possession thereof—Another mortgagee of whole house obtaining decree, purchasing whole house and refusing first mortgagee to enter into possession of his portion—Suit by first mortgagee for partition and possession held fell under s. 7 (v) and not under Art. 17-B.

A mortgagee obtained a mortgage decree in respect of a portion of a house and at the subsequent sale in execution became the purchaser thereof and obtained symbolical possession of that portion. Another decree-holder subsequently obtained a mortgage decree in respect of the whole house, and in execution thereof purchased the house and was in physical possession of the whole house and refused to allow the first mortgagee to enter into physical possession of his portion. The first mortgagee thereupon brought a suit for partition of the property and possession of his half share. In his plaint he averred that the second mortgagee was in wrongful possession and enjoyment of the whole house:

Held, that the suit was in truth and in fact a suit for possession against a person in wrongful possession of the property. The plaintiff was in possession of no portion of the property. In these circumstances s. 7 (v) of the Court Fees Act, applied, and not Art. 17-B.

Leach, C. J.—In O. S. No. 409 of 1905 of the Court of the District Munsif of Srivilliputhur, the appellant obtained a mortgage decree in respect of the western portion of a house and at the subsequent sale in execution became the purchaser thereof. The respondent in the appeal held a second mortgage over the whole house. On March 8, 1924, the appellant obtained symbolical possession of the western half. In 1914 the respondent obtained a mortgage-decree in respect of the whole house, and in execution thereof caused it to be sold. He was himself the purchaser, but his purchase was, of course, subject to the appellant's right and therefore was only effective with regard to the eastern half. The respondent was in physical possession of the whole of the property throughout and in spite of the fact that the appellant had been put in symbolical possession of his half of the property refused to allow him to enter into physical possession of his portion. The result was that the appellant brought Suit No. 255 of 1927 in the Court of the District Munsif for partition of the property and possession of his half share. In his plaint he averred that the respondent was in wrongful possession and enjoyment of the whole house. Notwithstanding the nature of the suit the appellant stamped his plaint with a stamp of the value of Rs. 15 under Art. 17-B, Court Fees Act, as amended by the Madras Act V of 1922. Article 17-B is a residuary Article. It states that the fee on a plaint or memorandum of appeal where it is not possible to estimate at a money value the subject-matter in dispute and which is not otherwise provided for by the Act shall be Rs. 15 in a suit in a District Munsif's Court. The respondent raised the question of the stamping of the plaint contending that the suit should have been valued according to the market value of the house under the provisions of s. 7 (v) of the Act. The District Munsif decided the question in favour of the appellant and decreed the suit. The respondent appealed to the Subordinate Judge who, by an order dated December 8, 1931, held that the District Munsif was wrong and should have required the suit to have been stamped ad valorem on Rs. 2,500, the market value of the house.

On this valuation the proper court-fee was Rs. 224-15-0. The memorandum of appeal had only been stamped to the value of Rs. 15 and therefore there was a deficiency of Rs. 209-15-0. The Subordinate Judge gave the respondent a week's time in which to pay this deficiency and as he failed to comply with the order dismissed the appeal. The Subordinate Judge also took up the question of the stamping of the plaint and held that the District Munsif should have required the plaintiff to pay an ad valorem fee of Rs. 224-15-0. The Subordinate Judge called upon the appellant to pay the deficiency and gave him three days' time to comply with the order. As the appellant failed to comply, the Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit under the provisions of s. 12 (ii) read with s. 10 (ii), Court Fees Act. The present appeal is against that order.

The appeal first came before Venkataamana Rao, J. who considered that it raised a question of some importance and consequently it has been placed before a Bench. We have no doubt that the Subordinate Judge was right in holding that the plaint should have been stamped under the provisions of s. 7 (v). The suit was in truth and in fact a suit for possession against a person in wrongful possession of the property. Not only was possession sought, but a decree for mesne profits was also asked for by the appellant, who expressly averred in his plaint that his claim to be put in possession of his half of the house had been wrongfully refused. The appellant was in possession of no portion of the property. In these circumstances s. 7 (v) of the Act applied, and not Art. 17-B.

The learned Advocate for the appellant has asked us to give him a further opportunity of paying the deficiency in the stamping of the plaint. The learned Advocate for the respondent has made a similar request with regard to his appeal to the Subordinate Judge. He asks that he may be given an opportunity of paying the deficiency and having his appeal heard on the merits. We consider that justice will be done if we accede to both these requests. The appellant will be given a fortnight's time in which to pay the court-fee of Rs. 209-15-0 being the difference between the proper court-fee of Rs. 224-15-0 and Rs. 15 which was actually paid on the plaint. If the amount is paid within the time, the respondent will be given a further three days in which to pay the deficiency on his memorandum of appeal, namely Rs. 209-15-0. If he does so, his appeal will be restored to the list and heard on its merits. The appellant has stamped his appeal to this Court with a fee of Rs. 15. The proper court-fee should have been Rs. 2-9-0. There is, therefore, here a deficiency of Rs. 8-2-0. The learned Advocate for the appellant has undertaken to pay this amount. This must be paid within one week. Failure to pay this amount within the time will mean that the second appeal will stand dismissed. Each party will pay his own costs.

S.-N.

Order accordingly.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 60, 35, O. XXI, r. 46—Exemptions from attachment are cumulative—Emoluments, if salary—Attachment of subscription to provident fund by garnishee order—Costs—Costs in test cases.

Exemptions from attachment running from sub-heads (a) to (p) of s. 60, Civil P. C., are cumulative and any man is entitled to all the benefits if he is qualified to do so.

The emoluments of the judgment-debtor known as his pay must be regarded as 'salary' for the purposes of this section as defined by the explanation.

Before the time of the payment of subscription by a judgment-debtor to a provident fund, the money does not belong to the judgment-debtor and at the time of the payment it becomes a compulsory deposit and is exempted from attachment under s. 60 (k). There is no intervening period between which a subscription by the judgment-debtor to a provident fund can be attached by a garnishee order to the Corporation in which judgment-debtor is an employee.

In test cases, no order for costs should be passed.

O. R. App. from an order of the Court of the Small Causes, Rangoon, in C. M. No. 235 of 1938.

Mr. Rafi, for the Applicant.

Mr. Dangali, for Respondent No. 1.

Order.—This is an application to revise an order passed by the Chief Judge of the Court of Small Causes in an application for a garnishee order. The judgment-debtor is an employee of the Rangoon Corporation. His salary is Rs. 120 a month. Out of this there is a compulsory deduction of Rs. 10 a month towards his provident fund. The question to be determined is how much of his salary can be attached in execution of the decree. Under s. 60, Civil P. C., certain property is exempt from attachment. After first saying what is attachable in sub-s. (1) the proviso reads: "the following particulars shall not be liable to such attachment or sale, namely" and we then get sub-heads running alphabetically from (a) to (p). The first question for consideration is whether these exemptions are cumulative or whether the judgment-debtor is confined to one only as was strongly urged. All are apparently on the same footing: (a) refers to the necessary wearing apparel, cooking vessels, beds and bedding of the judgmentdebtor, etc.; (b) refers to tools of artisan, and where the judgment-debtor is an agriculturist, his implements of husbandry, cattle, seed-grain, etc.; and (c) refers to houses and other building belonging to an agriculturist and so on. I can see no reason whatever why an agriculturist who is exempted under this proviso should not claim exemption for his house, cattle, seed-grain, implements of husbandry, wearing-apparel, cooking vessels and so on; so, as all the sub-heads are on the same footing. I can see no reason for supposing that these exemptions are not cumulative and any man is entitled to all the benefits if he is qualified to do so.

The section has been amended by Act IX of 1937 and now sub-s. (i) of the proviso exempts

"the salary of any Public Officer or of any servant of a railway company or local authority to the extent of the first hundred rupees and one-half the remainder of such salary."

and an Explanation has been added: "salary" means the total monthly emoluments, excluding certain matters which are not germane to the present question. The emoluments of the judgment-debtor in the present case appear to me to be Rs. 120 a month; that is what is known as his pay and I think it must be regarded as 'salary' for the purposes of this section as defined by the explanation. This being the case, under sub-s. (i) Rs. 110 of his salary is exempt from attachment. Proceeding further down the proviso we find sub-s. (k) which exempts

"all compulsory deposits and other sums in or derived from any fund to which the Provident Funds Act for the time being applies, in so far as they are declared by the said Act not to be liable to attachment."

The Provident Funds Act now in force is dated 1925 and in this Act compulsory deposit is defined:

"Compulsory deposit" means a subscription to or deposit in, a provident fund which under the rules of the fund, is not, until the happening of some specified contingency, repayable on demand otherwise than

It is claimed that under this section the judgment-debtor is entitled to have exempted from attachment a further Rs. 10. For the decree-holder it is urged that until this money has been actually deposited in the fund, it is not a compulsory deposit so as to be free from attachment. A reference to the Provident Funds Rules at p. 130 of the Rangoon Municipal Manual shows that Provident Fund Rule 7 says:

"The Corporation shall, at the time of payment, deduct from the pay of every subscriber the amount of the subscription due from such subscriber to the provident fund and shall pay such amount into the provident fund to the credit of such subscriber."

Once this Rs. 10 has been paid into the provident fund, it is beyond the reach of the creditor and exempt from attachment. The question is whether it can be intercepted en route, so to say, between the disbursing officer and the fund. In my opinion, it cannot and for this I rely on the actual wording of the definition in s. 2 of the Act. It will be noticed that what are exempted from attachment under sub-s. (k) are "compulsory deposits" and there being a reference to the Provident Funds Act I think the definition of "compulsory deposit" in that Act must apply, and compulsory deposit means "a subscription to, or deposit in." This Rs. 10 never gets into the hands of the judgment-debtor. The Corporation or the disbursing officer deducts it. He deducts the amount of the subscription from the judgment-debtor's pay bill at the time of payment. Before the time of payment, the money is not the judgment-debtor's. At the time of payment the Rs. 10 becomes a subscription to the fund and a subscription to the fund is a compulsory deposit and therefore exempted. There seems to me no intervening moment when it is susceptible of attachment. In consequence, I hold that under sub-s. (k) the judgment-debtor is entitled to claim exemption for another Rs. 10 making his total exemption Rs. 120; that is equal to his total salary and there is no balance left available for attachment. I therefore set aside the order passed by the Chief Judge of the Court of Small Causes directing the Corporation to pay into Court Rs. 10 a month from the judgment-debtor's salary. I am given to understand that this is a test case. I think, therefore, that there should be no order for costs.

Order set aside.

Appeal from the Court of Criminal Appeal for Trinidad and Tobago

THE KING—RESPONDENT

Criminal Appeal Ordinance of Trinidad and Tobago (1931)—Court of Criminal Appeal established under—Whether branch of Supreme Court —Person appointed as acting Judge under s. 7 (1) of Judicature Ordinance of Trinidad and Tobago (1880) as amended in 1938, if can act as member of Court of Criminal Appeal—Court of Criminal Appeal composed of Chief Justice and two Acting Judges held not properly constituted—Interpretation Ordinance (XIX of 1933), ss. 17, 20—Applicability—Constitution of Court.

The Court of Criminal Appeal established under Criminal Appeal Ordinance, 1931, of Trinidad and Tobago, is not established as a branch of the existing Supreme Court; but as a separate Court of Record, the Judges of which are stated to be the Chief Justice of Trinidad and Tobago and the Puisne Judges of Trinidad and Tobago. The Criminal Appeal Ordinance contains no power to appoint a person to act as a Judge of the Court of Criminal Appeal. [p. 463, col. 2.]

A person appointed under s. 7 (3) of the Judicature Ordinance of Trinidad and Tobago (1880), is not a Puisne Judge of Trinidad and Tobago, nor is he under that provision invested with any powers beyond such as are necessary to enable him to act effectively as a Judge of the Supreme Court. Such person cannot, therefore sit as a member of Court of Criminal Appeal. [p. 464, col. 2.]

Sections 17 and 20 of the Interpretation Ordinance, 1933, deal with the case of one individual being appointed to take the place of another individual, and to act as a substitute for him. [ibid]

An acting Judge is not a Puisne Judge of the Colony, for the number of Puisne Judges is fixed and cannot be exceeded. Moreover, they are appointed in accordance with instructions received through a Secretary of State, which is not the case with acting Judges. [p. 465, col. 1.]

Where, therefore, an appeal from conviction of the accused is heard by the Court of Criminal Appeal composed of the Chief Justice of the Colony and two acting Judges of the Supreme Court appointed under s. 7 (3) of the Judicature Ordinance, the Court is not properly constituted and its judgment is void and of no effect.

Sir Stafford Cripps, K. C. and Mr. G. Gramville Slack, for the Appellant.

The Attorney-General, Kenneth Preedy, for the Respondent.

Lord Russell of Killowen.—The appellant was indicted on a charge of sedition, before Mr. Justice Robinson and a jury, in the Supreme Court of Trinidad and Tobago. He was found guilty and was on December 16, 1937, sentenced to two years' imprisonment with hard labour. He appealed from the conviction to the Court of Criminal Appeal of that Colony. The appeal was heard and dismissed on January 28, 1938.

The appellant then petitioned His Majesty in Council for special leave to appeal in forma pauperis alleging, amongst other grounds, that the Court which had heard and dismissed his appeal was not a duly constituted Court; and by Order in Council dated July 28, 1938, leave was granted to him to appeal against the judgment of January 28, 1938. "the appeal to be limited to the sole question whether the said Court was duly constituted according to the provisions of the Criminal Appeal Ordinance, 1931 (No. 31 of 1931), of Trinidad and Tobago having regard to the fact that the Court included two acting Judges."

Their Lordships are accordingly in no way concerned with the merits of the appellant's appeal from his conviction. They have only to consider whether the appeal was heard by a Tribunal capable of adjudicating upon it.

The Court which heard and dismissed the appeal was composed of the Chief Justice of the Colony, acting Justice Hobson, K. O. and acting Justice Boland. The question for determination is whether the two last-named gentlemen were members of or entitled to sit in the Criminal Appeal. The solution of this question depends upon the true construction of certain ordinances.

The Judicature Ordinance, Chapter 35, is dated March 20, 1880, and (as amended by some subsequent Ordinances) provides as follows:—

"3. There shall be one Supreme Court in the Colony, which shall be a Superior Court of Record, and such Court shall be called the Supreme Court of Trinidad and Tobago.

4—(1) The Supreme Court shall consist of not more than three and not less than two Judges, of whom one shall be called the Chief Justice of Trinidad and Tobago and shall be the President of the Court, and the other or others shall be called the Puisne Judge or Puisne Judges of Trinidad and Tobago, and shall, if more than one, be called the First and Second Puisne Judges according to the terms of their respective appointments. (Substituted by 23 of 1914, s. 3.)

(2) The Court shall be deemed to be duly constituted notwithstanding any vacancy in the office of any Judge.

5. Every Judge of the Court shall be appointed by Letters Patent under the Public Seal of Colony by the Governor, in accordance with such instructions as he may receive through one of His Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State, and shall hold his office during His Majesty's pleasure, subject to any conditions contained in any regulations made by or under the authority of His Majesty for His Majesty's Colonial Service, and shall receive such salary as the Governor, with the sanction of the Legislative Council, may appoint. The acceptance by any Judge of the Court of any other office or place of profit or emolument not authorized by law shall be and be deemed de facto an avoidance of his office of Judge, and his salary as Judge shall cease accordingly from the time of his acceptance of such other office or place.

(6) Any act required or authorized to be done by, before, or in the name of the Chief Justice may be done by, before, or in the name of a Puisne Judge of the Court in case of the absence on leave or otherwise, indisposition, or inability to attend of the Chief Justice.

7.—(1) Whenever the office of any Judge of the Court is vacant, or whenever any Judge is absent from the Colony, or is, by reason of illness, interest in any cause or matter, or for any other reason, incapable of acting, or whenever in the opinion of the Governor the due administration of justice so requires, the Governor may, in the name of His Majesty, by Letters Patent under the Public Seal of the Colony, appoint some person, being a Barrister-at-Law of five years' standing at least to act as Judge of the Court.

(2) Every such appointment shall be for such time, or for the trial or hearing of such causes or matters, or otherwise, as may be specified in the instrument of appointment.

(3) Every person so appointed and acting under such appointment shall, so far as may be necessary for the purposes of his appointment, have all the powers of a Judge of the Court, and all acts done within the scope of his appointment by any person so appointed and acting as aforesaid shall be as valid as if done by a Judge, whether in Court or Chambers or otherwise."

By the Judicature (Amendment) Ordinance, 1936, the following sections were substituted for the 4th and 5th sections above set out, viz.:

"4.—(1) The Supreme Court shall consist of four Judges, one of whom shall be designated the Chief Justice of Trinidad and Tobago and the others the Puisne Judges of Trinidad and Tobago.

The Chief Justice shall be the President of the said Court. The Puisne Judges shall be called the First, Second and Third Puisne Judges according to the terms of their respective appointments.

(2) The Court shall be deemed to be duly constituted notwithstanding any vacancy in the office of any Judge.

5. Every Judge of the Court shall be appointed by Letters Patent under the Public Seal of the Colony by the Governor, in accordance with such instructions as he may receive through one of His Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State, and shall hold his office during His Majesty's pleasure, subject to any conditions contained in any regulations made by or under the authority of His Majesty for His Majesty's Colonial Service, and shall receive such salary as the Governor, with the sanction of the Legislative Council, may appoint. No Judge shall accept or perform any other office or place of profit or emolument not authorized by law without the consent of the Governor: Provided that this restriction shall not apply to a Judge temporarily appointed to act as such under s. 7 of this Ordinance."

The Supreme Court of the Colony accordingly now consists of four Judges, viz., the Chief Justice and the First, Second and Third Puisne Judges.

In the year 1931, there was enacted an Ordinance to establish in the Colony a Court of Criminal Appeal, viz., the Criminal Appeal Ordinance, 1931. That Ordinance contained the following provisions:—

"3.—(1) There shall be a Court of Criminal Appeal in the Colony; and the Chief Justice of Trinidad and Tobago and the Puisne Judges of Trinidad and Tobago shall be Judges of that Court.

(2) For the purpose of hearing and determining appeals under this Ordinance, and for the purpose of any other proceedings under this Ordinance, the Court of Criminal Appeal shall be summoned in accordance with directions given by the Chief Justice, and the Court shall be duly constituted if it consists of three Judges.

The Court shall sit in Port of Spain except in cases where the Chief Justice gives special directions that it shall sit at some other place.

(3) The Chief Justice, if present, and in his absence the senior member of the Court, shall be President of the Court.

(4) A Judge of the Court of Criminal Appeal shall not sit as a Judge on the hearing of any appeal, or on the hearing of any application for leave to appeal, against a verdict given or sentence passed at a trial at which he presided, or on the consideration of any point reserved by him under the provisions of the Criminal Procedure Ordinance, Chap. 5.

(5) The determination of any question before the Court of Criminal Appeal shall be according to the opinion of the majority of the members of the Court hearing the case.

(6) Unless the Court direct to the contrary in cases where, in the opinion of the Court, the question is a question of law on which it would be convenient that separate judgments should be pronounced by the members of the Court, the judgment of the Court shall be pronounced by the President of the Court or such other member of the Court hearing the case as the President of the Court directs, and no judgment with respect to the determination of any question shall be separately pronounced by any other member of the Court.

(7) The Court of Criminal Appeal shall be a superior Court of Record, and shall, for the purposes of, and subject to, the provisions of this Ordinance, have full power to determine, in accordance with this Ordinance, any questions necessary to be determined for the purpose of doing justice in the case before the Court.

(8) Any direction which may be given by the Chief Justice under this section may, in the event of any vacancy in that office or in the event of the incapacity of the Chief Justice to act from any reason, be given by the senior Judge of the Court of Criminal Appeal."

It is to be observed that the Court so established is not established as a branch of the existing Supreme Court; but as a separate Court of Record, the Judges of which are stated to be "the Chief Justice of Trinidad and Tobago and the Puisne Judges of Trinidad and Tobago." It is further to be observed that the Criminal Appeal Ordinance contains no power to appoint a person to act as a Judge of the Court of Criminal Appeal.

The critical point now becomes apparent. Is a person who has been appointed under s. 7 of the Judicature Ordinance "to act as Judge of the Supreme Court" a member of the Court of Criminal Appeal or capable of acting as such?

The Letters Patent appointing Mr. Hobson to be acting Justice ran thus:—

"Whereas by s. 7 of the Judicature Ordinance, Chap. XXXV, it is among other things provided that whenever in the opinion of the Governor the due administration of justice so requires the Governor may, in the name of His Majesty, by Letters Patent under the Public Seal of the Colony, appoint some person, being a Barrister-at-Law of five years' standing at least to act as Judge of the Supreme Court;

And whereas it is expedient to appoint some person to act as a Judge of the Supreme Court for the purpose of hearing and determining the appeal of Tubal Uriah Buz Butler to the Court of Criminal Appeal in the case of The King v. Tubal Uriah Buz Butler for sedition;

Know ye therefore by these presents that we being well-satisfied of the loyalty, integrity and ability of John Davidson Hobson, Esquire, B. A., K. C., do hereby appoint the said John Davidson Hobson to act as Judge of the Supreme Court and of the Court of Criminal Appeal of the said Colony as from January 24, 1938, for the purpose of hearing and determining the said appeal of the said Tubal Uriah Buz Butler, and for that purpose to have, hold, exercise and enjoy the said office and place, together with all rights, privileges and advantages thereunto belonging or appertaining."

The letters patent appointing Mr. Boland were in identical language.

It seems plain to their Lordships that if the acting Judges were members of the Court of Criminal Appeal or were capable of sitting therein, that result can have flowed only from their having been appointed to act as Judges of the Supreme Court, for no power existed to appoint them to act simply as Judges of the Court of Criminal Appeal, or to appoint them for the hearing of a specified matter in that Court.

It is said on behalf of the respondent that the result does flow from their appointment to act as Judges of the Supreme Court, because under s. 7 (3) of the Judicature Ordinance, every person so appointed is given all the powers of a Judge of the Supreme Court, and that one of the powers thus given is the power of a Judge of the Supreme Court to sit and adjudicate in the Court of Criminal Appeal.

Their Lordships are unable to accept this contention. The powers conferred by s. 7 (3) are the powers exercisable by a Judge of the Supreme Court when he is acting in that capacity. Those are the powers which are to be exercisable by the appointee when he is acting in the same capacity. They are only conferred upon him "so far as may be necessary for the purpose of his appointment", i. e., his appointment to act as a Judge of the Supreme Court; and it is the acts done by a person "acting as aforesaid" which are to be as valid as if done by a Judge. Nor is it true to say that one of the powers of a Judge of the Supreme Court is the power to sit and adjudicate in the Court of Criminal Appeal. That power is derived only from the fact that the constituent members of that Court are, by enactment, the individuals who are the Chief Justice and the Puisne Judges of Trinidad and Tobago. A person appointed under s. 7 (3) of the Judicature Ordinance is not a Puisne Judge of Trinidad and Tobago, nor is he under that provision invested with any powers beyond such as are necessary to enable him to act effectively as a Judge of the Supreme Court.

Two further contentions were advanced on behalf of the respondent, based upon ss 17 and 20 of the Interpretation Ordinance, 1933 (No. 19 of 1933). Those sections provide as follows:—

"Section 17. Where by or under any law, any powers are conferred or any duties are imposed upon a public officer, the Governor may direct that if during any period owing to absence or inability to act from illness or any other cause such public officer shall be unable to exercise the powers or perform the duties of his office in any place under his jurisdiction or control, such powers shall be had and may be exercised and such duties shall be performed in such place by the person named by or by the public officer holding the office designated by the Governor; and thereupon such person or public officer, during any period as aforesaid, shall have and may exercise the powers and shall perform the duties aforesaid, subject to such conditions, exceptions and qualifications as the Governor may direct—

Section 20.—Where any law confers a power or imposes a duty then, unless the contrary intention appears, the power may be exercised and the duty shall be performed from time to time as occasion requires.

(2) Where any law confers a power or imposes a duty on the holder of an office, as such, unless the contrary intention appears, the power may be exercised and the duty shall be performed by the holder of the office for the time being or by a person duly appointed to act for him."

It was said that the case was covered by one or other of these sections: but quite plainly neither section can apply. Each section deals with the case of one individual being appointed to take the place of another individual, and to act as a substitute for him. In the present case neither Mr. Hobson nor Mr. Boland was appointed to take any one's place or to act as a substitute for any individual.

Nor can the respondent derive any help from the decision of their Lordships' Board which was cited, viz., Ex parte Marais, (1) which at most might be an authority to establish that a person appointed to act as a Judge of the Supreme Court is a Judge of the Supreme Court. But it falls far short of establishing the proposition that a person appointed so to act is a member of or entitled to in a Court, the Judges of which, it is enacted, shall be the Chief Justice and the Puisne Judges of the Colony. An acting Judge is not a Puisne Judge of the Colony, for the number of Puisne Judges is fixed and cannot be exceeded. Moreover, they are appointed in accordance with instructions received through a Secretary of State, which is not the case with acting Judges.

For the reasons indicated, their Lordships are of opinion, that the Court which purported to adjudicate upon the appellant's appeal from his conviction was not properly constituted as the Court of Criminal Appeal in the Colony. It had no jurisdiction to deal with the matter. The appeal from the conviction has accordingly never been heard. This appeal should therefore be allowed and the judgment of the Chief Justice and the two acting Judges of January 28, 1938, should be declared to be void and of no effect. Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

COMMISSIONER OF INCOME-TAX,

Income Tax Act (XI of 1922), s. 66-A (2)—Commissioner refusing to state case on question arising under s. 25 (3)—Assessee applying to High Court under s. 66 (3)—Case referred to Full Bench—On receipt of answer, Bench dealing with application under s. 66 (3) directing Commissioner to state case on point of law—High Court, if can grant certificate under s. 66-A (2) or under cl. 40, Letters Patent (Mad.)

Assessee applied to the Commissioner of Income-tax to state a case on a question arising under s. 25 (3), Income Tax Act. The Commissioner refused to state a case on the ground that the order was not prejudicial within the meaning of s. 66 (2) read with s. 33. The assessee then applied to the High Court under s. 66 (3). The High Court made a reference to a Full Bench of five Judges and the answer given to the reference was that an order refusing to interfere with a prejudicial order was itself prejudicial. On receipt of the answer given by the Full Bench to the question referred, the Bench dealing with the petition directed the Commissioner of Income-tax to state a case on the point of law involved.

Held, that the High Court had no jurisdiction to grant a certificate under s. 66-A (2), in the matter of permitting an appeal to His Majesty in Council:

Held, also that the direction which was given to the Commissioner of Income-tax to state a case was an interlocutory order in a matter in which the Court was required to act in an advisory capacity and consequently the High Court had no authority to grant a certificate permitting an appeal to His Majesty in Council under cl. 40 of the Letters Patent (Mad.) 74 Ind. Cas. 469 (2) and 127 Ind. Cas. 473 (3), relied on.

O. P. for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council from the judgment, reported in 184 Ind. Cas. 268.

Mr. M. Patanjali Sastri, for the Applicant.

Mr. K. Bhimasankaram, for the Respondent.

Leach, C. J.—This is an application for a certificate permitting an appeal to His Majesty in Council from an order of this Court in an income-tax matter. The respondent has taken the preliminary objection that this Court has no power to grant a certificate in this case. The respondent applied to the Commissioner of Income-tax to state a case on a question arising under s. 25 (3), Income Tax Act. The Commissioner relying on the decision of this Court in Venkatachalam Chettiar v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras (1) refused to state a case on the ground that the order was not prejudicial within the meaning of s. 66 (2) read with s. 33. In Venkatachalam Chettiar v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras (1) an application was filed in the office of the Income-tax Officer for a refund of income-tax under the provisions of s. 48 of the Act. The application was rejected and the Commissioner refused to interfere by an order under s. 33. The applicant then applied to this Court under s. 66 (3). As the order of the Commissioner was not one enhancing the assessment and as it was considered that it was not "prejudicial" to the petitioner, the Court held that the application by him to the Commissioner under s. 66 (2) was incompetent. As some doubt was felt as to the correctness of this decision when the case out of which the present application arises came before the Court, a reference was made to a Full Bench of five Judges and the answer given to the reference was that an order refusing to interfere with a prejudicial order was itself prejudicial. Consequently, it was held that Venkatachalam Chettiar v. Commissioner of (1) 58 M 367; 156 Ind. Cas. 64; 68 M L J 227; 41 L W 329; A I R 1935 Mad. 379; (1935) M W N 576; 7 R M 624 (F B).

Income tax, Madras (1) had been wrongly decided. On receipt of the answer given by the Full Bench to the question referred, the Bench dealing with the petition directed the Commissioner of Income-tax to state a case on the point of law involved. The Commissioner of Income-tax desires to challenge the correctness of the decision of the Full Bench in an appeal to His Majesty in Council.

Section 66-A (2) provides that an appeal shall lie to His Majesty in Council from any judgment of the High Court delivered on a reference made under s. 66 in a case which the High Court certifies to be a fit one for appeal. Mr. Patanjali Sastri, on behalf of the Commissioner of Income-tax, concedes that the Court has no jurisdiction to grant a certificate under s. 66-A (2), but says that it has power to do so under cl. 40, Letters Patent. Clause 40 has to be read in conjunction with cl. 39. Clause 39 gives a right of appeal to the Privy Council in a matter not being of criminal jurisdiction, from a final judgment, decree or order made on appeal and from a final judgment, decree or order made in the exercise of original jurisdiction by Judges of the High Court or of a Division Court from which an appeal does not lie to the High Court under cl. 15, Letters Patent. Then follows a proviso to the same effect as the provisions of ss. 109 and 110, Civil P. O. Clause 40 provides that the Court, at its discretion may grant leave to appeal from a preliminary or interlocutory judgment, decree, or order, in a proceeding contemplated by cl. 39, subject to the same rules, regulations and limitations which apply to appeals from final judgments, decrees or orders.

In Tata Iron and Steel Co., Ltd. v. Chief Revenue Authority of Bombay (2) the Judicial Committee held that an appeal did not lie under cl. 39, Letters Patent of the Bombay High Court (which corresponds to cl. 39, Letters Patent of this Court) from a decision of the High Court upon a case stated and referred to the Court by the Income Tax Act, 1918, since the decision was merely advisory and therefore was not a final judgment, decree, or order within the meaning of the clause. In that case it was not argued that the decision was an interlocutory judgment, order or decree within the meaning of cl. 40, but the argument is advanced here. It is said that the judgment of this Court in the Full Bench reference constitutes an interlocutory judgment within the meaning of that clause and that the order directing the Commissioner of Income-tax to state a case based on the judgment of the Full Bench is also within the clause. In my opinion, these contentions cannot be maintained. If there is no appeal from a final order in an income-tax matter, apart, of course, from the appeal now given under s. 66-A (2), it is difficult to understand how there can be an appeal from an interlocutory order in such a matter. I regard the direction which was given to the Commissioner of Income-tax to state a case as being an interlocutory order in a matter in which the Court was required to act in an advisory capacity and the reference to the Full Bench formed part of the interlocutory proceedings. The Tata case (2) is final on the question whether there is an appeal when the Court is acting merely in an advisory capacity under the Income Tax Act, and it covers the present case.

The opinion which I have expressed receives support from the decisions in E. M. Chettiar Firm v. Commissioner of Income-tax (3) and Delhi Cloth and General Mills Co. v. Income-tax Commissioner, Delhi (4) and Mr. Patanjali Sastri admits that this Court has followed the decision in E. M. Chettiar Firm v. Commissioner of Income-tax (3) in an unreported case. There is a decision of the Lahore High Court Feroze Shah v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab (5) which conflicts with the decisions I have just mentioned, but it is not necessary to discuss it because we are bound by the decision of this Court. For these reasons I would hold that the objection taken by the respondent is well founded and that as the case now stands this Court has no jurisdiction to grant a certificate. The respondent is entitled to the usual costs, Rs. 100.

Gentle, J.—I agree and wish to add a few words. It is conceded that under s. 66-A (2), Income Tax Act, there is no authority for this Court to grant a certificate in this matter permitting an appeal to His Majesty in Council and the application is really

"As aforesaid," it is conceded by Mr. Patanjali Sastri, refers to the proceedings contemplated by cl. 39, Letters Patent. In my opinion this matter is not a final judgment, decree or order within the contemplation of cl. 39. Since it has been held by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in Tata Iron and Steel Co., Ltd. v. Chief Revenue Authority of Bombay (2) that there is no appeal under cl. 39, Letters Patent, from a decision of the High Court in an income-tax matter it must follow that there can be no appeal and no authority for this Court to grant a certificate permitting an appeal to His Majesty in Council under the provisions of cl. 40, Letters Patent. For these reasons I agree with the views expressed by my Lord, the Chief Justice that this application should be dismissed.

Somayya, J.—I agree.

Second Civil Appeal No. 221 of 1936

DEFENDANTS—APPELLANTS

HAMID ALI—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 24—Distinction between lack of inherent jurisdiction and lack of any other kind of jurisdiction, if can be made—Suits Valuation Act (VII of 1887), s. 11—Objection to jurisdiction not raised in lower Courts—Cannot be raised in second appeal—Fact that appeal had to be brought in Subordinate Court instead of in High Court, whether prejudicially affects its disposal—Wajib-ul-arz—If binds riyayas not parties to it—U. P. Municipalities Act (11 of 1916), s. 337—Declaration that certain locality is notified area—Proprietors, if divested of their proprietary rights—Landlord and tenant—Abandonment—Land given for residential purpose to riyaya—Its dedication to idol and allowing Thakardwara to be built on it amounts to abandonment—S. 62 (f), Easements Act (V of 1882), also applies to such case—Estoppel—Acquiescence—Act of building not bona fide—Plea, if available.

So far as s. 24, Civil P. C. is concerned, there is no reason to make a distinction between lack of inherent jurisdiction and lack of any other kind of jurisdiction in a Court trying a suit. [p. 472, col. 1] [Case-law referred to.]

Where objection to jurisdiction is not raised either in the trial Court or in the Appellate Court, it cannot be allowed to be raised in second appeal.

The mere fact that an appeal had to be brought in a Subordinate Court instead of the High Court cannot be held to have prejudicially affected the disposal of the appeal on the merits. [p. 473, col. 1.] [Case-law relied on.]

The fact that the riyayas in the abadi were not parties to the wajib-ul-arz is no ground for rejecting the wajib-ul-arz. It is binding on the riyayas. 181 Ind. Cas. 70 (17), relied on.

There is absolutely no authority for the contention that the declaration that a certain locality is a notified area divests the proprietors of the land of their proprietary rights Section 337 of the U. P. Municipalities Act is not at all an authority for this proposition. [p. 474, col. 2.]

Where a land is given to a riyaya for residential purpose, the execution of a deed of waqf in respect of the land in favour of a deity, by the riyaya and his allowing others to build a Thakurdwara on it amounts to an abandonment and the landlord has a right of re-entry. The case also clearly falls under s. 62 (f) of the Easements Act which lays down that a license is deemed to be revoked where the licence is granted for a specific purpose and the purpose is attained or abandoned or becomes impracticable. [p. 475, col. 1.]

Where an act of a person of building upon the land is not bona fide, he cannot avail himself of the plea of estoppel by acquiescence.

S. O. A. against the decree of the District Judge, Lucknow, dated January 18, 1936.

Messrs. S. C. Das, S. N. Srivastava and R. B. Lal, for the Appellants.

Messrs. H. Husain and Nazir-ud-din, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—This is a second appeal against a decree of the learned District Judge of Lucknow who concurred with the learned Civil Judge in decreeing the plaintiff-respondent's suit for possession of a piece of abadi land in village Pihani, District Hardoi.

The case has a long history. The suit was originally filed by the plaintiff on December 12, 1927, in the Court of the Munsif, Shahabad against Babu Kanhaiya Lal and Babu Debi Dayal, defendants Nos. 1 and 2 only. He claimed to be the sole proprietor of the land in dispute as zemindar of village Pihani Khurd and alleged that the plot was originally occupied by the thatched house of Icha Kori who lived as a riyaya of the plaintiff's ancestors and died about forty years before the suit. The following pedigree of Icha was set up.

It was stated that after Icha's death, his sons Ghirrao and Auseri continued to live in the thatched house in the same capacity as their father, Auseri was succeeded by Ram Din, Ganesh and Kalwa, that some twenty years before the suit Ganesh-Kalwa died issueless and ten years later Ram Din gave up his residence in the house and had not been heard of since. On Ghirrao dying issueless in 1920 the house became dilapidated and according to the custom of the village reverted with the site to the zemindar who took possession of it. It was further stated that the plaintiff's grandfather Mir Mohsin Ali, the sole zemindar of the land died in 1923 leaving the plaintiff's father Mohammad Abbas as his only heir but Mohammad Abbas also died a few months later leaving the plaintiff aged six years as his heir. The plaintiff's property was looked after by his grandmother, Mst. Zakiya Begam, widow of Mohsin Ali, who was an old pardanashin lady. In September 1927, she came to know that the defendants were constructing a pucca house on the land in suit and though she tried through her servants to dissuade them, the defendants paid no heed to their remonstrance. It was stated in the plaint that the defendants claimed to have obtained some sort of deed in respect of the land from the rayats of the house but that it was void and ineffectual as against the plaintiff zemindar. It was stated that the house and the site came into the possession of Mir Mohsin Ali according to the custom of the village on the house being abandoned. On these allegations the following reliefs were claimed by the plaintiff—

- (a) that a decree for actual proprietary possession over the land—compound No. 1453 and House No. 834 (recent settlement)/1214 (old settlement) be passed in favour of the plaintiff,
- (b) that defendants be directed to remove the materials of the building from the plot of land within the time to be fixed by the Court, and in case of their failing to do so, possession may be awarded along with the materials,
- (c) A perpetual injunction be issued to the defendants so that they may refrain from raising any construction on the land in dispute.

The suit was contested by the defendants who denied that the plaintiff was the sole proprietor of Mohalla Murid Khani in which the land in suit was situated.

They admitted that Icha was a riyaya of the zemindar but alleged that Ram Din's son was still alive and that Ghirrao died only two years before suit. They set up a possessory mortgage in favour of defendant No. 1 by Ghirrao and Ram Din and stated that they were in possession as such mortgagees. They further stated that in 1924 they started the present building for installing Thakurji in it and had actually installed the idol there. They also denied the custom set up by the plaintiff and further pleaded that if such a custom did exist, it was unenforceable as Pibani was a big town.

This was the gist of the defence set up by the defendants. In oral pleadings, however, on behalf of the plaintiff it was denied that any descendant of Icha was living and it was pleaded that the plaintiff had got the right of re-entry by reason of the licence granted to Icha having determined. It was further said that in any case the house was abandoned and gave the right of re-entry to the plaintiff. On behalf of the defendants it was stated that Ram Din's son Bihari was living and as the defendants denied that the plaintiff was the sole proprietor of the Mohalla a question arose as to whether the female members of Mir Mohsin Ali's family were excluded from inheritance by a custom which was set up by the plaintiff.

The following issues were framed in the case by the learned Munsif—

1. Is the plaintiff exclusive owner of the land in dispute? If not, what is its effect?
2. Is there any tribal or family custom obtaining in the Shia community or the plaintiff's family according to which the daughters and the widows are excluded from inheritance?
3. Does the land of the building in dispute escheat to the plaintiff as alleged?
4. Were the rights of Ghirrao, Ram Din and his brothers in the house over the land in dispute non-transferable, according to the custom set up by the plaintiff? If not, what is its effect?
5. Is the suit within limitation?
6. Is the suit barred by acquiescence as alleged by the defendants?
7. Is the plaintiff's suit for re-entry not maintainable as alleged?
8. To what relief is the plaintiff entitled?
9. Did Behari execute any deed of waqf in favour of Sri Thakurji on Janu. ary 13, 1928, as alleged? If so, what is its effect?

10. Had the defendants no right to construct the Thakurdwara in place of a residential house without the plaintiff's permission?

The last two issues require some explanation. It appears that a few days before the issues were settled in the case. Behari, the alleged son of Ram Din, executed a deed of waqf in favour of Sri Thakurji, and appointed one Shiam Sundar as trustee. This deed was registered on January 13, 1928, and the issues were framed on January 24, 1928. On April 10 the plaintiff applied that Sri Thakurji be added as a party to the suit but this application was disallowed on April 11. On the same day the plaintiff applied for some additional pleas, based on the execution of the deed of waqf by Behari and on the question of the construction of the Thakurdwara, being allowed to be added. This application was granted and it was in consequence of this that Issues Nos. 9 and 10 were added.

In the course of the trial the defendants were allowed to produce evidence on some points which had never been raised before by them, namely, that the building in question was not a Thakurdwara but only a residential house, that the land in suit stood in Mohalla Katra Bazar and not in Murid Khani and that Ram Din left besides Behari, another son named Kali.

The findings of the learned Munsif were that the custom of the exclusion of daughters and widows from inheritance in Mohsin Ali's family was not established, that the plaintiff was not the sole owner of the land in suit, that Behari and Kali were sons of Ram Din, that the plaintiff had no right of re-entry, that Pihani being a town, Ghirrao and Ram Din had transferable rights and therefore the mortgage in favour of the defendant No. 1 was valid, that the defendants had a right to remain in possession of the house so long as the mortgage subsisted, that the waqf was inoperative as Kali was not a party to it and as it was not proved that the donee accepted the gift. He also held that the suit was barred not only by acquiescence on the part of the plaintiff but also on the ground that rayats could transfer their houses in Pihani and the transferees could construct buildings on the land without the permission of the zemindar. As a result of these findings, the suit was dismissed.

Against this decree the plaintiff appealed and the learned District Judge reversed the findings of the trial Court and decreed the plaintiff's suit. His findings were that Kali was not the son of Ram Din, that the plaintiff could eject the defendants even as one of the co-sharers of the land, that the defendants had no right to remain in occupation of the land as mortgagees, Behari, the only son of Ram Din having given up his interest in the land to Sri Thakurji by means of the waqf and that by the execution of the deed of waqf Behari abandoned the land and the plaintiff became entitled to re-entry. He also held that the construction of a religious building in place of a residential dwelling also entitled the landlord to re-entry upon the land.

The defendants filed a second appeal in this Court and a Bench of this Court remanded the case to the District Judge for findings on questions of acquiescence and the custom of transferability prevailing in Pihani. On findings on these issues being submitted by the lower Court, the defendants' appeal was dismissed and it was held that the deed of waqf amounted to abandonment by Behari and gave a right of re-entry to the plaintiff. The defendants went upto the Privy Council and their Lordships set aside the decisions of the Courts in India on a preliminary question and remanded the case for re-trial. The material portion of their Lordships' order is as follows:—

"(3) That the case ought to be remitted to the said Chief Court for that Court to give directions for a new trial to be held with reference to the effect of the waqf dated January 11, 1928, made in favour of Sri Thakurji Maharaj in which new trial the said Thakurji Maharaj or his representative or other appropriate parties ought to be added.

(3) That the costs which have already been incurred in the Courts below ought to be left to the discretion of the said Chief Court to deal with after the new trial has been concluded whether or not there be an appeal after such trial to the said Chief Court."

In compliance with this order the case was sent by this Court for re-trial to the late Mr. Abdul Azim Siddiqi, a Civil Judge. The learned Civil Judge impleaded Thakurji Maharaj as a party to the case. Kali and Behari also applied to be made parties. The learned Civil Judge allowed Kali to be made a party but rejected the application of Behari. The newly added defendants, namely, Sri Thakurji and Kali filed written statements and defendants Nos. 1 and 2 were also allowed to put in further written statements in view of the amendments made to the plaint. On November 7, 1933, Sri Takurji, defendant, filed a written statement supporting the case of defendants Nos. 1 and 2 in every particular. It was admitted that the defendant No. 3 was in possession of the building since 1924, that Behari executed a deed of waqf in favour of the idol in 1928, and that the building belonged to the idol and the plaintiff had no cause of action. On November 28, 1933, however, statements of parties' Counsel were taken and the Counsel for defendant No. 3 stated as follows:—

"I disclaim all proprietary title in the land in suit or in the building either under the waqf or by virtue of dedication. Kanhaiya Lal, defendant No. 1 and defendant No. 2 have, however, installed the idol in the building which is not a public temple and so long as Kanhaiya Lal and defendant No. 2 are there, the idol will remain there. The position of Sri Takurji is that of a permissive occupant or a licensee on behalf of Kanhaiya Lal, defendant No. 1 and defendant No. 2. Defendant No. 3 claims no more title than that."

Counsel for defendants Nos. 1 and 2 also made a statement which was in some respects at variance with the said defendants' case as put in the written statement. He stated:—

"The building is not a public temple. It is a residential house. No part of it is a public temple. In a portion of the building the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 have placed their family idols for their private worship. There has been no dedication of any portion of the building. The position is the same as in all Hindu houses. People place their family gods in a room for private worship. I claim no sanctity for any portion of the building. The entire building including the portion where the family gods are placed is a common residential house. My clients claim no more rights in the building than of a mortgagee in possession. On redemption the house will be made over to the redeemer as it stands."

Kali, defendant No. 4, denied the title of the plaintiff and alleged that Icha and his descendants were proprietors of the land as well as the house. He stated that he was the posthumous son of Ram Din born of Mst. Itwara and he denied the deed of waqf which he said did not affect his rights in the house at all. He also pleaded the bar of acquiescence and limitation.

The learned Civil Judge framed the following issues after taking into consideration all the pleas raised by the parties.—

1. Has this Court got no jurisdiction to try this case?

2. What is the valuation of this suit for the purposes of jurisdiction?

3 (a) Is the plaintiff a sole owner or part owner of the plot in suit and entitled to maintain this suit?

(b) Were Icha and his successors full owners of the land in suit as alleged? If not, what was their status?

4. Are Behari and Kali, the legitimate sons of Ram Din?

5 (a) Did the descendants of Ram Din abandon Pihani in or about 1916?

(b) If so, did the plaintiff take possession over the ruined house of Icha in or about 1922, as alleged? If so, its effect?

(c) If not, is the plaintiff entitled to re-entry under the right of escheat as alleged?

6. Whether ryots in Pihani have got transferable or non-transferable rights in their houses in Pihani?

7 (a) Is the building in suit a residential house of the defendants Nos. 1 and 2?

(b) Or is it a public or private temple? If so, its effect?

8 (a) Did Behari execute the deed of waqf on January 11, 1928, as alleged?

(b) What is the effect of the execution of the aforesaid deed of waqf?

9. Is the plaint not properly signed? If so, its effect?

10. Is the plaintiff estopped by virtue of the acquiescence pleaded by the defendants?

11. Is the claim barred by time as alleged?

12. To what relief is the plaintiff entitled and against which of the defendants?

Issues Nos. 1 and 2 were tried first. On the first issue the learned Civil Judge held that he had jurisdiction to try the suit and on the second he overruled, the plea of the defence that as a building of the value of Rs. 40,000 was indirectly effected in the suit, the valuation should be Rs. 40,000, and held that the valuation put on the plaint was proper. On Issue No. 3 the learned Civil Judge held that the plaintiff was the sole owner of the plot in suit and could maintain the suit and that Icha and his successors were not owners of the land but were only ryots or licensees. On Issue No. 4 his finding was that Behari is the son of Ram Din but that Kali is not. Issue No. 5 (a) and (b) was decided against the plaintiff and it was held that neither did the descendants of Icha abandon Pihani in or about 1916 nor did the plaintiff's predecessor take possession as alleged. Issue No. 5 (c) was also decided against the plaintiff. On issue No. 6 it was held that Icha and his descendant had non-transferable rights in the house in suit. On Issue No. 7 (a) the learned Judge held that the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 had utterly failed to prove that the building in suit is their private residential house and on Issue No. 7 (b) it was held that for the purposes of the case it was immaterial whether the building was a public or private temple and that the purpose of the license terminated when the temple, either a public or private one, was erected. On Issue No. 8 it was held that the execution of the deed of waqf by Behari was proved and that the waqf amounted to abandonment of the license as well as of the purpose of the license. Issue No. 9 was decided against the defendants and on Issue No. 10 it was held that the plaintiff was not estopped by acquiescence. The question of limitation was also decided in favour of the plaintiff and the suit was ultimately decreed with costs.

Against this decree the defendants appealed to the District Judge and the learned Judge after considering all the points raised before him in an elaborate judgment, dismissed the appeal.

The present appeal was filed in this Court jointly on behalf of all the four defendants but it has been argued separately before us on behalf of defendants Nos. 1 and 2 on the one hand and defendant No. 4 on the other. We shall first take up the points raised on behalf of the defendants Nos. 1 and 2.

The point that was most stressed on behalf of defendants Nos. 1 and 2 was that the trial Courts had no jurisdiction to try the suit. The plea is based on relief (b) of the plaint as originally filed which ran as follows:—

"That the defendants be directed to remove the materials of the building from the plot of land within the time fixed by the Court, otherwise possession thereof as well be granted to the plaintiff."

The argument is that as it is admitted that the building standing on the land in suit is of the value of about Rs. 40,000, the suit was much beyond the pecuniary jurisdiction of the Munsif in whose Court it was filed and further that as the suit was filed in a Court which had no jurisdiction to try it, it could not be validly transferred to the Court of the Civil Judge who tried it subsequently. The learned Counsel for the appellants relies on the following cases—

(1) Amir Chand v. Buti Shah (A. I. R. 1930 Lahore, 195) (1). (2) C. Singara Mudaliar v. M. Govindaswami Chetty (A. I. R. 1928 Madras, 400) (2) (3) Bhupendra Kumar Chakravarti v. Purna Chandra Bose (24 Ind. Cas. 232) (3) (4) Ledgard v. Bull (L. R. 13 I. A. 134) (4).

(1) A I R 1930 Lah. 195; 125 Ind. Cas. 334; 31 P. L. R. 309; Ind. Rul. (1930) Lah. 606.

(2) A I R 1928 Mad. 400; 108 Ind. Cas. 413; 54 M. L. J. 145; I. L. T. 40 Mad. 41; 27 L. W. 609.

(4) 13 I. A. 134; 9 A. 191; 4 Sar. 741; 10 Ind. Jur. 71 (P. O.).

In (1) it was held that s. 24 Civil P. C. only contemplates a transfer of a suit from one competent Court to another and that where the original Court finds that it has no jurisdiction to hear a suit, the District Judge has no jurisdiction to transfer the suit to some other Court. In the second case also it was held that a transfer cannot be made from one Court to another unless the suit has in the first instance been brought in a Court having jurisdiction and that such order, if made, is void. Similarly in (3) the Calcutta High Court held that the institution of a proceeding in a Court which has no jurisdiction to entertain it is not a valid institution of a proceeding which may thereafter be continued on transfer in a Court of competent jurisdiction. In (4) their Lordships of the Judicial Committee also held that under s. 25 Civil P. C. (corresponding to present s. 21) the superior Court cannot make an order of transfer of a case unless the Court from which transfer is sought to be made has jurisdiction to try it. On the strength of these cases it is argued that all proceedings held in the suit are null and void because the suit was originally instituted in a Court which had no jurisdiction and reliance is also placed on the case of Rajlakshmi Dasee v. Katyayani Dasee (I. L. R. 38 Cal., 639) (5) in which in a suit which was intentionally under-valued it was held that if a Court has no jurisdiction over the subject-matter of the litigation, its judgment and orders are mere nullities and not only voidable.

The learned Counsel for the the plaintiff-repondent replies that the principle relied on on behalf of the appellants is applicable only to those cases in which there is lack of inherent jurisdiction in the Court and not to those in which there is merely a lack of pecuniary or territorial jurisdiction. He relies on the cases of Ram Narain v. Suraj Narain (1934 O. W. N., 169) (6) and Sheo Behari Lal v. Makrand Singh (1935 O. W. N., 651) (7). In these cases no doubt a distinction was made between lack of inherent jurisdiction and lack of pecuniary or territorial jurisdiction; but this distinction was made only as regards the power of the Court executing a decree to disregard the decree. The question in both the cases was whether a Court while executing a decree can go behind the decree and it was held that it cannot unless the decree is passed by a Court which had no inherent jurisdiction to pass it. Moreover, in Amir Chand v Buti Shah (A. I R. 1930 Lahore, (1) there was want of pecuniary jurisdiction only and yet it was held that the order of transfer was bad.

(5) 38 O. 639; 12 Ind. Cas. 454.

(6) 1934 O. W. N. 169; 147 Ind. Cas. 1209; A I R 1934 Oudh 75; 6 R. O. 368 (F. B.).

We are therefore of opinion that so far as s. 24 Civil P. O. is concerned, there is no reason to make a distinction between lack of inherent jurisdiction and lack of any other kind of jurisdiction in a Court trying a suit. We, however, consider that the plea of want of jurisdiction in the trial Courts in this case cannot be accepted for more reasons than one.

In the first place, so far as Sri Thakurji, defendant No. 3 is concerned, he disclaimed all connection with the land in suit. The Counsel for defendant No. 3 made the following statement before the learned Civil Judge.

"I disclaim all proprietary title in the land in suit or in the building either under the wagf or by virtue of dedication. Kanhaiya Lal defendant No. 1 and defendant No. 2, however, have installed the idol in the building which is not a public temple, and so long as Kanhaiya Lal and defendant No. 2 are there, the idol will remain there. The position of Sri Thakurji is that of a permissive occupant or a licensee on behalf of Kanhaiya Lal defendant No. 1 and defendant No. 2. Defendant No. 3 claims no more title than that."

In para. 24 of his written statement also defendant No. 3 denied and repudiated the wagf alleged to have been made by Behari. Nor have any arguments been addressed to us on his behalf though he has been joined with the other appellants in the appeal. So far as Kali defendant No. 4 is concerned, he has been found by both the Courts below to have no connection with Icha's family. Defendants Nos. 3 and 4 have therefore no locus standi to put up the plea of want of jurisdiction in this appeal. As for defendants Nos. 1 and 2, they, too, cannot in our opinion be allowed to raise the plea of jurisdiction as they never raised it before either of the two trial Courts. Not only this but in para. 14 of their written statement they clearly said.—

"In para. 14 of the plaint the jurisdiction and court-fee are not disputed;" and in para. 14 of the plaint it was said that the valuation of the suit for purpose of jurisdiction is Rs. 110 that is, the valuation of land is Rs. 100 and the valuation of the injunction sought Rs. 10. Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 not only did not raise any plea of jurisdiction in the trial Court but the judgment of the District Judge in appeal dated April 29, 1929, shows that no such plea was raised by them in arguments in the appeal against the Munsif's decree. In fact, no plea of jurisdiction was taken by them in any Court including the Privy Council. According to s. 11 of the Suits Valuation Act an objection that by reason of over-valuation or under-valuation of a suit or appeal a Court of first instance or lower Appellate Court which had not jurisdiction with respect to the suit or appeal exercised jurisdiction with respect thereto shall not be entertained by an Appellate Court unless (a) the objection was taken in the Court of first instance at or before the hearing at which issues were first framed and recorded or in the lower Appellate Court in the memorandum of appeal to that Court, or (b) the Appellate Court is satisfied for reasons to be recorded by it in writing that the suit or appeal was over-valued or under-valued and that the over-valuation or under-valuation thereof has prejudicially affected the disposal of the suit or appeal on its merits. Now, it is clear that the requirements of cl. (a) above were not fulfilled in this case as the objection was never raised in the Court of first instance and it only remains to be seen whether the conditions requisite to make cl. (b) applicable are present, namely, whether the suit was under-valued and whether that under-valuation had prejudicially affected the disposal of the suit on its merits. On the first point we are clearly of opinion that the suit was not under-valued as the main relief sought was possession of land which was of the value of Rs. 100. The plaintiff could not have laid claim to the building constructed on the land by defendants Nos. 1 and 2 and it was only by way of precaution that in relief (b) it was prayed that if the defendants fail to remove the materials, possession of the land be awarded to the plaintiff along with those materials. The very fact that no plea of under-valuation of the claim was put forward by the defendants, but on the contrary they admitted the valuation put by the plaintiffs on the suit, shows that the defendants themselves were cognizant of the fact that the real relief sought by the plaintiff was possession of the land and not of the building. This being so, it is impossible to hold that there was under valuation in this case. Thus one of the two ingredients of cl. (b) is absent and it is not necessary to see whether or not the defendants have been prejudicially affected by the disposal of the suit on its merits; but as the learned Counsel for the appellants has argued this point also, we may briefly express our opinion on it. Reliance is placed on Sheoraj Singh v. Phulbasu Kuar (A. I. R. 1925 Oudh, 561) (8) in which a Bench of the learned Judicial Commissioners held that the disposal of a suit on its merits is prejudicially affected within s. 11 of the Suits Valuation Act when that disposal is made by a District Judge while it ought to have been made by a Bench of two Judges of the Court of highest jurisdiction in a province. The learned Counsel for the respondent on the other hand relies on Narsimham v. Subramaniam (A. I. R. 1927 Mad. 201) (9) in which following the Full Bench decision of Kelu Achan v. Pravathi Nethiyar (I. L. R. 46 Mad., 631) (10) it was held that the mere fact that a party was deprived of the right of appeal on facts before the High Court cannot be held to prejudicially affect the disposal of the appeal on its merits within the terms of s. 11 of the Suits Valuation Act. We have considered these three decisions and agree with the view taken by the Madras High Court which appears to us in view of the expression "on the merits" to be more in consonance with the spirit of cl. (b) of s. 11 (1). We may note that almost all the other High Courts in India agree with the Madras High Court in holding that the mere fact that an appeal had to be brought in a Subordinate Court instead of the High Court cannot be held to have prejudicially affected the disposal of the appeal on the merits, [vide Moolchand Motilal v. Ram Krishan (I. L. R. 55 All., 315 F. B. (11), Musa Imran v. Bhagwan Das (A. I. R. 1927 All., 359), (12) Allah Baksh v. Sheoji Maharaj (A. I. R. 1939 Lahore, 451), (13), Raghunath Charan Singh v. Shamo Koeri (I. L. R. 31 Cal. 314 (14) and Nana v. Mulchand 21 Ind. Cas., 918 Nagpur) (15) It is thus clear that it does not lie in the mouth of defendants Nos. 1 and 2 to raise the plea of jurisdiction.

Another reason why the plea raised on behalf of the appellant cannot be accepted is that the order sending the suit for trial to Mr. Abdul Azim Siddiqi was not in our opinion made under s. 24 Civil P. O. Under s. 24 (1) (b) a suit or appeal pending in any Court subordinate to the High Court or District Court may be withdrawn and transferred for trial or disposal to any other subordinate Court competent to try or dispose of the same, but in the present case, the suit when sent to Mr. Siddiqi was not "pending" in the Court of the Munsif, Shahabad. Therefore the provisions of s. 24 did not strictly apply to the transfer. The case was entrusted to Mr. Siddiqi in compliance with the order of the Privy Council and it is well-known that their Lordships of the Privy Council are not bound by the provisions of the Civil P. O. Mr. Siddiqi therefore had perfect jurisdiction to try the suit even though if it be supposed for a moment that the Munsif of Shahabad had not.

Lastly, it may be noted that the defect of under-valuation of the suit, if any, was removed by the amendment of the plaint by which the prayer for possession of the materials was deleted from relief (b). The amendment was applied for on October 16, 1933, and was allowed on October 30, 1933. We therefore overrule the plea of the appellants that the trial Courts had no jurisdiction to try the suit.

The next question argued before us was whether or not the plaintiff-respondent was the sole proprietor of the land in suit so as to have the right to bring the suit. It was argued that as the land originally belonged to the plaintiff's grandfather Mohsin Ali, the plaintiff's mother, father's brother and father's mother were in any case entitled to a share in the land along with the plaintiff. The plaintiff's case, however, was that according to the custom of his family, females were excluded from inheritance. This plea was accepted by the trial Court which held that the custom of exclusion of females was proved and this finding was confirmed by the lower Appellate Court. The finding that the plaintiff is the sole proprietor of the land in question is a finding of fact and is binding on this Court. Further, while the present appeal is incompetent on behalf of defendants Nos. 3 and 4, defendant No. 3 having disclaimed all concern with the subject-matter of the suit in the trial Court and defendant No. 4 having been held to be a bogus person, defendants Nos. 1 and 2 cannot be allowed to go back on their pleadings in the Courts below and question the lower Court's findings on the point of plaintiff's ownership of the land. The learned Munsif of Shahabad says in his judgment:—

"It is common ground that the plaintiff's suit cannot be dismissed on the ground that he is not the sole owner of the plot in suit, if the defendants are proved to be trespassers and have no right to remain in possession."

When the case went in appeal to the District Judge, the same position was taken up by Counsel for defendants Nos. 1 and 2. The learned District Judge in his judgment remarked as follows :

"The learned Counsel for the defendants-respondents has admitted that the decision of the question against the plaintiff would not operate to disentitle him to a decree if the findings on other questions in the case are in his favour... I do not propose to enter into a discussion of the question in view of the admission of the defendants' learned Counsel and my own opinion that the plaintiff being admitted to be one of the owners, is entitled to maintain the suit."

These findings were not challenged by the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 in their appeal to this Court. They cannot now be heard to say that the plaintiff has no right to bring the suit.

It was further contended that even if the plaintiff be held to be entitled to maintain the suit, he was not entitled to a decree for possession as Pihani being a town the terms of the wajib-ul-arz relied on by the plaintiff did not apply to it. This plea was raised on behalf of the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 before this Court in the previous appeal also but it was decided against them (vide Kanhaiya Lal v. Hamid Ali, 7 O. W. N. 271) (16). At p. 280 it was remarked :

"Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru who represented the defendants-appellants before us, has argued that the wajib-ul-arz has no effect because Pihani is a town. We find against this view. A wajib-ul-arz is as effective in a town as it is in a village. This particular wajib-ul-arz is not, according to our view so much a record of custom as a proof of the conditions governing the grant of residential sites in Pihani, and as such, is effective to establish that Icha had no right of transfer in the land and that when the land was vacated, the family had not even the right to sell the thatch of which, on the finding of fact, their house was composed."

Further on the learned Judges say :

"The wajib-ul-arz lays down the conditions on which these sites were granted. The fact that the grantors in the past permitted infringements of the grants would in no way affect the validity of the conditions. Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru did not lay great stress on the evidence as to custom. His case was rather that as Pihani is a town, it was for the plaintiff-respondent to prove the custom of non-transferability. We find that it was for the plaintiff-respondent to prove that under the conditions under which Icha received the land, he had no power of transfer, but as we have already stated, we find that the plaintiff-respondent has succeeded in proving that Icha and his successors had no power of transfer."

Even if the wajib-ul-arz be regarded as a record of custom in the present case, it shows that Icha and his descendants whose house has been found by the lower Courts to have been Khasposh had no power to transfer the house.

It was also contended that the wajib-ul-arz does not bind the riyayas who were no parties to it but that to our minds is no ground for rejecting the wajib-ul-arz. In Ram Din v. Balbhadar Singh (1939 O. W. N. 372) (17) it was held that where the wajib-ul-arz of a village records a custom not allowing grove-holders to transfer their groves, the fact that there is no evidence that the terms of the wajib-ul-arz were agreed to by the grove-holders of the village or that they were since acted upon, is not a valid ground in law to reject the evidence afforded by the wajib-ul-arz, and there is in our view no distinction in principle between the rights of grove-holders and of riyayas in the abadi.

Reliance was further placed on s. 337 of the United Provinces Municipalities Act. It was argued that as by a notification published in the Gazette of July 14, 1917, Pihani was declared a notified area the zamindars of the village ceased to be proprietors of the abadi lands. We cannot accept this argument for a moment. There is absolutely no authority for the contention that the declaration that a certain locality is a notified area divests the proprietors of the land of their proprietary rights. Section 337 of the Municipalities Act is not at all an authority for this proposition and only shows that a notification under that section is intended to make administrative provision for matters described in ss. 7 and 8 of the Act, namely, matters relating to public health and convenience. It further provides that the decision of the Local Govt. that a notified area is not an agricultural village shall be final and conclusive. It is because of an area being notified under s. 337 that permission of the Notified Area Committee become necessary to make any constructions within that area and the argument of the learned Counsel for the appellants that because they obtained the permission of the Notified Area Committee for building the construction in question, the plaintiff has no right to get it demolished, is rebutted by s. 184 of the Municipalities Act which lays down that a sanction given shall not be beyond exempting the person to whom the sanction is given from any penalty or consequence to which he would otherwise be liable under the Municipalities Act.

"confer or extinguish any right or disability or operate as an estoppel or admission or affect any title to property or have any other legal effect whatsoever."

There is thus no force in our opinion in the argument that because Pihani has been declared to be a notified area, the plaintiff has lost his rights in the land in suit.

We now take up the plea that the plaintiff is not entitled to possession of the land as Behari, a descendant of Icha, is alive. We see no force in this argument also and agree with the Courts below that the land must be deemed to have been abandoned by Behari not only when he executed the deed of waqf in favour of defendant No. 3 but also by his allowing defendants Nos. 1 and 2 to build a Thakurdwara on the land. It is because defendants Nos. 1 and 2 discovered that it was a mistake to have caused Behari to execute the waqf deed as it would amount to abandonment of the land that they later on persuaded defendant No. 3 or his manager to disclaim every connection with the land in suit and attempts were made before us to show by various arguments that the deed of waqf executed by Behari was invalid. The fact, however, remains that by the execution of that deed Behari severed whatever connection he had left with the land in suit. The case also clearly falls under s. 62 (f) of the Easements Act which lays down that a license is deemed to be revoked where the licence is granted for a specific purpose and the purpose is attained or abandoned or becomes impracticable. By allowing defendants Nos. 1 and 2 to build a Thakurdwara on land, Behari has abandoned the residential purpose for which the land was given to his ancestors. The fact therefore that Behari is living does not affect the plaintiff's right of re-entry with regard to the land in suit.

Lastly, it was argued that as the plaintiff raised no objection while the building was under construction from 1924 to 1927, he is estopped by acquiescence from claiming possession now. This point also must, we consider, be decided against the appellant. We have already referred to the fact that in 1923 both the father and grandfather of the plaintiff died leaving him a child of about six years of age. He was under the guardianship of his grandmother a pardanashin lady who was out of India in 1924 when the construction of the temple began and returned only in April, 1925. The present suit was brought in 1927. In these circumstances we cannot hold that the plaintiff's claim is barred by estoppel by acquiescence. In Nandamani Ananga Bhima Deo Kesari Gajapatti v. Suseela Mala Patta Mahadevi (10 O. W. N., 59) (18) it was held by their Lordships of the Privy Council that a minor is not bound by any acquiescence on the part of his guardian and in the present case we have not been referred to anything showing even that there was acquiescence on the part of the plaintiff's grandmother. We may also point out that defendants Nos. 1 and 2 were never in doubt as to the plaintiff's proprietary rights in the land in question and could not have been in doubt as to Behari's rights also. They in fact admitted the plaintiff's proprietary right in the trial Court. In these circumstances they cannot avail themselves of the plea of estoppel by acquiescence as their own act of building upon the land was not bona fide. The plea of acquiescence was repelled by this Court in the previous appeal also (vide Kanhaiya Lal v. Hamid Ali, 7 O. W. N., 271 at 287) (16).

This finishes all the points raised on behalf of defendants Nos. 1 and 2 and we are of opinion that none of them has any force. The decrees of the lower Courts for demolition of the defendant's constructions must be upheld. We are conscious of the hardship that the decree will cause to the defendants and regret it. It was for this reason that we suggested that it would be better if the parties should come to a settlement but though the plaintiff-respondent was willing to let the defendants remain in possession of the land on certain conditions which in our opinion were not unreasonable, the appellants did not choose to accept those terms.

It only remains now to consider the plea of defendant No. 4 that in determining his status, the trial Court has wrongly relied on evidence recorded before he was made a party. This plea has not been substantiated by reference to any concrete instance of the material used by the lower Courts in coming to the conclusion that defendant No. 4 is not the son of Ram Din but an imposter and since the issue about defendant No. 4's parentage was struck only after the remand of the case by their Lordships of the Privy Council, and evidence on the point was adduced after the remand it cannot be held that the decision of the Courts below as to defendant No. 4's status rests on any evidence that was recorded before he was made a party. The learned Judge of the trial Court has only referred to the pleadings of the parties as they stood before remand of the case but his decision is based on the evidence recorded after the remand.

The appeal is, therefore, dismissed and the lower Court's decree confirmed. Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 being responsible for this litigation we order that they shall pay the plaintiff-respondent's costs from the date of the suit up to this date.

MADRAS HIGH COURT

Appeal No. 71 of 1936

November 7, 1938

LEACH, C. J. AND MADHAVAN NAIR, J.
C. N. MADURANAYAKAM PILLAI—

APPELLANT

versus

SECRETARY OF STATE—

RESPONDENT

Basement—Right of water—Irrigation—Such right acquired by raiyat — Government, if can diminish supply for economy for other purposes of greater importance

In the Madras Presidency the *raiya*t is entitled to receive the water which his lands have been accustomed to for irrigation purposes without interference by the Govt. or anyone else. The Govt. cannot be required to supply water when none is available and it has a right of conserving and distributing the water available in the interests of the particular ayacut. In years of shortage the only obligation of the Govt. is to make an equitable distribution of water. But the *raiya*t has a claim against the Govt. when it withholds from him the water which he has a right to demand taking into consideration the supply available.

[Case-law discussed.]

It is of course manifest that the needs of the city of Madras are of every great importance and in the absence of rights in others, no one could reasonably complain of the policy of the Govt. in giving this large City a preference in the supply of water, but when others have acquired rights, the law requires that they shall be respected. The Govt. is not entitled to economize water in seasons or months of shortage in order that a perennial supply may be available for the use of Madras if this economy means that the *raiya*t in the old ayacut will have their customary supply diminished.

A. from the judgment of Mr. Justice Wadsworth, in C. S. No. 371 of 1929, dated September 15, 1936.

Messrs. Srinivasaraghavan and Thyagarajan, for the Appellant.

The Govt. Solicitor, for the Respondent.

Leach, C. J.—This appeal raises a question of great public importance. The Court is called upon to decide what are the powers of the Govt. with regard to the distribution of water in two reservoirs or tanks as they are usually called in India from which the City of Madras receives its water supply. One tank is known as the Oholavaram tank, and the other as the Red Hills tank. They lie close to one another, some fifteen miles from the City of Madras. Before 1870 when the Govt. undertook a scheme to increase the storage capacity of these tanks with the primary object of supplying water to Madras, the water in the tanks was used merely for the purpose of irrigating lands in the vicinity. Near to the tanks in the river Cortelliar, but before the scheme was carried out, there was no connection between the river and the tanks and the level of the water in them depended on the rain which fell in the catchment area. The evidence, however, discloses that the water in the Red Hills tank was sufficient in a normal year for the cultivation of one crop at least in an ayacut of over 5,000 acres. The scheme provided for the damming of the Cortelliar river, the diversion of water impounded by this dam into a channel in the Oholavaram tank and the construction of another channel connecting the Oholavaram tank with the Red Hills tank. The scheme was a costly one but as it contemplated the storage of sufficient water to bring under cultivation a further area as well as supplying the old ayacut and Madras, the Govt. anticipated meeting the cost out of the increase in land revenue which would follow from an extension of the irrigated area. The scheme was completed in 1872 and an additional area was brought under cultivation as the result of the increased water supply. The Govt. has, however, always regarded the scheme as being in the first instance for the benefit of Madras, and the question which falls for decision is whether the Govt. is entitled to supply Madras with water without regard to the rights of the cultivators in the old ayacut as they existed in 1870.

The suit out of which the appeal arises was filed on the Original Side of this Court by the appellant against the Secretary of State for India in Council. The appellant is the owner of some 43.44 acres of lands in the old ayacut. The fact that the lands fell within the old ayacut was denied, but it was held that they did and this finding has not been challenged before us. The appellant asserted that he was entitled to have sufficient water each year for the cultivation of two crops on his lands and this without regard to the needs of Madras. He complained that in Faslis 1336 and 1337 (1926-27 and 1927-28) the crops on his lands were damaged as the result of the Govt. withholding from him the water to which he was entitled. He assessed the total damage at Rs. 5,523-7-6 and asked for a decree for this amount. He also asked for a declaration of his rights. In the written statement filed on behalf of the Secretary of State it was denied that the appellant had the right to be supplied with any definite quantity of water or to claim damages, on the ground that water had been withheld from him. It was said that the Govt. had an absolute right to regulate the distribution of water or to withhold it both with regard to the lands in the old ayacut and those brought under cultivation subsequent to the carrying out of the scheme. It was also said that as the primary object of the scheme was to provide a water supply for Madras, any rights which the appellant had before the scheme came into operation had been put an end to by the project, the raiyyats having taken the risk of the water supply being restricted in return for the benefit to be derived from the scheme. The respondent put the appellant to strict proof that certain of his lands were 'wet' lands pertaining to the old ayacut and denied that he was in any event entitled to water for the cultivation of a second crop. The case was tried by Wadsworth, J. who held that the appellant was entitled to sufficient water for the cultivation of one wet crop a year on his lands, but subject to the power of the Govt. to control the distribution of water with reference to (1) the need for conserving water in the interests of the whole ayacut, and (2) the need for economizing water in seasons or months of shortage in order that a perennial supply might be available in the tank for the use of the municipality. On this basis the claim for damages was dismissed.

With regard to the nature of the appellant's lands, the respondent has contended that 38.87 acres out of the total area of 43.44 acres are not really wet lands, that is, lands which are entitled to the supply of water for cultivation purposes. It is said that they are "wet waste lands", and as such, have no right to water from the channels under the control of the Govt. This contention is based on a deed of conveyance dated August 7, 1866, in which the lands are described as being "wet waste lands." Before us the learned Advocate-General has conceded that the 37.87 acres must be classified either as wet lands or as dry lands, there being no intermediate classification. We consider that all the lands must be classified as wet lands. They were so classified in the settlement of 1875 and have since been so classified. The paimash accounts of 1840 which would have shown the classification in that year were destroyed by an order of the Govt. dated March 26, 1938, and cannot be referred to, but there is no reason to believe that the classification then was different. On the question whether before the scheme the appellant's lands carried with them the right to sufficient water for the cultivation of two crops the learned trial Judge held that the evidence established that except in years of unusual small rainfall the lands on the ayacut received a regular supply of water for the irrigation of the first crop and a somewhat precarious supply of water for a second crop over a portion of the area. In the minutes of the proceedings of the Madras Govt., Public Works Department, dated April 26, 1870, it is stated that the Red Hills tank as it stood before the scheme was carried out would probably suffice for the whole area for the first crop and for a good deal of second crop cultivation. In subsequent official reports reference is made to the fact that lands in the old ayacut were well-irrigated before the scheme, but there is no statement to be found which indicates a right to water for a second crop. We concur in the finding of the learned Judge and hold that before the scheme was carried into effect the appellant's lands were in a normal year entitled to receive from the Red Hills tank sufficient water for the cultivation of one crop.

In carrying out the scheme the Engineers placed the level of the Municipal sluice at 31.31 feet above mean sea level, but in order to avoid pumping and allow water to reach Madras by gravitation it was necessary to have at least six feet of water always stored in excess of requirements. In 1892 the Chief Engineer for Irrigation pointed out that the supply by gravitation to Madras could not be well-assured till the level was plus 38, and on his recommendation the Govt. directed that this level should be maintained. In 1908 it was ordered that there should be a complete stoppage of the issue of water for irrigation purpose during the months of July and August, even if the level was in excess of plus 38. In the year 1926 the rainfall was below normal and on November 30, 1927, the Govt. ordered that no water should be withdrawn for irrigation from either tank till the level of the water in the Red Hills tank had reached plus 44.67, which meant a full tank. On August 22, 1928, the rules for the issue of water were again changed. It was then ordered that so long as the level of water in the tank was at plus 38, or lower, no water would be issued for irrigation. If the level rose above plus 38, water would be issued for irrigation from September 1, to October 14 (inclusive), but the supply was liable to be cut off if in the meantime the water level in the tank fell to plus 38. During the north-east monsoon, the issue of water for irrigation would be stopped from October 15, and would not be resumed till December 15, or until the full tank level (plus 44.67) was reached, whichever date was later. After December 15, the issue of water would be continued till January 31, if in the meantime the level did not fall to plus 38, but if it did fall to that level the issue would be stopped. In pursuance of the policy of safeguarding the supply of water to Madras, the supply to the appellant was cut off altogether in the year 1926-27 and in 1927-28, no water was supplied to him in the month of August, September, October and November. In these years the water in the Red Hills tank was far in excess of what it was when the project was undertaken and no attempt has been made by the learned Advocate-General to show that the rainfall in 1926 was so small that the appellant would not have received sufficient water for the cultivation of one crop if the Red Hills tank had not been improved, but had remained as it was in 1870, and it must be taken, at any rate so far as the year 1926-27 is concerned, that the appellant's rights, assuming them to be the same as they were in 1870, were disregarded.

This brings me to the question whether the appellant's rights have undergone a change by reason of the scheme and the answer entails an examination of the authorities. I may say at once, that the contention that the *raiya*s in the old ayacut undertook a risk and that for benefits to be derived from the scheme they surrendered their rights cannot be sustained. So far as the Court is aware, the *raiya*s were not even consulted with regard to the scheme, and far from surrendering their rights, they have from time to time protested against the preference given to Madras.

In Kristna Ayyan v. Vencatachala Mudali (1) it was held that the Govt. had an undoubted right to distribute the water of Govt. channels, but that power did not include the power to disturb existing arrangements to the prejudice of any tenant during the continuance of the tenancy, and this decision was quoted with approval in Ramachandra v. Narayanasami (2) which was a suit between *raiya*s holding lands under the Govt. in which the Collector was joined as a defendant. With the sanction of the Collector, defendant No. 1 had opened a new irrigation channel, thereby diminishing the supply of water necessary for the cultivation of the plaintiff's land. The trial Court held that the Collector's order was in excess of his powers and issued an injunction directing the channel to be closed. The plaintiff was also granted a decree for damages. This decision was upheld on appeal. In Sankaravadielu Pillai v. Secretary of State (3) White, O. J., as the result of the decisions in Kristna Ayyan v. Vencatachala Mudali (1) and Ramachandra v. Narayanasami (2) considered it to be settled law that the Govt. had the right to distribute the water of Govt. channels for the benefit of the public subject to the right of a raiya-wari land holder, to whom water had been supplied by the Govt. to continue to receive such supply as would be sufficient for his accustomed requirements. The question was again considered by White, O. J., sitting with Pinhey, J., in Robert Fischer v. Secretary of State (4) which concerned the rights of riparian owners. It was held that the Govt. had power, by the Customary Law of India, to regulate in the public interests, in connection with the collection, retention, and distribution of waters of rivers and streams flowing in natural channels, and of waters introduced into such rivers by means of works constructed at the public expense, and in the public interests, for purposes of irrigation, provided that they did not thereby inflict sensible injury on other riparian owners and diminish the supply they had hitherto utilized. The decision in Robert Fischer v. Secretary of State (4) was referred to in the judgment of the Privy Council in Bala Surya Prasada Row v. Secretary of State (5) and with the apparent approval as their Lordships observed that the law of the Madras Presidency as to rivers and streams was certainly different in some respects from the English Law.

In Basavana Gowd v. Lakka Narayana Reddi (6) Wallace and Krishnan Pandalai, JJ., were called upon to state the legal position where the *raiya*ts of wet lands in two Govt. *raiya*tware villages, situated on opposite sides of a Govt. river drew water for irrigation from channels under the control of the Govt. which were taken off at particular points in the river bed, and the *raiya*ts of one village moved the head of one of the channels to the detriment of the *raiya*ts of the other village. The Court held that a *raiya*t of *raiya*tware village acquired a legal right to the water when it reached his customary channel for the irrigation of his lands, and not merely when the water had reached his fields. It was open to the Govt. to alter at any time the manner and method by which it supplied the necessary water to a *raiya*t, but by undertaking the obligation to supply him with water the Govt. also undertook that it should be at his disposal by the usual and customary method, that is by a channel constructed either by the Govt. or by the *raiya*t or both, until and unless some other method was adopted. The *raiya*t could not insist as against the Govt. that he had any right to have his supply carried by any particular channel and could not object to the Govt. altering the channel of supply, but he had right as against other *raiya*ts and even, subject to the Govt.'s right to give him an equally efficient supply, as against the Govt. to the protection of law for that supply once it had passed into the channel earmarked for his supply. If the customary supply and the manner of supply according to contractual or proprietary right were interfered with by private parties, such interference was an invasion of the *raiya*t's rights and would give rise to a cause of action. The most recent decision by a Bench of this Court is that given in the case of Secretary of State v. Nageswara Iyer (7). This appeal was heard by Varadachariar and Mockett, JJ. who accepted as correct the statement of the law in Sankaravadiwela Pillai v. Secretary of State (3). They pointed out that the rights and obligations as between the State and the *raiya*t in this country so far as supplying water for irrigation purposes was concerned, rested largely on unrecorded custom and practice. The *raiya*tware holder was ordinarily spoken of as entitled to the customary supply of water, but the obligation of the Govt. was not to find the required supply of water, but only not to interfere with the necessary supply if and so far as water was available.

The effect of these decisions is that in the Madras Presidency the *raiya*t is entitled to receive the water which his lands have been accustomed to for irrigation purposes without interference by the Govt. or anyone else. The Govt. cannot be required to supply water when none is available and it has a right of conserving and distributing the water available in the interests of the particular ayacut. In years of shortage, the only obligation of the Govt. is to make an equitable distribution of water. The *raiya*t has a claim against the Govt. when it withholds from him the water which he has a right to demand taking into consideration the supply available. In face of the authorities, the plea advanced on behalf of the Govt. that it has the right in law to supply Madras with water without regard to the claims of the *raiya*ts in the old ayacut cannot be accepted. It is of course manifest that the needs of the City of Madras are of very great importance and in the absence of rights in others, no one could reasonably complain of the policy of the Govt. in giving this large City a preference in supply of the water, but when others have acquired rights, the law requires that they shall be respected. It follows that in our opinion, the declaration granted to the appellant does not do justice to the appellant. The Govt. is not entitled to economize water in seasons or months of shortage in order that a perennial supply may be available for the use of Madras if this economy means that the *raiya*s in the old ayacut will have their customary supply diminished. The appellant will have a declaration that he is entitled to sufficient water for the cultivation of one crop per annum without reference to the needs of the City of Madras, subject to the power of the Govt. to control the distribution of available water in the interests of the landlords whose lands comprise the old ayacut. This declaration is not to be deemed to confer on the appellant greater rights than those which existed in 1870 or to diminish the powers of Govt. with regard to the distribution of the supply.

The position of the *raiya*s in the area which has been brought under wet cultivation since the inauguration of the scheme does not call for discussion in this case. The *raiya*s in the new area are in a different position to the *raiya*s in the old area, and it may very well be that their rights to water are subject to the requirements of the City of Madras. It is clear that as the result of the Govt. cutting off the supply of water for irrigation purposes altogether during 1926-27, the appellant suffered damage, and it is agreed that the damages shall be assessed at Rs. 450. No loss has been proved in respect of the following year and the claim for damages in respect of that year will be dismissed. The result of the appeal is, the appellant will have a declaration in the terms indicated in this judgment and a decree for damages in the sum of Rs. 450. As the appellant has succeeded on the main point, he will be awarded costs here and below.

Order accordingly.

PATNA HIGH COURT Full Bench

Civil Revision No. 426 of 1938
September 26, 1939

HARRIS, C. J., FAZL ALI AND AGARWALA, JJ.

RAMKHELAWAN SINGH—PETITIONER
versus

MONILAL SAHU AND OTHERS—
OPPOSITE PARTY

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XLVII, r. 1, O. XLI, r. 19, s. 151—Order dismissing appeal for failure of appellant to file list within time—Application to set aside, not maintainable under O. XLVII, r. 1 but under s. 151—Applicability of s. 151—Matters to be considered—Words "any other sufficient reason," meaning of—New matter or evidence—Discovery must be by party—Error—Nature of.

An application to set aside an order dismissing an appeal for non-filing of the appellant's list within the time allowed cannot be entertained as an application for review under O. XLVII, r. 1; Civil P. C. Order XLI, r. 19, which is the only provision in the Code for the restoration of the appeal does not apply to such a case but such an application may be entertained under s. 151. 91 Ind. Cas. 483 (1), Overruled, Fatimunnissa v. Doki Pershad (2), held no longer good law, 138 Ind. Cas. 393 (3), 60 Ind. Cas. 919 (5) and 134 Ind. Cas. 1169 (6), relied on. [p. 481, col. 1; p. 482, col. 2.]

Section 151 should be applied with great caution and only when the ends of justice require its application. In order to decide whether the ends of justice require the application of this section to a particular case, the Court has to keep in view not only the interest of the applicant but also that of the other party who may be affected by the order sought to be made under this section. [p. 483, col. 2.]

Rule 1 of O. XLVII must be read as in itself definitive of the limits within which review of decree or order is now permitted and the words "any other sufficient reason" mean a reason sufficient on grounds analogous to those specified in r. 1. 72 Ind. Cas. 566 (7) and 151 Ind. Cas. 41 (8), relied on. [p. 482, col. 1.]

Under O. XLVII, r. 1, the new matter or evidence should have been discovered by the party applying for review and not by the Court whose order is to be reviewed; and secondly, the error referred to in this provision should be one apparent on the face of the record and not one caused by the Court not being apprised at the time of the dismissal of the appeal of the circumstances which prevented the appellant from taking the necessary steps. [ibid.]

Messrs. Jafar Imam, Mehdi Imam, Harinandan Singh and Akhauri Badri Nath Sinha, for the Petitioner.

Mr. D. N. Varma, for the Opposite Party.

Fazl Ali, J.—This case has been referred to a Full Bench in the following circumstances: The petitioner had filed an appeal to this Court against a decree passed by the Subordinate Judge of Arrah and this appeal was numbered as First Appeal No. 3 of 1938. On May 5, 1938, the appeal was laid by the Registrar before a Bench of this Court for final order with a note pointing out that the petitioner had failed to comply with several orders calling upon him to supply the appellant's list. On that date no one appeared for the petitioner and the appeal was dismissed. On June 11, 1938, the petitioner made an application for the restoration of the appeal. This application bore a stamp of Rs. 3 and purported to have been made under O. XLI, rr. 17 and 19 and s. 151, Civil P. C. The Stamp Reporter noted on the application that the court-fee was insufficient, his view being that such an application could have been made only under O. XLVII, r. 1 of the Code. The matter was then placed before my brother Agarwala and myself and we decided to refer it to a Full Bench. The reasons which led us to make the reference as well as the point of law which we decided to refer are set out in the following extract from our order:

"The Stamp Reporter suggests that the application is in fact one for review of the order dismissing the appeal and that a court-fee of about Rs. 405 is leviable. On behalf of the petitioner, on the other hand, it is contended that this is an application for restoration of the appeal on which Rs. 3 stamp is leviable. In Anant Potdar v. Mangal Potdar (1) the cases in this Court for and against the view of the Stamp Reporter are enumerated. It will appear that from the institution of the Court up to 1923 applications such as the present were always treated as applications for review. In 1924 a Bench of which Sir Jwala Prasad was a member took another view although Sir Jwala Prasad had been a member of at least one of the Benches which had decided the other way in earlier cases. The earlier cases of this Court applied the Full Bench decision in Fatimunnissa v. Deoki Pershad (2). In Haridasi Devi v. Sajanmohan (3) it was pointed out that the decision in Fatimunnissa v. Deoki Pershad (2) was based on the language of an earlier Civil P. O. and held that the application was not an application in review. The question is continually arising in this Court and it is desirable that the matter should be settled one way or the other.

The question which requires consideration is whether an application to set aside an order dismissing an appeal for non-filing of the appellant's list within the time allowed can be entertained, unless it be treated as an application for review under O. XLVII r. 1, Civil P. O. We refer the matter to a Full Bench under Chap. V, r. 4 of the Rules of this Court."

In Ramhari Sahu v. Madan Mohan Mitter (4) at p. 311 a Bench of the Calcutta High Court had held that an application for re-admission of an appeal dismissed for the appellant's failure to deposit the costs for the preparation of the paper-book was not an application for review, but an application under the rules of the High Court. This decision was overruled in Fatimunnissa v. Deoki Pershad (2) by a Full Bench of five Judges who held that the remedy of the appellant in such a case was to apply for a review and the reasons they gave in support of this view were as follows:

"Under the Code there are only two ways known to the law by which a judgment and decree of a Division Bench of this Court can be set aside in India. These two methods are described in ss. 558 and 623 of the Code. The present case is clearly not one in which default was made in appearing at the hearing of the case, for the record shows that the Pleaders on both sides were in attendance and heard. It seems to us therefore that the view expressed in the reference is correct, and that the case in Ramhari Sahu v. Madan Mohan Mitter (4) at p. 341* so far as it decides the contrary is wrongly decided."

In this Court before 1924 there was on the whole a tendency to follow the practice which had prevailed in the Calcutta High Court since the decision of the Full Bench; but in some cases it was observed that the dismissal of an appeal for failure to file the appellant's list or deposit the printing cost within the time allowed by the Court could be set aside under O. XLI, r. 19, read with s. 151, Civil P. O. In 1924 the question as to what was the proper procedure for setting aside such a dismissal was directly raised before a Division Bench of this Court in Anant Potdar v. Mangal Potdar (1) and the learned Judges who sat on the Bench held, following the decision in Fatimunnissa v. Deoki Pershad (2) that an application to set aside the dismissal must be regarded as one for review under O. XLVII, r. 1. The learned Judges recognized that the order dismissing the appeal was no longer a decree under the amended Code, but they pointed out that it was still a judgment. The correctness of this decision has been recently doubted in Haridasi Devi v. Sajanmohan (3) in which it has been held that an application for restoring an appeal dismissed for default in the payment of initial deposit is not an application for review but an application under O. XLI, r. 19, read with s. 151 of the Code. The same view seems to have been taken by the Bombay High Court in Sonubai v. Sivajirao Krishnarao (5) and by the Judicial Commissioners of Sind in Dhayani v. Ishak (6). The question which has now to be decided by this Bench is which of the two conflicting views is correct. Order XLVII, r. 1, provides that a party aggrieved by a decree or an order specified in cls. (a), (b) and (c) of r. 1 may apply for review on any of the following grounds: (1) on the ground of the discovery of new or important matter or evidence which after the exercise of due diligence was not within the knowledge of the party or could not be produced by him at the time when the decree was passed or order made; (2) on account of mistake or error apparent on the face of the record; and (3) for any other sufficient reason.

(4) 123 O 339 at p. 341.

It seems to me that grounds Nos. 1 and 2 would not be ordinarily applicable to cases where an appeal is dismissed for the appellant's failure to file the list or to deposit the printing cost. In such cases the appellant usually applies for the restoration of the appeal on the ground that there was sufficient cause for his not depositing the printing cost or filing the list, as the case may be, within the time prescribed by the Court; and therefore if the application can be treated as an application for review, it can be treated as such only on ground No. 3. It has, however, been clearly pointed out by the Judicial Committee in Chhajju Ram v. Neki (7) and Bisheshwar Pratap Sahi v. Parath Nath (8) that r. 1 of O. XLVII, must be read as in itself definitive of the limits within which review of decree or order is now permitted and the words "any other sufficient reason" mean a reason sufficient on grounds analogous to those specified in r. 1. In view of these decisions it is no longer possible to hold that an application like the present can be treated as an application for review. As was remarked by the learned Judges of the Calcutta High Court in Haridasi Devi v. Sajanimohan (3):

"it would require no ordinary flight of imagination to treat a failure to deposit initial cost as being an omission of the same kind or description as an omission to produce a matter or evidence subsequently discovered or a mistake or error apparent on the face of the record."

The points which we must bear in mind are firstly that under O. XLVII, r. 1 the new matter or evidence should have been discovered by the party applying for review and not by the Court whose order is to be reviewed; and secondly, that the error referred to in this provision should be one apparent on the face of the record and not one caused by the Court not being apprised at the time of the dismissal of the appeal of the circumstances which prevented the appellant from taking the necessary steps. That being so, in my judgment the decisions in Fatimunissa v. Deoki Pershad (2) and Anant Potdar v. Mangal Potdar (1) can no longer be relied on as good authorities on the subject.

whether in a case like the present, the applicant has any remedy at all. It is plain that O. XLI, r. 19, which is the only provision in the Civil P. O. for the restoration of the appeal does not apply to such a case. Rule 19 enables the Court of appeal to re-admit an appeal which is dismissed under r. 11, sub-r. (2) or r. 17 or r. 18. Rule 11 and r. 17 provide for cases where on the date fixed, or another date to which the hearing may be adjourned, the appellant does not appear when the appeal is called on for hearing. Rule 18 provides for cases where it is found that the notice to the respondent has not been served in consequence of the failure of the appellant to deposit within the period fixed, the sum required to defray the cost of serving the notice. In the present case the appeal was dismissed not under any specific provision of the Code but under one of the rules framed by the High Court (Part 2, Chap. IX, r. 23). Are we then to hold that the petitioner is without any remedy, even if he is able to convince the Court that he was prevented by sufficient cause from filing the appellant's list or depositing printing cost within the time fixed by the Court? Unfortunately in our rules there is no rule corresponding to O. XLI, r. 19, but I am unable to hold that merely because there is no rule on the subject, this Court is powerless to grant any relief in such cases. In my opinion the failure to file a list or deposit the printing costs stands on no worse footing than the default referred to in rr. 11, 17 and 18 of O. XLI, and I find it difficult to hold that if there had been any rule in the Code corresponding to r. 23 (Chap. IX) of this Court, there would not have been any corresponding provision for restoring the appeal for sufficient cause. In my view if we have power to dismiss an appeal for the appellant's failure to file the appellant's list or deposit the printing cost, we have also power to restore the appeal in a proper case. Section 151 expressly saves the inherent power of the Court and every Court must be deemed to possess as inherent in its very constitution all such powers as are necessary to do right and undo a wrong in the course of the administration of justice. Thus, in my judgment, the answer to the question referred to this Bench is that an application to set aside an order dismissing an appeal for not filing the appellant's list within the time allowed may be entertained under s. 151 of the Code and generally speaking such an application cannot be made under O. XLVII, r. 1 of the Code.

I shall now proceed to deal with the facts of the present case in order to decide whether this particular appeal should be restored. It appears that on March 3, 1938 an Advocate, Mr. N. O. Roy who appeared for the petitioner applied for the inspection of documents and on March 4, the documents were actually inspected. Notwithstanding this fact, the appellant's list was not filed in time and on April 4, 1938 the Registrar directed the appellant to file it within 14 days of the date. On April 25, the list still not being filed, the Registrar recorded the following order in the order-sheet:

"Time has been twice allowed for the purpose of filing the appellant's list. The last order, though peremptory, has not been carried out. Final adjournment for seven days is given for compliance, failing which the appeal will be laid before the Bench with a recommendation for dismissal."

On May 3, the Registrar directed the appeal to be laid before the Bench as the final order for filing the list had been disregarded and the appeal was dismissed by the Bench on May 5. It is stated by the petitioner in his affidavit that his Advocate was fully instructed to file a list and he was in no way responsible for his appeal not being prosecuted properly but this is not borne out by the contents of a letter which was written to him by Mr. Roy on May 8, 1938. This letter which has been quoted in the petitioner's affidavit runs as follows:

"Dear Ramkhelawan Babu,

I wrote to you a few days ago that unless list in your F. A. No. 3-38 was filed immediately, your appeal would be dismissed on May 5, but when the High Court closed, the appeal (F. A. No. 3-38) came up before the Bench. I was, as you know, unwell and so did not go to Court, but I instructed somebody to apply for time. The Judges, however, have dismissed the appeal as the list has not been filed. An application for restoration should be filed soon. The petition should be drafted and kept ready at once. The High Court is closed and I shall leave Patna within five or six days. My fee Rs. 48 (as I wrote to you before) together with the fees for preparing the list should be paid now. The list should be kept ready and this may be prepared by us during this vacation. Please therefore come with sufficient money and do not spoil the case. Unless money is paid, nothing will be done. One of your men saw me on May 3, but he told me he was going to Muzaffarpur."

This letter shows that the Advocate had given due warning to the petitioner in a previous letter and that his fees as well as the fees for preparing the list had not been paid. The petitioner filed a fresh affidavit on the date on which this application was heard to the effect that he had paid a sum of Rs. 36-1-0 to his Advocate, but the Advocate is now dead, and, in view of the fact that the statement in question was not made in the petition itself which was filed during his lifetime, I am not prepared to act upon it or hold that the Advocate did not act honestly and that he was negligent in the discharge of his duty towards his client. It is to be borne in mind that s. 151 should be applied with great caution and only when the ends of justice require its application. In order to decide whether the ends of justice require the application of this section to a particular case, we have to keep in view not only the interest of the applicant but also that of the other party who may be affected by the order sought to be made under this section. In my opinion upon the materials on the record it is difficult to hold that the petitioner has made out a sufficient cause for restoring the appeal and I would therefore dismiss this application with costs.

U EINDAWUNTHA—RESPONDENT

Burmese Buddhist Law—Ecclesiastical—Owner of Poggalika conferring rights of appointing successor upon others—Such right not exercised—Ownership of Poggalika—Election by Sangha—Nature and mode of—Election of presiding monk—Nature of.

The ownership of the Kyaung-daik, upon the death of the original Poggalika owner, vests in the Sangha at large, if the original Poggalika owner has not himself appointed his successor, but conferred the right to appoint a successor on a third party and that party fails to exercise that right. After the death of the owner the presiding monk is then to be elected by the Sangha. The latter may elect such monk in any manner they choose provided it is a real, valid and true election. The members may nominate some of the senior members of them representing the whole body to elect the monk and the election would be valid and proper election by the Sangha as such. 179 Ind. Cas. 803 (1), relied on.

Although there may be ceremonial contemplated at the time when the presiding monk is installed in his office, the question of his election by the Sangha is not analogous to ceremonial but is a plain question of fact and depends upon a consideration of the question whether the members of the Sangha were substantially in favour of his appointment. [p. 485, col. 1.]

S. A. against the decree of the District Court, Hanthawaddy, dated December 24, 1938.

Mr. U Shu Maung, for the Appellant.

Mr. A. Loo Nee for Mr. U Tun Maung, for the Respondent.

Roberts, C. J.—This is an appeal which comes before us from the learned Judge in second appeal to determine matters connected with Buddhist Ecclesiastical law. The facts are that U Yazeinda was the presiding monk of the Nyaungbinkwin Kyaung-daik and at a time when he was approaching death, he desired to make certain about the appointment of his successor. Accordingly, the Poggalika property was remitted to the donors, U Po Thet and U Hein, and they were asked to appoint, upon the death of U Yazeinda, some one who should be a worthy successor to him. Within a week or two of this arrangement, U Yazeinda died, and it is plain from the evidence before us that the donors disagreed as to who his successor should be and were themselves unable to carry out the task entrusted to them. U Po Thet is dead. But his widow, Daw Set, has told us in the plainest terms that there was a disagreement in respect of this matter between her husband and U Hein; and U Ngwe Hlaing, who is a physician residing at Kyonmaye, gives evidence to the same effect. U Hein himself says:

"After the death of the said Sayadaw, there was some difference between myself and U Po Thet regarding the appointment of a presiding monk and so we agreed to abide by the decision of 'Gana' Sayadaws consisting of 38 Sanghas."

And it is quite clear that there was no decision communicated to U Hein or U Po Thet which could have caused them to become reconciled, because U Po Thet died and shortly before his death he purported, acting by himself, to appoint the defendant, U Eindawuntha, the presiding monk of the Poggalika Kyaung-daik. He was acting quite beyond his powers in attempting to do anything of this kind and those Sayadaws who believed that U Eindawuntha had been properly appointed must have overlooked the fact that U Hein had an equal voice in the appointment of the presiding monk with U Po Thet and had by no means concurred in what was being done. That being so, the position at the death of U Yazeinda was this: he was the Poggalika owner of the Kyaung-daik, and, as was pointed out in U Thita v. U Aresinna (1), the ownership of the Kyaung-daik, upon the death of the original Poggalika owner, vests in the Sangha at large, if the original Poggalika owner has not either himself appointed his successor, or conferred the right to appoint a successor on a third party. In this case, no doubt, the right to appoint a successor had been conferred jointly upon two persons, but they had failed to exercise that right and the position was that on the death of U Yazeinda, the ownership of the Kyaung-daik vested in the Sangha at large. There has been some confusion with regard to the selection because some of the learned Sayadaws who have addressed their minds to the texts of the Vinayas in this connection have reminded themselves that when a person or persons is or are delegated to perform certain acts, they cannot delegate again to other persons, but must perform the duties delegated to them themselves. That is, no doubt, true in connection with such proceedings as may have taken place if the Sanghas had met to make a report which U Po Thet and U Hein could act upon. But, quite different considerations arise when we have to consider, not a report of this character, but an ordinary election which takes place of a presiding monk when the Poggalika owner of the Kyaung-daik has died and the ownership of the Kyaung-daik vests in the Sangha. In circumstances of such a kind the only question which it is necessary to ask is this: Has there been a real, valid and true election by the Sangha as such? They may elect, as it seems to us, in any way they choose, and the only matter about which we must be satisfied is whether the election was a real election by the whole of the Sangha.

Now, in this particular instance, 38 monks met together, and, although it is not of particular importance in connection with that meeting, it is, I think, interesting to observe that the senior of them was U Thanwara, who was known as the Kyingyaung Sayadaw. This representative gathering of monks came to the conclusion that their numbers were great to permit of a settlement being arrived at and that it would be better to entrust the matter to five persons who should represent them, who were called Nayakas. Of these five persons, one U Zayanta, died and took no part in the proceedings. There were left, U Thanwara, U Winmala, U Ardicca and Letkhana, and we have to decide whether those persons could validly and properly elect a presiding monk of the Kyaung-daik. They at one time seem to have entertained the notion that they would leave the matter to the senior of their number, U Thanwara, but it is afterwards clear from the evidence that three of them met together and that U Letkhana was not present. U Letkhana was called for the defence. He is the Aungmyintha Sayadaw and he thought that as the four Nayakas had submitted the matter to U Thanwara for selection by himself, it was out of his hands; in other words, he was a person who was not only willing to abide by the decision of U Thanwara, but thought that his own services in connection with the election were no longer required. Of the other three, U Thanwara, who gave evidence upon commission and is described as a witness for the defendant, after giving a long and careful account of all the circumstances, said at the conclusion of his evidence, "I knew before that if an appointment is made by a majority of the Nayaka-Sayadaws it is valid." In my view, his opinion is entitled to great weight in this matter and it was shared by the other two Nayakas who were present, U Wimala, the first witness for the plaintiff, who says that the appointment was valid because those who made the appointment formed the majority, and by U Ardicca, who says it was finally settled that U Thiseitta should be the presiding monk of the said Kyaung-daik.

It is to be noted that at this meeting three other Sayadaws were present. They took sufficient interest in the matter to come to see what was going on. They made no protest, and at no time was it then suggested that because U Letkhana was unwilling to come and because U Zayanta was dead there was wanting any element in the validity of the election of the presiding monk of the Kyaung-daik. It is now urged upon us that the election of a presiding monk is of such an important nature that it is at least analogous to ceremonial. It is, of course, true that there are matters connected with ceremonial, the validity of which is affected unless the requisite number of monks is present. But, in my opinion, it is clear in this particular instance that, although there may have been ceremonial contemplated at the time that the presiding monk was installed in his office, the question of his election by the Sangha is a plain question of fact and depends upon a consideration of the question whether the members of the Sangha were substantially in favour of his appointment. If we were to be driven to the contrary conclusion, it would be plain that there would be no answer to a case which might have arisen if the 38 members of the Sangha had appeared and one of them had dissented from the proposed appointment of a particular person; in those circumstances it would indeed be difficult to secure the election of a presiding monk, since unanimity might not always easily be obtained: and I am satisfied that the action which the members of the Sangha took in leaving the matter to several of the more senior of their number was not only a wise one and calculated to attain a measure of unanimity when there was a possible risk of disagreement, but that such unanimity was substantially achieved. There is no evidence at all that U Zayanta before his death dissented from the appointment of the appellant, and it is quite plain that all those who survived were ready and willing that he should be appointed. In those circumstances, it seems to me that this appeal must succeed and the suit of the plaintiff-appellant is decreed. As the parties are Buddhist monks, we think it proper to make no order as to costs.

Dunkley, J.—I agree. As my learned brother Braund pointed out in U Thita v. U Arescinna (1) at p. 680* where a special power is granted for its valid exercise the terms of the power must be strictly complied with. In the present case a special power to appoint the successor of U Yazeinda as owner of a Poggalika Kyaung-daik upon his death was granted by U Yazeinda to U Po Thet and U Hein, and the power was to be exercised jointly. They could not agree as to the manner of its exercise and consequently, it was never exercised. They had no authority to delegate their power of appointment to any other person, and therefore the view which has been taken by the lower Courts that they delegated their power of appointment to the Sangha is an incorrect view. Clearly, when they were unable to exercise that power this Poggalika Kyaung-daik became, after the death of U Yazeinda, Sanghika property and was at the disposal of the Sangha generally: see U Zawtika v. U Kalyana (2). It was therefore the privilege and duty of the Sangha to elect the presiding monk of that Sanghika Kyaung-daik, and the only question which fell for decision in this suit was whether such an election had been made by the Sangha, that is, whether the election of the appellant by the three Nayakas did truly represent the will of the Sangha. It has been suggested that, when the Sangha delegated to these five Nayakas the power to elect the presiding monk, only the five Nayakas acting together could make the election; but no text of the Vinaya which says that under these circumstances the decision of the majority cannot prevail has been cited to us, and from the evidence of the learned Sayadaws themselves it is clear that the texts to which they have referred are texts concerned with ceremonial matters which can only be carried out by a certain number of monks, and the Vinaya lays down that in such cases the requisite number of monks must be present. But, in the case of an election, as my Lord has pointed out, an impossible position would arise if the will of the majority should not prevail, for a single monk by merely absenting himself from the election would render it impossible for a new presiding monk of a Sanghika Kyaung-daik to be elected. In my opinion, the evidence in this case shows clearly that the election of the appellant was an election which was in accordance with the witness of the Sangha generally, and therefore the appellant was properly elected as the presiding monk of the Kyaung-daik in suit.

S. A. against a decree of the Assistant Judge, Sukkur, dated November 14, 1935.

Mr. Dipchand Chandumal, for the Appellant.

Mr. Manghanmal Bhojraj, for the Respondents.

Davis, J. C.—This comes before us as a second appeal against an order of the Assistant Judge of Sukkur, dated November 14, 1935, in which he allowed the appeal against an order dated January 11, 1932, of the Subordinate Judge of Jakobabad, in which he ordered a writ of arrest to issue against one Pessumal, a surety who stood surety for the judgment-debtor Choithmal, who, to escape arrest for a debt, declared his intention of applying in insolvency under s. 55 (1), Civil P. O. But it appears that this judgment-debtor Choithmal afterwards changed his mind and did not wish to apply for insolvency and was produced within thirty days before the Court by his surety Pessumal who applied for his discharge. The Subordinate Judge was of the opinion that the surety Pessumal in producing Choithmal before the Court did not fulfil the terms of his bond, one of which was that this Choithmal would apply in insolvency within thirty days, and therefore, this surety was liable under the terms of his bond to pay Rs. 200, the sum involved. But the lower Appellate Court took a different view and came to the conclusion that as Pessumal had produced Choithmal before the Court so that he could be re-arrested and committed to jail, the judgment-creditor could not proceed against the surety as he had proceeded against the principal. But interesting as this question may be, we do not see how under the provisions of s. 102, Civil P. O. an appeal will lie. There is ample authority for the view that s. 102, Civil P. O., not only applies to appeals but to orders in execution under s. 47, Civil P. O. and this appeal purports to be made under s. 47, Civil P. O. But it is said, that if an appeal against an order under s. 47, Civil P. O., is barred under s. 102, Civil P. O., it is only barred against the person who is a party to the suit, and, in this case, this surety was not a party to the suit. But reference to s. 145, Civil P. O., will clearly show that any such argument is untenable:

"When any person has become liable as surety for the payment of any money or, for the fulfilment of any condition imposed on any person, under an order of the Court in any suit or in any proceeding consequent thereon...such person shall, for the purpose of appeal, be deemed a party within the meaning of s. 47."

This is so provided in s. 145, Civil P. O. This being so, we can see no force whatever in the argument that s. 102, Civil P. O., which would apply to the judgment-debtor would not apply to his surety, the present appellant Pessumal. We are then asked to treat this second appeal as a revision application. But we have constantly pointed out that s. 115, Civil P. O. was only intended to relate to a question of jurisdiction, and to say that because a question of law is involved or the construction of the document, and one Judge has come to the conclusion and another has come to another, that is a matter affecting jurisdiction and is sufficient ground to treat an appeal as an application under s. 115, Civil P. O., would appear to us to make s. 115, Civil P. O., not a section dealing with matters for which no appeal has been provided, but to make it a section allowing an appeal in a matter in respect of which an appeal has been expressly prohibited by law. It would be to give to parties a right of second appeal when the law says clearly that this right is not allowed. Section 115, Civil P. O., is intended only to supplement the Code in relation to matters on which the Code is silent. It is not intended to provide the parties with the right of a second appeal. We think therefore that this second appeal as such would not lie, and as a revision application, it does not come under s. 115, Civil P. O., as no question of jurisdiction within the meaning of that section is involved. Therefore from any point of view, this appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs. Order accordingly.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 58 (c)—Mortgage by conditional sale and out and out sale—Deed held out and out sale—Amendments to s. 58 (c), construction.

Whether a deed is a mortgage by conditional sale within the meaning of s. 58 (c), T. P. Act, or an out and out sale is a question which falls to be determined on a consideration of the terms of the deed itself and of the surrounding circumstances. 36 Ind. Cas. 38 (1), relied on.

A vendor executed a sale deed by which she conveyed the property in dispute to the vendees for certain sum. The deed contained a condition that if she should re-pay the amount of the sale consideration to the vendees within one year, the vendees would be bound to re-transfer the property to her provided she paid the money out of her pocket. In other words it was a condition of the transaction that the obligation to re-transfer would not bind the vendees if the vendor mortgaged or transferred the property to a third party for the purpose of raising the money to pay back the amount of the sale consideration to the vendees. In the earlier part of the deed there was a recital of the fact that the property was subject to prior encumbrances and that as the creditors were making pressing demands it was proper to sell the property to pay off the debt:

Held, that the terms of the document were consistent only with an intention upon the part of the executant to sell the property absolutely and to retain for herself the right to repurchase within one year.

The amendment to s. 58 (c) does not provide that if a transaction is embodied in one document, it must of necessity be regarded as a mortgage by conditional sale and not an out and out sale.

Judgment.—This is a plaintiff's appeal against the decision of the learned Single Judge of this Court. The appeal arises out of a suit for redemption. The plaintiff sought to redeem certain house property on payment to the defendants of the sum of Rs. 550. The trial Court decreed the claim. The lower Appellate Court dismissed the suit. The decision of the lower Appellate Court has been upheld by the learned Single Judge before whom the case came in second appeal. On November 10, 1932, one Mst. Kishan Piari executed a sale deed by which she conveyed the property in dispute to the respondents for the sum of Rs. 550. The deed contained a condition that if she should re-pay the amount of the sale consideration to the respondents within one year the respondents would be bound to re-transfer the property to her provided she paid the money out of her pocket. In other words it was a condition of the transaction that the obligation to re-transfer would not bind the respondents if the vendor mortgaged or transferred the property to a third party for the purpose of raising the money to pay back the amount of the sale consideration to the respondents. Later, Mst. Kishan Piari sold her interest in the property to the plaintiff-appellant who filed the present suit within a year of the sale of November 10, 1932.

The defence to the suit is that the transaction of November 10, 1932, is a sale and not a mortgage by conditional sale and that therefore the plaintiff who purchased the vendor's interest cannot redeem the property. Whether a deed is a mortgage by conditional sale within the meaning of s. 58 (c), T. P. Act, or an out and out sale is a question which falls to be determined on a consideration of the terms of the deed itself and of the surrounding circumstances.

In this connection reference may be made to the decision of the Privy Council in Jhanda Singh v. Wahiduddin (1). The document of November 10, 1932, is upon the face of it a sale; the executant Mst. Kishan Piari purports to convey for the sum of Rs. 550 the property in suit. In the earlier part of the deed there is a recital of the fact that the property is subject to prior encumbrances and that the amount due upon these encumbrances is Rs. 495. The document then proceeds:

"The creditors are making pressing demands and are ready to file a suit. In case a suit is instituted, it shall be put to unnecessary expense. It appears to me to be proper to sell the said house and to pay off the said debt. In this way some money will be left for me, the executant."

It appears to us to be clear upon a consideration of this clause of the deed that the executant realized that if a suit were brought upon the basis of prior encumbrances nothing of the property would in the end of the day be left and that she determined that the best course open to her was to get rid of the property entirely and to take what was left out of the purchase price after paying off the amount due upon the prior encumbrances. There are further passages in the deed which support the view that the intention of the executant was to sell and not merely to mortgage her property; for example, in the body of the deed there is the following passage:

"I have received the sale consideration from the said vendees as specified below. I have taken out the property sold from the possession of the mortgagee and have put the same in possession of the vendees. Now neither I nor my heirs and representatives have or shall have any claim to or share left in the house sold. Either the vendees should live therein themselves or let it out on rent or make any constructions or alterations therein. In short, from this date the vendees have all proprietary rights in respect of the property sold."

These provisions in the document appear to us to be absolutely inconsistent with the relationship of mortgagor and mortgagee. It is further to be remarked that the deed provides that the executant shall not sell or hypothecate the property to a third party for the purpose of raising money to re-pay the amount of the sale consideration to the vendees. The provision is as follows:

"I, the executant or my heirs and representatives shall not pay the amount by transferring or hypothecating the said house sold to any one for this purpose, nor shall they transfer or hypothecate the property to any one else for five years after taking it back on payment of the amount of consideration."

This restriction upon the executant in regard to her right to have the property re-transferred to her within one year is also in our opinion inconsistent with the relationship of mortgagor and mortgagee. In this connection we would refer again to the decision of the Privy Council in Jhanda Singh v. Wahiduddin (1). It is true that in that case the agreement between parties was embodied not in one document but in two separate deeds. Nevertheless, the condition restricting the vendor's right in regard to the re-purchase of the property was substantially the same as is the restriction imposed upon the vendor in the present case. The Board considered that such a restriction was not consistent with an intention merely to mortgage the property.

It was maintained for the appellant that in view of the plain provisions of s. 58 (c), T. P. Act, and the fact that the sum of Rs. 550 did not represent the real value of the property transferred by the deed of November 10, 1932, that deed must be taken to be a mortgage by conditional sale. Learned Counsel founded specially upon the amendment to s. 58 (c) effected in the year 1929. The amendment is as follows:—

"Provided that no such transaction shall be deemed to be a mortgage unless the condition (i.e., of re-purchase) is embodied in the document which effects or purports to effect the sale."

The object of this amendment was to put an end to the confusion which had resulted from innumerable decisions of the High Courts in India on such transactions embodied sometimes in two documents and which had occasioned disputes, the question in each case being as to whether the transaction was a sale or a mortgage by conditional sale. It is to be noted that the amendment does not provide that if a transaction is embodied in one document, it must of necessity be regarded as a mortgage by conditional sale and not an out and out sale. We are therefore thrown back upon the principle that the intention of the parties to the document must be gathered from the terms of the document itself and from the surrounding circumstances.

The main circumstance urged by the learned Counsel for the appellant in favour of the view that the document of November 10, 1932, was a mortgage by conditional sale was that the sale consideration was much less than the true value of the property. In support of this contention he referred to the fact that the plaintiff, shortly after the execution of the deed on November 10, 1932, had purchased from another branch of the family to which the executant belonged the share which they claimed in the same house for Rs. 300. Learned Counsel further pointed to the fact that on June 16, 1933, the appellant purchased Mst. Kishan Piari's interest in the property for the sum of Rs. 765; Rs. 550 of this sum was to be appropriated to the re-payment of the sale consideration to the respondents. Therefore it was contended that in all the plaintiff had paid Rs. 1,065 for the property. It cannot, however, be maintained that because the plaintiff paid Rs. 300 for the alleged interest of third parties in the property which was conveyed by the deed of November 10, 1932, that the property was then necessarily of greater value than Rs. 550. Neither can it be concluded from the fact that the plaintiff was willing to pay Rs. 765 for Mst. Kishan Piari's interest in the property that the property was worth more than Rs. 550. The Court, it is true, in interpreting the deed of November 10, 1932, has to look to the surrounding circumstances; it would be unsafe, however, to draw any definite conclusion from the acts, independent and not fully explained, of the plaintiff. These acts may be an indication of the true market value of the property, on the other hand they may not. It is not at all certain what considerations induced the plaintiff to pay the price he did. We are not in a position to say from the information before us whether on November 10, 1932, Rs. 550 was or was not a fair market value for the property. If the property had been worth over Rs. 1,000 as is claimed by the appellant, it would have been easy for him to have adduced definite and independent evidence to prove this. We hold, therefore, that there is nothing upon the record to entitle the Court to come to the conclusion that, all things considered, Rs. 550 was not a reasonable price for the property in the condition in which it was on November 10, 1932.

The terms of the document of November 10, 1932, appear to us to be consistent only with an intention upon the part of the executant Mst. Kishan Piari to sell the property absolutely to the defendants and to retain for herself the right to re-purchase within one year. In this view of the matter, the appeal fails. In the result, the appeal is dismissed with costs. There is a cross-objection. There is no force in the objection; it is therefore dismissed with costs. The injunction order is discharged.

Appeal dismissed.

CREDITORS—PETITIONERS

versus

MOHAMMAD NAWAZ SHAH—

DEBTOR—RESPONDENT

Provincial Insolvency Act (V of 1920), ss. 25, 3 (6)—Unliquidated assets—Assets realisable at creditor's instance being less than debts due, debtor not willing to pay debts due for long time nor making efforts to liquidate assets—Debtor is deemed to be unable to pay debts—S. 25, scope of—Creditor proving act of insolvency of debtor—Debtor alleging his ability to pay—Duty of Court—Intent to defeat and delay, must be gathered from consequences of the debtor's act.

The mere presence of unliquidated assets does not necessarily prove that these assets are capable of being liquidated. Unliquidated assets cannot be sufficient to discharge debts until they are liquidated and until those steps are taken, whether willingly or unwillingly by the debtor, it cannot be said that, at the time when the petition is put in praying for his insolvency, he is able to discharge his debts in the ordinary sense of the term, namely that he is able to pay them off by making legal tender of the sum demanded. The fact that he might pay them off if a purchaser was available and if he had time given to convert his assets into cash does not affect the question whether at the time of the presentation of the petition and up to the time when this point arises for decision he is or is not able to pay his debts. Hence although he has assets which if liquidated would provide sufficient money to discharge his debts, yet if he has no liquidated assets with which to pay his debts at present, he must be held not to be able to pay his debts and hence liable to adjudication as an insolvent. The mere fact that the "value" of the immovable property owned by the debtor is in excess of his liabilities is not sufficient to prove his ability to pay his debts regardless of all other considerations. A person may own very valuable properties but they may not be marketable at all or there may be no prospect of any purchaser forthcoming to buy them within a reasonable time even though the owner has made and is willing to make every possible effort to raise money on them to meet his liabilities. It will be idle to contend in such cases, that the mere fact that the debtor owns valuable properties is per se sufficient to justify a finding that he is "able to pay his debts." What he has to show in each particular case is whether he possesses such realizable assets, as can within a reasonable time be made available to meet all his liabilities. Where it is obvious that the assets realizable at the instance of the creditors are much less than the debts due to them, and there is no reasonable prospect of the debtor paying them by voluntary alienation of his land and the debts have been due for a considerable time; but no effort whatever has been made by the debtor to pay off the creditors nor has he any present intention of paying them anything by liquidating any of his assets, it must be held that the debtor is "unable to pay his debts" and that no "other sufficient cause" has been shown under s. 25 of the Provincial Insolvency Act for the dismissal of the creditors' petition. [p. 494, col. 1.]

The provisions of s. 25 relate to the defence that the debtor may put up even though the petitioning creditor satisfies the conditions required by the Insolvency Act and therefore it cannot be said that his ability or inability to pay his debts is not a circumstance into which a Court may enter when once the act of insolvency has been proved. It is the duty of the Court to enter into the matter and if satisfied that the debtor is able to pay his debts, must dismiss the creditors' petition. [p. 492, col. 1.]

The "intent to defeat or delay the creditors" is to be gathered from the consequences of the debtor's act, and if the transfer has the effect of substantially reducing the area, which was available to the creditors for realizing their debts by temporary alienation, and if the transfer by itself is not enough to bring in sufficient money to discharge the existing liabilities, the transfer must be deemed to have been made with intent to defeat and delay creditors although the primary motive of the debtor in effecting the transfer might be different. [p. 494, col. 2]

O. R. from the order of the Additional District Judge, Lyallpur Division at Jhang, dated May 28, 1937.

Order of Reference

Tek Chand, J.—This petition for revision raises questions of law of considerable importance on which there appears to be a serious divergence of judicial opinion. The petitioners, who are four of the creditors of the respondent and to whom a sum of Rs. 10,537 has been found to be due, applied for his adjudication as insolvent, alleging that he had transferred a part of his property with intent to defeat and delay the creditors and that he was unable to pay his debts. The respondent is a member of a notified agricultural tribe of Jhang District and owns a considerable area of agricultural land. He resisted the application on the two-fold ground that he had not committed any "act of insolvency" as defined in s. 6, Provincial Insolvency Act, and that he was "able to pay his debts." The Insolvency Judge upheld both these contentions and dismissed the application. On appeal the learned District Judge disagreed with the finding on the first point and found that the respondent had committed an act of insolvency. He held, however, that the respondent owned a considerable area of agricultural land which was worth about Rs. 42,000 and that therefore he was able to pay his debts "if he so desires." He accordingly dismissed the appeal. The creditors have come in revision and it is contended on their behalf that on the facts as found by the learned District Judge, he has erred in law in dismissing the application for the adjudication of the respondent as insolvent. The first contention raised is that where the creditors of a debtor apply for his adjudication as insolvent and successfully prove that he has committed an act of insolvency and that Rs. 500 or more is due to the petitioning creditors, the Insolvency Court has no jurisdiction to decide whether such debtor owns sufficient property to pay his creditors. In this connection reliance is placed on a Single Bench decision of Skemp, J. reported in Harbans Singh v. Kahla Singh (1) which certainly supports the contention of the learned Counsel for the petitioners. As at present advised, I venture to think that the broad proposition laid down in this decision is not correct. It appears that the attention of the learned Judge was not drawn to s. 25, Insolvency Act, where it is laid down that a creditor's application shall be dismissed if the Court is satisfied by the debtor that he is able to pay his debts. The onus of proving this no doubt lies upon the debtor, but if he alleges that he is able to pay his debts and attempts to prove this allegation, the Court is bound to go into this matter.

It is next contended that the debtor in this case being a member of an agricultural tribe, the mere fact that the value of the land owned by him exceeds his total liabilities is no criterion of his "ability to pay his debts," as according to the provisions of the Punjab Alienation of Land Act, such land cannot be sold in execution of decrees, and under the recent relief of indebtedness legislation, a large part of his land cannot be made available even for temporary alienation. It is also pointed out that whatever the value of the respondent's land might be, he is not possessed of liquid assets, sufficient to pay even a fraction of his debts, as is clear (inter alia) from the fact that he has not yet discharged any of the decrees which have been outstanding against him for years and which were payable in easy instalments. It is therefore argued that he must be held to be "unable to pay his debts." In support of these arguments, the petitioner's Counsel relies upon a Single Bench decision of Dalip Singh, J. in Karm Bakhsh v. Gaja Dhari (2) and the leading judgment of Rankin, C. J. in Pratapmal v. Chuni Lal Jahuri (3) in which it was laid down that

"although a debtor may have assets, which if liquidated, would provide sufficient money to discharge his debts, yet if he has no liquid assets wherewith to pay his debts at present, he must be held not to be able to pay his debts (within the corresponding provision of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act) so as to resist a creditors' petition for adjudication."

The respondent's Counsel on the other hand, relies on Dad Khan v. Chandi Ram, 89 Ind. Cas. 585 (4), Moti Ram Prem Chand v. Kewal Ram Dharam Chand, 105 Ind. Cas. 569 (5) at p. 575, Kashmira Singh v. Badar Din, 120 Ind. Cas. 173 (6) and Allah Ditta v. Dewa Singh (7) which are all Single Bench decisions of this Court, in which it has been held that in determining whether a debtor of an agricultural tribe is able to pay his debts within the meaning of the insolvency law his land cannot be excluded from consideration. It is not easy to reconcile the various decisions cited above, and in any case, it is a matter for consideration, whether the view taken in the cases cited for the respondents still holds good, having regard to the recent indebtedness relief legislation. The questions raised are of great importance and are frequently arising and I think, they should be authoritatively decided by a larger Bench. I accordingly refer the case to a Division Bench. The papers will be laid before the Hon'ble Chief Justice for constituting a Bench to hear this case at an early date.

Mr. Inder Dev, for the Petitioners.

Mr. Muhammad Amin, for the Respondent.

Order of Division Bench.

Dalip Singh, J.—The facts of this case are given in the referring order, dated March 10, 1938. The question involved in the reference was the proper interpretation of the term "able to pay his debts" in s. 25, Insolvency Act. This question has been answered in Pratapmal v. Chuni Lal Jahuri (3) and in a Single Bench ruling of this Court, Karm Bakhsh v. Gaja Dhari (2) in which the term was interpreted as meaning that a debtor is not able to pay his debts, although he has assets which, if liquidated, would provide sufficient money to discharge his debts, yet if he has no liquidated assets with which to pay his debts at present he must be held not to be able to pay his debts and therefore liable to a liquidation as an insolvent. On the other hand, in four Single Bench cases of this Court, Dad Khan v. Chandi Ram, 89 Ind. Cas. 585 (4), Moti Ram Prem Chand v. Kewal Ram Dharam Chand, 105 Ind. Cas. 569 (5), Kashmira Singh v. Badar Din, 120 Ind. Cas. 173 (6) and Allah Ditta v. Dewa Singh (7) in the case of debtors' petitions to be declared insolvents, it was held that such a petition was bad if it was shown that the debtor had property which, if liquidated, would be sufficient to pay his debts. I do not think that it is necessary to consider the correctness or otherwise of these decisions for the simple reason that these are all decisions in debtors' petitions to be declared insolvents and the criterion for determining whether a debtor is able to pay his debts or not in such a case may be different from the criterion whether the debtor is able to pay his debts or not in a creditor's petition. I express therefore no opinion one way or the other on this point.

It is sufficient to say that I can see no reason why in a creditor's petition it should be held that a debtor is "able to pay his debts" because he has unliquidated assets which, if liquidated, would provide sufficient money to discharge his debts. In the first place, the mere presence of unliquidated assets does not necessarily prove that these assets are capable of being liquidated. For instance, in the case of land, as in the present case, there may be land whose market value is greater than the debts, but it may well be a question of fact that there is no purchaser available and hence, though the market value of the land may be greater than the debts, the land may not be at all convertible into liquid assets capable of discharging the debts. But, apart from this altogether, it appears to me that, at any rate, unliquidated assets cannot be sufficient to discharge debts until they are liquidated and until those steps are taken, whether willingly or unwillingly by the debtor, it cannot be said that, at the time when the petition is put in praying for his insolvency, he is able to discharge his debts in the ordinary sense of the term, namely that he is able to pay them off by making legal tender of the sum demanded. The fact that he might pay them off if a purchaser was available and if he had time given to convert his assets into cash does not appear to me to affect the question whether at the time of the presentation of the petition and up to the time when this point arises for decision he is or is not able to pay his debts. From this point of view therefore it appears to me that, at any rate, in a creditor's petition the debtor is "unable to pay his debts," if he has no sufficient liquid assets to discharge the same. It is a totally different question that in certain circumstances and under proper conditions the Court might view with sympathy a request by the debtor to have time to discharge the debts by liquidating his assets or not. The Court might, further, in a proper case, dismiss the petition as being unwarranted by the circumstances. But none of these considerations can apply to the case of a man whose Counsel very frankly conceded on his behalf that he was unwilling to pay his debts and who claimed that this Court should hold that he was "able to pay his debts" because he had unliquidated assets sufficient to discharge the debts if liquidated.

I would therefore hold that, so far as this point is concerned, the learned District Judge was wrong in holding that the debtor could not be declared an insolvent. I have only to add that the ruling referred to by the petitioners' Counsel and in the referring order in Harbans Singh v Kahla Singh (1) appears to have overlooked the provisions of s. 25, Insolvency Act, and only to have considered what the petitioning creditor ought to have proved in order to have his petition for insolvency entertained. The provisions of s. 25, however, relate to the defence that the debtor may put up even though the petitioning creditor satisfies the conditions required by the Insolvency Act and therefore it cannot be said that his ability or inability to pay his debts is not a circumstance into which a Court may enter when once the act of insolvency has been proved. The only other point left to be decided is the question whether the learned District Judge was right in holding that the debtor had committed "an act of insolvency." It appears that the debtor had parted with 414 kanals 7 marlas of land out of a total unencumbered property of 1211 kanals 10 marlas in order to save the property of his brother which otherwise was to be farmed out to somebody who had stood surety for the debt of his brother. The learned District Judge held that, in the circumstances of this case, the transfer was "an act of insolvency" within the meaning of s. 6 (b), Insolvency Act. The point does not appear to have been raised at all before the learned Single Judge at the time of the referring order. It is essentially a question of fact, and, ordinarily speaking, the decisions of the learned District Judge in the case would be final, but even without this, on examining the facts of the case, it would appear that the evidence on the record would show that, so far as the creditors are concerned, all they can get is the lease of certain land and the value of this lease would be insufficient to discharge the total debts of the debtor. To have such property further reduced by nearly one-fourth would obviously tend to defeat and delay his creditors, and I think the law should imply an intent to defeat and delay, though this may not have been the primary motive of the debtor in effecting this transfer. It would therefore accept this petition and hold that the debtor should be adjudicated an insolvent. The respondent will pay the petitioner's costs throughout. The case will go back to the Insolvency Court at Jhang for taking further proceedings, according to law.

Tek Chand, J.—I agree in the conclusion reached by my learned brother that this petition must be accepted and the respondent adjudicated insolvent. On behalf of the petitioners two contentions are raised before us. Firstly, it is urged that where the petitioning creditors successfully prove that Rs. 500 or more is due to them and that the debtor has committed an 'act of insolvency' as defined in s. 6 of the Act, the requirements of s. 9 are fulfilled and the Insolvency Court must adjudicate the debtor an insolvent forthwith and it has no jurisdiction to enquire as to whether the debtor is able to pay his debts. In support of this contention, reliance is placed upon a Single Bench decision of this Court, reported in Harbans Singh v. Kahla Singh (1). With great respect, I am unable to accept this decision as laying down the law correctly. It apparently proceeded upon the assumption that s. 9 is the only section in the Act governing a creditor's application for adjudication of the debtor as insolvent, and it entirely overlooked s. 25 of the Act. Section 9, however, lays down the conditions on which a creditor is entitled to present an insolvency petition against a debtor; while s. 25 enumerates the defences that the debtor may put forward and on proof of which he may successfully resist the petition and ask for its dismissal. That section expressly provides that the creditor's petition shall be dismissed if the debtor satisfies the Court (inter alia) that he is "able to pay his debts," or that for "any other sufficient cause" no order ought to be made on the petition. The onus to prove this, of course, lies upon the debtor; but if he alleges that he is able to pay his debts, the Court is bound to enquire into the matter and, if satisfied of his ability to do so, it must dismiss the petition. In this connection, reference may be made to Murli v. Sohoni Lal Bansi Lal (8) and Maung Po Sai v. Bank of Chettinad, Ltd. (9) where the proposition accepted in Harbans Singh v. Kahla Singh (1) was put forward but rejected. The provisions of the Act are explicit, and the respondent is clearly entitled to show that he is "able to pay his debts." This contention of the learned Counsel for the petitioners is, therefore, without force and must be overruled.

His second contention is that on the facts found the respondent must be held to have failed to prove that he is "able to pay his debts," and the lower Court has erred in law in coming to the contrary conclusion. It is common ground, that the onus to prove that the respondent is "able to pay his debts" lies on him; and the question is whether he has succeeded in discharging it. The facts found or admitted by the parties are: (a) that the respondent owes debts, amounting to Rs. 18,691 which have been outstanding for years against him: decrees have been obtained on some of these debts, payable in easy instalments, but the respondent has not paid anything substantial towards them; (b) that he is not possessed of any liquid assets with which to pay these debts; (c) that he owns agricultural land, the value of which has been found by the lower Appellate Court to be more than twice the aggregate amount of his liabilities; (d) that the respondent, being a statutory agriculturist, cannot be compelled to sell this land for payment of his debts. Therefore, unless he voluntarily sells or mortgages it to another agriculturist, all that his creditors can do is to have a temporary alienation, for a period not exceeding 20 years, of such portion of it as is left after setting apart a sufficient area for the maintenances of himself and his family: it is conceded that the amount for which such temporary alienation can be made, will be much less than the debts due and (e) that the respondent has made no attempt whatever to voluntarily raise money on this land for paying off his creditors nor is he willing to do so now. On these facts, I have no doubt that it must be held that he has not proved that he is "able to pay his debts." There has been some controversy before us as to the exact meaning of the expression "the debtor is able to pay his debts" as used in s. 25. The petitioner's learned Counsel has contended that this means that "he has no liquid assets wherewith to pay his debts at present" and in support of this contention he has referred to certain observations in the judgment of Rankin, C. J. in Pratapmal v. Chuni Lal Jahuri (3) which was a case under the corresponding provision of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act which is in identical terms with s. 25, Provincial Insolvency Act. But with great deference, I venture to think that this goes much further than the section. Neither s. 13 (4), Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, nor s. 25 of Act V of 1920 contains the words "at present" and there is nothing in the context to justify their being imported in it so as to hold that whatever be the extent of the marketable assets of the debtor if he is unable to meet all his liabilities forthwith by "making legal tender" of the total amount due, he is liable to be adjudicated insolvent. This would lead to startling consequences which if I may say so with respect are not warranted by the statute. As pointed out by Mukherjee, J. in Samiruddin v. Kadar Moyee Dassi, 7 Ind. Cas. 691 (10)

"although a debtor may not be able to satisfy the Court that he is then and there able to pay his debts, yet he may be able to satisfy the Court that there is a reasonable prospect of his being able to make such payment." the Court will dismiss the creditor's petition for adjudging him an insolvent. At the same time I am unable to accept the contention put forward by the respondent's Counsel and accepted by the lower Court that the mere fact that the "value" of the immovable property owned by the debtor is in excess of his liabilities is sufficient to prove his ability to pay his debts regardless of all other considerations. A person may own very valuable properties but they may not be marketable at all or there may be no prospect of any purchaser forthcoming to buy them within a reasonable time even though the owner has made and is willing to make every possible effort to raise money on them to meet his liabilities. It will be idle to contend in such cases, that the mere fact that the debtor owns valuable properties is per se sufficient to justify a finding that he is "able to pay his debts." What he has to show in each particular case is whether he possesses such realizable assets, as can within a reasonable time be made available to meet all his liabilities. In the case before us, it is obvious that the assets realizable at the instance of the creditors are much less than the debts due to them, and there is no reasonable prospect of the debtor paying them by voluntary alienation of his land. The debts have been due for a considerable time; the insolvency petition has been pending since October 25, 1935; but no effort whatever has been made by the respondent to pay off the creditors. Indeed, Counsel frankly stated that the respondent has no present intention of paying them anything by liquidating any of his assets. In the circumstances, it is obvious that the respondent is "unable to pay his debts" and that no "other sufficient cause" has been shown under s. 25 of the Act for the dismissal of the creditors' petition.

Before concluding this part of the case, it may be mentioned, that the respondent's Counsel relied upon Dad Khan v. Chandi Ram, 89 Ind. Cas. 585 (4), Moti Ram Prem Chand v. Kewal Ram Dharam Chand, 105 Ind. Cas. 569 (5) at p. 575, Kashmira Singh v. Badar Din, 120 Ind. Cas. 173 (6) and Allah Ditta v. Dewa Singh (7). These cases are, however, all distinguishable and it is not necessary to discuss them in detail. They all arose out of debtor's petitions for adjudication as insolvent, and the criteria for determining the question in such petitions are different. It may be stated, however, that the view taken therein is in accord with the rulings of the other High Courts: see Baldeo Das v. Sukhdeo Das (11), Thayarammal v. Balusami Chetty (12) at p. 396 and Ram Deo v. Preetam Singh (13). Where the debtor himself is the petitioner and is invoking the jurisdiction of the Court on the ground that he is "unable to pay his debts," he must make out a prima facie case that his liabilities exceed his assets and that he has made every effort to liquidate them but has not been able to raise the requisite funds. If, therefore, he possesses agricultural land or other rights in immovable property, which he can sell, and which, if sold, would bring in sufficient money to pay off the creditors, but he does not wish to do so, it cannot be said that he is "unable to pay his debts." It is, however, not necessary to pursue the matter further in this case.

At the close of his argument before us, respondent's Counsel raised another point, which he had not urged at the hearing before the Single Bench. He contended that the lower Appellate Court was in error in holding that in making the transfer in favour of the mortgage bank, the respondent had committed an "act of insolvency" within the meaning of s. 6 (b), Provincial Insolvency Act. It was admitted that out of a total of 1,211 kanals 10 marals of unencumbered land, the debtor had mortgaged 414 kanals 7 marlas to the bank within three months of the petition, but it was contended that this was not done with the "intent to defeat or delay the creditors." The intent however is to be gathered from the consequences of his act, and it is obvious that the transfer had the effect of substantially reducing the area, which was available to the creditors for realizing their debts by temporary alienation, and which itself was not enough to bring in sufficient money to discharge his existing liabilities. It may be, that the primary motive of the respondent in effecting the transfer was different, but that is immaterial. I hold that the petitioning creditors have fulfilled the conditions laid down in s. 9, and the respondent has failed to make out a case for the dismissal of the petition under s. 25. For these reasons, I agree that this petition must be accepted and the respondent adjudicated insolvent. The petitioner will get his costs in all Courts. The case will be

Second Appeal No. 400 of 1936

February 27, 1939

WASSCODEW, J.

RAICHAND GULABCHAND ACOHA—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

versus

SECRETARY OF STATE—DEFENDANT—
RESPONDENT

Bombay Land Revenue Code (Act V of 1879), ss. 65, 48, 213, 214—Code to be strictly construed—Determination of purpose to which building is put by farmer—Its character and amount spent, if material—Proprietor of land building godowns and using them for storing grass cut from his own land for selling it subsequently—If liable to non-agricultural assessment when his original intention was to use it for non-agricultural purpose—Rules framed under ss. 213 and 214, r. 91—"Any holding... assessed", meaning of.

The Bom. Land Revenue Code not only imposes a pecuniary burden on the subject, but restricts the use and enjoyment of his property. Such a statute must always be regarded as subject to the rule of strict construction. The proprietor is, therefore, entitled to ask the Court to construe it in his favour. [p. 497, col. 1.]

The character of the building or the amount of money spent upon its construction is immaterial in judging the purpose for which it is put eventually by the farmer. [ibid.]

The use of the words "farm-buildings, wells or tanks" in s. 65, Bom. Land Revenue Code does not exhaust but illustrates the kind of improvements intended by the Legislature to entitle the owner to the benefit of lesser assessment. The phrase "make any other improvements thereon for the better cultivation of the land" in s. 65 ought not to receive a narrow construction limited to some object directly connected with agricultural operations or the act of production merely. Any improvement which conduces to profitable husbandry and facilitates the marketing of agricultural produce, would be included within the class of improvements protected by s. 65. That would include the provision for store-houses made by an agriculturist for the protection of his agricultural produce until it leaves his farm. Thus, if grass as agricultural produce is cut, pressed, baled and stored in a godown with the object of eventually selling it when the market improves and it is profitable to sell the produce, the construction of such a godown which facilitates the object in question would be protected. The farmer produces his crops in order to sell the same and thus to provide the means to carry on further cultivation, that is, in other words, the business of farming or cultivation. Thus the use of the land being for agricultural purpose, its proprietor is not liable to non-agricultural assessment merely because he previously intended to use it for non-agricultural purpose, as the mere intention to use the property for non-agricultural purpose without its actually being so used will not enable the Govt. to alter the agricultural assessment. Hoddell v. Parker (2), distinguished. [p. 497, col. 2.]

The expression "any holding which has been assessed" implies "legally assessed." When therefore the basis for altered assessment fails, the levy of altered assessment would be illegal. [p. 498, col. 1.]

S. A. from a decision of the District Judge, Thana, in Appeal No. 111 of 1934.

Messrs. G. N. Thakor and K. V. Joshi, for the Appellant.

Mr. B. G. Rao, Assistant Govt. Pleader, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—This is a second appeal from a decision of the District Judge, of Thana. The question raised is whether in view of the character of the construction of the two godowns on the plaintiff appellant's agricultural land in Bhilad, the latter has rendered himself liable for the payment of the full rates of non-agricultural assessment for the land on which they were erected, irrespective of the actual use to which they were put by him. The plaintiff alleged that although at the time of building those godowns he intended to let them cut for strong grass to others, as there was no demand for such godowns ever since he built them, he had stored in them his own grass cut from his own varikas fields in order eventually to export the same to the market for sale. It was expressly admitted that only the grass cut but by the plaintiff from his own fields has always been stored by him in those godowns, and both the Courts below have held that the grass so stored belonged to the plaintiff and was not sold to any outsider. It seems that in 1921 the first godown was built with the express permission of the Collector upon an application stating that the intended use was unconnected with agriculture. The second godown was built in 1923, avowedly for the same purpose. Assessment was fixed at the maximum rates prevailing, namely Rs. 60 per acre. In consequence of certain representation of the plaintiff, and the latter's unwillingness to sign an agreement in favour of the Collector in regard to the levy of altered assessment, the Deputy Collector offered a reduced rate of Rs. 20 per acre.

Eventually in 1929, the plaintiff was dissatisfied of his position and refused to pass an agreement to the Collector according to the Rules and Standing Orders of Govt. The Collector notwithstanding that fact assessed the land by reference to its use, which he assumed was unconnected with agriculture. That assessment the plaintiff refused to pay, and he applied to the Collector in or about the year 1929 to re-consider his decision stating that the godowns were used exclusively by him for agricultural purpose only and that lesser rates should be levied. The plaintiff was willing to pay Rs. 12 per acre which was somewhat higher than the agricultural assessment (vide Ex. 29). No notice was taken of that representation. Therefore, the plaintiff filed this action against the Secretary of State for a declaration that the godowns had not been used for non-agricultural purpose, and that consequently the defendant was not competent to levy non-agricultural assessment on the property. He also prayed for a declaration that all orders passed in the matter for enhancement of assessment were illegal, and in the alternative, that the defendant could at the most levy assessment at the rate of Rs. 12 to Rs. 18 per acre. There was an additional prayer for refund of the excess assessment recovered from him.

Both the Courts below have held that the two godowns could not be described as farm-buildings, nor could they be described as an improvement for the better cultivation of the land. The learned District Judge took the view that, although the godowns provided proper facilities for storing the produce derived from the plaintiff's land, they were not exempt under s. 65, Bom. Land Revenue Code, for among the exempted buildings were those which enabled the agriculturist to live on the land, and to keep his implements and cattle there, and which provided facilities for cultivating the land in a proper way, and that the structures in question were not essential or necessary to enable the agriculturist to better cultivate his lands. He therefore confirmed the decree of the trial Court dismissing the plaintiff's suit with costs. Against that decree the plaintiff has appealed.

It cannot be denied that the basis of assessment of land by Govt. under the Bom. Land Revenue Code, is the use to which it is put by the owner or occupant. By erecting the two godowns on agricultural land, the utility of the land occupied by the godowns for actual cultivation necessarily ceased. But by mere cessation of cultivation it would not follow that the land was put to any other use unconnected with agriculture. That would depend on the question whether the cessation of cultivation was the result of its use for any other purpose. If it was so, the question would be whether that altered use was unconnected with agriculture within the meaning of s. 80 in

Chap. XIV, Land Revenue Rules, under ss. 213 and 214, Bom. Revenue Code, and of the provisions of the Code. What use is unconnected with agriculture has to be determined by reference to s. 65, Land Revenue Code. That section says:

"An occupant of land assessed or held for use for agriculture is entitled by himself, his tenants, agents, or other legal representatives to construct wells or tanks, or any other improvements thereon for the better cultivation of the land or its more convenient use for the purpose aforesaid."

Obviously, the use of the words "buildings, wells or tanks", does not exhaust but illustrates the improvements intended by the Legislature to entitle the owner to the better assessment. If the land is put to any use unconnected with agriculture, s. 65 of the Code would come into operation. The provisions of that section, which empower the Govt. to alter the assessment, are as follows:

"(1) The land revenue leviable on any land under the provisions of this Act shall be assessed, or deemed to have been assessed, as the case may be, by reference to the use of the land—

- (a) for the purpose of agriculture;
- (b) for the purpose of building; and
- (c) for a purpose other than agriculture or building."

"(2) Where land assessed for use for any purpose other than agriculture, the assessment fixed by the provisions of this Act upon such land, notwithstanding that the term for which such assessment may have been fixed has not expired, may be altered and fixed at a different rate by the authority and subject to such rules as the Govt. may prescribe in this behalf."

The determinative factor in the altered assessment according to the provisions is the altered use to which the property is put. In my opinion, the intention to use property for a particular purpose, without its actual use for that purpose, will not enable Govt. to alter the agricultural assessment, which is the lowest standard of assessment on property under the Land Revenue Code. It is contended on behalf of Govt. that the assessment was altered upon the plaintiff's own application to the effect that by building the godowns he was converting the land to a non-agricultural use, and secondly, that the admitted fact that the godowns have been put to use connected with agriculture as the plaintiff contends, do not constitute any improvement for the better cultivation of the land. It seems to me that that argument is not well founded. If the term "farm-building" is used in its ordinary sense, it ink, absorb within its meaning many kinds and classes of buildings such as store-houses for implements, manure, seed and farm produce. The godowns in question might fall under the last description. Although in point of outlay and stability the construction is more ambitious and expensive than the ordinary store-house to which the poor and backward Indian farmer is accustomed, the question is whether on that account alone the plaintiff should be penalized. There is authority of this Court which emphasizes the principle that the character of the building or the amount of money spent upon its construction is immaterial in judging the purpose for which it is put eventually by the farmer. Where the Court allowed wide interpretation of the term "agriculture" as used in s. 48; see Bhau Mahadu v. Vithal Dattatraya (1). In that connection the following observations appear in the judgment of Norman Macleod, C. J., (p. 612*):

"The only ground on which the judgment can be supported would be that this building was of such a substantial character that it was far too good to be used for agricultural purposes. But that is not the question. If it is put up for agricultural purposes, it does not matter how much the builder had spent on it."

Heaton, J. (as he then was) has also observed as follows (pp. 613, 614*):

"It is not shown in the judgments, it is not even suggested, that this substantial structure which the defendant put up was put up not in order that he might live there and conduct his agricultural work from there, but for some other purpose of profit."

It is too late in the day to suggest that a strong or substantial store-house or a godown is unnecessary for facilitating farm operations and the protection of agricultural produce, and I think the suggestion that, apart from the use, the substantial character of those godowns alters their character as farm buildings is unreasonable. The test applied by the Courts below in judging the character of the buildings is the direct and immediate effect of the use of those buildings on actual cultivation or farm operations apart from their potential or ultimate value to the farmer in the cultivation of his land. The Land Revenue Code not only imposes a pecuniary burden on the subject, but restricts the use and enjoyment of his property. Such statute must always be regarded as subject to the rule of strict construction. The proprietor is, therefore, entitled to ask the Court to construe it in his favour. If cultivation merely implies ploughing, sowing, tilling and reaping; without more, it might be said that any improvement directly connected with those acts alone is permitted by the statute. I find from Anderson's Land Revenue Rules that dairy farming has been allowed by Govt. to be regarded as part of agricultural use of land, and so also cane crushing and gum boiling: see pp. 78 and 79, 1921 Edn., printed under Govt. Resolution. That view follows the language of r. 80 in Chap. XIV of the Land Revenue Rules of 1921. It says:

"Where unalienated land assessed or held for purposes of agriculture only is subsequently used for any purpose unconnected with agriculture, the assessment upon the land so used shall... be altered under sub-s. (2) of s. 48 and such alteration shall be made by the Collector in accordance with the following rules."

The words "used for any purpose unconnected with agriculture" are significant and indicate the intention of Govt. In my opinion, the phrase "make any other improvements thereon for the better cultivation of the land" in s. 65 ought not to receive a narrow construction limited to some object directly connected with agricultural operations or the act of production merely. Any improvement which conduces to profitable husbandry and facilitates the marketing of agricultural produce would, in my opinion, be included within the class of improvements protected by s. 65. That would include the provision for store-houses made by an agriculturist for the protection of his agricultural produce until it leaves his farm. Thus, if grass as agricultural produce is cut, pressed, baled and stored in a godown with the object of eventually selling it when the market improves and it is profitable to sell the produce, the construction of such a godown which facilitates the object in question would be protected. The farmer produces his crops in order to sell the same and thus to provide the means to carry on further cultivation, that is, in other words, the business of farming or cultivation. I was referred to the case in Hoddell v. Parker (2), decided by reference to the provisions of s. 9, sub-s. (1), Locomotives Act, 1893. That case is clearly distinguishable on the facts. There a threshing engine was let out on hire by the appellants to a farmer to thresh wheat and to haul the wheat, when threshed, in trucks to a mill to be ground.

There was no evidence as to whether it was to be returned to the farm when ground. The trucks were the property of the owners of the threshing engine, and it was held that the engine, when being used for hauling the wheat to the mill, was not being used for an agricultural purpose. Here the facts are entirely different. The act of cutting and removal of the grass to a safe place in the farm itself must be regarded as necessary and innocent, being part of farm operations. That safe place is provided by the godowns in question erected on the farm. If the erection of those godowns is the gravamen of the charge, the plaintiff must be acquitted of the charge on the facts stated and admitted. The basis upon which the altered assessment has been levied fails, for notwithstanding the original intention to subject the property to non-agricultural use, it has never been so used.

The other argument urged on behalf of Govt. is that inasmuch as the plaintiff has accepted the legality of the altered assessment he cannot, by mere proof that he has not actually used the property according to his original intention, claim reduced rate of assessment. That argument, as I have pointed out above, is not in accordance with the principle governing the imposition of altered assessment. My attention has been directed to r. 91 of the Land Revenue Rules to the following effect:

"When any holding, which has been assessed or of which the assessment has been altered for any non-agricultural use is used for agriculture only, the Collector may, on the application of the holder, remove the non-agricultural assessment and impose either the old agricultural assessment, if any, and if the settlement period has not expired; or may impose in other cases a new agricultural assessment equivalent to that imposed on other similar agricultural lands in the vicinity.

It is difficult to say what act amounts to 'assessing' land. The mere fixing of assessment rightly or wrongly if it implies assessing land, r. 91 might come into operation, and I think the plaintiff would have then to proceed under that rule as a matter of formality. But, I think, that the expression "any holding which has been assessed" implies "legally assessed." When therefore the basis for altered assessment fails, the levy of altered assessment would be illegal. The plaintiff is therefore granted a declaration that he has not used the godowns in question for any purpose other than agriculture, and that so long as they are not so used, the land is not liable to altered assessment under the provisions of the Code at a different rate by such authority as prescribed in s. 48. The plaintiff is also allowed the consequential relief prayed for. Accordingly, this appeal is allowed, and the lower Courts' decrees are set aside, with costs throughout.

MADHO TURHA AND OTHERS—RESPONDENTS

Appeal—Abatement—Setting aside of—Held, sufficient cause was shown for setting aside abatement—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXII, r. 11, O. XLIII, r. 1 (k)—Order refusing to set aside abatement of appeal—Whether appealable.

The critical question in deciding whether an abatement should be set aside is whether sufficient cause has been shown and that is a matter for decision on the facts of each case. No hard and fast rule can be laid down as to what constitutes sufficient cause.

An application for setting aside the abatement of the appeal was made by the appellant on the ground that his law agent who was in charge of the appeal was neither living in the village nor had any touch with the village where the deceased respondent lived and that he came to know of the death of respondent only after several months from his death:

Held, that sufficient cause was made out for setting aside the abatement.

An appeal lies against an order refusing to set aside an abatement of an appeal. 174 Ind. Cas. 40 (1) and 85 Ind. Cas. 1010 (2), followed.

A. from the original order of the Additional District Judge, Shahabad, dated April 6, 1938.

Messrs. S. M. Mullick and B. P. Sinha, for the Appellant.

Messrs. A. D. N. Sinha and M. Azizullah, for the Respondent.

Chatterji, J.—This is an appeal against an order refusing to set aside an abatement of an appeal. There were 24 defendants in the suit, all residents of the same village, and they were also the respondents in the lower Appellate Court. Respondent No. 21 died on May 7, 1937, after notices of the appeal were duly served. On September 6, 1937, respondent No. 16 filed a petition stating that the appeal abated as respondent No. 21 died more than three months ago. On September 13, 1937, the appellant made an application for substitution of respondent No. 20 in the place of the deceased respondent. On the following day, however, respondent No. 18 intimated to the Court that the deceased respondent had left a son and two nephews who were not on the record. The matter was put up on the next day when the Court recorded an order that the appeal abated. Thereafter, on October 1, 1937, the appellant made an application for setting aside the abatement. The appellant is the Maharaja of Dumraon. The ground for setting aside the abatement was that the conduct of the appeal was in the hands of his law agent who lived at Arrah for the purpose and he came to know of the death of respondent No. 21 only when the petition was filed on September 6, 1937, by respondent No. 16. At the hearing the law agent gave evidence in support of the application. No evidence was adduced on behalf of the respondents. The learned District Judge has held that no sufficient case was made out for setting aside the abatement. He remarks that the deceased respondent being resident of a village where the appellant's patwari and tehsildar live, it was possible for him, if he was diligent, to keep himself informed of the death of respondent No. 21.

A preliminary objection is taken to the maintainability of the appeal. It is contended that O. XLIII, r. 1 (k) which provides for an appeal against an order refusing to set aside an abatement by its terms applies only to suits and not to appeals. However looking to the provisions of O. XXII, r. 11, it is clear that so far as abatement is concerned, 'suit will be deemed to include an appeal.' The matter is concluded by authorities of this Court. In Wajid Ali v. Fagoo Mandal (1), a similar objection was taken but it was overruled. Their Lordships with reference to the provisions of O. XXII, rr. 9 and 11 held that an appeal lies against an order refusing to set aside an abatement of an appeal. On the same point there is also the case in Hari Saran Singh v. Saiyid Mohammad Eradat Hussain 85 Ind. Cas. 1010 (2). These are Division Bench decisions of this Court and we have to follow them.

On behalf of the appellant Mr. Mullick, relying on the same decisions in Wajid Ali v. Fagoo Mandal (1), and Hari Saran Singh v. Saiyid Mohammad Eradat Hussain, 85 Ind. Cas. 1010 (2), contends that in an appeal after (1) 18 P L T 1014; 174 Ind. Cas. 40; A I R 1938 Pat. 125; 17 Pat. 84; 4 B R 379; 10 R P 471. (2) 85 Ind. Cas. 1010; A I R 1925 Pat. 162; 2 Pat. L R 279.

notices have been duly served on the respondents, it is not obligatory on the appellant to keep himself informed about the movements of the respondents. On behalf of the respondents on the other hand reliance is placed on the earlier cases in Mahanth Rampurkash Das v. Kunj Lal (3) and Phulwati Kumari v. Maheshwari Prasad Singh (4), which lay down that it is obligatory on an appellant to keep himself informed of any devolution of interest that may take place by reason of the death of any of the respondents and it is not sufficient for setting aside an abatement merely to say that the appellant had no knowledge of the death of the respondent till many months after such death. To my mind this proposition was too broadly stated. The critical question in deciding whether an abatement should be set aside is whether sufficient cause has been shown and that is a matter for decision on the facts of each case. No hard and fast rule can be laid down as to what constitutes sufficient cause. In this particular case the appeal was in charge of the appellants law agent, it is not suggested that he was living in the village or had any touch with the village where the deceased respondent lived. The reason given by the learned District Judge is that the appellant has his patwari and tehsildar in the village and if he had been diligent, he might have known of the death of the deceased respondent. This is hardly fair. There is nothing to suggest that in the ordinary course of business the appellant could have known of the death. Nor is there anything to show that the patwari or tehsildar had any connection with the appeal. The respondents do not suggest that the appellant's law agent who was in charge of the appeal had been to their village near about the time when respondent No. 21 died.

In the circumstances I do not consider that the learned District Judge was justified in rejecting the evidence of the law agent. Accepting his evidence, I would hold that sufficient cause was made out for setting aside the abatement. I would therefore allow the appeal and set aside the abatement and direct that the appeal be disposed of according to law. The abatement will be set aside on condition of the appellant paying the costs of the lower Court as well of this Court to the contesting

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 15—One of several decree-holders as result of arrangement arrived at between them, applying for execution of decree—Omission to state in application expressly that he was only one out of several decree-holders—Whether invalidates application—Application, if can be allowed to be amended so as to bring it into compliance with O. XXI, r. 15.

The omission in an application by one of several decree-holders for execution to mention that there are other decree-holders does not necessarily invalidate the application and when the attention of the Court is drawn to the defect, the Court can allow the application to be amended.

Where, therefore, one of the several decree-holders, as a result of an arrangement arrived at between them applies for the execution of the decree without expressly stating in the application that he is only one of the decree-holders, his application is not liable to be dismissed by reason of the defect and the Court can allow the decree-holder to amend the application in order to bring it into compliance with the requirements of O. XXI, r. 15. It is not open to the judgment-debtor to raise an objection to the arrangement arrived at between the decree-holders. He can only request the Court under O. XXI, r. 15, to see that his interests were not in any way jeopardized by payment to one out of many decree-holders. 135 Ind. Cas. 207 (1) and 122 Ind. Cas. 179 (2), relied on.

O. A. against the order of the Sub-Judge, Chittoor, dated November 12, 1936.

Mr. S. V. Venugopalachariar, for the Appellant.

Mr. N. C. Vijayaraghavachari and A. C. Sampath Ayyangar, for Respondents.

Burn, J.—The appellant was plaintiff No. 1 in O. S. No. 25 of 1930 on the file of the Subordinate Judge of Chittoor. There were 4 plaintiffs altogether and the decree passed in the suit was in favour of all of them. In E. P. No. 22 of 1936, on February 10, 1936, plaintiff No. 1 applied for execution of the decree without stating expressly that she was only one of the four decree-holders. It appears that in a subsequent suit, O. S. No. 42 of 1933, in the same Court which was a suit between plaintiff No. 1 and plaintiff No. 2 in O. S. No. 25 of 1930, there was a compromise by which these two persons agreed that out of the amount still due under the decree in O. S. No. 25 of 1930 plaintiff No. 1, Rani Veerammani Garu, should receive Rs. 3,000 and the balance should be taken by plaintiff No. 3, Rani Mahadevammani Garu, without any further claim by the first two plaintiffs in O. S. No. 25 of 1930. It was further declared in the decree in O. S. No. 42 of 1933 that the plaintiff be entitled to a first charge on the decree in O. S. No. 25 of 1930 to the extent of Rs. 3,000 with interest thereon and that she be entitled to execute the said decree in her own name to the said extent. It is recited in the decree that Rani Mahadevammani and Raja Mahadeva Raja Varu, plaintiffs Nos 3 and 4 in O. S. No. 25 of 1930, had recorded their consent to this arrangement in the compromise petition. It is not disputed that this latter recital is correct, when plaintiffs Nos. 3 and 4 did agree to plaintiff No. 1 taking Rs. 3,000 out of the amount decreed in O. S. No. 25 of 1930.

It is not known how the Court came to pass the decree in O. S. No. 42 of 1933 in these terms because it is not possible under the provisions of O. XXI, r. 15, for one of several decree-holders to execute the decree for his or her own benefit. However, the decree was passed and it is quite clear that all the joint decree-holders in O. S. No. 25 of 1930 did consent to that arrangement. It cannot therefore be alleged for a moment that plaintiff No. 1 when she filed E. P. No. 22 of 1936 was attempting to perpetrate any fraud upon the Court or upon her fellow decree-holders. The judgment-debtor in O. S. No. 24 of 1930 raised the objection that the execution petition was liable to be dismissed as it was filed only by one joint decree-holder. Notice was thereupon given to the other decree-holders in O. S. No. 25 of 1930 and they, for some unexplained reason, supported the objection raised by the judgment-debtor. The learned Subordinate Judge dismissed the execution petition outright. Mr. Sheetharama Rao who appears for the appellant in this Court concedes that the execution petition ought to have been filed on behalf of all the decree-holders in O. S. No. 25 of 1930 but suggests that in the circumstances, the lower Court would have been well advised to allow any necessary amendments to be made in the execution petition to bring it into accord with the provisions of O. XXI,

r. 15. Mr. Sampath Ayyangar who appears for the 3rd and 4th decree-holders in O. S No. 25 of 1930 has no strong objection to raise to such permission being granted at this stage. The learned Advocate for the judgment-debtor, however, opposes this suggestion. He says in the first place that the appellant, as soon as the defect in the execution petition was brought to her notice, might have filed a fresh application at once in accordance with O. XXI, r. 15 without pursuing the matter to the bitter end in the Subordinate Court and then preferring an appeal to this Court. He points out also that it is possible that by this time more than three years may have elapsed since the dismissal of the last prior execution petition. In that case he says that the judgment-debtor would be deprived of the plea of limitation if amendment of the execution petition were now allowed. We do not think that these considerations should prevent us from saying that the petition should be allowed to be amended now. It has been pointed out by Sir Shadi Lal in Ghanya Lal v. Madho Parshad (1) that the omission in an application by one of several decree-holders for execution to mention that there are other decree-holders, does not necessarily invalidate the application. The learned Chief Justice observes:

"Order XXI, r. 15, provides that any one or more of the joint decree-holders may apply for the execution of the whole of the decree for the benefit of them all; and it is nowhere laid down that the omission on the part of a decree-holder to state in his application the names of all the persons who are interested in the decree is such a defect as would invalidate the execution proceedings."

The learned Chief Justice then refers to a case decided by a Division Bench of the Calcutta High Court in which it was held that such an omission does not render the execution proceedings invalid. It is pointed out also in Dharmdeo Rai v. Jwala Prasad (2) that:

"Although under r. 15 of O. XXI, no duty has been cast upon the Court receiving the application for execution to have the defects remedied, it does not follow that if any requirements of r. 15 of O. XXI, have not been complied with by inadvertence or otherwise, the Court when its attention is drawn to the defect, subsequently cannot allow the amendment."

We agree with the observations of the learned Judges in that case at p. 190* where they observe:

"The learned Judge has dismissed the last application on the additional ground that only one of the two decree-holders applied for execution without making it appear on the face of it that it was made for the benefit of the legal representatives of the deceased co-decree-holder. In taking to this course, the learned Judge has allowed his mind to be influenced by too technical a consideration which is devoid of all substance and in utter disregard of the ends of substantial justice."

We think the same remarks apply here. It is quite clear, as we have already said, that the appellant was acting in perfect honesty when she applied for execution of the decree for her own benefit to the extent of Rs. 3,000. That was the arrangement which had been come to between the four decree-holders and it was not an arrangement to which the judgment-debtor could take a valid objection; he could only request the Court under O. XXI, r. 15, to see that his interests were not in any way jeopardized by payment to one out of four decree-holders. This being so, we think that this appeal must be allowed and the order of the learned Subordinate Judge dismissing the execution petition set aside. The execution petition must be restored to file and disposed of according to law after allowing the appellant to amend it in order to bring it into compliance with the requirements of O. XXI, r. 15. We think it is right to order that the appellant should pay the costs of all the respondents in the execution petition and in this appeal.

ALLSOP, J.

VISHWANATH PRASAD JALLAN AND ANOTHER—APPLICANTS

versus

HOLYLAND CINETONE, LTD, BENARES
—OPPOSITE PARTY

Companies Act (VII of 1913), s. 31 (2)—"Debt," meaning of—Signatories of Memorandum undertaking to purchase certain shares—No time for payment for such shares fixed—Shares, if can be forfeited on failure to pay before date fixed for payment by general public subscribing to shares.

It is no doubt true that money becomes a debt when it is due under the Articles of Association and Memorandum, but money does not become due merely because signatories of the Articles of Association or the Memorandum have undertaken to purchase shares and pay for them. There is a distinction between money which is due and money which is presently due and it is only money which is presently due which can be described as a debt. [p. 505; col. 1.]

The signatories of the Memorandum and Articles of Association of a certain company undertook to purchase certain number of shares each. There was no term in the Articles of Association or Memorandum by which the signatories contracted to pay any sum on any particular date or any particular time or on demand. The signatories failed to pay the prescribed amount of their shares on or before the date fixed by the directors for payment by the members of the public subscribing for the shares, and their shares were forfeited:

Held, that the amount was not presently due from the signatories and, therefore, their shares were not liable to forfeiture. Alexander v. Automatic Telephone Co. (1), referred to.

Mr. B. Malik, for the Applicants.

Mr. A. Sanyal, for the Opposite Party.

Order.—This is an application by Vishwanath Prasad Jallan and Piare Lal Srivastava containing three prayers, namely (1) that the register of the members of the Holyland Cinetone Co., Ltd., should be rectified and that the names of the applicants should be included in the said register, (2) that it be declared that the applicants are still directors and members of the company, and (3) that it be declared that the action taken after January 26, 1936, is void and illegal and does not bind the company and its shareholders. It is admitted that the first prayer only can be granted under the provisions of s. 38, Companies Act. This Court cannot give the other declarations asked for and I may say at once that the application in so far as it asks for those declarations is hereby rejected. There remains the question whether the names of the applicants should be entered in the register of the members of the company. In order to understand the dispute between the parties it is necessary to set forth certain facts in the history of the company.

The Memorandum and Articles of Association were subscribed by 17 persons on November 18, 1935. The capital authorized was 25 lacs, of which 10 lacs were to be issued. There were to be 20,000 ordinary shares of Rs. 100 each and 5,000 preferential shares of the same value. It was set forth that the qualification of a director was that he must have subscribed for 100 shares and that he must have paid all calls or any other moneys due to the company. Twelve of the signatories of the Memorandum and Articles of Association undertook to purchase 100 shares each and they were to be the first directors of the company. Their names were Madhoramsand, Gurucharan Prasad Khatri, Harinarain Moolchand, Gopal Lal Khanna, Durga Prasad, Bindbasni Prasad, Madan-gopal Kedia, Vishwanath Prasad Jallan, Vishnushankar, Kedarnath Singh, Thakur Chhedi Singh and Piare Lal Srivastava. It is to be noticed that the applicants are included in the lists. Each of the directors undertook in the Memorandum to subscribe for 100 shares and no more. Of the other five signatories, three undertook to purchase five shares each and the other two to purchase one share each.

A meeting of the directors was held on December 14, 1935, and four managing directors were elected, namely Madhoramsand, Gurucharan Prasad Khatri, Bindbasni Prasad and Madangopal Kedia. Doubtless the directors purported to act under Art. 115 of the Articles of Association, but this Article sets forth that the directors shall elect from amongst themselves five directors constituting the Board of Managing Directors of the company. It is to be noticed that only four were elected. The Managing Directors under the Articles of Association have been given very large powers. A meeting of this Board of Managing Directors was held on December 26, 1935, and it was decided at the meeting that the subscribers to the Memorandum who were directors should be asked to pay Rs. 2,000 to the company. This resolution was based on Art. 7 of the Articles of Association which says that the amount payable on application for each share offered to the public for subscription shall be 20 per cent. of the nominal amount of the share and another 20 per cent. shall be payable on the allotment of the share. The Managing Directors were asking the directors to pay on their shares the percentage corresponding with that which any member of the public would have to pay on application for shares, Rs. 2,000 being 20 per cent. of Rs. 10,000, the price of the shares which each of the directors had contracted to purchase. On January 17, 1936, the secretary of the company who happened at that time to be the applicant, Piare Lal Srivastava, wrote a letter to all the directors drawing their attention to provisions of s. 85, Companies Act, and indicating that they would cease to be directors if they did not pay the sum of Rs. 2,000 each on or before January 26, 1936. Section 85, Companies Act, lays down that it shall be the duty of every director, who is by the Articles required to hold a specified share qualification and who is not already qualified, to obtain his qualification within two months after his appointment, or such shorter time as may be fixed by the Articles. The January 26, 1936, was the end of the period of two months next after November 25, 1935, the date of registration. Madhoramsand, Gurucharan Prasad Khattri, Durga Prasad and Madangopal Kedia each paid a sum of Rs. 2,000 on January 25, 1936.

On January 26, 1936, there was a meeting at which the resignation of Moolchand was accepted and Thakur Ohhedi Singh was elected to the Board of Managing Directors, although he had not paid his sum of Rs. 2,000. Moti Chand was elected to the Board either under Art. 89 of the Articles of Association which gives the directors power to co-opt a qualified share-holder as a director or under Art. 90 which empowers the directors to elect any share-holder as an honorary director to the Board it not being necessary for such director to hold a qualification share. Moti Chand had not paid anything at that time to the company and he was not one of the signatories of the Memorandum and Articles of Association. Then on March 4, 1936, there was another meeting of the directors at which those present were Madhoramsand, Durga Prasad and Madangopal Kedia. No notice of this meeting was sent to those directors who had not paid the sum of Rs. 2,000. Presumably those who had paid had decided that the other directors could no longer act. It was originally set forth in the Articles of Association that the number of directors should not be less than 11 nor more than 21, but at this meeting the directors resolved that the minimum number should be reduced from 11 to 5 and that an extraordinary general meeting of shareholders should be held as soon as possible. The Articles required that there should be a quorum of five directors until it was otherwise determined, but that Article gave the directors power to regulate their meetings and proceeding as they thought fit and to determine the quorum necessary for the transaction of business.

A meeting of the directors was held again on March 5, 1936, but nobody appeared and the meeting was therefore adjourned by the General Manager to the next day, March 6. On that date the directors present were Madhoramsand, Durga Prasad and Madangopal Kedia and they decided that the quorum should be reduced to three. A meeting of shareholders was called for March 23, 1936, but it was adjourned for want of a quorum, the Article requiring that it was necessary for 15 members personally to be present to form a quorum at a general meeting. The meeting was adjourned to March 30, 1936, when it was attended by Madhoramsand, Durga Prasad and S. N. Mitra. This meeting proceeded to transact business under the provisions of Art. 68 of the Articles of Association which allows an adjourned meeting to transact business even if a quorum has not been formed. This meeting reduced the minimum number of directors to four. On April 11, 1936, there was again a meeting of directors at which Madhoramsand, Durga Prasad, Madangopal Kedia and Gurucharan Prasad were present. They confirmed the resolution of March 6, 1936. They accepted the resignation of Moti Chand who had been elected on January 26, and decided that legal action should be taken against those directors who had not paid the sum of Rs. 2,000 which they had been required to pay. On April 14, 1936, a meeting of the shareholders took place, but it was adjourned to April 21, 1936, for want of a quorum, and on April 21, the resolution of March 23, 1936, was confirmed. The next meeting of the directors was held on November 17, 1936. Those present were Gurucharan Prasad, Madhoramsand, Madangopal Kedia and Durga Prasad. They elected Shyam Sunder Lal, Jagannath Prasad and S. N. Mitra to be honorary directors. Article 90 of the Articles of Association states that the number of honorary directors shall in no case exceed three. At the same meeting Madangopal Kedia's resignation was accepted and it was decided that the directors should pay another sum of Rs. 2,000 this being the equivalent of the sum which would be payable by members of the public on 100 shares at the time of allotment. On the same date Durga Prasad resigned his position as Managing Director and Jagannath Prasad and S. N. Mitra were appointed to the Board of Managing Directors.

The next date with which we are concerned is December 13, 1936. By that time apparently an application had been made to the Registrar, Joint Stock Companies; that the company should be allowed to commence business and a certificate of commencement had been received from the Registrar. On that date the directors present were Gurucharan Prasad, S. N. Mitra, Jagannath Prasad, Shyam Sunder Lal and Durga Prasad. They saw the commencement certificate and decided that they would approach the defaulting directors individually in order to obtain payment. On December 28, at another meeting it was decided that further attempts should be made to obtain payment of this money. These efforts succeeded to some extent because Harnarain Mulchand paid Rs. 2,000 on January 1st, 1937. Madhoramsand and Gurucharan Prasad had paid a further sum of Rs. 2,000 each on April 1st, 1936 and Durga Prasad paid a sum of Rs. 2,000 on November 17, 1936. On December 29, there was a meeting at which Gurucharan Prasad, Shyam Sunder Lal and S. N. Mitra were present. They passed a resolution that a notice should issue formally to all the defaulting directors to make payment of the sums due from them. They warned the directors that their shares would be forfeited if they did not pay the sums due on or before January 15, 1937. Then there was a meeting on January 19, 1937, at which Jagannath Prasad, Gurucharan Prasad, Shyam Sunder Lal and Durga Prasad were present and this meeting passed a resolution forfeiting the shares. The applicants did nothing about this matter at the time but the company then sued them for a sum of Rs. 4,000 each and it appears that a decree has been passed against one of them while the suit of the other is pending. The decree which has been passed is now in appeal. It is explained on behalf of the applicants that they did not really wish to have anything to do with the company and that they would be quite content to give up their shares if they were not required to pay Rs. 4,000; but now they are in a position that they may be required, if the decree is upheld, to pay a sum of Rs. 4,000 each and at the same time to lose their shares in the company, and they feel, therefore that they are entitled to stand upon their strict rights to demand, if the resolution of forfeiture is invalid, that their names should be restored to the register of the members of the company.

The argument put forward in the first instance on behalf of the company was that the signatories to the memorandum became members of the company and were allotted shares automatically on the date when the company was registered and consequently on that date they were bound to pay a sum of 20 per cent. of the value of their shares as they would have had to do if they had applied for shares on that date and a further 20 per cent. as they would have to do if shares had been allotted to them on that date as members of the public. At a later stage in the arguments the company had to abandon this position because if it was the proper position, then a sum of Rs. 4,000 was due from each of the original directors on November 25, 1935, and no director was qualified to act under the Articles of Association unless he had paid the sum of Rs. 4,000 on or before January 26, 1936. If this is the true position then none of the directors who continued to act on behalf of the company was entitled to do so because none of them had paid Rs. 4,000 on or before January 25, 1936, and those who had acted would render themselves liable to a penalty of Rs. 50 a day under s. 85, sub-s. (2), Companies Act, provided that the argument of the company was correct that sub-s. (1) of s. 85 applied not only to the purchase of shares but also to the payment for these shares as part of the qualification for directorship under the Articles of Association. The directors who now purport to represent the company were on the horns of a dilemma. If this original argument of theirs was correct, they were liable at least to a severe penalty and if it was not correct, then they were certainly not entitled to forfeit the shares of the other directors merely because payments were not made on or before January 26, 1936.

The company therefore fell back upon the argument that these sums of 20 per cent. corresponding with application money and 20 per cent. corresponding with allotment money were payable from the dates on which they were respectively demanded by the company. Learned Counsel for the company relied on s. 21 (2), Companies Act, which says that any money payable by any member to the company under the Memorandum or Articles of Association shall be a debt due from him to the company. He maintains that this money which he considers to be due from the directors was a debt payable on demand. On the other side, it is argued on behalf of the applicants that there is nothing in the Memorandum or Articles of Association which requires them to pay any sums corresponding with those which would be payable by members of the public subscribing for shares at the time of application or at the time of allotment. It is undoubtedly true that there is no such specific provision either in the Articles of Association or in the Memorandum. It seems to me that s. 21 (2), Companies Act, does not help the company in this case. It is no doubt true that money becomes a debt when it is due under Articles of Association and Memorandum, but I think that money does not become due merely because signatories of the Articles of Association or the Memorandum have undertaken to purchase shares and pay for them. Subscribers who are members of the public also promise to take up and pay for shares, but the amounts due from them at any time are only such part of the price of the shares as they are required to pay at a particular time, that is the part they are required to pay on application, the part they are required to pay on allotment and the part that they may be required to pay if the calls are made upon them in accordance with the provisions of the Articles of Association. From the model Articles set forth in table A of Sch. I, Companies Act, it will appear that a distinction is made between money which is due and money which is presently due and in my judgment it is only money which is presently due which can be described as a debt. A question of this nature arose in Alexander v. Automatic Telephone Co. (1) where some directors of a company sought to compel others to pay on their shares in the same proportion as had been paid by share-holders who were members of the public. The case was decided under an English Act in which there were provisions similar to those in s. 21, Indian Companies Act, and it was held that the directors were not legally bound to make the payments, but that the Court of Chancery would compel them to pay upon the ground that they had been acting in contravention of the trust which had been reposed in them as directors of the company.

The Companies Act seeks to deal with a situation of this kind by the provisions of s. 103 which do not allow a company to commence business until every director has paid to the company on each of the shares taken or contracted to be taken by him and for which he is liable to pay in cash a proportion equal to the proportion payable on application and allotment on the shares offered for public subscription. In the case before me the directors who had signed the Memorandum of Association were bound to pay a sum of Rs. 4,000 each before the company was entitled to commence business. From this it does not necessarily follow that they were liable to forfeiture of their shares if they did not make the payment. As I have already said, there is no term in the Articles of Association or Memorandum by which the signatories contract to pay any sum on any particular date or any particular time or on demand or otherwise except in so far as the Articles allow the company to make calls on its members. The provision for calls was originally that the directors might from time to time make such calls as they thought fit upon the members in respect of all moneys unpaid on the shares held by them respectively and not by the condition of allotment thereof made payable at fixed times, and each member should pay the amount of every call so made on him to the persons and at the times and places appointed by the directors. There is no resolution of the Board of Directors requiring any members to make payments. There is only a resolution of the so-called Board of Managing Directors, but as I have already pointed out the Articles of Association required that the Board of Managing Directors should consist of five directors and four directors only were appointed. It seems to me therefore that these four directors were not entitled to exercise the functions of the Board of Managing Directors and the resolution passed by them requiring the other directors to pay these sums of Rs. 2,000 was not valid. The directors might have treated the so-called Managing Directors as a committee which could make a recommendation to them and, if the Board of Directors, as such, had passed a resolution that the recommendation of the Managing Directors that money should be demanded should be accepted, then possibly the directors would have had to pay these sums and if they had not paid them, they would have been sums presently due. In the circumstances of this case, however, I hold that these sums of Rs. 2,000 were never presently due and consequently that the directors were not bound to make payments.

It has been urged on behalf of the company that the result is unfortunate because some directors have prevented the company from functioning properly. I do not think that any unfortunate result need have arisen if the proper procedure had been adopted. If the majority of the directors were unwilling to pay the sums which they should have paid under s. 103, Companies Act, then the company would not have been able to commence business and if it did not commence business within a certain period, then it could have been wound up on the application of any member. Once it was wound up, all the sums due on the shares would have been available to the company and any necessary expenses incurred for promoting and registering the company could have been paid out and the whole matter would have come to an end. The company may say that it should not have been at the mercy of some of its directors, but on the other hand those directors are equally entitled to say that they should not have been at the mercy of the minority of their body. If the majority were unwilling to proceed with the matter and by their conduct automatically caused the winding up of the company, they were perfectly entitled to do so. I hold that these sums of Rs. 2,000 were never presently due from the applicants and therefore, that their shares were not liable to forfeiture. I may add that there are provisions for forfeiture in the Articles of Association and it is at least doubtful whether all the provisions were observed so as to lead to forfeiture even if it could be said that there was a call upon the applicants, but I do not think that it is necessary to go into the details of that matter because I have already held that there was no proper call and for that reason no money was due to be paid at any particular time by the applicants.

On the other hand, it seems to me that it is discretionary in the Court to pass an order for the rectification of the register of members and the fact remains that the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies has issued a certificate enabling the company to commence business which he would not have done if he had known that the present applicants as directors should have paid a sum of Rs. 4,000 each before the date when he issued his certificate. In these circumstances I do not think that I should exercise my discretion in favour of the applicants unless they make the payment which they should have made to enable the company to commence business. Learned Counsel on behalf of the applicants has suggested that his clients, if they pay Rs. 4,000, may find themselves in a very difficult position. He contends that all the proceedings of the company through the remaining directors after January 26, 1936, were absolutely void and there may be many complications.

I do not think that any possible complications should prevent me from passing a conditional order in favour of the applicants because what I propose to do is to impose the condition that the applicants shall pay these sums of money within a certain time and that their applications shall be rejected if they do not pay the money. The money will be deposited in Court and what eventually happens to it may be left to subsequent decision. It may be that it will be utilized towards the payment of any decrees which may be ultimately passed in favour of the company or it may be that it will be paid to the company when all disputes are set at rest or finally it may eventually be returned to the applicants. I direct that the register of members of the company shall be rectified by the entry of the names of the applicants or either of them on condition that each of the applicants or either of them deposits a sum of Rs. 4,000 in this Court on or before November 21, 1939. If either applicant fails to make the deposit within that time, his application shall be rejected. I do not pass any order for the payment of costs because both parties seem to be in some measure to blame for the state of affairs which has arisen.

Electricity Act (IX of 1910), ss. 44 (b) 26 (5)—Electricity Rules, r. 31—S. 44 (b) requirements of—Removal of meter from its old position after breaking of seals, to new position by extending service line—Offences under s. 44 (b) and r. 31, held, committed—R. 31, if conflicts with s. 26 (5).

Section 44 (b) Electricity Act does not require that the "works" laid or connected up with any other "works" belonging to the licensee must also be "works" belonging to the licensee. "Works" as defined in s. 2 (n) of the Act includes electric supply lines. The supply line, therefore, up to the point at which it enters the meter comes within the meaning of "works" as defined in s. 2 (n).

Held, that the accused in laying the additional line from the former position of the meter up to its new position was laying "works" within the meaning of s. 44 (b), and he laid that line for the purpose of connecting it with other works belonging to the licensee, namely the old supply line which terminated at the original position of the meter. His act, therefore, clearly amounted to an offence within the meaning of s. 44 (b).

Held, further that as the accused broke open the seals which had been placed by the company upon the meter, his act clearly amounted to an offence under r. 31 (1) of the Electricity Rules.

Rule 31 of the Electricity Rules does not deal with cases which s. 26 (5) contemplates but deals with the tampering with the seals placed on a meter which is already working. There is, therefore, no conflict between r. 31 and s. 26, sub-s. (5).

N. J. Wadia, J.—This is an application in revision against a conviction of the accused by the Presidency Magistrate, Third Court, Bombay, under s. 44 (b), Electricity Act, and r. 31 (1) read with r. 122 (a) Electricity Rules, 1937. The applicant, accused No. 2, is an electrical contractor and engineer. Accused No. 1, who is not before us, was the owner of a building in Kolbhat Lane. The Bombay Electric Supply and Tramways Co. had been supplying electricity to the building, and on March 4, 1937, accused No. 1, the owner of the building sent a requisition to the company asking for an estimate for the work of shifting the meter board from its old position on the verandah to a new position. The company sent an estimate of Rs. 112. This estimate was considered excessive by both the accused, and, on May 21, 1937, another letter was sent to the company who repeated their former estimate. Accused No. 2, the contractor, then had an interview with the Assistant Manager of the company and asked for a reduction of the estimate which the company refused to make. The first accused then wrote a letter to the company on September 21, 1937, in which he stated that as they were not prepared to be "reasonable, he gave them 48 hours' notice under s. 44, Electricity Act, and a similar notice under r. 29, Electricity Rules, that he would break the seals, remove the meter board and reconnect it in the new position. The accused then got the meter board removed to the new position, accused No. 2 doing the work as contractor. The company thereupon prosecuted them under s. 44 (a) of the Act and r. 31, Electricity Rules, 1937. The learned Magistrate has held that both the accused were guilty under s. 44 (b), and under r. 31 (1) read with r. 122 (a), and has convicted them. Accused No. 2 has applied in revision.

Section 44 (b) of the Act provides that whoever lays or causes to be laid, or connects up any works for the purpose of communicating with any other works belonging to a licensee, without such licensee's consent, shall be liable to a certain penalty. The case of the prosecution was that the accused removed the meter from the old position in which it was placed, after breaking the seals placed on the meter by the company, to a new position about 30 feet further away, and extended the company's service line from where it had originally ended at the meter to the place where it entered the meter in its new position. The learned Counsel for the applicant contended that the act of the accused does not amount to any offence under s. 44 (b) of the Act inasmuch as the new wiring which he laid did not connect up any work belonging to the licensee company with any other work belonging to the company. Section 44 (b) does not require that the "works" laid or connected up with any other "works" belonging to the licensee must also be "works" belonging to the licensee. In fact it is obvious that the section could not mean that, since it would be impossible for anybody but the licensee to lay a new work belonging to the licensee. "Works" as defined in s. 2 (n) of the Act includes electric supply lines. Under r. 35 of the Electricity Rules, 1937, with s. 19-A of the Act, the point at which the supply of energy by a licensee to a consumer shall be deemed to commence, where the amount supplied is ascertained by meter, is the point at which the conductor enters the meter. "Electric supply line" is defined in s. 2 (f) of the Act as meaning a wire, conductor or other means used for conveying, transmitting or distributing energy. The supply line, therefore, up to the point at which it enters, the meter comes within the meaning of "works" as defined in s. 2 (n). That being so, the applicant in laying the additional line from the former position of the meter up to its new position was laying "works" within the meaning of s. 44 (b), and he laid that line for the purpose of connecting it with other works belonging to the licensee, namely the old supply line which terminated, at the original position of the meter. His act, therefore, in our opinion, clearly amounted to an offence within the meaning of section 44 (b).

In carrying out the work of removing the meter from its old position to its new one, the accused broke open the seals which had been placed by the company upon the meter, and his act clearly amounted to an offence under r. 31 (1) of the Electricity Rules. That Rule provides that a licensee may affix one or more seals to any meter placed upon a consumer's premises in accordance with r. 40 and no person other than the licensee shall break any such seal. It is contended that s. 26, cl. (5), permits a consumer to do this, that r. 31 conflicts with this section, and where there is a conflict between a rule and a section of the Act, the section ought to prevail. Section 26 (1) does not deal with the breaking of the seals placed on a meter. Section 26 (1) deals with the providing of meters, and cl. (5) says that a consumer shall not connect any meter referred to in sub-s. (1) with any electric supply line through which energy is supplied by a licensee, or disconnect the same from any such electric supply line, without giving to the licensee not less than 48 hours' notice in writing of his intention. The clause deals with a case of connecting a new meter with the company's supply line. Clause (1) provides that the consumer is not bound to take the company's meter and may provide his own, and in a case of that sort, there would be no question of breaking the seals of the meter since no seals would be placed by the company on the meter till after it had been connected. Rule 31, therefore, does not deal with cases which s. 26 (5) contemplates. The Rule deals with the tampering with the seals placed on a meter which is already working. There is therefore no conflict between r. 31 and s. 26, sub-s. (5), and the applicant's act clearly did not fall within the purview of s. 26 (5). He did not merely connect a new meter with the existing supply line of the company, but removed a meter which had already been sealed by the company by breaking open its seals, and altered its position by extending the supply line of the company and then fixing the meter in a new position. His act, in our opinion, clearly amounted to a breach of r. 31. The conviction of the accused both under r. 44 (b) and r. 31 (1) read with r. 122 (a) was, therefore, correct. The application is dismissed and the Rule discharged.

Rule discharged.

Second Appeals Nos. 126 and 127

Stamp Act (II of 1899), Sch. I, Art. 1—Document, when comes within mischief of Art. 1—Document held did not so come—Question whether certain document falls within mischief of Art. 1, if can be decided on authority of one decision—Precedents.

In order to bring a document within the mischief of Art. 1, Sch. I of the Stamp Act, what has to be established is that it is an acknowledgment of a debt created in order to supply evidence of such debt. This article requires something more than an acknowledgment of a debt. The primary question is whether the document was brought into existence with the "dominant intention" of supplying evidence of the debt. The fact that the document is apt to serve other purposes does not absolve the Court from enquiring, as it is enjoined to do, by Art. 1, what was the purpose for which it was meant. [p. 511, col. 2.]

There was a running account between A and B, throughout the period of transaction consisting on the one hand of the loans by A to B and on the other hand of price of goods supplied by B to A. It was the practice at the end of each month, for A to submit B a statement. Each statement opened by bringing forward from previous month the balance of the account. The statement then stated the cash loans made by A to B and on the other side the value of the goods supplied by B to A. At the end a balance was struck below which B put his signature accompanied by no other writing and handed it over to A which then remained in his possession:

Held, that taking into consideration the course of business between these two parties, and the facts that these transactions were continuing transactions, and at no point of time was it ever contemplated that any of these particular balances, except possibly the last one, would ever become payable in cash by B to A, the real purpose for which these documents were brought into existence was not the supply of the evidence of an actual debt, that that money was actually due, but simply as one of a series of statements of accounts which for the convenience of the parties were exchanged at fixed intervals. It was not, therefore, a document required to be stamped under Art. 1, Sch. I, Stamp Act.

On the question whether a particular document in suit amounts to an acknowledgment of a debt, one decision can hardly be an authority for another, for each case must depend on its own circumstances. 15 Ind. Cas. 279 (2), relied on. [p. 512, col. 2.]

S. As from the judgment of the District Court, Mandalay, in O. A. No. 53 of 1937.

Mr. K. C. Sanyal, for the Appellants.

Mr. Chari, for the Respondents.

Judgment—This is a point which lies within a very small compass but is nevertheless not quite free from difficulty. The suit was originally tried in the Court of the Sub-Divisional Judge of Mandalay. The plaint discloses that the plaintiffs were merchants dealing in, among other things, hides, while the defendants were alleged to carry on a business in partnership as butchers. It is then said—and this much is common ground between the parties—that for some years past there had been an arrangement between them under which moneys were from time to time lent by the plaintiffs to the defendants, while the defendants from time to time supplied the plaintiffs with hides which were no doubt derived from the animals used by the defendants in their capacity as butchers. And between the plaintiffs and the defendants there was, therefore, throughout the period during which this arrangement lasted, a state of running account consisting on the one hand of the loans by the plaintiffs to the defendants and upon the other hand of the price of hides supplied by the defendants to the plaintiffs. It is for the balance of that account as on March 31, 1934, which is the date on which the arrangement is said to have come to an end, that this suit has been brought.

The balance is said to have been Rs. 504-9-6 to which is added an almost equal sum for interest, making the total claim Rs. 988-6-6. I need not, I think, for the present purpose deal with the defence. It is sufficient for me to say that the case was tried by the Sub-Divisional Judge who came to a conclusion, based, as it seems to me, upon the circumstance that he was unable to admit in evidence a certain document, which is Ex. A in the case. That document is in the form of an account signed by one of the defendants and by means of it, it was sought by the plaintiffs to prove the debt. The Sub-Divisional Judge in the course of his judgment observes that if that set of accounts is admissible, then the case is concluded in favour of the plaintiffs. But he went on to hold that the document in question was inadmissible in evidence for any purpose and, accordingly, upon the remaining materials before him he was unable to find the plaintiffs' debt established. That was taken on appeal to the District Court of Mandalay and the learned Judge of that Court took the same view of the document which is Ex. A.

Upon appeal in this Court the primary point that I have to consider is whether, as a matter of law, the Sub-Divisional Judge was right in excluding Ex. A from his consideration. The ground upon which it has been said that Ex. A is admissible in evidence for no purpose is that it is a document which falls within the mischief of Art. 1, Sch. I, Burma Stamp Act. And, for the purpose of determining whether or not it is a document such as is described in that Article, it will be necessary for me to consider carefully both the nature of Ex. A itself and the circumstances in which it is brought into existence. But before I do that, I must refer to the terms of Art. 1, Sch. I, to the Act itself. That Article reads thus:

"1. Acknowledgment of a debt exceeding twenty rupees in amount or value, written or signed by, or on behalf of, a debtor in order to supply evidence of such debt in any book (other than a banker's pass-book) or on a separate piece of paper when such book or paper is left in the creditor's possession."

Then follows the Proviso with which I am not concerned. Thus, there are a number of conditions to be fulfilled before any particular document qualifies as an acknowledgment of a debt so as to be liable to a one anna stamp duty under this Article. First and foremost, it must be an acknowledgment of a debt exceeding Rs. 20 in amount or value; secondly, it must be written or signed by or on behalf of a debtor; thirdly, it must be so written or signed in order to supply evidence of such debt; fourthly, it must be so written or signed in a book or on a separate piece of paper and fifthly, if it is in a book, that book, or if it is on a paper, that paper, must be left in the creditor's possession. I may say at once that in this case the document in question was constituted by a separate piece of paper and there is no dispute but that such separate piece of paper was left in the plaintiffs' possession. We are, therefore, not concerned with the fourth and fifth of those conditions. I have in dealing with a statutory provision of this kind to deal with the matter strictly. It has been pointed out in more than one place that the penalty for omitting to stamp with a one anna stamp a document that should be so stamped under this Article is important because the Act, whether by design or not, I do not know, has omitted to give any opportunity for having it stamped under the usual penalty.

If the document offends against this Article, then it is admissible in evidence for no purpose whatever and by no means can it be made so admissible. It has been rightly pointed out that that is a very severe penalty for what after all is not a very serious loss to the revenue. However that may be, and however inclined a Judge might be on that account to take a generous view of the requirements of the Article, nevertheless one must, when faced with this question, decide it strictly and judicially. I shall have again to refer to this Article but I propose now to deal with the document itself and the circumstances in which, so far as I can tell from the evidence, it was brought into existence.

During the currency of the arrangement between the plaintiffs and the defendants, to which I have already drawn attention, it was the practice at the end of each month for the plaintiffs to submit to the defendants a statement which the defendants, or rather defendant No. 1 in particular, in the circumstances that I have before me signed and then handed back to the plaintiffs. I have been in some doubt as to whether the defendants obtained or were given each month a copy for themselves; but upon a reference to Ex. E written by the plaintiffs to the defendants, so far as I can see, it would seem that a copy of the account was either retained by or given to the defendants. The monthly statements, at any rate in three instances, namely those for January, February and March, 1934, which I have before me, are written upon sheets which are, I think, the ordinary bill sheets of the plaintiffs. It may be that it is the notepaper of the plaintiffs, or it may be that it is their bill form. I do not think it matters much. In either case, it contains in print the plaintiffs' name, their description, their address and all the other items of business interest that are usually found in documents of this kind.

The first of these statements, that for January—and I emphasize that the exhibited statements are only three instances of the statements that were delivered regularly each month during the term of the arrangement—is in this form. It opens by bringing forward from the previous month the balance of the account. In this case there was at the beginning of the month of January a debit against the defendants for Rs. 419-1-6. They are then debited with a sum of cash which may have been a cash loan and on January 20, they are debited with another cash loan of Rs. 100 and there are two trifling items of three annas each to their debit, the meaning of which I do not know. On the other side of the account they are given credit in that month for

Rs. 37 and Rs. 44 which no doubt represent the value of hides supplied by them during the month. And, as a result of that, the month closes with a debit of Rs. 468-3-0 in favour of the plaintiffs against the defendants. Beneath that is placed the signature of defendant No. 1. It is accompanied by no writing; it is simply signed by defendant No. 1.

The account for February is in the same form and is similarly signed. The concluding balance against the defendants is Rs. 399-13-6. The March statement again is precisely similar and ends with a balance of Rs. 504-9-6 in the plaintiffs' favour. That is the principal sum which is now sued for and that document, like its predecessors, has been signed by Ebrahim without a comment of any kind. The point I desire to emphasize again is that those three documents are the three concluding documents of a series which as far as I know—I think it is admitted by the parties—lasted throughout the term of the business relations between the parties.

There is one other matter of fact which I think I ought to mention, which is that the plaintiffs held two promissory notes for Rs. 100 each. One or both of these promissory notes are unstamped and are of course inadmissible in evidence; but that does not, I think, prevent me from taking notice of the promissory notes themselves and the fact that the promissory notes were unstamped, I think, is a matter extraneous to the point I have to decide. So far as the oral evidence in the case goes, it is remarkable having regard to the contest involved in this suit that no really explicit evidence is given as to why the monthly statements of which Exhibits A are the samples were brought into existence by the parties. Abdul Shakur says in his evidence-in-chief:

"Every month we used to make statements of accounts. We used to take the signature of one of the defendants on these statements. The defendants had had dealings with us for the last 13 years. Exs. AA and B are the extracts from our books of accounts."

I should perhaps have said, in order to make it quite clear, that the statements, the contents of which I have been explaining, were really only extracts from the plaintiffs' books. We have the relevant pages of the plaintiffs' books themselves in evidence and it is clear that each of the monthly statements was a mere copy of the plaintiffs' own account. Abdul Shakur goes on to say:

"Exhibits A, A-1 and A-2 were the statements of accounts made and the signatures thereon are those of Ebrahim, defendant No. 1. These exhibits are in my handwriting. Ebrahim signed them in my presence."

An in cross-examination he says:

"The accounts were settled once in a month or once in two months. Then sometimes we took back such receipts from the butchers but we did not do so sometimes."

And later on in cross-examination he says:

"When I made out statements of accounts, I required the butchers (that, of course, is the defendants) to bring the receipts which they had obtained from the durwan."

That refers to the receipts for hides delivered by the defendants to the plaintiffs during the course of the arrangement. And a little later on he says:

"The butchers brought receipts issued by the durwan when I made out statements. The money we gave to the butchers are not loans but advances for supply of hides though promissory notes were taken."

Abdul Gaffar, the assistant manager of the plaintiffs, says:

"The procedure adopted in all offices is to advance money to butchers on promissory notes as well as without promissory notes and such advances are entered in the books of accounts. When hides are supplied we pay one-anna less than the market price. When the butchers stop supplying hides to us, we charge interest on the advances and file suits against them."

Abdulla, the sixth plaintiffs' witness, said in examination-in-chief.

"The accounts were settled once a month. The durwan kept a small book in which he noted receipts. The plaintiffs kept a small box. When accounts were settled, entries were made in the big book maintained by the plaintiffs."

Ebrahim himself, defendant No. 1, says:

".....we settled accounts once in ten days or once in two or three months. "Now that is really the whole of the evidence so far as it has been given in this case; but, having regard to the real point which has emerged, I cannot say that it is either very explicit or very helpful. Having explained therefore what Ex. A is and the circumstances in which it came into existence as well as I can, I must now refer for a moment to Art. 1, Sch. I, to the Act. In order to bring a document within the mischief of this Article, what has to be established is that it is an acknowledgment of a debt created in order to supply evidence of such debt. When this case was first opened, I was inclined to take a strong view that where you find a document of any kind with a balance struck and a debtor's signature attached to it, it must necessarily be an acknowledgment of a debt. But having regard to the authorities that I have been referred to and to a further consideration of Art. 1, I have been reluctantly compelled to admit that the question is not quite so easy to decide.

It may well be that the view which I have admitted, I was in the first place inclined to take contains part of the truth. It may well be that, when you find a document either in the form of this Ex. A or in one of the numerous other forms upon which litigation has arisen in the various cases to which my attention has been drawn, the signature of a debtor attached to a statement does, among other things, amount to an acknowledgment of a debt. But it has to be appreciated—and it is not easy to appreciate at first sight—that this article requires something more than an acknowledgment of a debt. It requires an acknowledgment of a debt brought into existence in order to supply, that is for the purpose of supplying, evidence of such debt. When a man writes a figure on a piece of paper and signs it, it may well be that in one sense that is an acknowledgment of a debt; but the purpose for which he writes it may or may not be the purpose of furnishing his debtor with evidence of the debt. There may be a hundred and one reasons why such a piece of paper is brought into existence. I have endeavoured in saying that to express in my own words what is shortly and better expressed in the words of Sir Walter Scrwabe, C.J. of Madras in Surjimull Murlidhar v. Ananta Lal (1). He says:

"The first question that arises is whether any particular document is given to supply evidence of the debt. It is quite clear to my mind on the authorities that the question is whether it is given with the dominant intent to supply evidence of the debt and it has been held that where the document contains other entries from which it is right to deduce that the intention is to arrive at a statement of account or to put on record payments on either side, the intention to be inferred from the sending of the document, although it contains a balancing item at the end, is not to supply evidence to the creditor."

It is the first part of that passage to which I am drawing attention, namely, that the primary question is whether the document was brought into existence with the "dominant intention" of supplying evidence of the debt. The fact that the document is apt to serve other purposes does not absolve the Court from enquiring, as it is enjoined to do by Art. 1, what was the purpose for which it was meant; that is the reason why I have endeavoured to point out that a document may well be a document which is an acknowledgment of a debt and may still not be a document which is an acknowledgment of a debt within the meaning of Art. 1. Even though it is an acknowledgment of a debt it does not come within the mischief of Art. 1 unless it was created in order to supply evidence of such debt; so that what we have to seek here is the intention of the plaintiffs and the defendants in bringing into existence Ex. A. I have been referred to a large number of authorities, but I may say at once, that except in so far as any authority contains any statement of principle other particular cases are not of assistance in this case; each case must depend upon its own facts as was pointed out by Woodroffe, J. in Galstaun v. Hutchison (2). The learned Judge in that case in his opening words points out:

With that I respectfully agree and it is for that reason that I do not propose to refer to the many authorities which have been cited to me. I have to search for the intention with which Ex. A was created. Mr. Chari, on behalf of the respondents to this appeal, says that I cannot reasonably find that Ex. A was created for any other purpose than the purpose of furnishing evidence of a debt. Mr. K. U. Sanyal on the other hand, on behalf of the appellants, says that the view I should take upon the facts and the history of this particular case is that the series of documents, of which Ex. A contains three, are merely periodical documents brought into existence for the purpose of record.

Now it has to be borne in mind in this case what the nature of the transactions was. On the one side, namely on the plaintiffs' side it is quite definite that particular sums of money were advanced from time to time. But on the defendants' side entries, it is not quite so clear cut. The defendants were supplying hides apparently through the plaintiffs' durwan who entered the number of hides received in his notebook. No particular price was fixed for the hides, but they were to be supplied at the market price less one anna, and bearing that in mind, it supplies, in my opinion, an intelligible reason why at the end of each month a statement should be made of the hides supplied; because the defendants could then see first of all the number of hides for which they had been given credit and the price at which they have been brought into the account. That is the first point which has struck me.

The second point is this. As I have already pointed out more than once, this was a running account and the last of these accounts, although it happens to coincide with the date on which the agreement seems to have terminated, is no different from any of the earlier accounts. If therefore we take, for instance, the January account, it is dated January 31. Whether or not it was actually signed on that date I do not know. But bearing in mind that these transactions were continuing transactions and went on almost from day to day, one has to appreciate that at no given moment except possibly upon the very day on which the document was signed is this document evidence of what the defendants were actually owing to the plaintiffs. I am not sure whether I have made the point clear. For instance, if on February 15, 1934, the plaintiffs had been minded to sue the defendants, then on that date the first of the documents comprised in Ex. A is not evidence of what the debt was. There is no doubt that it is capable of being used as evidence of what was owing on January 31. But at no given point except possibly at the moment at which it is signed is it evidence of any particular debt.

Now bearing these considerations in mind, bearing in mind the course of business between these two parties, bearing in mind that these transactions were continuing transactions and bearing in mind that at no point of time was it ever contemplated that any of these particular balances, except possibly the last one, would ever become payable in cash by the defendants to the plaintiffs, it seems to me to be impossible for me to say that the real purpose for which these documents were brought into existence was the supply of the evidence of an actual debt. As I have said if you take any one of the balances other than the last one on March 31, 1934, it would be quite impossible for anybody to contend that it was ever within the contemplation of either party that the actual sum so stated as the balance would be paid by the defendants to the plaintiffs. Take the January one; nobody contemplated that Rs. 468-3-0 should be paid by the defendants to the plaintiffs. It was contemplated by the parties that the transaction would go on and that the balance would, in the course of time, become more or less than that and it seems to me that the balance was struck and signed, not for the purpose of being evidence that that money was then due but simply as one of a series of statements of account which for the convenience of the parties were exchanged at first intervals. That seems to me to be the real purpose of Ex. A. The question is not free from difficulty and I have had to determine it as best as I can. I regret to take a different view from the view taken by the learned Judge in first appeal because as I have said I think it admits of much argument each way. Having taken that view, I am bound to come to the conclusion that the document in question was wrongly excluded from evidence by the Township Judge inasmuch as, in my opinion, it was not a document required to be stamped under Art. 1 of Sch. I. It seems to me, therefore that the proper course to take is to allow this appeal and to remand the case to the Township Judge now to be tried upon the footing that the document has been wrongly excluded from evidence and should now be admitted. It will be remanded to the District Court to re-try it upon all the issues other than issues Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4 and 11. The costs of this appeal which I assess at five gold mohurs will be costs in the suit.

Case remanded.

Privy Council Appeal No. 10 of 1939

BENNET AND VERMA, JJ.

SRI NARAIN KHANNA—APPLICANT

versus

SECRETARY OF STATE—OPPOSITE PARTY
Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 110—Amount granted by lower Court in land acquisition case, increased by High Court—There is affirmation of decision—Questions relating to method of calculating value of bungalows for land acquisition are substantial questions of law.

Where in a case under the Land Acquisition Act, the District Judge has granted certain amount and on appeal the High Court has increased that amount, it must be taken for the purposes of s. 110, Civil P. C., that the decision of the lower Court has been affirmed by the High Court and therefore it must be shown that the appeal involves some substantial question of law. 182 Ind. Cas. 367 (1), and 62 Ind. Cas. 516 (3), relied on, 86 Ind. Cas. 501 (4), distinguished, 135 Ind. Cas. 234 (3), explained.

Where the grounds of appeal refer to questions of law relating to method of arriving at the value of bungalows for the purposes of land acquisition they are substantial questions of law.

P. O. A. for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council.

Messrs P. L. Banerji and B. Mukerji, for the Applicant.

Mr. S. K. Dar, for the Opposite Party.

Bennet, J.—This is an application on behalf of one Sri Narain Khanna for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council against an appellate decision of this Court in F. A. No. 166 of 1935. The application is made under s. 110, Civil P. C., and s. 109 (c), Civil P. C., has been added to-day. The facts are that there was a land acquisition case in Meerut and Sri Narain Khanna made an application under the Land Acquisition Act to the District Judge and the District Judge granted Rs. 26,238. Sri Narain Khanna appealed to this Court and we increased that amount by Rs. 9,902 and allowed interest. The amount claimed by Sri Narain Khanna before the District Judge and in this Court and in the proposed appeal to the Privy Council is over Rs. 10,000. The first question is whether he has a right of appeal under s. 110, Civil P. C. This provides:

"And where the decree or final order appealed from affirms the decision of the Court immediately below the Court passing such decree or final order, the appeal must involve some substantial question of law."

Learned Counsel claims that it is not necessary to show a substantial question of law because the decree of this Court does not affirm the decision of the District Judge. Now, the decision of this Court affirms the decision of the District Judge so far as the grant by the District Judge of Rs. 26,238 is concerned. The decree of this Court grants a further amount in favour of the appellant of Rs. 9,902. It is not against this further increase that the appellant desires to appeal as that increase is in his favour. It appears to us that the natural construction of the wording of s. 110 is that this is a case where the decree has affirmed the decision of the Court below. The decision of the Court below was that Rs. 26,238 should be granted to Sri Narain Khanna and that decision stands good and is, therefore, affirmed. Some metaphysical argument was made that the decree of the District Judge read by inversion means that nothing more could be granted and this Court did grant something more and therefore it should be read as varying the decree of the District Judge. We do not think that this is a fair construction of the language of s. 110, Civil P. C.

Reference was made by learned Counsel to a case not yet reported, Raj Dei Bibi v. Babu Radhika Prasad, P. O. A. No. 24 of 1938 decided by another Bench of this Court on September 16, 1938. The facts of that case were that the trial Court had dismissed the suit of the plaintiff against defendant No. 7. Plaintiff appealed and the High Court decreed Rs. 8,872-8-0 for the plaintiff against defendant No. 7 and the plaintiff desired to appeal to the Privy Council for a larger sum. The Bench held that this was a case where the decree or final order of the trial Court had not been affirmed. The decree of the trial Court was that the plaintiff should receive nothing from defendant No. 7. That was certainly not upheld by the High Court and therefore the case is in our opinion quite a different one from the present case. The view which we have taken has been held by this Bench in a reported ruling, Wiqar Ali Khan v. Narain Das (1) and that follows another reported ruling, Kamal Nah v. Bithal Das (2). It is true that some observations were made against the validity of this ruling by the late learned Chief Justice in Nathu Lal v. Raghbir Singh (3) to the effect that by implication their Lordships of the Privy Council had overruled that view of law in Annapurna Bai v. Ruprao (4) but that view was not stated in the judgments of the other two learned Judges in that Full Bench. We have distinguished this ruling of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the reported ruling, Wiqar Ali v. Narain Das (1). We consider, therefore, that to bring the case under s. 110 it must be shown that the appeal involves some substantial question of law. Now, the grounds of appeal do refer to certain questions of law and these questions relate to the method of arriving at the value of bungalows for the purposes of land acquisition. In our opinion they are substantial questions of law. Permission has already been given to the Secretary of State to appeal from this particular decision of this Court on these questions. We think, therefore, that it is a case where permission should be granted and accordingly we certify that this case is a fit one for appeal to His Majesty in Council.

PATNA HIGH COURT

August 29, 1939

HARRIES, C. J. and FAZI ALI, JJ.

DURGA SINGH AND OTHERS—

APPELLANTS

versus

KESHO LAL AND ANOTHER—

RESPONDENTS

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), ss. 6, 130—Claim to debt which cannot be conferred by action is not property—Part of debt, whether assignable—Act, if makes distinction between whole debt and part of debt—Held on facts that assignment was of a distinct and separate debt and not part of debt.

Fazi Ali, J.—Under the T. P. Act, "debts" are actionable claims. It follows that a claim to a debt which cannot be enforced by action, as for example, when the debt is barred by limitation, is not property. The same limitation must apply to a part of a debt; and, in order to determine whether or not it is property, whether an action can be sustained to recover it. Thus if claim to a part of a debt cannot be enforced under O. II, r. 2, Civil P. O., it is not an actionable claim and s. 130 can have no application to it. [p. 517, col. 2; p. 518, col. 2.]

The T. P. Act does not recognise any distinction between a whole debt and part of a debt. Both may be transferred under that Act, if they come under the category of "actionable claims" as an actionable claim is "property." The transferee of a part of a debt may, however, find that what is transferred to him is not an actionable claim as under O. II, r. 2, Civil P. O. a single cause of action cannot be allowed to be split up into several causes of action. Order II, r. 2 being a rule of procedure, it does not affect the right of transfer, that is to say, it cannot make what is transferable non-transferable. It does, however, bar the right of suit in certain cases and it may prevent the transferee of a part of a debt from enforcing his claim and thereby make the transfer nugatory:

(Indian and English Case-law discussed.)

Held, on facts that the assignment was not an assignment of part of a debt but was in substance and in fact an assignment of a distinct and separate debt. It was accordingly a valid assignment which gave the assignee a right to sue. [p. 518, cols. 1 & 2.]

L. P. A. against a judgment of Mr. Justice Rowland, dated November 11, 1938.

Messrs. K. Sahi and Avadhesh Nandan Sahai, for the Appellants.

Mr. Bhubaneswar Prasad Sinha, for the Respondents.

Fazi Ali, J.—This is an appeal from a decision of Mr. Justice Rowland in a suit brought by the respondents to recover a certain sum of money from the appellants. The suit was decreed by the trial Court, but was dismissed on appeal by the lower Appellate Court. Mr. Justice Rowland has in second appeal set aside the judgment of the lower Appellate Court and restored the judgment of the trial Court. The defendants first party who contested the suit have accordingly preferred this appeal under the Letters Patent.

The circumstances which gave rise to this litigation may be briefly stated as follows: On November 6, 1923, defendant No. 11 executed a zarpehgi lease in respect of a seven pies share in Mauza Bahpuri Majurahi in favour of the appellants (defendant first party). On November 10, 1928, he mortgaged the same property to defendant No. 12 for a sum of Rs. 1,000 and on October 13, 1932, he borrowed a sum of Rs. 330 from the latter by executing a hand-note in his favour. On June 23, 1933, he sold to the appellants the property already mortgaged to them and defendant No. 12 for a sum of Rs. 5,000. It was recited in the sale-deed that out of the total sum of Rs. 5,000, Rs. 2,125 had been set off against the mortgage-debt due to the vendees on the basis of the mortgage dated November 6, 1923, and a sum of Rs. 2,227 had been left in deposit with them for the purpose of paying off the mortgage dues of defendant No. 12. The balance of the consideration money, namely, Rs. 648 was paid in cash. As the debt due to defendant No. 12 from defendant No. 11 on the hand-note was not paid by the appellants, defendant No. 11 had to borrow a sum of Rs. 450 from the plaintiff for the purpose of paying it off and on January 28, 1935, in consideration of the advance made by the plaintiff to him he executed a registered deed (Ex. 1) by which he assigned to him (the plaintiff) his right to realise a sum of Rs. 500 from the appellants. It was recited in the deed of assignment that the sum of Rs. 2,227 which had been left with the vendee represented the total sum due on the date of the sale to defendant No. 12 from defendant No. 11, both on the mortgage-bond dated November 10, 1928, and the hand-note dated October 13, 1932. It was also stated that by mistake the dues under the hand-note had not been mentioned in the sale-deed though the understanding between the parties was that this debt should also be paid off out of the money left with the appellants. After the assignment the plaintiff brought the present suit to recover the sum of Rs. 500 with interest up to the date of the suit calculated at the rate mentioned in the handnote dated October 13, 1932, and prayed that the money claimed should be charged on the property which had been sold by defendant No. 11 to the defendants first party. The suit was decreed by the Munsif but his decision was reversed by the Subordinate Judge on the ground that in law a part of a debt could not be assigned and therefore the plaintiff had no right of suit. This view was not accepted in second appeal by Mr. Justice Rowland who accordingly set aside the judgment of the Subordinate Judge and restored the decree of the Munsif. The principal point therefore which arises in this appeal is whether the assignment of a part of a debt is valid in India.

The point is a somewhat difficult one and it does not appear to have been fully discussed in any of the Indian authorities cited at the Bar. In Sabjan Sahib v. Abdul Azzeez Sahib, 42 Ind. Cas. 684 at p. 693 (1) Seshagiri Ayyar, J. sitting singly made an observation to the effect that the omission of the word "absolute" from s. 130 of the T. P. Act which deals with the assignment of actionable claim "was a deliberate departure from the rule of English Law and indicated that an assignment of part of a chose in action can be given effect to under the T. P. Act." In Doraiswami Mudaliar v. Doraiswami Aiyangar (2) Ramesam, J. (also sitting singly) dissented from the observation of Seshagiri Ayyar, J. and after referring to certain English cases expressed the view that the assignment of part of a debt is not valid. In Raja of Ramnad v. Subramanian Chettiar (3) a Bench of two Judges of the Madras High Court followed an earlier case of 1919 in preference to the decision of Ramesam, J. in Doraiswami Mudaliar v. Doraiswami Aiyangar (2) but all that they said on the point is to be found in the following passage:—

"The transfer of a part of a debt was not recognised in English Common Law, but the assignment of a part of a debt was always held to be good in equity and was deemed to pass the property in that portion of the debt. In enforcing such claim, it would be necessary to implead the owner of the other portion of the debt, but apart from that there is no objection in equity to enforcing a claim for part payment of a debt (vide in Re: Steel Wing Co.). It has also been held that the partial transfer of a debt is valid in Appeal No. 53 of 1919 in this Court, and this objection must therefore be disallowed although there is a remark in Doraiswami Mudaliar v. Doraiswami Aiyangar (2), which throws some doubt upon this conclusion."

In Ghishulal Ganeshi Lal v. Gambhirmal Pandya (4) a Division Bench of the Calcutta High Court consisting of Lord-Williams and Jack, JJ. expressed a contrary view but they did not discuss the point and based their decision wholly on Doraiswami Mudaliar v. Doraiswami Ayyangar (2) decided by Ramesam, J.

It will not be out of place here to refer to certain cases decided in England after the passing of the Judicature Act of 1873. It is well-known that according to the Common Law of England choses in action could not, as a rule, be assigned but in equity such assignments were allowed to be made from a very early date and even at Common Law an assignee was generally allowed to sue in the name of the assignor and in some cases under a power-of-attorney obtained from him. After the passing of the Judicature Act, 1873, however, s. 25 (6) of that Act enabled the legal right in debt or other thing in action to be transferred to the assignee together with all remedies including the right to sue in his name. Section 25 of the Judicature Act has now been superseded by s. 136 of the Law of Property (15 Geo. Ch. 20) which runs as follows:—

"Any absolute assignment by writing under the hand of the assignor (not purporting to be by way of charge only) of any debt or other legal thing in action, of which express notice in writing has been given to the debtor is effectual in law (subject to equities having priority over the right of the assignee) to pass and transfer from the date of such notice (a) the legal right to such debt or thing in action; (b) all legal and other remedies for the same, and (c) the power to give a good discharge for the same without the concurrence of the assignor, etc., etc."

Now, the question as to whether a part of a debt was assignable under s. 25 of the Judicature Act appears to have been raised in many cases, but it has not yet been authoritatively answered. In Brice v. Bannister (5) Lord Coleridge expressed the view that such an assignment fell within the Act, but on appeal Cotton, L. J. treated the particular assignment as a case of equitable assignment. In Durham Bros. v. Robertson (6) Chitty, L. J. questioned the correctness of the view expressed by Lord Coleridge in Brice v. Bannister (5) and observed:

"The decision of Lord Coleridge, O. J., in Brice v. Bannister (5), that the case fell within the 25th section appears to me to be open to question..... The section speaks of an absolute assignment of any debt or other chose in action. It does not say "or any part of a debt or chose in action." It appears to me as, at present advised to be questionable whether an assignment of part of an entire debt is within the enactment. If it be, it would seem to leave it in the power of the original creditor to split up the single legal cause of action for the debt into as many separate legal causes of action as he might think fit. However, it is not necessary to decide the point in the present case, and I leave it open for future consideration."

In the same case Collins, L. J. while agreeing with Chitty, L. J. refrained from pronouncing any opinion on the question whether an assignment of a part of a debt was within s. 25, sub-s. (6) of the Judicature Act of 1873. In Jones v. Humphreys (7) an assignment of "so much and such part of my income, salary and other emoluments from H. As shall be necessary to pay a definite sum and any further sums in which I may hereafter become indebted to you" was held by Darling, J. to be not such an assignment as was contemplated by s. 25 sub-s. (6) of the Judicature Act. The learned Judge observed that "having regard to the expression of opinion by Chitty, L. J. in Durham Bros. v. Robertson (6) it is extremely doubtful whether the assignment being of part of a debt only would come within the Act." Lord Almonston, O. J. and Channell, J., however, refrained from expressing any opinion in that case as to whether an assignment of a part of a debt fell within the section. In Forster v. Baker (8) a judgment-creditor having assigned a part of the judgment-debt for valuable consideration, the assignee applied for leave to issue execution. It was held by Bray, J. that there could not be an absolute assignment within s. 25 (6) of the Judicature Act of a definite part of an existing debt or other legal chose in action. The Court of Appeal, however, without expressing an opinion on the point held that as the original judgment-creditor could only issue a single execution upon his judgment and could not split up the judgment-debt and issue separate executions upon the different parts, he could not give to an assignee of a part of the judgment-debt a right which he himself did not possess. In Hughes v. Pump House Hotel Co., Ltd., (9) Mathew, L. J. did not express any definite opinion on the question, but observed:

"In the course of the argument the question was raised whether an assignment of part of a debt comes within s. 25 of the Judicature Act, 1873. We are not called upon to decide that question in this case, and I will express no opinion upon it further than to say that, as at present advised, I think, when that question arises for decision, much may be said in favour of the view than an assignment of part of a debt could not be an absolute assignment within the section."

In Skipper & Tucker v. Holloway & Howard (10) Darling, J. (notwithstanding the fact that he had expressed a contrary view in Jones v. Humphreys (supra) (7) held that an assignment of part of a debt came within s. 25 of the Judicature Act, but in Forster v. Baker (supra) (8) Bray, J. refused to follow the decision and observed as follows:—

"But if an absolute assignment of part of a debt is valid under s. 25, sub-s. (6), the consequence is that the assignee is able to sue the debtor without joining the assignor or the assignee of the other part of the debt, if there have been two assignments; and it may happen that if the debt had been split up into two, three or four parts, there might be two, three or four actions with different results. All sorts of difficulties would arise, and a great burden, an unnecessarily great burden, would be placed upon the debtor. In the case of a judgment-debtor that consideration applies with even greater force because the remedy on a judgment-debt is execution, and the result would be that if a judgment-debt was divided into, say, three or four parts, each of which was assigned to a different person, there might be three or four executions, and three or four petitions in bankruptcy, and the debtor might be considerably and unnecessarily harassed. These considerations, in my opinion, point to the fact that I ought not, unless compelled by the language of the section, to construe the words "legal debt or chose in action" as including part of a legal debt or part of a chose in action."

In re: Steel Wing Co., Ltd. (11) P. O. Lawrence, J. agreed with the opinion of Bray, J. as expressed in Forster v. Baker (supra) (8) and held that the assignment of part of a debt does not operate to pass the legal right to that portion of the debt as it is not an assignment within s. 25, sub-s. (6) of the Judicature Act. He, however, held at the same time that such an assignment does operate in equity to transfer the part assigned and it constitutes the assignee a creditor for the original debtor. It may be stated here that this view was perfectly in consonance with the opinion expressed in a long line of cases and even in Durham Bros. v. Robertson (supra) (6) Chitty, L. J. though he questioned the correctness of Lord Coleridge's dictum in Brice v. Bannister (5) (supra), conceded that the assignment in question before him was valid as an equitable assignment.

In Bank of Liverpool and Martins, Ltd. v. Holland (12) which was decided in 1926, it was held firstly, that an assignment of a debt which limited the amount to a certain sum was good on the ground that it was an assignment of the whole debt with a proviso that any excess of certain sum must be held by the assignee as trustee for the assignor and secondly, that even if it was an assignment of part only of the debt, it would still be a good equitable assignment and the plaintiffs were entitled to recover.

It will thus appear that though the point cannot be taken to have been finally settled in England, the weight of authority in that country seems to be in favour of the view that the assignment of a part of a debt does not operate to pass the legal right to that portion of the debt under s. 25, sub-s. (6) of the Judicature Act, but such an assignment would operate in equity to transfer the part assigned and constitute the assignee a creditor for the original debtor. In India, however, the position is somewhat different, because if it is found that a part of a debt cannot be assigned under the T. P. Act, it will be difficult to hold that such an assignment can still be valid in equity. The first question to be answered therefore is whether a part of a debt can be validly assigned under the T. P. Act. The answer to this question depends on whether a part of a debt is "property", because s. 6 of the Act clearly provides that "property of any kind may be transferred except as otherwise provided by this Act or by any other law for the time being in force".

Now, at the first sight it would seem that if the whole debt is property, as it undoubtedly is, a part of the debt must be so. The matter is, however, not so simple as it seems. Under the T. P. Act "debt" belong to a particular species of property, namely, actionable claims. An actionable claim has been defined as "a claim to a debt the . . . which the Civil Courts recognise as affording grounds of relief". It follows that a claim to a debt which cannot be enforced by action, as for example, when the debt is barred by limitation, is not property. The same limitation must, in my opinion, apply to a part of a debt; and, in order to determine whether or not it is property, we must find out whether an action can be sustained to recover it.

At this point it seems necessary to refer to O. II, r. 2, which runs as follows:

(11) (1921) 1 Ch. 349; 80 L J Ch. 116; (1920) B. & C R 160; 24 L T 684; 65 S J 240.

"(1) Every suit shall include the whole of the claim which the plaintiff is entitled to make in respect of the cause of action; but a plaintiff may relinquish any portion of his claim in order to bring the suit within the jurisdiction of any Court.

(2) Where a plaintiff omits to sue in respect of, or intentionally relinquishes, any portion of his claim, he shall not afterwards sue in respect of the portion so omitted or relinquished."

This rule in my opinion meets the point so emphatically raised in the judgments of Chitty, L. J., in Durham Bros. v. Robertson (6) and of Bray, J., in Forster v. Baker (8) (supra). Both the learned Judges have pointed out that if a part of a debt can be legally transferred, it would seem to leave it in the power of the original creditor to harass his debtor by splitting up the single cause of action of his debt into as many legal causes of action as he might think fit. This rule will, in my opinion, prevent him from doing so. It appears to me to be elementary that a creditor cannot confer upon his assignee a higher right than what he himself possesses. Thus if he himself could not sue the debtor twice with regard to parts of the same debt under O. II, r. 2, he cannot be allowed to defeat that provision by assigning one part of a debt to one person and another part to another. There is, however, nothing to prevent him from relinquishing one part of the debt and transferring another part, as such an assignment will be tantamount to an assignment of the whole debt which remains unpaid after a part of the debt has been relinquished. He may also transfer one part of the debt to one person and another part to another person and the two assignees may possibly jointly sue the debtor in a common action and ask for a joint decree in respect of the whole debt. But once a suit has been brought on a part of the debt, then no suit can be brought subsequently for the remaining part either by the creditor or by any person to whom he assigns the remainder. It appears to me that the assignment of the remainder in such a case must be ineffectual because as the creditor himself cannot sue upon it, it ceases to be his property and he cannot be transferring it to another person confer upon him a higher right than what he himself possessed.

Reference may also be made in this connection to s. 130 of the T. P. Act which provides the mode of transferring an actionable claim. The language of this section bears some resemblance to the language of s. 25 (6) of the Judicature Act, 1873, and s. 136 of the Law of Property Act, 1925, but it is not precisely the same. One of the points of difference which alone need be pointed out here is that while the two English Acts speak of the assignment of "any debt or other legal chose in action", s. 130 of the T. P. Act purports to deal with the "transfer of an actionable claim" only. The difference may at the first sight appear to be one without distinction as the definition of "actionable claim" include a claim to a debt, but that definition also provides that it must be such a claim as the Civil Courts recognise as affording grounds of relief." Thus if claim to a part of a debt cannot be enforced under O. II, r. 2, it is not an actionable claim and s. 130 can have no application to it.

Thus the conclusion which I have arrived at may be summed up in a few words. The T. P. Act does not recognise any distinction between whole debt and part of a debt. Both may be transferred under that Act, if they come under the category or "actionable claims" as an actionable claim is "property." The transferee of a part of a debt may, however, find that what is transferred to him is not an actionable claim as under O. II, r. 2, a single cause of action cannot be allowed to be split up into several causes of action. Order II, r. 2, being a rule of procedure, it does not affect the right of transfer, that is to say, it cannot make what is transferable non-transferable. It does, however, bar the right of suit in certain cases and it may prevent the transferee of a part of a debt from enforcing his claim and thereby make the transfer nugatory.

I have dealt with the question as to whether or not a part of a debt can be transferred at some length in view of its general importance as well as because we have been pressed to do so by the learned Counsel for the appellant. In my opinion, however, the present case can be decided on a short and simple ground apart from this question. As I have already said, it was recited in the appellants' own sale-deed that a sum of Rs. 2,227 had been left in deposit with them for the purpose of paying off the mortgage dues of defendant No. 12. On calculation it appears that the mortgage dues of defendant No. 12 amounted only to Rs. 1,855 odd on the date of the sale-deed and the dues on the hand-note amounted to Rs. 371 odd on that date and to Rs. 501 on January 28, 1935, when Ex. 1 was executed by defendant No. 11 in favour of the plaintiff. Thus defendant

No. 11 had left with the appellants a surplus sum of money over and above the amount which was payable to defendant No. 12 on the basis of his mortgage. This sum clearly represented a single and whole debt and not part of a debt and there can be no doubt that it could be validly assigned by defendant No. 11 to the plaintiff. The appellants' Counsel has pointed out that in the deed which was executed by defendant No. 11 in favour of the plaintiff it has been expressly stated that what had been transferred to the plaintiff was a part of Rs. 2,227. That is undoubtedly so but the deed must be read as a whole, and when read as a whole, it clearly shows that according to the statement made by defendant No. 11 in that deed, he left with him two distinct sums, one payable to defendant No. 12 on the basis of a mortgage-deed and another on the basis of a hand-note. These two items being quite separate, there was nothing to prevent defendant No. 11 from recovering them by two separate suits brought on two different occasions especially when in the deed executed by defendant No. 11 in favour of the appellants no time was fixed for the payment of the two debts due to defendant No. 12. Thus the debt of Rs. 500 which was assigned by defendant No. 11 to the plaintiff was a distinct and separate debt and not merely part of a debt. In my opinion, therefore, even if we were inclined to hold that a part of a debt cannot be assigned under the T. P. Act, the assignment in favour of the plaintiff could not be held to be invalid.

Another point which was raised on behalf of the appellants was that the amount decreed by the trial Court cannot be charged on the property sold to them. It is unnecessary to decide this point as the respondent does not press for a charge. I would, therefore, direct that instead of a decree for charge, a money decree only be passed in this case, and subject to this modification, I would dismiss the appeal with costs.

Harries, C. J.—I agree that this appeal should be dismissed. Upon the facts of the case, I agree that two sums were left in deposit with the purchaser, one sum to pay off what was due on the mortgage and one sum to pay off what was due on the hand-note.

What the assignor assigned was the sum left with the purchaser to pay off the hand-note dues together with interest thereon. The assignment was not an assignment of part of a debt but was in substance and in fact an assignment of a distinct and separate debt. It was accordingly a valid assignment which gave the assignee a right to sue. This is sufficient to dispose of the appeal, and the point whether part of a debt is assignable does not strictly arise. In these circumstances, I prefer to express no opinion in this judgment upon the very difficult point as to whether a part of a debt is assignable.

Order of Sessions Judge passed in revision under
s. 111, Bombay Municipal Boroughs Act (XVIII of 1925)—Second revision, if lies—Interference, when justified.*

The fact that revision is allowed to one Court by a statute does not necessarily exclude a further application in revision to the High Court. The High Court has jurisdiction under the Civil P. C. in a proper case to entertain an application in revision against an order in revision passed under s. 111, Bom. Municipal Boroughs Act, but such applications should be very sparingly entertained. The mere fact that the Sessions Judge has gone wrong in his law is not a ground which would justify the High Court in interfering in revision, in other than very special circumstances. 175 Ind. Cas. 891 (2), relied on, 112 Ind. Cas. 585 (1), not followed.

C. R. App. from an order of the Additional Sessions Judge, Sholapur, in Criminal Revision Application No. 8 of 1938.

Mr. P. B. Gajendragadkar, for the Applicant.

Mr. S. K. Aragade, for the Opponent.

Beaumont, C. J.—This is a civil revision application, which was referred to a Bench because there appeared to be some difference of opinion between a decision of a Bench of this Court in Ahmedabad Municipality v. Vadilal (1) and a decision of Norman, J., in Surat Borough Municipality v. Hamiduddin (2). The point is a very short one.

(1) 30 Bom. L. R. 1084; 112 Ind. Cas. 585; A I R 1928 Bom. 376; 29 Cr. L. J. 1081.

Under s. 110, Bom. Municipal Boroughs Act, 1925, appeals against demand notices under the Act may be made to any Magistrate or Bench of Magistrates by whom, under the directions of District Magistrates, such class of cases is to be tried. Then s. 111 provides for a revision application against any such decision on appeal by the Magistrate or Bench of Magistrates being made to the Court to which appeals against his or their decisions ordinarily lie. In the present case an appeal under s. 110 was made to a First Class Magistrate from whose decision an appeal lay to the Sessions Court. That would be so in most cases though there might be a case in which an appeal would lie to a First Class Magistrate. The position is somewhat anomalous, because the question of liability to tax is a purely civil matter, and the Magistrate hearing an appeal against a demand notice is a Criminal Court, so that an appeal lies from him to the Sessions Court, and not to the District Court. It was held by this Court in Ahmedabad Municipality v. Vadilal (1) that the Sessions Judge in a case of this sort was exercising powers of a Civil Court and not of a Criminal Court, and therefore no revision lay under the Criminal P. C.; and I think that the learned Judges in that case rather indicated the view that no revision application lay to this Court in any capacity. Under the Civil P. C., s. 115, the High Court may call for the record of any case which has been decided by any Court subordinate to such High Court, and in s. 3 it is provided that for the purposes of the Code the District Court is subordinate to the High Court. Of course, the Sessions Court is not subordinate to the High Court for the purpose of the Civil P. C. but it has been held that s. 3, Civil P. C. is not exhaustive, and this Court on many occasions has entertained revision applications against orders of the Collector passed in revision under the Mamlats' Courts Act, though the Collector is not a Subordinate Court under s. 3. Those cases also show that the fact that revision is allowed to one Court by a statute does not necessarily exclude a further application in revision to the High Court. It certainly would seem anomalous that this Court should have jurisdiction to revise a civil order made by a District Judge and a criminal order made by a Sessions Judge, who, of course, is the same individual, but should not have power to revise a civil order made by a Sessions Judge sitting under a statute temporarily as a Civil Court. I am disposed to agree with the decision of Norman, J. in Surat Borough Municipality v. Hamiduddin (9) that this Court has jurisdiction under the Civil P. C. in a proper case to entertain an application in revision against an order in revision passed under s. 111, Bom. Municipal Boroughs Act, but that such applications should be very sparingly entertained.

On the merits in this case the real complaint is that the Sessions Judge has gone wrong in his law. But that is not a ground which would justify us in interfering in revision, in other than very special circumstances. It is a matter of appeal and no appeal lies. The application fails and must be dismissed with costs.

N. J. Wadia, J.—I agree.

OFFICIAL RECEIVER, LYALLPUR—

DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT

Provincial Insolvency Act (V of 1920), s. 37—Adjudication annulled—Official Receiver, if can sell leasehold rights of insolvent

All that the Insolvency Judge can do on the annulment of the adjudication is to direct that the property of the insolvent should vest in a certain person. Even if he passes a vesting order, the Receiver can only hold the property for the benefit of the creditors, and the creditors would have to enforce their claim by a proper suit. The property cannot be sold in any case by the Insolvency Court.

Where, therefore, the Insolvency Judge has annulled the adjudication, no further proceedings can be taken by the Official Receiver for the sale of the leasehold rights of the insolvent.

C. R. from the order of the District Judge, Lyallpur, dated May 23, 1938.

Mr. Ram Chand Manchanda, for the Petitioner;

Order.—This appeal has been heard ex parte as the respondent failed to appear in spite of service. The appellant Lal Din had been adjudged insolvent but having failed to apply for his discharge in time, the adjudication was annulled and the Insolvency Judge passed the following order:

"His adjudication order is, therefore, annulled under s. 43, Provincial Insolvency Act, with the reservation that any money in the hands of the Official Receiver, and any money which he would recover by the lease of the land of the insolvent for the maximum period shall be available for distribution amongst creditors."

When the Official Receiver proceeded to sell the leasehold rights of the Insolvent, he objected on the ground that the Insolvency having been annulled, the Receiver had no right to sell the aforesaid rights. This objection was overruled by the learned Insolvency Judge and his decision has been upheld on appeal by the learned District Judge. From this decision a second appeal has been preferred. It seems to me doubtful whether a second appeal is competent, but the matter can be considered at any rate, on the revision side. The main contention of the learned Counsel for Lal Din is that the Insolvency Judge having annulled the adjudication, no further proceedings could be taken by the Official Receiver for the sale of the leasehold rights of the insolvent. In support of this contention he has relied on Roop Narain v. King King & Co. (1), Shakar Khan v. Ishar Das (2), and Panna Lal v. Official Receiver, Jhansi (3). Two Full Bench rulings of the Rangoon High Court reported as Jain Singh v. R. K. Banerji (4), and Annammalai Chettiar v. R. K. Banerji (5), also support the contention. It would appear from these rulings as well as from the wording of s. 37, Provincial Insolvency Act that all that the learned Insolvency Judge could do on the annulment of the adjudication was to direct that the property of the insolvent should vest in a certain person. He has passed no such clear vesting order. Even if he had passed a vesting order, the Receiver could only hold the property for the benefit of the creditors, and the creditors would have to enforce their claim by a proper suit. The property could not be sold in any case by the Insolvency Court, in view of the authorities cited above. It seems to me clear in the circumstances, the Official Receiver had no right to sell the leasehold rights.

I accordingly accept this petition ex parte and set aside the order of the Insolvency Judge, regarding the sale of the leasehold rights, but direct at the same time that such rights shall vest in the Official Receiver for a period of two years from this date for the benefit of the creditors. The creditors will, however, be able to avail themselves of those rights only by taking proper proceedings, for example, by a suit, etc. No order as to costs.

Judgment.—This is a plaintiffs' appeal from a decree of the learned District Judge of Kumaun which reversed a decree of the learned Civil Judge of Chamoli. The suit which has given rise to this appeal was brought by the Panch Khaekars of village Nail in the district of Garhwal against the defendants, who are hissedars in that village, for a declaration of right in certain plots of land bearing Nos. 446, 800, 805, 808, 58-1060 and 809, comprising an area of 298 9-16 nalis. The plaintiffs' case was that they were in possession of the land in suit, having broken it up some years ago. They alleged that the defendants had succeeded in having their names recorded in the recent settlement, although they were never in possession of the same. The trial Court came to the conclusion that this village was a pucca khaekari village, that the plaintiffs were in possession of the land in dispute, that the defendants hissedars were in possession of only 18 4/16 nalis and that the rest of the land was in cultivatory possession of the plaintiffs. On these findings the plaintiffs' suit was decreed. The learned District Judge, however, took a contrary view and dismissed the suit, although he held that the village was a pucca khaekari village. The plaintiffs have now come to this Court in appeal.

By my order dated December 22, 1933, I directed the learned District Judge to record a finding as to the specific plots actually in cultivatory possession of the plaintiffs before the institution of the suit and the period of such possession. The learned District Judge upon a consideration of evidence has come to the conclusion that the plaintiffs began to cultivate the land in dispute three or four years before the institution of the suit. This is a finding of fact and cannot be disturbed in appeal. The main question for determination in this appeal relates to the question of title. The plaintiffs are pucca khaekars. The pucca khaekars are representatives of old proprietors who hold the entire area of the village in virtue of having first reclaimed it from waste. It appears that the pucca khaekars are in all respects equal to proprietors with the exception that they cannot sell their holding, and pay small sums called malikana, in addition to the quota of revenue due from the land recorded in their names. The proprietors or hissedars have no power to interfere with these khaekars or their land, waste or cultivated, and on the death of a khaekar without direct heirs, the lapsed holding reverts to the whole community of khaekars, and not to the hissedar: vide Jaint Singh v. Nand Ram (1).

A short history of the plots in dispute will be helpful in determining the question of title. In Beckett's Settlement (1862) the entire land in this village was recorded in the name of Gaon Sanjait. This entry clearly shows that the hissedar had nothing to do with the cultivation of any portion of the land in dispute. In Pauw's Settlement (1866) 13 14/16 nalis of land was recorded in the name of hissedars. The entry against this area was parti qadim. There was litigation with respect to this land in the Revenue Courts and it was held that the hissedars were entitled to the plots within this area. Learned Counsel for the appellants states that there is no dispute with regard to this land and the plaintiffs have no claim to the land shown in the name of hissedars in the settlement of 1866. In Ibbotson's Summary Settlement (1927-28) the entire area in dispute was recorded as khudkasht of the hissedars, although the entry with respect to parti qadim continued. From the findings of the Courts below it appears that the plaintiffs began their cultivatory possession of the land in dispute between 1924 and 1934. It follows therefore, that in Ibbotson's Settlement the land in dispute was not in actual cultivatory possession of the hissedars (defendants). This is confirmed by the entry of parti qadim, which shows that the land was only fallow land. The learned District Judge has rightly attached great importance to the order of the settlement officer who was responsible for the entry of the names of the hissedars with respect to the plots in dispute, but on the basis of this entry it is impossible to hold that the hissedars actually cultivated the land. The learned District Judge has not found in favour of the respondents on this point; in fact he has come to the conclusion that the plaintiffs were in actual cultivatory possession before the institution of the suit. In the last settlement (1937-38) the Record Officer, Garhwal, by his order of April 25, 1938, directed the names of the khaekars to be entered with respect to the plots in dispute. The Record Officer made the following observations:

"This is a pucca khaekari village, in which the hissedar in Mr. Pauw's Settlement got a large area of uncultivated land recorded in his name as khudkasht. This is now found cultivated. It appears to me that to all uncultivated land khudkasht is a contradiction in terms. In pucca khaekari village, the khaekars are under-proprietors. If they broke new land, they are automatically khaekars in it."

This judgment was not before the lower Appellate Court. At the instance of the appellant I admitted it under O. XII, r 27. It is stated by the learned Counsel for the respondents that his client was not represented before the Record Officer. That may or may not be so. Even if it was so, it will not affect the question under consideration because the entry referred to by the Record Officer is relied upon by the learned District Judge. This shows that the land was not in actual cultivatory possession of the hissedar. There is no doubt that if a hissedar brings fallow land under plough and actually cultivates it himself, he will be entitled to retain possession of the same, but he can acquire no title in khaekar land which is not in his actual possession and is merely recorded in his name as khudkasht. It appears that the village records in Kuman Garhwal are not always reliable documents. The following quotation from Mr. Stowell's Book, pp. 17 and 18 support the above observation:

"Owing however to venality, carelessness, or ignorance on the part of the amins, who made the original entries, and the lack of intelligence and of caution on the part of the villagers, a great many wrong entries remain uncorrected; in very many cases the villagers concerned never discovered that the entries were wrong for years afterwards. These mistakes are most common in the older records, such as those of Mr. Beckett's Settlement which still hold good for all the old cultivation in Almora, and they consist most frequently of the entry of specific fields in the names of the wrong hissedar or khaekar, though there are a good number of mistakes due to the mistaken entry of the names of certain men as co-sharers in joint shares.... It is therefore necessary to enter a caution against giving the settlement records in the hills any such weight of presumption as attaches to the regularly revised and checked village papers in the plains. In the case of the latter papers the much greater familiarity of the people with their annual records and the greater caution taught by experience is a further safeguard against error."

Having regard to the proved facts I have no hesitation in holding that the land was fallow land until a few years before the institution of the suit when the appellants brought it under cultivation. Under these circumstances, it is impossible to affirm the decree of the Court below. In the result, I allow the appeal, set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court and restore that of the Civil Judge. The appellants are entitled to their costs from the respondents. Leave to appeal under Letters Patent is granted.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1903), O. XXI

rr. 62, 63—Order under r. 62, nature of—Mortgagee's application under r. 62 to have attachment continued subject to mortgage, dismissed—Order not set aside by suit under r. 63—Order becomes final and mortgagee is estopped from asserting rights denied by that order—Mortgagee choosing to take advantage of summary procedure under r. 62, must suffer disadvantage also—Suit under r. 63—Whether claim under r. 62 was investigated or not is immaterial.

Order XXI, r. 62, Civil P. C., is an enabling provision and when the Court is satisfied that the attached property is subject to a mortgage or charge in favour of some person not in possession, it can direct the continuance of the attachment subject to such mortgage or charge. The order contemplated by this Rule clearly indicates that this is a judicial determination, though in a summary way of the question as to whether there is a valid mortgage or charge existing upon the attached property and when the Court passes an order directing the continuance of the attachment subject to such charge, what is put up to sale is nothing more than the equity of redemption which the judgment-debtor has got in the attached property. The decree-holder or the purchaser cannot, in such cases, dispute the mortgage unless he brings a suit to set aside the summary order under O. XXI, r. 63. The same principle applies when the Court does not pass an order directing the continuance of attachment subject to a mortgage but the mortgagee's application to have such a direction is dismissed or refused. Whether the attachment on the property is directed to continue either subject to or free from the mortgage or charge, the order is one which comes within the purview of O. XXI, r. 62, and if it is not set aside by a regular suit commenced under O. XXI, r. 63, the summary order becomes conclusive and the purchaser or the mortgagee cannot assert any right which that order denies.

In order to bring a case within the purview of O. XXI, r. 63, Civil P. C., the question as to whether the claim was investigated or not is immaterial and if an adverse order is made against the plaintiff in the claim proceeding, he is bound to institute a suit under O. XXI, r. 63, failing which the order becomes conclusive and final. 44 Ind. Cas. 265 (9), 15 Ind. Cas. 683 (10), 64 Ind. Cas. 713 (11) and 157 Ind. Cas. 688 (12), relied on.

B. K. Mukherjee, J.—This is an appeal on behalf of the plaintiff and the suit was one for enforcement of a mortgage bond alleged to have been executed by defendant No. 1 by which certain land and machinery were hypothecated to secure an advance of Rs. 1,000. The mortgage bond is dated December 9, 1926. Defendants Nos. 2 and 3, were impleaded as parties to the mortgage suit on the allegation that they had purchased portions of the mortgaged property subsequent to the execution of the mortgage bond. Defendant No. 1 did not appear and contest the suit and the case was compromised with defendant No. 2. Defendant No. 3 who were the transferees of the machinery comprised in the mortgage were the only contesting defendant and they contended inter alia that the mortgage deed was without consideration and that the suit was barred by limitation under Art. 11, Lim. Act. It being brought more than a year after an adverse decision was passed in a claim petition made by the plaintiff in respect of the machinery under O. XXI, r. 62, Civil P. C. The trial Court overruled these defences and passed a decree ex parte against defendant No. 1, and on contest against defendant No. 3. The suit was also decreed on the basis of the compromise as against defendant No. 2. Against this decree there was an appeal taken by defendant No. 3 alone, and the Additional District Judge who heard the appeal reversed the decision of the trial Court so far as defendant No. 3 were concerned and dismissed the plaintiff's suit as against them on the ground that it was barred by limitation under Art. 11, Lim. Act. The decree against the other two defendants was kept intact. It is against this decision that the present second appeal has been preferred, and the only point for our consideration is whether the suit was barred under Art. 11, Lim. Act. It appears that in the year 1933 a creditor who had obtained a money decree against defendant No. 1 started an execution case, in course of which, certain properties including the machinery which was included in the mortgage were attached and proclaimed for sale. On November 13, 1939, the plaintiff made an application which was headed as one under O. XXI, r. 62, Civil P. C. and he prayed that the machinery which was one of the items of the property attached by the decree-holder, might be notified for sale subject to the plaintiff's mortgage. This application was rejected on November 14, 1933, on account of the failure of the plaintiff to produce the mortgage bond which he was asked to produce and the machinery was sold to defendant No. 3 in the execution sale. The present suit which was instituted on April 16, 1935, is admittedly filed more than a year after the date of the order passed on the plaintiff's claim petition. The lower Appellate Court was of opinion that it was incumbent upon the plaintiff to institute a suit after the adverse order was passed against him under O. XXI, r. 62, Civil P. C. within a year from the date of the order, and as he failed to do that, the summary order passed by the executing Court became final and conclusive and it would not be open to the plaintiff mortgagee to say that he had any subsisting mortgage in respect of the machinery.

Now the question, as to whether there is a mortgage on an attached property can be raised in two different ways in execution proceedings. It may be raised, in the first place, when the Court prepares the proclamation of sale under O. XXI, r. 66, Civil P. C. and it is the duty of the executing Court acting under that rule to state as fairly and accurately as possible after giving notice to the judgment-debtor and the decree-holder, any incumbrance to which the property is liable. At this stage apparently the Court cannot decide the question as to whether the mortgage is a valid and a subsisting mortgage and the information given in the sale proclamation constitutes a warning to the purchaser who purchases the property subject to all risks which this notice involves. It does not preclude him afterwards from questioning the validity of the mortgage in any subsequent suit or proceeding. Another way of raising this question of the mortgage or charge during the execution proceedings is by way of an application under the claim sections contained under O. XXI, Civil P. C. Order XXI, r. 62, is certainly an enabling provision and when the Court is satisfied that the attached property is subject to a mortgage or charge in favour of some person not in possession, it can direct the continuance of the attachment subject to such mortgage or charge. The order contemplated by this rule clearly indicates that this is a judicial determination, though in a summary way of the question as to whether there is a valid mortgage or charge existing upon the attached property and when the Court passes an order directing the continuance of the attachment subject to such charge, what is put up to sale is nothing more than the equity of redemption which the judgment-debtor has got in the attached property. The decree-holder or the purchaser cannot, in such cases, dispute the mortgage unless he brings a suit to set aside the summary order under O. XXI, r. 63, Civil

P. O. The question is whether the same principle applies when the Court does not pass an order directing the continuance of attachment subject to a mortgage but the mortgagee's application to have such a direction is dismissed or refused.

It was held by the Bombay High Court in Ganesh Krishna v. Damoo Nathu (1) under the old Code of 1882 that s. 282 (corresponding to O. XXI, r. 62 of the present Code) merely enables the Court to pass an order if it thinks proper that an attachment would continue subject to a lien or a mortgage. But the section does not contemplate an order refusing to acknowledge the mortgage or lien and the Court has no power to direct the continuance of attachment free from such charge. In fact, it was held by the Bombay High Court that the executing Court had no authority to declare a mortgage to be invalid, and in such circumstances, it could do nothing except to notify the incumbrance under O. XXI, r. 60, Civil P. O. On the other hand, it was pointed out by the Allahabad High Court in Debi Das v. Rup Chand (2) that the expression "where the Court is satisfied" would confer jurisdiction on the Court to come to a finding as to the existence of the mortgage. Without such finding of fact it can never be satisfied. Section 282 therefore in effect provides for two alternative and mutually exclusive orders. One is an order that as the mortgage exists, the attachment shall be continued subject to it and the other is that no mortgage shall be deemed to exist. The latter order, no less than the former, is an order contemplated by r. 63 or old s. 283. It seems to me that the view taken by the Allahabad High Court is sound. Whether the attachment on the property is directed to continue either subject to or free from the mortgage or charge, the order is one which comes within the purview of O. XXI, r. 62, Civil P. O. and if it is not set aside by a regular suit commenced under O. XXI, r. 63, the summary order becomes conclusive and the purchaser or the mortgagee cannot assert any right which that order denies. This is supported by the decisions of the other High Courts in India and reference may be made in this connection to the decisions of the Madras, Lahore and Rangoon High Courts which are to be found in Muthiah

Chetty v. Palaniapa Chetty (3), Lakshmanan Chettiar v. Parasivan Pillai (4), Nawal Kishore v. Khyali (5) and Maung Aung My Myint v. Maung Tha Hmat (6). The decision of the Bombay High Court in the case reported in Ganesh Krishna v. Damoo Nathu (1) referred to above can be distinguished not only on the ground that it was a decision under the old Code where the wording of s. 283 was different from that of O. XXI, r. 63 in the present Code but also on the ground, that on the facts actually found in that case, the application by the mortgagee was held to come under O. XXI, r. 66, Civil P. O. It may seem somewhat anomalous no doubt that the question affecting the validity of the mortgage should be inquired in a summary manner in course of an execution proceeding. But the mortgagee is not obliged to prefer any claim at all and I concur with the observations made by the Lahore High Court that if he chooses to take advantage of a summary procedure, he must suffer the disadvantages as well.

Mr. Sanyal who appears for the appellant has not disputed the correctness of the proposition stated above. His contention really is that the rule of law stated above does not affect his client and that on two-fold grounds: The first is that as the dismissal of the claim matter was one for non-prosecution and there was no investigation of the claim in its merits, the necessity of instituting a suit under O. XXI, r. 63, Civil P. O., does not arise. The second ground is that the application made by his client was neither a claim petition made under O. XXI, r. 58, nor under O. XXI, r. 62, Civil P. O. It was a mere application for insertion of an incumbrance in the sale proclamation under the provisions of O. XXI, r. 66, Civil P. O. In support of the first contention Mr. Sanyal has relied amongst others on certain decisions of this Court which are to be found in Uma Charan v. Hiron Moyes Debi (7) and Sarat Chandra Basu v. Tarini Prasad (8). These are decisions under the old Code and it is not disputed that there have been changes introduced in the wording of the relevant sections in the present Code. Order XXI, r. 63, is differently and much more generally worded than the corresponding s. 283 in the Code of 1882. It scrupulously omits any reference to the earlier sections as were made under the old Code and provides in the most general manner that where a claim or an objection is preferred and an order rejecting or allowing the claim is passed, the party against whom the order is made is bound to institute a suit to establish the right which he claims to the property in dispute. There have been corresponding changes in the wording of Art. 11, Lim. Act, also. In the circumstances it seems to me that the conclusion is irresistible that in order to bring a case within the purview of O. XXI, r. 63, Civil P. O., the question as to whether the claim was investigated or not is immaterial and if an adverse order is made against the plaintiff in the claim proceeding, he is bound to institute a suit under O. XXI, r. 63, Civil P. O.; failing which the order becomes conclusive and final. This view has been accepted by this Court in Nogendra Lal v. Fani Bhusan Das (9), Jugal Kishore v. Ambika Debi (10), Satindra Nath v. Shiva Prosad (11) and Abdul Latif Lashar v. Aklui Mia Laskar (12). The first contention of Mr. Sanyal, therefore, must be overruled.

Now as regards the second point, we have been referred to the petition that was filed by the plaintiff on November 13, 1933. As I have stated above it was headed to be one under O. XXI, r. 62, Civil P. O., though that description is not by any means conclusive. The petition sets out the facts that long before the attachment was made by the decree-holder, the judgment-debtor by a registered deed executed in November, 1933, had mortgaged the machinery to the petitioner to secure an advance of Rs. 1,000 which carried interest at the rate of 24 per cent. per annum. It was stated further that the mortgage money now amounted to Rs. 3,400 and the petitioner prayed that the fact of the property attached being subject to a mortgage might be notified and proclaimed at the time when the sale took place. Mr. Sanyal has argued that really he did not want that the property should be sold subject to the mortgage but the plain reading of the petition does not lead to any other conclusion. Obviously, it was not the time when the sale proclamation was being prepared and the petitioner also did not make any prayer whatsoever that the sale proclamation might be amended by mentioning the incumbrance upon the attached property or that a fresh sale proclamation might be issued and served in the locality. The object of his reciting in extenso the fact of the mortgage and the interest it carried seems to me to point to the conclusion that he wanted that the property should be sold subject to the mortgage. This is strengthened by the fact that the petition was headed under O. XXI, r. 62, Civil P. O. In these circumstances I concur with the lower Appellate Court in holding that it was really a claim petition made under O. XXI, r. 62, Civil P. O., and as this was dismissed by the executing Court on November 14, 1933, it was incumbent on the plaintiff to institute a suit within one year from that date. That not having been done it is not open to him now to put forward his rights as a mortgagee so far as the machinery is concerned. The result is that we affirm the decision of the lower Appellate Court and dismiss the appeal. There will be no order as to costs in this appeal.

Municipal Act for the preparation and publication of the electoral roll for holding a proper election. The Judge who decided the petition held, reviewing all the matters, that the objections raised in the petition were valid, and he pointed out that all the criticisms made in regard to the electoral roll were correct. Upon that it was thought that the next four persons who were on the list in having received votes during these proceedings ought to be elected. The person so declared elected sued for a declaration that the orders of the Govt. and the electoral authority were ultra vires and that they were duly elected members of the Municipal Committee:

Held, that once an election had taken place the Govt. could not declare it to be void and hold a new one. But the authorities must make a decision upon the facts as represented to them and must make their decision in good faith. When they were apprised of the existence of facts as the result of an inquiry, in which evidence as to those facts was relevant, they might be assisted by the examination of the tribunal's opinion and the record of the evidence before it. No proper election having taken place, the candidates could not be declared elected and that the orders of the Govt. and the Electoral Authority were within powers. [p. 528, col. 1.]

F. A. from the decree of the District Court, Amherst, dated January 24, 1939.

Mr. U Thein Maung, Advocate-General, for the Appellants.

Mr. U E Maung (1), for the Respondents.

Roberts, C. J.—This appeal is brought by the Govt. of Burma and the Electoral Authority, Moulmein Municipal Election, from a decision of the learned District Judge of Amherst in which it was laid down that the order of the first defendants the Govt. of Burma, dated August 29, 1938, and the declaration of defendant No. 2, the Electoral Authority, dated September 3, 1938, were ultra vires and that the plaintiffs were elected members of the Municipal Committee of Moulmein and were entitled as such to exercise their duties and responsibilities during the lifetime of the Committee.

A purported election took place on November 4, 1937, and shortly afterwards respondent No. 1 in this case brought a petition, which was Civil Miscellaneous No. 53 of 1937, against those who were thought to have been the successful candidates and to have been elected upon the Municipal Committee, and stated inter alia that the poll was wrongly closed at various times, that the candidates and their agents were ordered to leave the enclosures by the supervisors, yet one of the agents, Ohidambaram, was for a time allowed inside, thus giving him a preference over the representatives of the other candidates and added that there was impersonation of a number of purely imaginary persons whose fictitious names appeared on the electoral rolls. The consequence of this petition was, of course, that the present respondents, more than any other persons first brought to the notice of those in authority the fact that the proceedings which had taken place on November 4, 1937, at Moulmein, and which purported to have led to a faulty election, were a farce and a fiasco. The objection which was raised submitted that the election of the four respondents in the case, namely those four who were at the head of the poll, was void by reason of material irregularities in the election proceedings, and also by reason of bribery, impersonation and undue influence alleged to have been encouraged by them, and the Judge held, reviewing all the matters, that the objections raised in the petition were valid, and he pointed out that all the criticisms made in regard to the electoral roll were correct and that there were a number of roads in which more houses were given on the roll than actually existed, and all kinds of other mistakes in the roll, which showed that the figures which had been reached or could be reached in any election purported to have taken place upon that roll would be unsatisfactory and unsustainable. Upon that it was thought that the next four persons who were on the list in having received votes during these proceedings ought to be elected. This, of course, was a mistake. The position was that a report should have been made to Govt. and that the Govt. should have taken action as it was properly entitled to do.

By s. 8, Burma Municipal Act, the Govt. shall, for every municipality of which the system of election is introduced, make rules regulating a number of matters, including the system of representation and election, for which it may seem expedient to provide, the time of election and mode of recording votes, the registration of electors and so on: and the members of the Committee shall, under the section, be elected in accordance with the rules. When the Govt. received the report that the election had been such a fiasco, it proceeded to act under its own rules made under this section, and by r. 68, the Govt. may take any action which appears it to be necessary for the proper preparation or publication of the roll, that is the electoral roll, or for the proper holding of the election. There can, upon the present respondents' own showing, be no doubt whatever that the election has not been properly held because they have complained of a lot of individual acts and wrong-doings on behalf of individual candidates, and of the closing of the poll during the hours in which it should have been open, and also of the entirely unsatisfactory nature of the roll which was the basis upon which the election was held.

Now, it is necessary, I think, to say that when one comes to look at these orders, although the order of defendant No. 1, the Govt. by no means needs criticism, the same, unfortunately, cannot be said of the order of defendant No. 2. The slip made, however, is one of a trivial nature. What has been declared is that the election of Dr. Mazumdar, Mr. R. K. S. Pathy, Mr. K. Arunachalam and Kola Dharmarao is void and they therefore ceased to be members of the Moulmein Municipal Committee. That, of course, is not accurate, the fact being that they never have been members of the Moulmein Municipal Committee although they have acted as such and no doubt, spoken and voted in good faith in the meetings of the Municipal Committee. The election having been void, however, it is not accurate to say that they ceased to be members of the body to which they have never in fact belonged.

Now, it is clear that once an election has taken place, the Govt. cannot declare it to be void and hold a new one. A fear that one decision might go to the length of holding, this was expressed by U E Maung; but there is really no ground for entertaining it. If the Govt. were to take such a course, it would be at the peril of incurring liabilities of an unsuccessful litigant when such a course was challenged in the Courts: but they must exercise their discretion in any particular case as to whether an election has been held or not. Supposing for example, a severe earthquake took place in the town after polling had begun and a number of polling boxes were saved and many destroyed; the argument presented to us by the respondents' Advocates would lead to this, that, though everyone would know that the election had been a complete failure, the Govt. could not take any action under r. 68, which appeared to be necessary, for holding a proper election. That would lead to a hopeless conclusion. The authorities must make a decision upon the facts as represented to them and must make their decision in good faith. When they are apprised of the existence of facts as the result of an inquiry, in which evidence as to those facts is relevant, they may be assisted by the examination of the Tribunal's opinion and the record of the evidence before it. Although the only question before the District Judge related to the petition of the respondents, a number of other matters came to light. When it transpired that no satisfactory election was held, the Govt. immediately took prompt action, and hence this order. The respondents themselves, by the steps they took, challenged the validity of the whole election and the only conclusion to be arrived at from the finding is that no proper election was ever held. If they have come to the conclusion that the learned Judge's opinion was wrong and the evidence upon which they relied, and upon which the Govt. relied, was unreliable, they are, of course, entirely at liberty to file a suit for a declaration that they were duly elected as members of the Municipal Committee. That they have not done. They have chosen to challenge the orders issued by the Govt. and the Electoral Authority as being ultra vires, and for the appellants it has been conclusively proved that these orders were within the powers of each of the appellants. In my opinion, therefore, this appeal must be allowed, the judgment and decree of the learned District Judge set aside, and the suit of the respondents dismissed with costs in both Courts, Advocate's fee twenty gold mohurs in this Court.

Dunkley, J.—I am of the same opinion. It appears to me that, when r. 68 says that the Govt. may take any action for "the proper holding of the election," that expression must mean and include the holding of a proper election when no election has, in fact, been held. Moreover, the power to grant a declaratory decree which is conferred by s. 42, Specific Relief Act, is discretionary power. The relevant words of the section are:

"Any person entitled to any legal character may institute a suit against any person denying his title to such character and the Court may, in its discretion, make therein a declaration that he is so entitled."

It cannot be said that the learned District Judge exercised his discretion judicially and in accordance with established principles in granting a decree to the respondents in this case. He has held in his judgment that, on a petition properly brought by another candidate or by a body of voters, the respondents would have been unseated, and, furthermore, that the same consideration is applicable to each and everyone of the candidates at the so-called election of November 4, 1937, namely that if any candidate had been declared under r. 67 by the Electoral Authority to be elected, that candidate could have been unseated by a petition properly brought. He has, in fact, held that the election of November 4 was entirely abortive and that in the ultimate event a fresh election would have had to be held. The order of the Govt. of Burma, directing that a fresh election shall be held, put an end to this anomalous position, and therefore it cannot be a proper exercise of judicial discretion to make a declaration the effect of which is to restore this anomaly. Consequently the learned District Judge ought not to have exercised his discretion in favour of the respondents.

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 145, 423, 439—Party forbidden to disturb possession of successful party—If can plead that he is still in possession in spite of order under s. 145 or that he has been able to regain possession by force—Possession of successful party, whether can be put to an end by unsuccessful party by violence or surreptitious invasion—Fresh proceedings under s. 145, when can be started—Acquittal under ss. 302-149, Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), whether can be converted into conviction—under ss. 336-149 under combined appellate and revisional powers of High Court—Application in revision by private party to convict accused of offences of which they are acquitted and to enhance sentences in alternative, when can be entertained—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 149—Mob armed with deadly weapons going to achieve particular object by force—Inference that all members knew that grievous hurt is likely to be caused.

The whole object of s. 145, Criminal P. O., is to stop a breach of the peace by deciding which party is to remain on the land and which party is to seek his remedy in the Civil Court. Breaches of the peace will continue, and the object of the Legislature will be frustrated if the party who has, on the finding that he is not in possession, been forbidden to disturb the possession of the successful party until eviction in due course of law, is allowed to interfere with the possession of the successful party and to plead once more that whatever the order might have been, he is still in possession or has been able to regain possession by force, and thus either compel the successful party to go to the Civil Court or to coerce a Magistrate to proceed again under s. 145, Criminal P. O. This will be a definite encouragement to disobedience of orders under the section. View of Odming, J., in 104 Ind. Cas. 443 (2); dissented from: [p. 536, col. 2; p. 537, col. 1.]

Though an order under s. 145, Criminal P. O., confers no title, the fact of possession remains and the person in possession can only be evicted by a person who can prove a better title to possession himself. The possession of the party which succeeds in proceedings under s. 145, Criminal P. O., cannot be put an end to by the unsuccessful party by mere violence or surreptitious invasion. Therefore, even if the unsuccessful party in proceedings under s. 145 is able on some occasions either surreptitiously or forcibly to cultivate the lands in possession of the successful party, these would be no more than isolated acts of trespass—and offences punishable under s. 188, I. P. O., but not acts amounting to the dispossession of the other side and constituting the juridical possession of the offenders unless the other side refrain from asserting their possession for a sufficiently long period and give up the protection of the order under s. 145 in their favour. [p. 536, col. 1.]

Obiter.—Where in previous proceedings under s. 145, Criminal P. O., a party is declared to be entitled to possession, the Magistrate has jurisdiction to start fresh proceedings under s. 145, if the party to such proceedings was not a party to the previous one. 173 Ind. Cas. 107 (5), relied on.

Quaere.—Where accused charged under ss 302-149 and also under s. 147, I. P. O., are acquitted by the Sessions Judge of charge under ss 302-149 but are convicted under s. 147 and the accused prefer an appeal against the conviction and the complainant files a revision to convict the accused under ss 302-149 or in the alternative to enhance the sentences, whether the High Court under its combined appellate and revisional powers can convert the acquittal under ss. 302-149 into a conviction under ss. 336-149 and then pass a sentence where none is passed by the Sessions Judge for the latter offence. [p. 539, col. 1.]

[Case-law reviewed.]

High Court is, as a rule, loath in ordinary circumstances to entertain an application in revision from a private party asking the Court to convict the accused of offences of which they have been acquitted by the Sessions Judge and to enhance a sentence passed upon them. But where there are clear indications that the accused party has been defying law and disobeying the orders, both of the Civil and of the Criminal Courts, and has been repeatedly creating trouble in the locality for many years past, such application should be entertained in revision.

Seven more persons tried along with the appellants were acquitted. Lalchand Thakur (No. 10 above) was also charged under s. 302, I. P. O. with causing the death of one Ramnarain, and the remaining appellants under s. 302-149, I. P. O., in respect of that murder. They were acquitted of these charges. Rajdayal Thakur who was further charged under s. 324, I. P. O., with causing simple hurt by a dangerous weapon to the same Ramnarain was acquitted of this charge. Beni Madho Thakur, Kawal Thakur alias Ram Kawal Thakur, Jamuna Prasad Thakur, Jagannath Thakur, and Ohaman Thakur were similarly charged under s. 324, I. P. O. the first three with causing simple hurt by dangerous weapons to one Lalchar Rai and the last two to one Ujagir Rai. All of them were acquitted of this charge.

One of the accused, Guraman Ahir (acquitted), was charged (among other sections) under s. 436, I. P. O., (arson) with setting fire to a hut, and Ambika Thakur and Rajdayal Thakur were charged with abetting that offence under s. 436-114, I. P. O. These charges were withdrawn during the trial. The trial commenced with five gentlemen as jurors in respect of the charges relating to arson and as assessors in respect of the remaining charges. When the charge of arson was withdrawn, the trial proceeded with the same gentlemen as assessors only. All of them were of opinion that the accused were not guilty of any offence. The first informant, Ramkewal Rai, has presented an application in revision praying that the appellants be convicted of the offences of which they were acquitted by the learned Additional Sessions Judge or, in the alternative, that their sentences be enhanced. We postponed the passing of orders on this application till the appeal had been heard. Sir Manmatha Nath Mukherji who appeared on behalf of the appellants intimated to us that in case we decided to issue notice in the revision application, he would accept it so as to make it unnecessary to send out notices to the appellants personally. After the conclusion of the hearing of the appeal we called upon Mr. Naqui Imam, who was then appearing on behalf of the appellants, to take notice of the revision application and show cause, if any, why it should not be allowed. We heard Mr. Naqui Imam in this connection and will deal with that matter in this judgment after disposing of the appeal itself. The occurrence in question took place on the morning of February 5, 1938, over the possession of some Diara lands which had alluviated from the river Ganges. Such occurrences are not uncommon; when a large area of land alluviates, there is generally a struggle for possession; and all who can by any stretch of imagination do so lay claims to the land and riots attended with murder often take place. The present is one of a series of such riots between the parties.

Before we deal with the facts of the riot, it is necessary to describe the position of the disputed land. In doing so, we must clear up some confusion (which has been noticed before now) in the directions, (north, east, south, west) given by the witnesses and mentioned in a number of documents produced in the case. The general course of the river Ganges in the District of Shahabad is from west to east along the northern border of the district, but at the particular place where the present occurrence took place, the Ganges has taken a turn, and runs from north to south on the east of the lands involved in the case. Notwithstanding this, the Ganges is locally regarded as lying to the north; and the consequent shift is reproduced both in the oral and in the documentary evidence, the popular directions being 90 degrees ahead of the true or magnetic directions. The learned Additional Sessions Judge in his judgment has used the popular directions, with the result that his north is the magnetic east, his east the magnetic south, his south the magnetic west and his west the magnetic north. We prefer to use the magnetic directions, which were followed in the cadastral survey map and are thus more convenient for our purposes. There are four mouzas lying one after another from north to south, to the west of the Ganges in this locality. The northernmost in Rajapur, a Govt. Khas Mahal, south of it is Dubha, next comes Gangauli, and the southernmost is Kharatanr, the last three belonging to the Maharaja of Dumraon. Each of these four mauzas has its mal lands, that is, lands which appertained to it from the beginning and, so far as Dubha, Gangauli and Kharatanr are concerned, were permanently settled with the Maharaja of Dumraon. Each of them also has taufir (accreted) lands which have become attached to the main lands of the mauza by alluvion. A portion of these taufir lands was surveyed at the time of the cadastral survey in 1908-09, doubtless because it had by then become firm and was under cultivation. The rest of the taufir lands were not surveyed then, and are known as "unsurveyed", though the lands of Dubha taufir have been surveyed in 1935, and a Record of Rights prepared. It is the taufir land of Dubha which is the subject-matter of the riot in the present case, that is, the land which accreted to the main lands of Mauza Dubha and was not surveyed in 1908-09. East of Mauzas Dubha, Gangauli and Kharatanr, we have Shivpur (or Sheopur) Diara lying in the District of Ballia in the United Provinces, some of the litigation, to which we shall have to refer, has thus been in that District.

The prosecution case is that under leases granted by the Maharaja of Dumraon 10 tenants of village Rajapur were in possession of all the unsurveyed portion of the Dubha taufir lands with the exception of 77 bighas (which have admittedly been in the possession of Lalmohar, deceased, father of the appellant Ambika and uncle of the appellant Nawab). They had grown crops on the land and erected a hut for the accommodation of those who were set to guard the crops. On the morning of February 5, 1938, about half a ghari after sunrise, some of the lessees and their relations and partners, in all 11 men, were in the said hut, when they heard shouts of "Mahabir ki jai." They came out of the hut and saw a mob of about 100 (including the appellants) with lathis and spears, at a distance of about 10 bans on the south (magnetic west) of the hut. The appellant Ambika was riding a mare and had a whip in his hand. He and the appellant Rajdayal ordered assault and burning of the hut. All the occupants of the hut fled away, but Ramnarain, Lalmohan (P. W. No. 2) and Ujagir (P. W. No. 6) were surrounded. Ramnarain was hit in the chest with a spear by the appellant Lalchand and was killed. Lalmohar fell down unconscious, having been hit with spears by Ramkewal, Beni Madho and Jamuna, and with a lathi by Shiv Prasad. Ujagir also fell down senseless, having been hit by the spears of Jagannath, Chhabila and Chaman and by a lathi of Ramprasad. Thereafter Jurawan (acquitted) set fire to the hut. Then the mob proceeded towards Gangauli, the village where all the appellants lived. Ramnarain was removed from the place where he had fallen. Three cots were procured from the basti of Rajapur taufir; and on them the dead body of Ramnarain and the two injured persons were carried towards the Dumraon Police Station, 12 miles away. When the party reached a tank in Dumraon, they met the Sub-Inspector (P. W. No. 38) who was on his way to the place of occurrence on receipt of some information from the chaukidar of Gangauli. At that very spot, a short distance from the Police Station, the Sub-Inspector drew up the first information report on the statement of Ramkewal, one of the lease holders (P. W. No. 1). This was at about mid-day (12-15). The body of Ramnarain was sent for post mortem examination to Buxar, and the injured persons were also sent there for medical examination and treatment. After doing some preliminary investigation the Sub-Inspector deputed constables Agin Singh (P. W. No. 2), Muhammad Kifait (P. W. No. 17) and Pahlu Singh (P. W. No. 18) to the place of occurrence to keep a watch on it. He himself reached the spot at night. After investigation, the accused persons were sent up for their trial.

The defence is that all the Dubha taufir lands had all along been in the possession of Lalmohar Thakur (now dead) and are now in the possession of the members of his family. No part of them is directly in possession of the Maharaja of Dumraon or of any of his settlement holders. The appellants denied taking part in any occurrence whatsoever. Their case was that in the early hours of the morning of the day in question, several hours before the time of the occurrence given by the prosecution, an attempt was made by Ramnarain and other settlement-holders to put up a hut as a proof of their possession of the lands, and Gangauli guards (rakhwaras) who lived in another hut on the 77 bigha block, admittedly in the possession of the Gangauli Thakurs 'Lalmohar's family', saw this and went up to oppose, and a scuffle ensued in which some persons were injured at the hands of the rakhwaras and Ramnarain might have received his fatal injury. In other words, the appellants denied the possession of the other side and claimed to be in possession themselves and denied that there was any hut in existence at about the time of the occurrence and said that they had heard of an attempt to put up a new hut which was resisted by the men set to guard their crops and living in a hut in the 77 bigha block.

Both the parties have adduced documentary evidence in connection with the previous litigation in order to prove their respective possession. Sir Manmatha Nath Mukherji, who appeared on behalf of the appellants, has addressed us at great length and has asked us to hold that whatever might have been the decisions of the Courts from time to time (and we will refer to them later), the deceased Lalmohar and the members of his family had in actual fact been in uninterrupted possession of all the Dubha taufir lands up to the date of the present occurrence. In our opinion, this question of possession is important only for the purpose of appreciating the evidence of the occurrence as deposed to by the prosecution witnesses. If the prosecution case is believed, there is no case of a right of private defence, and the question of possession is not very important in relation to the charges framed against the appellants. Sir Manmatha, Mukherji, however contended that one of the common objects mentioned in the charges of rioting being "by means of criminal force to Ramnarain Rai and his party to take possession of the lands in Dubha taufir, Police Station Dumraon, held under the pattas granted by the Maharaja of Dumraon," these charges must fail if the prosecution fail to prove their possession. But there is another common object mentioned in the charge, namely "to assault Ramnarain Rai and others of the same party," which has little to do with actual possession. But the defence assertion of actual possession in the face of repeated decisions adverse to these Thakurs of Gangauli implies lawlessness, and we propose to examine the question of possession in some detail, as we have come to the conclusion that it is high time they were bound over to keep the peace.

It is, however, not necessary for the purposes of even the first part of the charge, to decide whether all the unsurveyed lands of Dubha taufir were in the possession of the prosecution party on the day of occurrence. If they were in possession of some substantial area out of those lands, and the appellants went there in force to dispossess them, this part of the charges would be brought home to them. The learned Sessions Judge, has carefully detailed the previous litigation about these lands. It is therefore not necessary for us to give more than a short history in order to determine the question of possession. (After giving the history and certain evidence regarding possession the judgment proceeded). The facts stated above practically exhaust the documentary evidence of possession. The following appears clear from them:

The Thakurs of Gangauli were originally *raiya*s of lands in the Dubha as well as the Gangauli and Kharatanr taufirs. Their names were recorded as such in the Diara Survey Record of 1892. This is abundantly clear from the judgment (Ex. R) of the suit instituted by the Maharaja against the Thakurs of Gangauli for ejecting them from the 77 bighas of land. In this judgment reference has been made to the plaint of the Maharaja in Title Suit No. 193 of 1916 against the Shivpur Babus and to his written statements in Title Suit No. 247 of 1911 which Lalmohar had brought against the Shivpur Babus for recovery of 244 bighas of land. In both of them the raiya interest of Lalmohar and others in the Dubha taufir lands was admitted. The lands must have gone under water for some time thereafter, and most of them were not fit for cultivation during the cadastral Survey of 1908-09 as only 22-06 acres of taufir lands of Dubha were then cadastrally surveyed, and the rest only dealt with topographically. But some portion of these unsurveyed lands would appear to have become fit for cultivation as there was a scramble for possession between the old *raiya*s, the Thakurs of Gangauli, on the one hand and the Babus of Shivpur on the other, the latter claiming the lands as re-formation in situ of their old Shivpur lands in the District of Ballia. In this fight the Thakurs of Gangauli lost all the Dubha taufir lands and the Babus of Shivpur got possession of them on November 30, 1913, after the civil suit of Lalmohar and others against them was dismissed by the Appellate Court. The Shivpur Babus not only succeeded in dispossessing the Gangauli Thakurs from the Dubha taufir lands, but by an order under s. 145, Criminal P. C., passed by the Magistrate of Buxar, they got possession of the taufir lands of Gangauli and Kharatanr as well. This was the situation when the Maharaja of Dumraon brought his title suit for recovery of possession of all the taufir lands of the three villages. Regarding the 244 bighas which, as we have said, later became known as 258 bighas, the Maharaja claimed khas possession as his raiyats Lalmohar and others had lost not only their possession but also whatever rights they had. Regarding the Gangauli and Kharatanr lands in which his raiyats had not lost their rights, he claimed possession through them. The suit of the Maharaja was reinforced by a suit on behalf of the Gangauli Thakurs in respect of Gangauli and Kharatanr lands only. Both the suits, as we have said, were decreed, and possession was given to the Maharaja according to his prayer on April 30, 1925.

Lalmohar and others who had lost all the taufir lands of the three villages and subsequently recovered possession of Gangauli and Kharatanr lands did not take any settlement from the Maharaja of the Dubha taufir lands which they had completely lost and which were only recovered through his efforts, but attempted to take possession of the lands by sheer force. In the meantime Lalmohar was declared to be in possession of a block of 77 bighas in another part of the Dubha taufir which was at that time believed to be a part of Rajapur; but this was in a domestic dispute between the members of his own family. Lalmohar then attempted to obtain possession of the 244 or 258 bighas of land which he had altogether lost, and this resulted in the first 145, Criminal P. C. case decided by the Sub-Divisional Officer, Rai Sahib Sukhdeo Narayan, on September 1, 1931. This Magistrate declared the Maharaja to be in possession of 258 bighas and Lalmohar Thakur in possession of the 77 bighas, and in order to decide the question of possession for our purposes we propose to start from this judgment of 1931. We may recall the following dates :

Decision of the first 145 case ...	September 1, 1931.
Lands attached in the second 145 Criminal P. C. case ...	August 1, 1933.
Lands released from attachment ...	June 11, 1936.
Present occurrence ...	February 5, 1938.

The 335 bighas of land which formed the subject-matter of dispute in the 145, Criminal P. C. case decided by Rai Sahib Sukhdeo Narayan in 1931 lay in two blocks — one of 77 bighas north of a chhaur which ran east to west (magnetic) and the other of 158 bighas south of it. Lalmohar claimed to be in possession of all this area — of 77 bighas as the land over which his possession was maintained in the 145 Criminal P. C. case proceeding between him and Dadul Thakur, of 100 bighas as an accretion to that block and of 158 bighas as having all along been in his possession. We have said before that the learned Magistrate declared the possession of Lalmohar over the 77 bighas and of the Maharaja over the 100 bighas east of it and the 158 bighas south of the chhaur . He held that these 258 bighas were in fact the 244 bighas, of which the Maharaja had got khas possession from the Civil Court in his suit against the Shivpur Babus. The Building Sub-Inspector Abdus Shakur (P. W. No. 13), located signs of the destroyed hut and the place where Ujagar Rai and Lalmohar Rai were injured in survey plot No. 349 and the place where Ramnarain was killed and where his dead body was found in plot No. 350. According to the survey map prepared during the settlement operations, plot No. 350 is within the 100 bighas, the possession of which was declared to be with the Maharaja and plot No. 349 is just outside that area but within the lands found by the Settlement Authorities to be accretions to the 258 bighas. Neither of the two plots is in the 77 bighas the possession of which had been declared in favour of Lalmohar. The Record of Rights have been finally published and must be presumed to be correct unless the contrary is proved by evidence adduced. There is no such evidence. It is thus clear that the place where the occurrence took place and the lands near about it are unconnected with Lalmohar's block of 77 bighas but are either part of or connected with the area to the possession of which the Maharaja was declared to be entitled as far back as 1931, Lalmohar and his party being on that occasion prohibited from interfering with the Maharaja's possession. That order is in full force till now.

It was, however, urged before us as in the lower Court that the lands of which possession was declared in favour of the Maharaja were unidentifiable and that the order of 1931 under s. 145 did not apply to any particular plot of land that the Maharaja and his lessees did not know the lands and therefore were never in possession of them and that Lalmohar and others continued in possession of them in spite of the order. This we cannot accept at all. It does not lie in the mouth of Lalmohar or his descendants and relatives to say that the 258 bighas of the Maharaja was unknown to them. These lands are the same as Lalmohar had lost in the 145 Criminal P. O. case against the Babus of Shivpur in the Court of the Magistrate of Ballia though at that time they were known as 244 bighas. It was for these very lands that Lalmohar had brought his civil suit against the Shivpur Babus and lost. These very lands were also included in the subject-matter of the 145 Criminal P. O. case before the Magistrate of Buxar (Rai Sahib Sukhdeo Narayan). Lalmohar never alleged in that case that these lands were unidentifiable. He filed a written statement and claimed 100 bighas of them as accretions to his 77 bighas and also claimed possession of the remaining 158 bighas which lay just north of the surveyed Dubha taufir lands. He himself supplied the boundaries of the disputed lands. In his revision application also to this Court he asserted his possession and did not allege that the lands were unknown.

Stress is laid on behalf of the appellants on an order of this Court passed by James, J. in the second 145 Criminal P. O. case in which it was ordered that the lands should be identified and on the fact that when in pursuance of this order an amin and a kanungo were deputed to identify the land, they were unable to do so. But this was due to the fact that full materials were not placed before the Court. Without permanent marks for miles and miles as happens in Dharas, it is not easy to locate a particular plot unless it can be fixed from a scientifically prepared survey map or unless scientific measurements from fixed points far away from the scene are available; and the work is always difficult and requires skill and much labour. But in the present case as has been pointed out by the Settlement Authorities who decided the dispute at the attestation stage and heard the objections under s. 103-A, Ben. Ten. Act, there was no difficulty in finding out at least the 100 bighas north of the chhaur. The block of 77 bighas in the possession of Lalmohar was all along known to him and his family. He had been declared to be in possession of it in the proceeding under s. 145, Criminal P. O. against Dadul Thakur and had also won in Dadul's civil suit. His possession over this land was also declared by Rai Sahib Sukhdeo Narayan. With this block known, there could be no difficulty in finding out the 100 bighas which, as is clear from the judgment of Rai Sahib Sukhdeo Narayan, lay just east of it; and it was thus that when survey and settlement was ordered by the Government, the officers of that Department had no difficulty in locating the area of 100 bighas. We are not concerned with whether others knew this area or not. Lalmohar knew it all along, and Rai Sahib Sukhdeo Narayan's order prohibited him from going upon it. Sir Manmatha Nath Mukherji has, however, argued that the Maharaja and his lessees did not know the lands as they would otherwise have been able to point them out to the various officers. We are not prepared to accept this argument. In the second 145 Criminal P. O. case it was strenuously contended on behalf of the Maharaja that the area, for which the proceeding was started, included the 258 bighas of which possession had already been declared in his favour. It appears that Lalmohar held a much stronger position in the locality so far as force was concerned, and that the terrified lessees of the Maharaja were probably unable to point out the lands with exactitude as there were no ridges and the extent of the plots could not be ascertained without measurements which they were in a position to carry out. Great stress has been laid on the somewhat confused boundaries given by Rai Sahib Sukhdeo Narayan at the end of his judgment though he had very clearly specified the lands of the two blocks of 177 bighas and 158 bighas earlier in that judgment. As has been clearly pointed out by the officers of the Settlement Department, this confusion was due to the fact that at some places he gave the popular directions and at others the magnetic directions. However, as we have indicated above, for the purposes of this case, we are not really concerned with all the lands in dispute between the parties. It is quite clear from the survey map and the location of the place of occurrence by the Building Sub-Inspector that the occurrence took place away from Lalmohur's 77 bighas and for the most part within the 100 bighas, the possession of which was declared by the Magistrate to have been with the Maharaja so far back as 1931; and this is sufficient for our purposes.

Sir Manmatha Nath Mukherji, relying upon map No. I attached to the decision of the attestation officer, contended that according to the identification of the lands by the Maharaja and his lessees, the place of occurrence is outside the 258 bighas. He also contended that the survey map is wrong as the position of the 158 bighas south of the chhaur differs from its position as included in the earlier map of 241 bighas prepared for the Maharaja's suit against the Shivpur Babus. Map No. I is a comparative map and shows the positions of the land according to the later claim of the Maharaja and his lessees and also according to the earlier map. When the suits of the Maharaja and of Lalmohur and others against the Shivpur Babus were pending in the Civil Court, one Misri Lall, Amin, was deputed by the Court to measure the lands. He prepared a map which is depicted on map No. I attached to the judgment of the attestation officer. This map has been found to be inaccurate by the officers of the Settlement Department who carried out a complete survey of the locality. Misri Lall has shown the 158 bighas of land just to the south of the 100 bighas, the two together forming one trapezium, while according to the Settlement Department, the 158 bighas is south of the 77 bighas. The two blocks of 100 and 153 bighas are shaped like two trapeziums, the south-western corner of the former meeting the north-eastern corner of the latter. We accept the findings of the Settlement Department, not only because their (map and records) were finally published and carry a statutory presumption of correctness; but also because the reasons given by those officers for their conclusions are sound. They examined the judgment of Rai Sahib Sukhdeo Narayan, and from the boundaries given there, they found that the 153 bighas was to the south of the 77 bighas of Lalmohar because the southern boundary of the 158 bighas was the surveyed Dubha taufir lands, though this was ignored in the map of Misri Lall who made the 258 bighas into one compact block.

Sir Manmatha Nath Mukherji then argued, after placing this comparative map over the finally published map, that according to the claim of the Maharaja, as put forward before the Settlement Department, the place of occurrence is outside the 258 bighas. This is so, but the reason is that the Maharaja claimed on the basis of a wrong tri-junction and thus included some Rajapur taufir land in Dubha taufir, with the result that according to this claim, the north-eastern boundary of Dubha taufir was shifted towards the north-west with a corresponding shift of the 77 bighas of Lalmohar and consequently of the 100 bighas also. But, the officers of the Settlement Department carefully went into the matter and found that the boundary of Dubha taufir commenced somewhat north of the lands pointed out by the Maharaja. These mistakes are very common in Diaras where, as we have said before, no permanent marks are available at hand and the fields have no ridges.

Sir Manmatha Nath's argument, however, was that as the Maharaja and his lessees made a mistake in pointing out the boundary of Dubha taufir, they did not really know the lands of which the possession had been held in 1931 to be with the Maharaja. This must be conceded, but as we have already pointed out, their ignorance of the exact position correct down to a bigha is by no means inconsistent with their knowledge of a very large part of the locality with the additional areas that were being thrown up by the Ganges. Even if we take it that the place of occurrence is outside the land which the Maharaja and his lessees know to be within the land of which the possession was declared to be with them, this makes no difference on the charge of rioting. The place of occurrence, though it will be outside the 100 bighas, will still be in lands accreted to it and beyond any claim of accretion open to Lalmohur and others, for the latter's block of 77 bighas is surrounded on all sides by the lands of other people. On the north of it lies village Rajapur, waerever the boundary between them may be. On the east is the 100 bigha block of Dubha taufir over which the possession of the Maharaja was maintained, and as the Settlement Department found, the 77 bigha block has on the south the 158 bighas, the possession of which had been found by the Magistrate to be with the Maharaja. Any accretions on the east or south would thus go not to Lalmohur's 77 bighas but to the 100 or 153 bighas of the Maharaja and must, therefore, be presumed to be in his possession and in that of his lessees. But we have definitely come to the conclusion that the place of occurrence and the lands near about it on which crops stood at the time are within the 100 bighas of which the possession was declared to be with the Maharaja, Lalmohur and others being prohibited by the order of 1931 from interfering with this possession.

In Dinobundoo Chowdhurani v. Brojo Mohoni Chowdhurani (1), their Lordships of the Judicial Committee held that though an order under s. 145, Criminal P. O., confers no title, the fact of possession remains and the person in possession can only be evicted by a person who can prove a better title to possession himself. Assuming, therefore, that after the order of 1931 Lalmohur and others were able on some occasions either surreptitiously or forcibly to cultivate the lands, these would be no more than isolated acts of trespass—and offences punishable under s. 188, I. P. O., but not acts amounting to the dispossession of the other side and constituting the juridical possession of the offenders unless the other side refrain from asserting their possession for a sufficiently long period and give up the protection of the order under s. 145 in their favour. In our opinion the possession of the party which succeeds in proceedings under s. 145, Criminal P. O., cannot be put an end to by the unsuccessful party by mere violence or surreptitious invasion.

Sir Manmatha Nath Mukherji, however, drew our attention to the case in Rakhai Dolui v. Makhan Lal Ghose, 104 Ind. Cas. 443 (2), in support of the proposition that an order under s. 145, Criminal P. O., is only a piece of evidence to be taken into consideration when the question of possession arises between the parties on a subsequent occasion and that though it would go to show that the party in whose favour it was passed was in possession on the date of the order, it is open to the other party to prove that, in spite of the order, he was actually in possession or regained possession. In that case the party in whose favour an order under s. 145, Criminal P. O. had been passed prosecuted the other party for the removal of crops. The trial Court held the complainant to be in possession not only on the basis of the order under s. 145, Criminal P. O. but also on the evidence in the case. On appeal, the Additional Sessions Judge declined to go into the evidence of possession and maintained the conviction on the basis of the order under s. 145, Criminal P. O. Cuming, J. was of opinion that the question of actual possession ought to have been gone into, and accordingly ordered a remand, observing that an order under s. 145 was merely a piece of evidence to be taken into consideration in determining who is in possession. This judgment of Cuming, J. appears to have been given in Court without much consultation with his colleague Graham, J. who on that date observed as follows :

"With great respect for my learned brother's opinion as to the effect of the order under s. 145, Criminal P. O. I feel at present some doubt upon the point. I propose, therefore, to reserve my judgment. As Monday and Tuesday next will be holidays, I propose to deliver my judgment on Wednesday next."

This doubt of the learned Judge continued, but as his colleague wanted to remand the appeal for re-hearing, Graham, J. did not stand in the way and said as follows :

"I have further considered this case and speaking for myself, I must confess that I feel considerable doubt as to the effect of the order under s. 145, Criminal P. O., and as to whether in all the circumstances the possession claimed by the accused in this case can be said to have been lawful possession, or possession which the Court could in any way recognize as a defence to the charges. As the order which my learned brother proposes to make, however, is to send the case back for re-hearing the appeal, and as it appears from the judgment of the trial Court that there is evidence as to possession apart from the order under s. 145, Criminal P. O., I do not feel disposed to deliver a dissenting judgment, and I concur in the order which has been made."

With all respect to Cuming, J., we are unable to agree in his view of an order under s. 145. The whole object of the section is to stop a breach of the peace by deciding which party is to remain on the land and which party is to seek his remedy in the Civil Court. Breaches of the peace will continue, and the object of the Legislature will be frustrated if the party who has, on the finding that he is not in possession, been forbidden to disturb the possession of the successful party until eviction, in due course of law, is allowed to interfere with the possession of the successful party and to plead once more that whatever the order might have been, he is still in possession or has been able to regain possession by force, and thus either compel the successful party to go to the Civil Court or to coerce a Magistrate to proceed again under s. 145, Criminal P. O. This will be a definite encouragement to disobedience of orders under the section.

There has been some difference of opinion as to whether once the possession of a party has been declared under s. 145, Criminal P. O. a second proceeding under the section is permissible. It was held by Jwala Prasad, J. in Raghunandan Pandey v. Kishin Mohan Singh (3), that an order under s. 145, Criminal P. O., is binding on everybody, whether he was a party to the proceeding or not, and that a Magistrate has no jurisdiction to start a second proceeding. A similar view was taken by Wort, J. in Jainath Pati v. Ramlakhan Prasad (4). It was, however, held by one of us in Indradeo Singh v. Keso Singh (5), that a Magistrate has jurisdiction to start a fresh proceeding, but whether he should do so or not will depend upon the circumstances. In the last mentioned case, the previous proceeding under s. 145, Criminal P. O., was between one Indradeo Singh as the first party and the servants of the junior Rani of Deo as the second party, and the former was declared to be entitled to possession. Then there was second a proceeding under s. 145, Criminal P. O. between three parties. The junior Rani and her servants were one party, the senior Rani another and Indradeo the third party. Indradeo was ordered not to go over the land in dispute. The District Magistrate of Gaya referred the case to this Court, and it was held that the proceeding was not without jurisdiction.

Though both of us agree in the view taken in this last case, the general principle which we have enunciated above remains the same. A third party, not bound by the order in a proceeding under the section is in a different position from a party who has been definitely prohibited from disturbing the possession of the successful party. It may also be that the position of the parties to s. 145 proceeding has changed since the passing of order under the section. For instance, if in a proceeding under the section A was prohibited from interfering with the possession of B who was held to be in possession, and A afterwards comes forward with the allegation that he has since then obtained possession under, say, a lease or a purchase from B, this may be a good ground for the Magistrate to start a second 145 Criminal P. O. proceeding in case there be apprehension of a breach of the peace. But the party prohibited from interfering with the possession of another party cannot, in our opinion, be heard to say against that party that he has disobeyed the order and has thus been able to retain or obtain possession. To allow such a plea will be to defeat the object of the Legislature in enacting s. 145, Criminal P. O. There will be no end to disputes and apprehensions of breach of the peace which the section is designed to stop.

In the present case there has been no change in the position of the parties since the order of 1931, and the contention of the defence comes to this, that they ignored the order of the Magistrate passed in 1931, and in spite of it continued in possession, and that we should find their actual possession. This, in our opinion, cannot be allowed. Let us however see how far the allegation of the defence that in spite of the order under s. 145, they continued in possession of all the Dubha taufir lands is true. (Their Lordships then examined certain evidence and concluded). To sum up, our conclusions are that the order under s. 145, Criminal P. O., passed by Rai Sahib Sukhdeo Narayan in 1931 is still in force and by virtue of that order the Maharaja, and thereafter his lessees, must have been and in any case must be held to have been in possession of at least the 258 bighas of land which formed part of the subject-matter of that proceeding. Out of this area, a block of 100 bighas was always easily identifiable on account of its contiguity to the 77 bigha block in the unquestioned possession of the appellants and the members of their family. The situation of this 77 bigha block was neither doubtful nor in dispute; and therefore there could be no real difficulty in locating the 100 bighas at least which lay just east. Since the order of Rai Sahib Sukhdeo Narayan in September 1931, excluding the period when the lands were under attachment, the lessees of the Maharaja must be in possession. It is true that occasionally the Gangauli Thakurs (the appellant's party) were able to disturb their possession. In one year they looted the crops. In the cultivation season of 1937-38 they must, in spite of the denials of the prosecution, have cultivated some portion of the lands. But we are satisfied that a large area in the neighbourhood of the 77 bighas was actually cultivated and shown by the prosecution party; and the present occurrence took place in respect of it. The documentary evidence, the decrees of the Civil Courts and the orders of the Criminal Courts are in favour of the prosecution, and last but not least, there is the statutory presumption of correctness attaching to the Record of Rights in their favour, which has not been rebutted. This disposes of the question of possession, which was very elaborately argued before us by Sir Manmatha Nath Mukherji.

Comparatively little argument has been addressed to us on the question of the occurrence itself. The principal comments made on this part of the prosecution story were: that the hut alleged by the prosecution to have been burnt was not even constructed; that its dimensions as given are so small that 11 persons could not have been sleeping in it; that in the neighbourhood there was no mark of habitation in the hut. Witnesses have made contradictory statements about the time when the hut was constructed and as to the place from where the materials for its construction were brought. No hoof-marks of the mare on which Ambika Singh is said to have been riding were found at the place where they ought to have been found; and it was urged that what was found was due to the pony of the ekka on which the Sub-Inspector reached the spot. We have looked into the evidence in the light of these comments, and do not consider it desirable to prolong this judgment by dealing with them in detail, as has been done by the learned Additional Sessions Judge. It is sufficient to say that we see no reason to differ from his conclusions on these points. There is no dispute that an occurrence took place in which Ramnarain was killed and Lalmohur and Ujagir were wounded. The explanation of the defence that when the prosecution party was stealthily attempting to put up a hut, they were seen by their rakhwaras (guard), who were occupying the hut of Gangauli Thakurs on 77 bighas of land, and that a fight took place between the prosecution party and these rakhwaras cannot be accepted. The hut in the 77 bighas of land was by no means close to the scene of the occurrence, and it is far from probable that in the dead of night the rakhwaras (of whom none has been produced) noticed the alleged erection of the hut and went up to interfere. In our opinion, the view of the learned Additional Sessions Judge is right that the occurrence took place in the manner deposed to by the prosecution witnesses.

The question of participation by individual, accused in the raiyat has received very careful consideration at the hands of the learned Additional Sessions Judge. We have also looked into this question and are of opinion that the learned Additional Sessions Judge has come to the correct conclusions. There is therefore, no merit in the appeal. We now take up the application in revision in which the first informant asks us to convict the appellants of the offences of which they have been acquitted by the Additional Sessions Judge and to enhance the sentences passed upon them. This Court is as a rule loath to entertain such applications from private parties in ordinary circumstances. But there are in this case (as we have said before) clear indications that the accused party has been defying law and disobeying the orders, both of the Civil and of the Criminal Courts, and has been repeatedly creating trouble in the locality for many years past. We therefore decided to entertain the application in revision. The circumstances are such that even without the application we should have felt it our duty quo motu to consider whether the sentences are adequate, if not also whether the appellants were not wrongly acquitted of some of the more serious charges.

We agree with the learned Judge below that on the evidence on record, the conviction of Lalchand Thakur under s. 302 and of the other appellants under ss. 302-149 was not possible. The learned Judge has referred to the discrepancies in the evidence about the weapons used, and pointed out that the eye-witnesses could not really have seen the actual assault which took place at some distance from them. He is similarly right in acquitting Jagannath Thakur, Kawal Thakur, Ohaman Thakur, Rajdayal Thakur and Jamuna Prasad Thakur of the specific charges under s. 324, I. P. O. The evidence in this connection comes only from the victims Ujagir and Lalmohur and is not free from contradictions and other difficulties. We do not, however, see any good reason why the learned Judge did not convict all the appellants (excepting Lalchand Thakur) under ss. 326-149, I. P. O., as included in the actual charge under ss. 302-149 framed against them. The reason given by him for not applying s. 149 to the murder is that the murder was not committed in the prosecution of the common object of the unlawful assembly. In our opinion it was. But even if the contrary were to be held, attention must be paid to the second part of s. 149, I. P. C., which we underline (italicized) below:

"If an offence is committed by any member of an unlawful assembly in prosecution of the common object of that assembly, or such as the members of that assembly knew to be likely to be committed in prosecution of that object, every person who, at the time of the committing of that offence, is a member of the same assembly, is guilty of that offence."

If a mob armed with deadly weapons goes to achieve a particular object by force or show of force, it is reasonable to infer that all the members of the assembly know that grievous hurt, if not murder, is likely to be caused in prosecution of that object. The murder and the assaults in the present case were not isolated acts committed by individual members of the assembly independently of the common object. It is obvious from the manner in which the riot was committed that the members of the unlawful assembly were out to terrorize the prosecution party by destroying their hut and beating them in order to deter them from remaining on the land. Among the two objects mentioned in the charge, one was to commit assault, and assaults were committed in prosecution of that object. Even if it could be properly held that the murder was not committed in prosecution of the common object of the assembly, the liability under s. 149 would remain in so far as the members of the assembly knew that at least grievous hurt would be caused in the riot. We are therefore clearly of opinion that the appellants were wrongly acquitted of the charges under s. 149 altogether. But we do not propose to convict them under ss. 326-149 for reasons which will now be stated.

The question arises whether this Court under its combined appellate and revisional powers can convert the acquittal under ss. 302-149 into a conviction (under ss. 326-149) and then pass a sentence where none was passed by the lower Court. Two propositions are now settled by decisions of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee. In Chunbidya v. Emperor (6) their Lordships held that in the exercise of its revisional powers under s. 439, Criminal P. C., 1891, a High Court upon having the record of a criminal proceeding brought to its notice on an appeal from the conviction therein, can call upon the appellant to show cause why the sentence should not be enhanced, and having heard and dismissed the appeal, can forthwith enhance the sentence under that revisional power although precluded by s. 423 from doing so in the appeal. In Kishan Singh v. Emperor (7), they held that a High Court cannot, while exercising its revisional power under s. 439, Criminal P. C., convert a finding of acquittal into one of conviction and then enhance the sentence. In this case their Lordships referred to the case in In re Bali Reddi (8) and pointed out that the view taken in that case, as regards s. 439 (4), was not accepted in Allahabad in Emperor v. Sheodarsan Singh (9) and in Bombay in Emperor v. Shivaputraya Durdundaya (10). The view taken in these last two cases was approved, but their Lordships after referring to the fact that in the Madras case there was an appeal by the accused, besides a Rule issued in revision by the High Court, considered it unnecessary to express any opinion whether the facts would justify the Madras decision. They were, however, definitely unable to agree that s. 439 (4), refers to cases ending in a complete acquittal and not to cases ending in conviction of a minor offence included in the offence charged. These two decisions, however, do not directly touch the question before us, viz. whether, while dealing with an appeal of a convicted person, his acquittal of some charges can be set aside and he can be convicted of them and sentenced. Since the decision of their Lordships in Kishan Singh v. Emperor (7), there have been two Indian decisions, one in Allahabad and the other in Lahore, which seem to be conflicting.

In Sarada Prasad v. Emperor, 168 Ind. Cas. 17 (11), the learned Judges of the Allahabad High Court held that a Court of Appeal cannot under s. 423 (1) (b), Criminal P. C., set aside an express order of acquittal, nor can the High Court do so in revision; having regard to s. 439 (4). The alteration of a finding within the former section was in their opinion not the same as reversal. They referred to the decision of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in Kishen Singh v. Emperor (7) and concluded that neither an Appellate Court nor a revisional Court has power to reverse the finding of acquittal and convert it into one of conviction, and that where an accused, is charged with two separate offences and the trial Court convicts him of one and acquits him of the other, and the Court of Session on appeal differs from the trial Court on both points, the case must be referred to the High Court which has an unrestricted power in revision to order a re-trial.

As we have said, however, their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in Kishen Singh v. Emperor (7), left open the question of the power of a High Court to alter findings in an appeal from a conviction. In Mehdi v. Emperor (12), it was held that under the combined provisions of ss. 423 and 439, Criminal P. O., a High Court has power to alter a conviction under s. 326, I. P. O., to one under s. 302, I. P. O. This is directly opposed to the Allahabad view in Sarada Prasad v. Emperor, 168 Ind. Cas. 17 (11). The learned Judges referred to the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Kishen Singh v. Emperor (7), and observed that in that case their Lordships had expressly stated that they did not decide the point as to the combined powers of the High Court under the two sections as decided in In re Bali Reddi (8). As in our opinion also, their Lordships of the Privy Council have not decided the matter, it is necessary to examine the position in some detail. In On Shwe v. Emperor (13), it was held that in an appeal from a conviction under s. 304, I. P. O. (the accused person having been committed to stand his trial under s. 302, I. P. O.) where in addition the High Court takes seisin of the case also in its revisional jurisdiction, the conviction for the lesser offence can be converted into one under s. 302, I. P. O. and the sentence can be enhanced accordingly, under the combined provisions of ss. 423 and 439, Criminal P. O. This case was, however, decided before the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Kishen Singh v. Emperor (7). We are not aware of any later decision of the Rangoon High Court on the point. And in the present case the appellants have been convicted of rioting—a conviction which we must affirm so that there is here no question of merely altering a finding under s. 423 (1) (b) (2) and then enhancing the sentence.

In the Madras High Court the earliest relevant case which has come to our notice is Appana v P. Mahalakshmi (14). In this case the High Court held that under s. 423 (1) (b) (2), Criminal P. O., the Appellate Court may alter the finding maintaining the sentence and that there is nothing to restrict the finding which may be altered to a finding of conviction. In the later case in In re Bali Reddi (8), already referred to, the view was taken that the acquittal referred to in s. 439 is a complete acquittal, but this was expressly disapproved by the Privy Council in Kishen Singh v. Emperor (7). It is also held that in an appeal from a conviction, the finding can be so altered as to convict the accused of an offence of which he has been acquitted by the trial Court. The correctness of this view seems to have been left open in Kishen Singh v. Emperor (7). But the same High Court in In re Subba Chukli (15) seems to have dissented from this view. It is true that this was a case in revision and not an appeal, but the express dissent from In re Bali Reddi (8), is to be noted, being prior to the Privy Council decision in Kishen Singh v. Emperor (7).

A number of Calcutta cases were placed before us, but only two of them are of some help in this case. One is Queen-Empress v. Jabanulla (16), where it was held that the Appellate Court can under s. 423, Criminal P. O., in an appeal from a conviction, alter the finding of the lower Court and find the appellant guilty of an offence of which he was acquitted by that Court; there was, however, no question of enhancing the sentence or passing an additional sentence in respect of this conviction. In Hanuman Sarma v. Emperor (17), where an accused charged under s. 376 and s. 354, I. P. O., was acquitted of the former offence and convicted of the latter, the High Court altered the conviction to one under ss. 376-511, I. P. O., Mallik, J. held that the acquittal under s. 376, I. P. O. did not constitute acquittal under ss. 376-511, I. P. O. while Remfry, J. was of opinion that in spite of the acquittal the High Court could, under s. 423 (b), Criminal P. O. convert and alter the finding of acquittal into one of conviction. All the cases which we have referred to above are cases in which a conviction of a lesser offence was converted into one of a graver offence or a conviction of one offence was substituted for a conviction of another offence, though the trial Court had recorded an acquittal on the former. None of them is a case in which while a conviction of one offence was maintained, the Appellate Court added a conviction of another offence of which the appellant had been acquitted by the trial Court.

We now come to Patna cases. Here again there is practically no case, which directly touches the question before us. The nearest case which can be found in Wazir Kunjra v. Emperor (18). In this case the accused Wazir Kunjra was acquitted by a Magistrate of an offence under s. 326, I. P. O. and convicted under s. 148, I. P. O. only. On a reference made by the Sessions Judge, the High Court convicted him under s. 326 and awarded sentence in addition to the sentence imposed by the trial Court under s. 148, I. P. O. This was done in March, 1928, under the revisional powers of the Court, and can no longer be regarded as good law after the later Privy Council decision in Kishen Singh v. Emperor (7). Other cases need not be referred to in detail, as they all relate to replacing one conviction by another, as for instance, Mahangu Singh v. Emperor (19). In view of the divergence of judicial opinion before and after the Privy Council decision in Kishen Singh v. Emperor (7), we have considered whether it would not be desirable to refer this case to a larger Bench for an authoritative pronouncement on the point. But in the circumstances of this case the point is relatively unimportant; the appellants have already been subjected to the cost of one long hearing and we feel that they can be adequately dealt with without pursuing this aspect of the revisional application any further.

That application will, therefore, be allowed only in respect of the sentences on the charges of which the appellants have been found guilty.

The appellants' repeated defiance of the orders of various Courts, both Civil and Criminal, of which we must take notice, can be appropriately dealt with under s. 106, Criminal P. O. In affirming their convictions on the charges of rioting we consider that the sentences passed by the lower Court are not altogether adequate and that the following sentences will suffice to meet the ends of justice:

| 1. Ambika Thakur; | Under s. 147, I. P. O. two years' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 200 (rupees two hundred) with six months' rigorous imprisonment in default. |

We enhance the sentences as above, and direct that out of the fines, if realized, Rs. 500 be paid to the lessees of the Maharaja through the first informant. We further under s. 106, Criminal P. O. order that the appellants do each of them execute a bond with sureties, as specified below, to keep the peace for a period of three years, from the dates of their release from jail. Ambika Thakur and Nawab Thakur to execute bonds of Rs. 500 each with two sureties of Rs. 250 each, and the remaining appellants to execute bonds of Rs. 200 each with two sureties of Rs. 100 each. In case any appellant or appellants fail to execute the bonds with sureties as specified above, the defaulter or defaulters will suffer simple imprisonment for the same period (three years) from the dates from which they would otherwise be due for their release from jail.

Insolvency—Order of discharge on condition that insolvent would remain liable to debts incurred before insolvency, whether amounts to refusal to grant discharge—Provincial Insolvency Act (V of 1920), s. 28 (2)—No leave of Court obtained—Suit must be dismissed.

The object of an adjudication in insolvency is to free the debtor from the claims of his existing creditors, which are to be satisfied out of the property of the debtor which the Court takes possession of and distributes among the creditors; and for the Court to discharge the insolvent but to leave him liable to debts incurred before insolvency, defeats the object of the adjudication. Such conditional discharge amounts to a refusal to grant discharge.

Prohibition in s. 28 (2), Provincial Insolvency Act imposes a condition precedent to the commencement of the suit, and if the leave of the Court is not obtained, the suit must necessarily be dismissed. 31 Ind. Cas. 948 (2) and 138 Ind. Cas. 788 (3), followed. 138 Ind. Cas. 824 (1), not followed.

Order.—In the two suits, out of which these revision applications arise, the plaintiff sued the defendant on money claims in the Small Cause Court at Poona, the suits having been commenced on February 2, 1938. The defence in each case was that, as the defendant had been adjudicated insolvent in August 1935, the plaintiff's suit did not lie, since he had not obtained leave to sue under s. 28 (2), Provincial Insolvency Act. The answer to that defence was that the insolvency had been brought to an end, subject to a condition which allowed the creditors to sue. The material facts relating to the insolvency are that the adjudication took place in 1935, and certain sums were paid into Court by the insolvent. Subsequently, he applied for his discharge, and the learned Subordinate Judge at Poona, before whom the application came, was of opinion that the debtor had not paid eight annas in the rupee, and therefore ought not to be given an unconditional discharge, and he made the following order:

"I do not grant an absolute order of discharge but grant a conditional one, the condition being that the creditors may recover their dues, if within time, until they become irrecoverable."

That seems to me to be a very singular order to make in insolvency. It destroys the whole effect of the insolvency. The object of an adjudication in insolvency is to free the debtor from the claims of his existing creditors, which are to be satisfied out of the property of the debtor which the Court takes possession of and distributes among the creditors; and for the Court to discharge the insolvent but to leave him liable to debts incurred before insolvency defeats the object of the adjudication. The order is sought to be justified under s. 41 (2) (c), Provincial Insolvency Act. That section provides that the Court may grant an order of discharge subject to any conditions with respect to any earnings or income which may afterwards become due to the insolvent, or with respect to his after-acquired property. It is clear that the condition imposed by the learned Judge has nothing to do with the future earnings or income or with after-acquired property, and in my opinion, the condition is invalid in law. The question then arises as to the meaning and effect of the order. It is an order of discharge subject to a void condition or is it an order refusing discharge? Taking the words of the order as a whole and having regard to the statement therein that the learned Judge was not prepared to grant an unconditional discharge, I think I must take the order as amounting to a refusal to grant discharge. If the order amounts to an absolute discharge, the plaintiff's debt is released under s. 44 (2). But if the order amounts, as I hold that it does, to a refusal of discharge, then the question arises as to what is the effect of the plaintiff having failed to obtain leave from the Court under s. 28 (2).

It was held by Tyabji, J. in Bhimaji Bhimbhutam v. Chunilal Javerchand (1), that where a suit was commenced against an insolvent without obtaining leave, the suit need not be dismissed but might be stayed. Therein he differed from a previous decision of Davar, J. in In re Dwarkadas Tejchand (2), which had been followed by Blackwell, J. in Maya Okeda v. Kuverji (3), though the latter decision was not apparently brought to the attention of Tyabji, J. There being conflicting decisions of Courts of co-ordinate jurisdiction, I have to determine which of them should be followed, and I have no hesitation in following the decisions of Davar and Blackwell, J.J. It seems to me that the language of s. 26 (2) is perfectly plain. It provides that after adjudication no creditor to whom the insolvent is indebted in respect of any debt provable under the Act shall, during the pendency of the insolvency proceedings have any remedy against the property of the insolvent in respect of the debt, or commence any suit or other legal proceeding, except with the leave of the Court. The prohibition seems to me to impose a condition precedent to the commencement of the suit, and if the leave of the Court is not obtained, the suit must necessarily be dismissed. I must make the Rule absolute with costs, and dismiss the plaintiff's suits with costs, but this is without prejudice to any right the plaintiff may have to prove for his debt in the insolvency.

D. Rule made absolute.

ACCUSED.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 530 (g)—Magistrate trying offence under s. 4, Bombay Prevention Gambling Act (IV of 1887), summarily—S. 530 (g) if applies.

Trying an offender summarily under s. 530 (g), Criminal P. O., means trying the particular offender in a particular case summarily and trying that offender for that offence of which he is accused.

Where, therefore, a Magistrate tries an offence under s. 4, Bom. Gambling Act summarily, s. 530 (g), Criminal P. O. applies.

Or. Ref. made by the Additional Sessions Judge, Sukkur, dated April 3, 1939.

Mr. Partabrai D. Punwani, the Advocate-General, for the Crown.

Davis, J. C.—This is a reference by the learned Additional Sessions Judge at Sukkur in which he recommends that we quash the conviction and sentence passed upon seven persons convicted of offences under ss. 4 and 5, Bom. Gambling Act, on the ground that the offences were tried summarily and that by a recent amendment of the Act under s. 4 an offence is made punishable with seven months' imprisonment, so that offences under s. 4 are not now triable summarily. We think the reference of the learned Additional Sessions Judge must be accepted. It was on the basis of two cases, Emperor v. Ganu Sadu (1) and Emperor v. Atma Ram (2), that it was suggested by the learned Advocate-General that s. 530 (g), Criminal P. O., applied as we have here a case of a Magistrate not empowered by law trying an offence summarily. It is arguable that reading s. 530, Criminal P. O., as a whole that section is designed to deal not with a case where no Magistrate can do what that section refers to, but a case where one Magistrate may lawfully do what that section refers to but another, the Magistrate in the particular case, cannot do, because he is not especially empowered. But we do not think that we can fairly put upon the section so restricted a meaning. It is, of course, not a matter of much importance, for, if any Magistrate tries a case summarily which he cannot under s. 260, Criminal P. O. do, he acts without jurisdiction, as was the view taken in the Calcutta case reported in Bishu Shaik v. Saber Mollah (3), and an illegality of such a nature, going to the root of the trial, clearly cannot be cured under s. 537, Criminal P. O. But the words of s. 530, Criminal P. O., are very wide. The section says:

"If any Magistrate not being empowered by law in this behalf does any of the following things, namely:—(g) tries an offender summarily, his proceedings shall be void."

In this case it is literally true that the Magistrate who tried this offence summarily, was not empowered by law to do so because of the provisions of s. 260, Criminal P. O. It is true that cl. (g) says "tries an offender summarily" and it may be said that as the Magistrate in this case is empowered to try an offender summarily under s. 260, Criminal P. O., s. 530 (g), Criminal P. O., will not apply to his proceedings. But trying an offender summarily under s. 530 (g), Criminal P. O., appears to us to mean trying the particular offender in a particular case summarily and trying that offender for that offence of which he is accused. The words "offender" and "offence" are not always used in the Criminal P. O., with great precision. For instance s. 530 (g), Criminal P. O. refers to "trying an offender summarily", and s. 260 refers to the trial of "offences". But we do not think this distinction is of any importance in the case before us. Madras Hindu Religious Endowments Act (II of 1927 as amended by Act XII of 1935), s. 63 (2)—Appointment of additional or associate trustees and manager, whether ultra vires of Board.

The Amending Act XII of 1935 does not say that the amendment shall have retrospective effect or that the law must be deemed to have been always as laid down in the Amending Act. So the appointment of additional or associate trustees before the amendment is ultra vires of the Board. 156 Ind. Cas. 953 (1) followed.

The provisions in the scheme relating to the appointment of a manager by the Board and the allotment of important duties of management to him must be deemed to be ultra vires because they have the effect of placing the management of the institution in the hands of some one not appointed by the trustee and not responsible to him, and would thus in fact displace the trustee from the management of the affairs of the temple.

A. against the decree of the District Court Bellary, in O. S. No. 5 of 1934.

Mr. P. V. Rajamannar, for the Appellant.

Mr. P. Chandra Reddi, for the Respondent.

Pandrang Row, J.—This is an appeal by the Board of Commissioners for Hindu Religious Endowments, Madras, from the decree of the District Judge of Bellary dated February 18, 1935, in O. S. No. 5 of 1934, a suit by the trustee of Sri Virupaksheswaraswami, etc., temples at Hampi in Hospet taluk against the Board for cancelling or modifying a certain scheme framed by the Board on August 4, 1933. It was alleged in the plaint that the Board had no power to frame the scheme and that in any case there was no justification for the framing of a scheme. This formed the subject-matter of Issue No. 1 in the suit. That allegation, however, was withdrawn at the trial and the Court below has found that a scheme was necessary and the need for a scheme is not now questioned before us on behalf of the respondent.

The appeal relates to two matters, namely the appointment of additional or associate trustees provided in the scheme and the appointment of a manager by the Board and the allotment of certain duties to him in the scheme. As regards these two matters, the learned District Judge was of opinion that the provisions in the scheme relating thereto were ultra vires of the Board and accordingly directed the deletion of those parts of the scheme which related to these matters. As regards the appointment of additional or associate trustees, though under the Act as amended by Act XII of 1935 such an appointment is allowed in terms, nevertheless, before the Act was amended, that is to say, when the scheme now under discussion was framed by the Board, no such power had been expressly conferred on the Board. On the other hand, in construing cl. 2 of s. 63 of the Act of 1927, a Bench of this Court held in Naranna Naidu v. Venkataramayya (1) that the Board had no power to appoint additional or associate trustees. We see no reason to differ from that decision as regards the interpretation of this particular provision of the law in question as it stood before the Act was amended. The Amending Act does not say that the amendment shall have retrospective effect or that the law must be deemed to have been always as laid down in the Amending Act. It was perfectly open to the Legislature to have declared its intention to make the new provision retrospective if it had that intention. The Amending Act does not, however, disclose any such intention and we are unable to see any reason for departing from the general rule against giving retrospective effect to legislation. The learned District Judge was, therefore, right in coming to the conclusion that the appointment of additional or associate trustees is ultra vires of the Board. Though he does not quote the Bench decision above referred to, it is probable he had it in mind.

(1) 58 M 862; 156 Ind. Cas. 953; A I R 1935 Mad. 762; 68 M L J 722; (1935) M W N 382; 8 B M 91.

As regards the second point, the appointment of a manager by the Board and the allotment of certain important duties to him under the scheme, the provisions in the scheme are such that, if they are allowed to remain, the powers of the hereditary trustee could be practically set at naught and what could not be done directly would be allowed to be done indirectly by the appointment of a manager by the Board and entrusting all the most important duties of management to him under the scheme itself, he being removable only by the Board. These provisions would reduce the powers of the trustee to a cipher, or at least the provisions may be so worked as to produce this result and we are of opinion that in this view the provisions in the scheme relating to the appointment of a manager by the Board and the allotment of important duties of management to him must also be deemed to be ultra vires because they have the effect of placing the management of the institution in the hands of some one not appointed by the trustee and not responsible to him, and would thus in fact displace the trustee from the management of the affairs of the temple. Nevertheless, it is but right that we should express our view that the trustee would do well to see that an efficient man is appointed as local manager to look after the actual management of the affairs of the temple as it would appear that the trustee himself is not in a position to look after the management personally throughout, and we wish to make it clear that if there is any mismanagement of the affairs of the institution in future, the powers of the Board to rectify such mismanagement will remain unaffected by the result of this appeal. It follows from what we have said that the appeal must fail as both the points raised have to be decided against the appellant. The appeal is accordingly dismissed with costs.

Mr. R. R. Dandige, for the Applicant.

Dr. W. S. Barlingay, for the Opposite Party.

Order.—The Judge of the Additional Small Cause Court, Nagpur, has rejected the application in execution of the applicant, dated May 21, 1938, on the ground that it is barred by time. The reason appears more fully in the order-sheet of the preceding date April 6, 1938. There was a previous application for execution made on January 2, 1938, and the Judge has held that it was not a step-in-aid of execution, so that more than three years having elapsed from the first application, dated January 25, 1932, the present one is barred by time under Art. 182 of the Schedule to the Lim. Act. Order-sheets of the application, dated January 2, 1936, read as under :

January 1, 1936. Decree-holder by agent. Application found incorrect. Decree-holder wants some time to supply the information. Time granted till January 28, 1936.

January 29, 1936. Decree-holder absent. He is, however, awaited till February 13, 1936.

February 13, 1936. Decree-holder did not turn up though he was given one chance. Moreover, the information given by the applicant is wrong. Application is dismissed with costs.

It appears that the mistake in the application was about the costs of the previous execution application. The figure given, Rs. 2-8-0 was wrong and should have been larger. Such a mistake in itself is no sufficient reason for holding that the application was not a step-in-aid of execution or was not made substantially in accordance with law: see Ramanandan Chetti v. Periatambi Sherai (1), and Obhrai in his Limitation and Prescription, Vol. III, para. 2578 where under Art. 182 (5) cases dealing with technical errors are collected. It has been held that a mere misstatement of the amount of the decretal money in a lesser sum or the date of the decree wrongly shown, would be an immaterial irregularity not affecting the validity of the application: Gopal Sah v. Janki Koer (2), Gopal Chunder Manna v. Gosain Das Kalay (3).

The non-applicant, however, argues that the order of the lower Court rejecting the application amounts to a finding that it is not in accordance with law, and this finding not being challenged, has become final. This question was dealt with by a Full Bench of the Judicial Commissioner's Court in Gulamali v. Rajkumar Chatterji (4), where the dictum in the previous case Meghraj v. Abdul Majid Khan (5), was found to be defective. The Bench laid down that where the order rejecting the application amounts to a finding that the application was not in accordance with law, the application is ineffectual to stay the running of limitation: if not, the Court must look to the application itself to see whether it is in accordance with law or not. Niyogi, A. J. O., elaborated the point and declared that where an application is rejected, dismissed or struck off for mere formal defects or a bona fide mistake in furnishing details or on account of the decree-holder's absence, such an order cannot estop the decree-holder from showing that his application was not defective but in accordance with law. In the present case the application is rejected because of decree-holder's absence and his failure to correct an unimportant inaccuracy in the costs. This does not amount to an express or implied finding that the application is not in accordance with law. I therefore think that the finding is not res judicata. In Gulam Ali v. Rajkumar (6), which is a case practically on all fours, it was held that a finding that an application is incorrect cannot be taken to imply a finding that it is not in accordance with law; and hence is sufficient to save limitation. I find that in spite of the understatement of costs, the application of 1936 was in accordance with law and thus limitation was saved.

The order, dated April 28, 1938, is set aside and execution will proceed. Costs of this application on the non-applicant. Counsel's fee Rs. 15.

Calcutta Municipal Act (III of 1923), ss. 139, 141—Jurisdiction of Small Cause Court to hear objection as to liability to assessment.

The word "valuation" in s. 139, Calcutta Municipal Act, may mean: (1) the estimated value; (2) the act or process of valuing. There is nothing in this section to limit the meaning of the word "valuation" to the quantum of valuation only. It includes the whole process of valuing as well. Consequently, objections not merely as to quantum of assessment but as to liability to assessment also, can be heard by Small Cause Court Judge. Corporation of Calcutta v. Bhupati Roy Choudhury (3) and Secretary of State v. Balchambers (4), relied on.

O. Rules issued from the order of the Judge, Small Cause Court, Sealdah (24 Parganas), dated December 12 and 13, 1938.

Derbyshire, C. J.—In these matters, on January 6, 1939, Rules were issued at the instance of the Govt. of Bengal upon the Corporation of Calcutta to show cause why the orders complained of should not be set aside and the objections of the Govt. of Bengal decided. The matter arose in this way: There are three canals, first the Circular Canal which begins at the Hooghly in the northern part of Calcutta and continues in an easterly and southerly directions through the area in which Calcutta lies until it joins the Beliaghata Canal which continues in an easterly direction towards the salt lakes. From it, near the northern end, branches the new canal. The Circular Canal was formerly the boundary between the old Municipality of Calcutta and the Municipalities of Cossipur and Maniktola previous to the incorporation of the two last-mentioned Municipalities within the Municipality of Calcutta, about 1922. It is stated that this Circular Canal does not lie within any of the wards of the Municipality of Calcutta as specified in the Calcutta Municipal Act, 1923. The three canals in question are owned by the Govt. of Bengal and over them pass boats and barges which are said to pay tolls to the Govt. Hitherto, these canals have not been rated by the Municipality and have not paid Municipal rates. On or about March 16, 1932, Govt. received from the Corporation a notice, purporting to be under s. 138, Calcutta Municipal Act, 1923, in which (I. refer now to the Circular Canal but the same consideration applies to the other two) for the first time the canal in question was given an annual valuation under s. 131 of the Act. The canal was given an annual valuation of Rs. 1,05,600 and the rate sought to be charged was Rs. 2 per catta per mensem with effect from the first quarter of the year 1932-33. In all, a consolidated rate of Rs. 20,592 per year was sought to be imposed.

The Govt. filed a written notice of objections under s. 139 of the Act objecting that the canal was not assessable at all under the Act on the ground, firstly, that it was Crown property, and secondly, that it did not lie within one of the wards and so could not be assessed under the provisions of s. 131 or any other section; further, the Govt. objected to the quantum of the valuation and the consolidated rate. The Deputy Executive Officer of the Calcutta Corporation heard the Govt. objections and on May 21, 1938, confirmed the assessment. Thereupon, the Govt. preferred an appeal to the Court of Small Causes at Sealdah under s. 141, Calcutta Municipal Act, and took the same grounds in the appeal that they had urged before the Deputy Executive Officer. The appeal was registered as Municipal Appeal No. 6 of 1938, and the Govt. paid court-fees, Rs. 1,230, as on a plaint for the same valuation. On December 10, 1938, the Small Cause Court Judge dealt with the matter. He held that he had jurisdiction to deal with the quantum of the assessment but not to deal with the question of liability to assessment. The Govt. of Bengal obtained a rule in respect of that decision as set out above, contending that the Small Cause Court Judge had jurisdiction to hear the whole of their objections not merely as to quantum but as to liability. Section 124, Calcutta Municipal Act, provides that

"consolidated rates not exceeding 23 per cent. on the annual valuation determined under this Chapter (i. e. Chap. X of the Act) may be imposed by the Corporation upon all lands and buildings in Calcutta for the purposes of this Act."

Section 126 provides that certain buildings and lands "shall be exempt from the consolidated rate" and that the Corporation may exempt certain other lands and buildings "either wholly or partially" from the rates. Section 127 provides for calculating the annual value of lands or buildings for the purposes of this Act. Section 131 provides for the carrying on, until further valuation, of the valuation of any land or building situated in the several wards, and by sub-s. 2 (b) it is provided that

"any land or building, the valuation of which has been cancelled on the ground of irregularity, or which for any other reason has no annual value assigned to it under this Act, may be valued by the Executive Officer at any time during the currency of the period prescribed in respect of such land or building by sub-s. (1), and such valuation shall remain in force, and the consolidated rate shall be levied according to it, for the unexpired portion of such period."

It is under that section and sub-section we are told, that the canals in question were valued. Section 139 (1) provides:

"Any person who is dissatisfied with a valuation made under this Chapter may deliver at the Municipal Office a written notice stating the grounds of his objection to such valuation."

Section 140 (1), provides:

"All such objections shall be entered in a register to be maintained for the purpose and, on receipt of any objection, notice shall be given to the objector of a time and place at which his objection will be investigated."

(2) At the said time and place, the Executive Officer or a Deputy Executive Officer shall hear the objection, in the presence of the objector or his agent if he appears, or may, for reasonable cause, adjourn the investigation.

(3) When the objection has been determined, the order passed shall be recorded in the said register, together with the date of such order."

Section 141 (1) provides:

"Any person dissatisfied with the order passed on his objection may appeal to the Court of Small Causes having jurisdiction in the place where the land or building, to the valuation of which the objection was made, is situated."

(2) Such appeal shall be presented to such Court of Small Causes within thirty days from the date of the order passed under s. 140, and shall be accompanied by an extract from the register of objections containing the order objected to.

(3) The provisions of Parts II and III, Lim. Act, relating to the appeals shall apply to every appeal preferred under this section.

(4) No appeal shall be admitted under this section unless an objection has first been determined under s. 140."

Section 142 (1) provides that:

"Every valuation made by the Executive Officer under s. 131 shall, subject to the provisions of ss. 139, 140 and 141, be final.

(2) Every order passed by the Executive Officer or Deputy Executive Officer under s. 140 shall, subject to the provisions of s. 141, be final.

(3) An appeal from a decision made by the Court of Small Causes under s. 141 shall lie to the High Court."

I may mention in passing that the last provision, that an appeal shall lie to the High Court, is new in the Municipal Acts of Calcutta relating to rating. Section 146 (1) provides that in certain events the Executive Officer has power to amend the assessment book:

"By inserting any land or building which is, in his opinion, liable to the consolidated rate, or by inserting a valuation when the land or building liable to be valued has not been valued."

Sub-section (2) of the same section provides that the provisions of ss. 139 to 142 shall, with all necessary modifications, be deemed to apply to an objection which is made against the Executive Officer's order for the amendment of the assessment book under s. 146. The learned Judge of the Small Cause Court has based his decision upon some words which are found in the judgment of Panckridge, J. in Garrison Engineer of Fort Williams v. Corporation of Calcutta (1). In that case the military authorities objected to pay rates in respect of the Presidency Military Hospital for the year 1937. The assessment in respect of which the rate was claimed had been made some years previously and rates had been paid down to July 23, when the military authorities alleged that they are not liable to be rated at all in respect of the hospital, because it lay within the boundary of the fort and was thereby excluded from the provisions of the Calcutta Municipal Act, 1923. The military authorities proceeded under s. 45, Specific Relief Act, and obtained a rule calling upon the Chief Executive Officer to show cause why the assessment on the hospital should not be cancelled on the grounds set out above. The learned Judge on a consideration of the facts of the case found that the hospital did not lie within the boundaries of

(1) 42 O W N 789.

Fort William but lay within the Calcutta Municipal boundaries. From a consideration of the facts of the case it will appear that it was too late there for the military authorities to object to the valuation under s. 139. The only course open to them appears to have been the one they took. During the course of the argument which the Corporation put forward against the military authorities' contentions, it was alleged that the procedure under s. 45, Specific Relief Act was not open to the military authorities, and in dealing with it the learned Judge, considering ss. 139 to 142, said:

"In my opinion these sections have no application to the circumstances of the present case for they presuppose that the land and buildings which are the subject-matter of the valuation are assessable to the consolidated rate. In other words, they have reference to those cases where the liability to assessment and valuation is admitted, and the objection is to the quantum of the valuation, or the method in which it has been carried out."

It is on those words that the learned Judge of the Small Cause Court has based his decision. In my opinion, those words were not necessary to the decision. Mr. Justice Panckridge gave. He decided the matter on the facts and it was clear that the military authorities were too late to take advantage of ss. 139 to 142. I must regard those words, though they are entitled to great respect, as being obiter. To decide whether the learned Judge of the Small Cause Court was right, I must look at the provisions of the relevant sections themselves. It is clear that a person dissatisfied with the valuation may object to it under s. 139 that the Executive Officer or his Deputy must hear the objection, determine the matter and pass an order upon it under s. 140. Then under s. 141, if the objector is dissatisfied, he may appeal to the Small Cause Court. Now I see nothing in those sub-sections limiting the grounds of objection to the valuation. When the objections have been determined against the objectors under s. 140, I see nothing limiting the rate-payers' right to have the full order, made by the Executive Officer or his Deputy, considered with all the grounds of objection on appeal to the Small Cause Court.

There is an appeal from the Small Cause Court to the High Court. It has been held in Corporation of Calcutta v. Manik Lal De (2) that in an appeal under s. 141, the Small Cause Court Judge must record evidence in such a way that the High Court may on appeal, come to its own conclusion as to whether the decision of the Judge was right or wrong on the evidence. Thus a scheme is set out in the Act whereby any person, who is dissatisfied with the valuation, which is the indispensable preliminary to his being rated, shall urge his objection first to those who make the valuation, then to a local tribunal whose duty it is to take evidence and hear and determine the matter according to law with an appeal to this Court. There is full provision made for safeguarding the rights of the owner or occupier of land or buildings in Calcutta. The procedure is, it seems to me, analogous to that which obtains in rating appeals in England where there is an appeal against an item of the valuation list to the Assessment Committee, from the Assessment Committee to the Quarter Sessions who may deal with questions of fact and law then and to the High Court, which may determine the matter finally according to law. I can see no reason for holding that the learned Judge of the Small Cause Court is confined to the question of quantum of valuation only. If that were so, questions of liability would fall to be determined in another Court which would mean multiplicity of legal proceedings, vexatious and costly to the rate-payer and a hindrance to the Corporation in its collection of rates. It seems to me that the Act was designed to provide a chain of tribunals, the Executive Officer or his Deputy, the Small Cause Court and the High Court, to determine the rights and the liabilities both of the Corporation and of those whom it is sought to levy rates upon. In these circumstances it seems to me that the learned Judge was wrong in the decision that he gave, and the Rules issued in this matter should be made absolute. The result is that the Rules are made absolute and the cases sent back to the Court of Small Causes to be dealt with in accordance with the provisions of the law in the light of the observations made above. The petitioner is entitled to costs—a consolidated hearing-fee being assessed at fifteen gold mohurs.

Nasim Ali, J.—I agree with my Lord the Chief Justice that these Rules should be made absolute. The word "valuation" in s. 139, Calcutta Municipal Act, may mean: (1) the estimated value, (2) the act or process of valuing. (Oxford Dictionary). I see nothing in this section to limit the meaning of the word "valuation" to the quantum of valuation only. It includes the whole process of valuing as well: Corporation of Calcutta v. Bhupati Roy Choudhury (3) and Secretary of State v. Belchambers, (4). The grounds of objection to the valuation before the Small Cause Court Judge under s. 139 therefore would be to the process of valuing as well. If the process is bad, the amount of valuation in its entirety or in part will be bad. The case of the petitioner is that the entire process of valuing is bad inasmuch as it contravened the provisions of Chap. X Calcutta Municipal Act, relating to the valuation of land or buildings. It appears from the grounds of objection filed by the petitioner before the Small Cause Court Judge that his case is that the valuation in its entirety is bad, and the property valued is not "land" within the meaning of s. 127 or land within a ward of the Calcutta Municipality, as contemplated by s. 131 of the Act. If a rate-payer is entitled to object to the over-valuation, I see no reason why he cannot object to the valuation in its entirety. The grounds of objection as contemplated by s. 139, therefore, may relate not only to a part of the estimated value but to the whole of it.

Government of India Act 1933, (25 & 26 Geo. V, Ch. 42), s. 205—Duty of High Court to consider, determine and record in every case the granting or withholding of certificate—No such determination by High Court—Appeal held should be dismissed.

Section 205, Govt of India Act, 1935, imposes on the High Court the duty of considering and determining in every case, as part of its judgment, decree or final order, the giving or withholding of the certificate. On such determination the jurisdiction to entertain an appeal from such judgment, decree or final order depends, and, manifestly, such determination, whether it involves the granting or withholding of a certificate, should be recorded, not only for the information of the parties, but—a matter of equal importance—also for the certification of the Judicial Committee and the Federal Court as to their jurisdiction to entertain an appeal.

Where in a case the plaintiff sought an order for appointment of the Official Trustee of Bengal to be trustee of the estate of a deceased under the provisions of s. 10 of the Official Trustees Act which was amended by the Govt. of India (Adaptation of Indian Laws) Order, 1937, and the High Court in appeal did not record the determination of the question whether the appeal involved the granting or withholding of a certificate:

Held, that in the absence of certificate the appeal could not be entertained.

Messrs. L. P. E. Pugh, K. C. and W. W. K. Page, for the Appellants.

Mr. J. Nissim, for the Respondent.

Lord Thankerton—This is an appeal from a judgment and order of the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal, in its civil appellate jurisdiction dated April 11, 1938, which allowed in part the appeal of the present respondent from the judgment and order of the said High Court, in its original jurisdiction, made by Panckridge, J. on July 22, 1937.

The respondent raises a preliminary point as to the jurisdiction of this Board to entertain this appeal in view of the provisions of s. 205 of the Govt. of India Act, 1935, which provides as follows:—

"205.—(1) An appeal shall lie to the Federal Court from any judgment, decree or final order of a High Court in British India, if the High Court certifies that the case involves a substantial question of law as to the interpretation of this Act, or any Order in Council made thereunder, and it shall be the duty of every High Court in British India to consider in every case whether or not any such question is involved and of its own motion to give or withhold a certificate accordingly.

(2) Where such a certificate is given, any party in the case may appeal to the Federal Court on the ground that any such question as aforesaid has been wrongly decided, and on any ground on which that party could have appealed without special leave to His Majesty in Council if no such certificate had been given, and, with the leave of the Federal Court, on any other ground, and no direct appeal shall lie to His Majesty in Council, either with or without special leave."

This section imposes on the High Court the duty of considering and determining in every case, as part of its judgment, decree or final order, the giving or withholding of the certificate. On such determination the jurisdiction to entertain an appeal from such judgment, decree or final order depends, and, manifestly, such determination, whether it involves the granting or withholding of a certificate, should be recorded, not only for the information of the parties, but—a matter of equal importance—also for the certification of this Board and the Federal Court as to their jurisdiction to entertain an appeal. No such record appears in the present case nor is there anything to suggest that the matter was considered by the High Court Bench which delivered the judgment and order of April 11, 1938. The same is true of the High Court Bench which certified this case as a fit one for appeal to His Majesty in Council on June 15, 1938, and which was differently constituted. But, as their Lordships have already indicated, the statutory duty fell to be discharged by the Bench which delivered the judgment, and order of April 11, 1938.

In the present suit the appellants seek an order for appointment of the Official Trustee of Bengal to be trustee of the estate of one Alexander John Forbes deceased under the provisions of s. 10 of the Official Trustees Act (Act II of 1931), or, alternatively, for appointment of the said Official Trustee under s. 35 of the Indian Trustees Act, 1866. The estate of the deceased consisted partly of immovable property situate outside the Division of Bengal.

The Official Trustees Act, 1913, was amended by the Govt. of India (Adaptation of Indian Laws) Order, 1937, which was made by virtue of s. 293 of the Govt. of India Act, 1935, and came into force on April 1, 1937. The present writ of summons was taken out on May 5, 1937. Panckridge, J., who made the order of July 22, 1937, did not consider the Order in Council of 1937, but it was fully considered by the Appellate Bench (Costello and Lord Williams, JJ.) and it will be sufficient to quote some short passages from their judgment:—

"We are quite satisfied that had the attention of the learned Judge been drawn to the alteration effected by means of the Order in Council his decision would, in all probability, have been otherwise than what it was. The question whether the Court can appoint the Official Trustee of Bengal as trustee over properties outside the Province seems to depend upon the provisions of s. 3 as amended by the Order in Council and s. 10 of the Official Trustees Act. In other words, we think that, under the provisions of the Act as it now stands, this Court is not entitled to stretch its arms, if I may use the expression, beyond the territorial limits of its jurisdiction. The result is that we think that the order made by Mr. Justice Panckridge cannot stand in so far as it relates to any property not lying or not situate within the territorial jurisdiction of the Court. Mr. Banerji sought to argue that there is ample power in the Court under the general provisions of the Indian Trustees Act. I do not think it necessary to consider that aspect of the matter. This petition was essentially and primarily concerned with the appointment of the Official Trustee as such and the matter is one which quite clearly falls to be decided under the provisions of the Official Trustees Act and that Act alone."

Section 205 of the Govt. of India Act is not referred to in the judgment. Counsel for the appellants suggested that the Court may have considered this section and decided to withhold a certificate, though that decision is not expressed. The passages quoted above make this unlikely, and in the absence of a certificate their Lordships think that the appeal should be dismissed with costs. If, however, the High Court should hereafter make an order withholding a certificate under s. 205, the appellants are to be at liberty to apply to His Majesty in Council to have the present appeal restored. Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

With reference to the costs of a petition by the respondent which by the Board's order of May 18, 1939, were directed to be paid by him in any event, these will be taxed and set off against the costs that the appellants are by this judgment ordered to pay.

s. Order accordingly.

Provincial Insolvency Act (V of 1920), s. 42—Word assets, meaning of—Insolvent not guilty of misconduct specified in s. 42 (b) to (h) and paying eight annas in rupee. Absolute order of discharge, whether must be passed—Order suspending discharge till scheduled debts are fully paid up—Validity.

If the word "assets" used in relation to insolvency proceedings is not qualified in any way, as in the expression "future assets", it is generally understood to mean the amount actually in existence available for division among the creditors of the insolvency.

The effect of s. 42 of the Pro. Insolv. Act is such that the Court must grant an absolute order of discharge, provided, that the insolvent pays eight annas in the rupee and is not guilty of the misconduct specified in s. 42 (b) to (h). An order directing that the insolvent's discharge should be suspended until such time as his scheduled debts are fully paid is one without jurisdiction. 109 Ind. Cas. 633 (1) and Is re Kuinar (2), relied on.

O. R. P. from an order of the District Judge, Ferozepore, dated October 23, 1937.

Mr. C. L. Gulati, for the Petitioner.

Mr. R. P. Khosla, for the Respondents.

Order.—The petitioner in this case is Mr. O. Fleming, a driver on the N. W. Rly. He applied on October 14, 1933, to be adjudicated insolvent and was so adjudged on April 21, 1935, being ordered to apply for discharge within a year. In his application for insolvency he showed debts amounting to about Rs. 6,700 as due to five creditors. Two only were scheduled: Bulaqi Mal for Rs. 4,334, Ram Das for Rs. 1,551-8 0. To these creditors a dividend at the rate of 6 annas 4 pies in the rupee has been paid giving Rs. 1,725 odd to Bulaqi Mal and Rs. 617 odd to Ram Das. At this stage the insolvent applied for discharge. The learned Insolvency Judge very briefly ordered without giving reasons that the insolvent's discharge should be suspended until such time as his scheduled debts were fully paid. The insolvent appealed to the District Judge who rejected the appeal because "his property was not attached nor was half his pay attached because originally he agreed to pay the whole of his liabilities in the course of five or six years.....He wrote to the Official Receiver that he was prepared to pay the whole of the debts provided his pay was not attached to the extent of more than Rs. 60.....The creditors are in any case not getting any interest on their amounts."

Mr. Fleming has come here on revision under s. 75 of the Act through Mr. C. L. Gulati. Mr. Gulati's argument is that according to the theory and ideal administration of insolvency, the insolvent's property should be realized and distributed among his creditors and he should then become a free man within a reasonable time, whereas Mr. Fleming, who has already been before the Insolvency Court for more than five years and was actually adjudicated more than three years ago, is to be kept insolvent for several years more. He urges that the order of the Courts below is illegal, not being one of those permitted under s. 41 of the Act and that the effect of s. 42 of the Act is such that the Court must grant an absolute order of discharge, provided that the insolvent pays eight annas in the rupee and is not guilty of the misconduct specified in s. 42 (b) to (h). In the present case there is no allegation or evidence that the petitioner has been guilty of any misconduct and he is willing to pay eight annas in the rupee. Mr. Khosla on behalf of the Official Receiver, while admitting the force of these arguments, relies on the statement made by Mr. Fleming before the Insolvency Judge on October 17, 1935

"I must have at least one-third of my pay for the maintenance of my family. At first time half of it was cut. Now I cannot make both ends meet. The claims of the scheduled creditors can be satisfied in full if the case is being proceeded to an end. I will have no objection."

On this the Advocate representing the creditors said they had no objection if the salary cut were reduced from one half to one-third and their debts were paid in full and the debtor not discharged till then. The Court then passed an order that according to the statements of the parties the salary cut should be reduced from one-half to one-third. Apparently, Mr. Khosla relies on this statement as an estoppel although he does not say so very definitely, apparently recognizing that no estoppel can be pleaded against a statute. He also relies on the terms of s. 41 and s. 42 (1) (a) of the Act dealing with the insolvent's assets and argues that his future salary will in time be sufficient to satisfy the debts in full. The expression is "assets," not "future assets." "Assets" are defined in Wharton's Law Lexicon as "the property of any person, with reference to bankruptcy, available for division amongst his creditors." If the expression is not qualified in any way, as in the expression "future assets," it is generally understood to mean the amount actually in existence available for division among the creditors. Nand Lal v. Girdhari Lal 109 Ind. Cas. 633 (1), is a case almost exactly on all fours with the present. The District Judge on appeal had directed the petitioner to continue an insolvent and to continue payments until he liquidated the total amount of his debts or could show that he was no longer in a position to make payments. A Division Bench of the Oudh Chief Court relying on In re Kutner (2), held that "when an insolvent in India, whose case is governed by the provisions of the Pro. Insol. Act of 1920, has paid up eight annas in the rupee, he is entitled to be free from the disabilities of an insolvent unless it can be established that his case falls under the provisions of s. 42 (b) to (e) of the Act."

In re Kutner (2), is very similar in principle and the Oudh Chief Court relied upon it because of the similarity between the provisions of the Pro. Insol. Act and s. 26 of the English Bankruptcy Act, 1914. The Court of Appeal held that an order made by the Registrar in Bankruptcy suspending the discharge of the debtor until he had paid 15s. in the pound was an order made without jurisdiction. "To give such a power to the Court (to suspend the discharge until a larger dividend had been paid), and thus, in effect compel the debtor to work for his creditors to an extent beyond the prescribed sum as a condition of his discharge, is not in my judgment to be implied from the statute."

I accept Mr. Gulati's excellent argument and relying on the terms of s. 42 and on Nand Lal v. Girdhari, 109 Ind. Cas. 633 (1), I accept the revision against the order of the learned District Judge as being not made in accordance with law. It was said in Court that the amount paid by Mr. Fleming to the scheduled creditors was about Rs. 200 less than eight annas in the rupee. In accepting the petition, I direct that his discharge be suspended until he has paid eight annas in the rupee. The cut of Rs. 60 on his salary which was suspended during the hearing of this revision is re-imposed until the amount of eight annas in the rupee is paid and Mr. Fleming shall then be discharged. There will be no order as to costs in this petition for revision.

—RESPONDENT

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 182 (5)—Time, when runs—Final order on execution application committing judgment-debtor to civil prison—Judgment-debtor subsequently released for non-payment of subsistence allowance—Time, when runs—Execution, if pending when judgment-debtor was in prison—Sending of money order—If application to proper Court.

Before the Lim. Act was amended in 1927, the starting point for limitation was the date of an application made to a Court for execution of a decree or order. But after the amendment, the limitation runs from the final order passed by a Court on an application for execution or to take some step-in-aid of execution of decree or order.

Where final order on an application for execution is passed committing the judgment-debtor to civil prison, but the judgment-debtor is released subsequently for non-payment of subsistence allowance, the date from which the limitation runs is the date of the final order committing the judgment-debtor to civil prison and the execution proceedings cannot be said to be pending till the judgment-debtor was in prison. 140 Ind. Cas. 498 (1) and 98 Ind. Cas. 166 (4), disallowed, Malukchand Ratanchand v. Bechkar Natha (2) and 117 Ind. Cas. 578 (3), distinguished.

for a subsistence allowance of a judgment-debtor cannot be held to constitute an application to a Court within the meaning of Art. 182 (5), Lim. Act. 140 Ind. Cas. 498 (1), dissented from.

O. R. from the order of the Third Small Cause Court Judge, Rangoon, in Civil Execution No. 12601 of 1937.

Mr. Kalyanwalla, for the Applicant.

Mr. Bharadvaj, for the Respondent.

Order.—This application raises a very simple point of limitation about which, however, there is very considerable conflict of opinion and a marked lack of authority. The plaintiff obtained his decree on January 19, 1932. He filed an application for execution on January 14, 1933. The proceedings ended with a diary order dated February 16, 1933:

"Decree-holder in person and judgment-debtor in custody. There is no settlement. Judgment-debtor is committed."

The judgment-debtor went to the civil jail; his subsistence money was paid in month by month until he was released on July 1, 1933, for non-payment of subsistence. The next application for execution was filed on May 18, 1936, but was summarily rejected the next day as time-barred. A further application was filed ten days later on May 29, 1936. Notice, which was issued, was never served and on June 26, the diary order says the case is closed by request.

He now comes with the present application for execution. This was filed on December 12, 1937. A point was raised that limitation had prevented further execution of the decree, more than three years having lapsed from February 16, 1933, the date of the final order passed by the Court on the first application for execution before any further application for execution was made to the Court. To decide the case, it is first necessary to find exactly what the law says, as I fear, it must be acknowledged that some Courts have never ascertained this. Limitation with regard to execution of the decree is given in Art. 182. In the ordinary books all these Articles appear one below the other with commentaries in between, the Articles themselves being in three columns and so voluminous are the commentaries that the headings of these columns were separated by enormous distances from the Articles themselves. In my edition of Rustomji the schedule containing the Articles starts on p. 533 and Art. 182 is more than a thousand pages later. In consequence it is quite common to omit to look up the beginning of the schedule and see what is at the top of any particular column. The heading of col. 3 is "time from which period begins to run" and the relevant portion of Art. 182 reads in col. 3 under this heading

"(Where the application next hereinafter mentioned has been made) the date of the final order passed on an application made in accordance with law to the proper Court for execution, or to take some step-in-aid of execution of the decree or order."

Apart from the brackets, there is one comma in the whole of this article and to understand what that comma means, one has to look back at the heading of the column and see that the whole sentence must refer to some landmark of time. Now, taking the first portion of the quotation,

"the date of the final order passed on an application made in accordance with law to the proper Court for execution," it is quite understandable and there is no trouble at all. The period of limitation runs from this particular time, namely the date of the final order. I am asked to hold that this comma and the word "or" are completely disjunctive and the alternative period is "to take some step-in-aid of execution of the decree or order" but "to take some step-in-aid" is no landmark of time, and any meaning attached to the second part of the sentence must show a point of time. Except for the fact that it has given difficulty, I am unable to understand how any difficulty can arise. Applications are made to the Court for execution by attachment, arrest, the appointment of receiver and so on; again applications may be made to the Court to take some step-in-aid of execution by transferring a decree to another Court, by adding legal representatives, etc. and, in my opinion, this portion, of Art. 182 must be read "(where the application next hereinafter mentioned has been made) the date of the final order passed on an application made in accordance with law to the proper Court for execution, or the date of the final order passed on an application made in accordance with law to the proper Court to take some step-in-aid of execution of the decree or order." Reading it in this way involves no strain on the English, it gives two landmarks of time from which the period of limitation can run, and is perfectly simple—and it runs smoothly and grammatically. I have been referred to Raja of Ramnad v. Kuppuswami Pillai (1), in which it is held that:

"a remittance by money-order to the Jail Superin-tendant of subsistence allowance necessary for the detention of a judgment-debtor in prison is an application to a Court within the meaning of Art 182 (5) Lim. Act and is a step-in-aid of execution."

This ruling I can dismiss by saying that it has been passed under the former Lim. Act as the facts which gave rise to it occurred in 1923, the present Act dating from 1927. The reasoning, however, which is contained in the judgment as it stands, I am entirely unable to accept. How sending a money order from a post office can be held to have constituted an application to a Court I am entirely unable to understand. The post office is not a proper Court to which a decree-holder can make an application for execution of a decree. To my mind it is so obvious that it is difficult to explain or to give reasons for it. I was referred to a still older case, Malukchand Rotanchand v. Bechhar Natha (2), but that is also, of course, not under the present Act, and under the old Acts the starting point for limitation was the date of an application made to a Court to take a step-in-aid of execution and the Courts frequently allowed various acts done to be constructively regarded as application to Court. The dates on which applications are made to a Court now are of no interest. What we are concerned is the date of the final order passed on the application and that is usually quite easy to determine. I would refer in passing, however, to two other cases which were mentioned, Somasundaram Chettyar v. Ma Shree Thit (3), which dealt with matters earlier than 1927 and is under the old Act, is therefore obsolete. I would also refer to a passage in Pitambar Jana v. Damodar Gachit (4), beginning at p. 677:

"It is, of course, beyond controversy that where a decree-holder deliberately withdraws or invites the Court to dismiss his application, he cannot afterwards rely upon that application for the purpose of saving limitation in respect of a subsequent application for execution."

With respect, I must say that I can find nothing in the Lim. Act which gives anything to support this proposition of the law said to be beyond controversy. As the Lim. Act says nothing about this, I am unable to accept this purely ex cathedra statement. In the present case an application for execution was made on January 14, 1933. The final order passed on the application is to be found in the diary order dated February 16, 1933. Therefore, in my opinion, that is the date from which limitation began to run. I am asked to hold that because the judgment-debtor was in jail till the end of June, 1933, the proceedings were still pending till then. I am unable to accept that view. If a man is sentenced to ten years' imprisonment in a criminal case, the proceedings can, in no way, be said to be kept pending for ten years. Later orders might have been made in the proceedings. For example, the decree-holder might have certified to the Court in full satisfaction and asked for the release of the judgment-debtor in which case, probably, there would have been a further order passed; but no such order was passed and the final order passed must be the last order, namely, "judgment-debtor is committed." Limitation therefore started on February 16, 1933, and on February 17, 1936, the decree had become time-barred. The application which was made in May 1936, could not revive the decree. This is an application against an order passed by the Judge refusing to cancel an order which he had made allowing execution to proceed. As I have pointed out, the decree is time-barred. The application is allowed and the order granting issue of warrant of arrest and detention of the applicant is set aside. Respondent to pay the applicant's costs, Advocate's fee three gold mohurs.

Application allowed.

Tort—Nuisance—Injunction—Muhammadans erecting mosque on site belonging to them—Hindus objecting—Injunction restraining Muhammadans, if can be granted.

The people of any sect are at liberty to erect on their own property places of worship, either public or private, and to perform worship provided that, in the performance of their worship, they do not cause material annoyance to their neighbours. That the Hindu community objects to the erection of a mosque on the site belonging to the Muhammadans and that acute feelings will be aroused, if the building is used as a mosque are not grounds which the law can recognize for the granting of the injunction. Where the Muhammadans of the village are admittedly the owners of the site and they wish to utilize it for the purpose of a mosque, there is nothing unlawful in using this site for a mosque and therefore they are entitled to utilize it for the purpose. A man must enjoy his own property in a manner which will not do injury to others, but the erection of a mosque on land owned by Muhammadans cannot be regarded as constituting an injury in law to persons of another creed. 169 Ind. Leach, C. J.—The Muhammadan community of the village of Kunchur, Bellary District, owns a piece of land in the Hindu quarter of the village. Some years ago they proposed to erect on this land a Jumma Musjid, notwithstanding that there were already two mosques in the village. The proposal was greatly resented by the Hindus of the village, and in 1929 they filed a suit in the Court of the District Munsif of Hospet for an injunction restraining the defendants, who represented the Muhammadan community, from erecting the Musjid and a declaration of the unrestricted rights of the Hindus to hold religious, social, public and private processions "attended with music" along the route on which the proposed Jumma Musjid was to be built. The suit was strenuously contested. The defendants set up a contention that a mosque had been erected on the site in 1910 but this had been demolished with a view to the construction of a new mosque. The District Munsif found that although the Muhammadans of the village had occasionally used the site for the purpose of offering prayers, there had never been a mosque on the site, and that it had never been intended that a mosque should be built thereon. In view of the feeling between the two communities, he considered that it was not desirable that there should be a mosque on the site and although he allowed the construction of the new building to proceed, he issued an injunction restraining the defendants from using it as a mosque. At the same time he granted a declaration that the plaintiffs were entitled to take processions along this particular street. The defendants appealed to the District Judge, who by a judgment dated March 7, 1932, upheld the decision of the District Munsif. The defendants then appealed to this Court. The appeal was heard by Varadachariar, J. who confirmed the decrees of the lower Courts but granted a certificate under cl. 15 of the Letters Patent permitting an appeal to a Bench. The appellants do not complain of the declaration granted by the District Munsif to the respondents, but they object to the injunction restraining them from using the building as a mosque.

That the Hindu community of Kunchur objects to the erection of a mosque on the site and that acute feelings will be aroused if the building is used as a mosque are not grounds which the law can recognize for the granting of the injunction. The Muhammadans of the village are admittedly the owners of the site and they wish to utilize it for the purpose of a mosque. There is nothing unlawful in using this site for a mosque and therefore they are entitled to utilize it for the purpose. The right in the appellants to use this site for a mosque is so clear that authority is hardly necessary, but there is authority and authority of this Court. In Sesha Iyengar v. Sesha Iyengar (1). Turner, C. J. and Forbes, J. held that in this country, where there is a great diversity of creeds, it would be intolerable if the members of a sect were not at liberty to erect a place of worship on their own property, because it was more or less contiguous to a place already occupied by a place of worship appertaining to another sect. The Court pointed out that the people of any sect are at liberty to erect on their own property places of worship, either public or private, and to perform worship provided that, in the performance of their worship, they do not cause material annoyance to their neighbours. A decision to the same effect was given by the learned Chief Justice and Muttusami Iyer, J. in Parthasarathy v. Chinnakrishnan (2). In Kasim Ali Khan v. Brij Kishore (3) (a case decided by the High Court, North-West Provinces when Turner, C. J. was officiating as the Chief Justice of that Court) the learned Chief Justice observed:

"The land on which the temple is erected is the property of the respondents, and they are at liberty to build what structure they please upon it. Nor can the Courts by anticipation grant a decree prohibiting them against annoying the appellants. It must be shown that some substantial annoyance and one which the Court can recognize, has been actually committed, before the Court will interfere."

(1) 2 M 143.

(2) 5 M 304.

(3) 2 N.W.P 182.

These authorities were quoted to Varadachariar, J. but he did not consider that he was justified in interfering with the injunction which had been granted. In the course of his judgment he referred to the maxim sic uteri tuo ut alienum non lædas, but this maxim can have no application here. A man must enjoy his own property in a manner which will not do injury to others but the erection of a mosque on land owned by Muhammadans cannot be regarded as constituting an injury in law to persons of another creed. Of course, if the Muhammadan community utilizes the building in a manner which does in fact create a nuisance, then the law will interfere, but it cannot be said that the use of a building as a mosque will amount to a nuisance. Much has been said in argument with regard to the right of the Hindu community to hold processions along the street and it is said that if a mosque is erected, attempts will be made to interfere with this right. This argument is really without foundation because the respondents have already obtained a declaration in their favour. The appellants have not challenged the respondents' right to this declaration and it is binding upon them. The case has to be decided from the point of view of legal right and there can be no doubt that the injunction which has been granted does infringe the rights of the appellants. It must, therefore, be dissolved. I would, however add this. The new building which has been erected on the site has up to now been used as a school. This is the result of the injunction granted by the District Munsif. The continuance of the use of the building as a school is a matter which the Muhammadan community of Kunchur might very well consider. They have, as I have already pointed out, two mosques in the village and it has not been suggested that these two mosques are insufficient for the Muhammadan community of Kunchur. The Court can, of course, give no direction in the matter. It can only suggest that the matter should receive the further consideration of the appellants, and in the interests of good feeling between the two communities, we trust, that it will. The decree of the District Munsif will be varied by the omission of the injunction, but the declaration in favour of the respondents will stand. The appellants having succeeded with regard to the injunction are entitled to their costs in this Court and in the District Court. So far as the first Court is concerned, the parties will pay their own costs.

COMMISSIONER OF INCOME-TAX,

BOMBAY

Income Tax Act (XI of 1922), s. 66 (3)—Costs—Application by assessee under s. 66 (3), asking Court to direct Commissioner to state case—Costs of application should follow event.

Whereupon the refusal of the Commissioner of Income-tax to state a case under s. 66 (2), Income Tax Act, on the ground that no point of law arose, the assessee applied to the Court under s. 66 (3), asking the Court to direct the Commissioner to state a case and the question arose as to whether the costs of the application to state a case should follow the event, or should be costs in the reference:

Held, that the right rule was that the costs should follow the event. The ultimate decision upon the point of law, whether for or against the Commissioner, could have no bearing on the question whether there was a point of law upon which a case should have been stated.

Mr. K. A. Somjee, for the Petitioners.

Mr. M. C. Setalvad, Advocate General, for the Commissioner of Income-tax.

Beaumont, C. J.—This application raises a short point of practice relating to costs, and it is desirable that points of practice relating to costs should be settled one way or the other. The question which arises is this. The assessee asked the Commissioner of Income-tax to state a case under s. 66 (2), Income Tax Act, and the Commissioner took the view that no point of law arose and refused to state a case. Thereupon the assessee applied to the Court under s. 66 (3), asking the Court to direct the Commissioner to state a case. The Court took the view that there was a point of law and that the Commissioner ought to state a case, and directed him to do so accordingly. The question is whether in those circumstances the costs of the application to state a case should follow the event, that is to say, be paid by the Commissioner who failed to establish his view that there was no point of law, or should be costs in the reference. We stood the matter over in order to ascertain whether there was any settled practice, but it appears that the point has not been considered, though there are some cases in which such costs have been made costs in the reference, but apparently without argument. We think that the right rule is that the costs should follow the event. The ultimate decision upon the point of law, whether for or against the Commissioner, can have no bearing on the question whether there was a point of law upon which a case should have been stated. We think that costs of an application to direct the Commissioner to state a case ought, in the absence of special circumstances, to follow the event. We therefore direct the Commissioner to pay costs of the application on the Original Side scale including costs of to-day.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), s. 22 (3)—Status and rights of co-sharer landlord purchasing occupancy holding—His interest passes to transferee on his transferring of proprietary interest—Such transferee can sub-let it to another who then becomes raiyat of holding—Lessor and lessee—Priority of estate between lessor and lessee's assignee, when arises.

The status of a co-sharer landlord who has purchased an occupancy holding is not the status of a raiyat but a peculiar status, his right is that of a proprietor entitled to retain possession of the land subject to payment to his co-proprietors of their shares of the rent. The status is a peculiar status which attaches to the co-sharer so long as he remains a co-sharer. If he ceases to be a co-sharer and his proprietary interest is lost, then he has no right to retain possession of the land and it would pass on to the person who acquires the interest of that co-sharer. The person who has acquired such interest is entitled to sub-let the same to another person who thereupon becomes a raiyat of the holding. 89 Ind. Cas. 232, (2) and 102 Ind. A. from appellate decree of the Additional District Judge, Shahabad, dated March 31, 1937.

Messrs. B. P. Sinha and Brahmdeo Narayan, for the Appellants.

Mr. S. N. Bose, for the Respondents.

Rowland, J.—This appeal though valued at under Rs. 100 has given rise to a question of title and was referred to a Division Bench by the Single Judge before whom it at first came for hearing. The suit was instituted as a title suit, the prayers in the plaint being in the first instance to have a declaration that the land in suit is the kasht land of defendants Nos. 1 to 3 of which the rent is Rs. 24-3-6 plus cess; that the plaintiffs are landlords of this holding to the extent of 2/3rds share and are entitled to 2/3rds of the rent. The other 5 annas 4 pies co-sharers are the defendants who are impleaded as pro forma defendants. In accordance with the declaration claimed above, the plaintiffs ask for a decree for the sum due, Rs. 72-14-0, against the defendants first party and defendants second party and for an order for recovery of costs from either defendants first party or defendants second party. The nature of the title set up by the parties will appear from the history of the land. The suit refers to plot No. 303 in Khata No. 2 in Tauzi No. 56 in village Nargada. Its area is 7 bighas 15 kathas and the rent as alleged by the plaintiffs is Rs. 24-3-6. The proprietors of this Tauzi No. 56 were at one time three brothers Ram Autar, Bankey Behari and Radha Raman holding in equal 1/3rd shares. Within it there was a bhaulti holding of 23 bighas 16 kathas of one Mahant Ramgir. This included the rent-claimed land. The holding was put to sale on February 6, 1904, and was purchased by Ramnagina and it was described as kasht land and delivery of possession was taken on May 5, 1904. Out of this, Ramnagina sold 11 bighas 16 kathas on July 2, 1904, to Bisesarnath. This area included the rent claimed land which is still described as kasht. The above Bisesarnath transferred 7 bighas 13 kathas out of his purchased land on January 3, 1905 to Bankey Behari, one of the three proprietors. This 7 bighas 15 kathas is the exact area now in suit. The land was described as kasht land and it is stated that after this transfer its rent was commuted to nagdi rent at Rs. 24-3-6 and apparently it has been found by the Courts below that this was so. On May 19, 1905, Bankey Behari gave this plot No. 303 in usufructuary mortgage to one Basdeo as security for an advance of Rs. 2,000. The land is still described as kasht land. Thereafter there was a dispute between the three proprietors resulting in an award dated December 28, 1903.

In pursuance of this award Bankey

Behari sold the disputed plot, 7 bighas 15 kathas to Ramautar, another of the three proprietors on January 12, 1909. The land is described as kasht land bearing a rent of Rs. 24-3-6. This acquisition by Ramautar must have been subject to the lien of Basdeo for his advance of Rs. 2,000. On October 23, 1909, Ramautar raised a loan of Rs. 2,995 from the defendant second party on a usufructuary mortgage of this same plot. Of the consideration, Rs. 2,000 was left with defendants second party for payment to the previous creditor Basdeo and this was paid off. In this document the land is described as Ramautar's zerat land. The next event affecting the history of the land is the revisional survey Record of Rights prepared in 1911. Here the plot in question is shown in bakasht Khata No. 2 of the proprietors and as belonging to Ramautar with defendants second party as rehandars in possession. Ramautar seems to have created a simple mortgage on his entire 5 annas 4 pies share in the tauzi. At any rate a mortgage decree was obtained against him and in execution this entire share was put up to sale and was purchased on May 12, 1920, by Nand Bahadur, predecessor of defendants third party of the present suit. It is the case of the defendants second party who are appellants here that by this execution purchase defendants third party took along with the 5 annas 4 pies share in the milkaat all rights of Ramautar in this plot No. 303.

Then on September 30, 1921, Nand Bahadur gave a mokarrari lease to defendants second party in respect of the rent-claimed land. The premium for the lease was fixed at Rs. 2,995 which was set off against the previous dues of these defendants under the rehan of October 23, 1909, and the rent payable to Nand Bahadur for the land was fixed at Rs. 8-10-0 in perpetuity. On the other hand, Ramautar on November 1, 1921 (as if the sale of his 5 annas 4 pies share had not affected his right to hold the rent-claimed land as a tenant) sold or purported to sell that tenancy right in the rent-claimed land to defendant first party, defendants Nos. 1 to 3, on a consideration of Rs. 4,000 of which Rs. 2,995 was left with the purchasers for the purpose of paying off the rehan of 1909 in favour of the defendants second party. In this document the land is described as kasht land of Ramautar. Ramautar's other co-sharers in the tauzi transferred their shares to the plaintiffs in 1922. At present therefore the proprietary interest in the tauzi is held to the extent of 2/3rds by the plaintiffs and to the extent of 1/3rd by defendants third party. The whole appeal turns on the question whether after May 12, 1920, a tenancy subsisted in Ramautar which he could transfer to defendants first party or whether from May 12, 1920, onwards Nand Bahadur had succeeded along with his purchase of the tauzi in general to a right of the nature contemplated by s. 22, Ben. Ten. Act, that is to say, a right to hold this plot No. 303, a plot the rent of which was Rs. 24-3-6, subject to payment to his co-sharers of 2/3rds of this rent. The Munsif held that the land had become bakasht and that Ramautar had no interest in it on November 1, 1921. Therefore the defendants first party did not acquire any interest in it by virtue of their purchase. He also expressed an opinion that the rental of the holding now is Rs. 8-10-0 only. On this view he dismissed the suit.

In appeal the Additional District Judge took the opposite view regarding the rights which Ramautar had in the suit land while he was proprietor and as to the effect on these rights of the auction sale in favour of Nand Bahadur. The District Judge thought that first Bankey Behari and then Ramautar each of them as a 5 annas 4 pies proprietor of the village acquired by their purchase of the raiya right of Mahant Ramgir, the right to hold it not only during the subsistence of their right as co-sharer proprietor, but also after they lost that right on its transfer to others, not as bakasht but as tenants independently of their proprietary right with liability to pay the proportionate rent to the other co-sharer landlords under s. 22 (2), Ben. Ten. Act, before its amendment in 1907. For this proposition he relied on Basudeo Narain v. Radha Kisan (1) and two other similar decisions; but the point for decision in those cases was not the same as here. Undoubtedly, it is a correct proposition of law that when a co-sharer proprietor acquires the holding of an occupancy raiya, the holding does not cease to exist. In Basudeo Narain v. Radha Kisan (1) the Court was considering the results which followed when there was a subsequent partition in the tauzi and the land fell within the share of another co-sharer. It was held in the result that the right to hold the land still continued and the other co-sharer would receive in future the rent of the holding from that proprietor who had acquired the right to hold the land. But the question in the present case is a different one. The position we have to consider is that in which Ramautar having acquired a holding has parted by sale with his proprietary interest in the tauzi. The question is whether the land which he holds within the tauzi will pass to the purchaser along with Ramautar's share in the tauzi.

This specific point was considered in this Court in Bambahadur Lal v. Gungra Kuer (2). In this case it was pointed out by Kulwant Sahay, J. that the status of a co-sharer landlord who has purchased an occupancy holding is not the status of raiyat but a peculiar status. His right is that of a proprietor entitled to retain possession of the land subject to payment to his co-proprietors of their shares of the rent. The status is a peculiar status which attaches to the co-sharer so long as he remains a co-sharer. If he ceases to be a co-sharer and his proprietary interest is lost, then he has no right to retain possession of the land and it would pass on to the person who acquires the interest of that co-sharer. That decision is directly in point and in my view we are bound to follow it. In Gopi Singh v. Jagdeo Singh (3) Dawson Miller, O. J., again stated the law applicable where the occupancy right of a tenant is transferred to a fractional proprietor. In this case his Lordship said:

"Although no occupancy right can vest in the fractional proprietor he still acquires a separate interest in the raiyat holding paying to his co-proprietors their share of the rent. This interest passes to his transferee with the transfer of the proprietary interest and the holder can sub-let the same to another who thereupon becomes a raiyat of the holding."

These two decisions in my opinion are sufficient authority for holding that, by Nand Bahadur's purchase on September 30, 1921, the right passed to hold plot No. 303 subject to payment by Nand Bahadur of 2/3rds of the rent to his co-sharer proprietors. According to the observation in the latter of these decisions, Nand Bahadur was entitled to sub-let the same to another person who thereupon becomes a raiyat of the holding and on that view the mukarrari patta in favour of the defendant second party would be valid; they are tenants under Nand Bahadur and not under the plaintiffs. As for Ramautar, nothing would be left in him which he could transfer to any person by purporting to execute a sale deed dated November 1, 1921. The defendants first party took nothing and have not become tenants of anybody.

Before leaving this appeal I think it should be observed that the plaintiffs have not made any claim of rent against defendants third party and the question of their right to recover it from those defendants cannot be decided in this appeal so as to be binding between the plaintiffs and those defendants. Similarly, the question of the right of defendants third party to recover rent from defendants second party at Rs. 8-10-0 is a matter not directly in issue between those parties in this appeal and whatever we may say about it will not be binding between those parties. It has been necessary to make some observations as to the title of these parties for the purpose of determining the appeal as between the plaintiffs and the defendants first and second parties and for determining the result of this appeal. It follows from what I have said that the plaintiffs are not entitled to recover any rent from defendants second party or defendants first party. What I have said above, is I think sufficient for the disposal of the appeal; but I may refer to another objection preferred by the appellants to the District Judge's decree and that is that defendants second party were in any case not tenants under the plaintiffs. They were mortgagees in possession from Ramautar up till 1921 when they obtained the mukarrari patta from Nand Bahadur and if that mukarrari patta was of no effect, they are still mortgagees in possession. As such, there is no privity of contract between them and the plaintiffs. It was suggested for the respondents that it was not a question of privity of contract but of privity of the estate; but privity of estate between the lessor and the lessee's assignee can hardly be said to arise except where the interest of the lessee has been transferred in whole to an assignee. The respondents have attempted to escape to the conclusion that Ramautar's interest passed on the ground that the decision in Bambahadur Lal v. Gungra Kuer (2) was a case referring to transfers after the amendment of the Ben. Ten. Act in 1907. I do not see why this should make any substantial difference so far as the point that we are considering is concerned. In the other case in Gopi Singh v. Jagdeo Singh (3) the purchase, the effect of which was being considered, was actually made before the amendment of the Ben. Ten Act.

In the result, I would allow the appeal with costs of this Court and of the lower Appellate Court, set aside the decree and judgment of the District Judge and restore the decree of the Munsif.

Bengal Village Chaulkidari Act (VI of 1870), ss. 54, 55—Fixing date from which sale is to take effect—Entry in sale certificate that such date is the day on which requisition under s. 54 was received by Collector—Onus of proving this date—Onus not discharged—Effect—Landlord and tenant—Rent—Record of Rights showing rate of rent—Burden of proving that rent is at reduced rate is on tenants.

The date to be mentioned by the Collector in the sale notification, which he is bound to publish under s. 55, Ben. Village Chaulkidari Act must be taken to correspond with the latest day of payment to which reference is made in s. 3 of Revenue Sales Land Act XI of 1859. The date with effect from which the purchase takes effect must be the day after that fixed for the last day of payment. This date cannot possibly be the date upon which the requisition for sale is sent to the Collector by the collecting member of the panchayat under s. 54, Village Chaulkidari Act. Consequently, if there is any entry in the sale certificate that the sale will take effect from the date on which the requisition under s. 54 was sent to the Collector, such an entry being clearly wrong, the onus clearly lies upon the purchaser to show what this date on which the sale is to take effect is. Where he fails to discharge the onus, his title will accrue only from the date on which the sale is held. [p. 561, col. 1.]

Burden lies heavily upon the tenants to prove that they are liable to pay rent at a reduced rate, in respect of a certain holding where the Record of Rights contains an entry as regards the rate of rent payable in respect thereof. 8 Ind. Cas. 790 (1) and 116 Ind. Cas. 733 (2), referred to.

Messrs. Gopendra Nath Das and Khetra-mohan Chatterjee, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—In the suits out of which these appeals arise, the plaintiff sought to recover arrears of rent in respect of two separate holdings which he had purchased under s. 55, Village Chaulkidari Act (Act VI of 1870). Various pleas were urged on behalf of the defendants, but the only points raised by the defence with which we are concerned in these appeals are: (1) whether or not the plaintiff is entitled to recover the whole of the rent for 1341 B. S. or only for two kists for that year, and (2) whether the defendants are entitled to a reduction of rent. With regard to the first of these points, it appears that the first Court allowed the plaintiff to recover rent for the whole of 1341 as claimed in the plaint. The lower Appellate Court held, however, that as the sale took place on November 10, 1934, that is in Agrahayan 1341, the plaintiff was only entitled to recover rent for two kists of that year. In support of his case with reference to this point, the plaintiff relies upon the terms of the sale certificate granted to him which states that his purchase took effect from Baisakh 16, 1341 B. S. It is, however, contended on behalf of the defendants that, having regard to the clear provisions of the law, the date mentioned in the sale certificate must be a clear error, as the sale could not have taken effect until after the last day for payment of the assessment, which, according to the defendants, must be taken to have been the date mentioned for payment in the notice issued by the Collector under s. 55, Village Chaulkidari Act.

Under s. 52 of Act VI of 1870, it is provided that the assessment shall be a permanent yearly charge on the land and shall be payable to the collecting member of the panchayat yearly in advance on the first day of the year current in the village by the person for the time being entitled to recover the rents of such land from the occupier thereof. Section 54 provides that, when the assessment shall be in arrear for the space of fifteen days after it shall have become payable, the collecting member of the panchayat shall forward to the Collector of the District in which the land so assessed is situate notice of the amount of such arrear and the name of the person liable to pay such assessment in the form in Sch. D annexed to this Act. From these sections, it would appear that the chaulkidari assessment becomes an arrear corresponding to an "arrear" under s. 2 of the Revenue Sale Law if it is not paid on Baisakh 1, in each year. A period of grace of fifteen days is allowed by s. 54 of the Act and if the requisite payment is not made within the period of grace, the Collector may be asked to sell the land under s. 55 of the Act. This section provides for the issue of a notification for sale under s. 6 of Act XI of 1859, and then goes on to say that unless the arrears be paid within the time mentioned in such notification, the Collector shall sell such land according to the provisions of the Revenue Sale Law. It is therefore necessary in the notification for the Collector to mention a date within which the arrears should be paid. In this connection, the last portion of s. 55 of the Act is important which provides that "all provisions of the law for the time being in force with respect to the sale of such estates shall apply to the sale of such land, and every such sale shall have such and the same force and effect as if the same were a sale of an estate for arrears of its own revenue."

Having regard therefore to the provisions of this section read in the light of the corresponding provisions of the Revenue Sale Law it would appear that the date to be mentioned by the Collector in the sale notification, which he is bound to publish under s. 55, must be taken to correspond with the latest day of payment to which reference is made in s. 3 of Act XI of 1859. Section 28 of the latter Act provided that "immediately upon a sale becoming final and conclusive, the Collector or other officer shall give to the purchaser a certificate of title in the form prescribed in Sch. A annexed to this Act."

It is clear from the form contained in Sch. A that the date with effect from which the purchase takes effect must be the day after that fixed for the last day of payment which would appear to be the date to which reference is made in s. 3 of the Revenue Sale Law. It follows therefore that inasmuch as the general provisions of the Revenue Sale Law must apply to sales held under Act VI of 1870, the date mentioned in the plaintiff's sale certificate should have been the date after the date fixed by the Collector under s. 55 for the payment of the arrears. It stands to reason that this date could not possibly have been Baisakh 16, which was the date upon which the requisition for sale was sent to the Collector by the collecting member of the panchayat under s. 54, Village Chaudidari Act. Clearly, the date in question must have been considerably later than Baisakh 16. The onus clearly lay upon the plaintiff to show what this date was and as he has not discharged this onus, I think that the lower Appellate Court was justified in holding that the title of the plaintiff accrued only from November 11, 1934, namely the date upon which the sale was held. In this view of the case it is clear that the plaintiff would only be entitled to recover two kists for the year 1341. As regards the other two kists, the defaulting landlord would be entitled to recover the arrears of rent due to him in view of the provisions of s. 55 of the Revenue Sale Law which provides that "arrears of rent, which on the latest day of payment may be due to the defaulter from his under-tenants or rai-yats shall, in the event of a sale, be recoverable by him after the said latest day by any process except distraint which might have been used by him for that purpose on or before the said latest day."

It is urged on behalf of the appellant that considerable hardship will result to him by the decision of the lower Appellate Court. I am, however, not prepared to accept this argument. As regards the year 1341, it is clear that the plaintiff has no liability at all in respect of the payment of the chaudidari assessment as this liability has been met out of the sale proceeds under s. 56 of the Act and his liability as regards the assessment can only be held to have accrued on Baisakh 1, 1342. In my opinion the decision of the lower Appellate Court on this point is correct.

As regards the second point it has been held by the lower Appellate Court that the rent payable by the defendants had been reduced. The Record of Rights shows the rent payable in respect of these holdings at the rate claimed by the plaintiff. This being the case, the onus would, in my opinion, lie very heavily upon the defendants to show that they were liable to pay rent at a reduced rate. All that they have done for the purpose of discharging this onus is to examine a person named Golan Nabi who claims to have been a gomasta of the managing landlords. His evidence, however, is merely to the effect that he was authorized by two of these landlords to collect rent at a reduced rate. He states that the landlords who had given him this authority were managing the estate on behalf of the other landlords but there is no indication in his evidence to the effect that the other landlords had given the two managing landlords authority to reduce the rate of rent payable by the tenants nor does this witness state expressly that the reduction was of a permanent nature. In this connection it was pointed out by Gupta, J. in Radha Raman v.

Bhabani Prosad (1) that

"mere acceptance of a reduced rent, though it may amount to a full acquittance of rent for the particular year or years for which the rent was paid, cannot operate as a binding contract between the parties without proof of the agreement which formed the basis of the reduction granted."

Similarly, in Lakshmi Charan v. Nabaduip Chandra Pandit (2) Mitter, J. observed that

"it lay on the defendant to establish that there has been a permanent relinquishment of the right by the plaintiff to receive the higher rent. The fact of the non-realization of rent for a large number of years may be consistent with a temporary abatement although the temporary abatement might extend over a large number of years."

Having regard to the principles laid down in the two cases cited above, I do not think it can be said in this case that the defendants have succeeded in discharging the onus which clearly lay upon them to establish the permanent character of the reduction which they sought to prove. With regard to this point, therefore, I am of opinion that the decision of the lower Appellate Court is erroneous. The result, therefore, is that the appellant's suits will be decreed at the full rate of rent cess and damages claimed by him in respect of the last two kists of 1341 B. S. The decrees of the Appellate Court must be modified accordingly. I make no order with regard to the costs of these appeals.

MADRAS HIGH COURT

Appeal No. 101 of 1935

January 10, 1939

VARADACHARIAR AND GENTLE, JJ.
DIRAVYAM PILLAI AND ANOTHER—

versus

VEERANAN AMBALAM AND OTHERS—
RESPONDENTS

Provincial Insolvency Act (V of 1920), s. 28—Hindu father adjudicated insolvent—By some reason he losing power to sell son's interest—Conveyance by Official Receiver, effect of—Hindu Law—Debt—Sons' liability—Father selling son's interest in joint family property, whether merely exercising power of sale possessed by son himself—Father's power, if can be limited by s. 64, Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908)—Effect of s. 64—Son's interest attached in execution of decree against father—Father becoming insolvent—Official Receiver selling property in pursuance of contract, if sale entered into by father prior to attachment—Sale, if contrary to s. 64—Sale, if conveys son's interest—Hindu Law—Partition—Member's suit for partition, withdrawn—Separation, if can be inferred from mere presentation of plaint.

If due to some reasons the insolvent father has lost the power to sell his son's interest in the joint Hindu family property for his antecedent debts the conveyance executed by the Official Receiver can have no greater effect the reason being that the Official Receiver has no greater power than the insolvent, 164 Ind. Cas 6 (19), relied on. [p. 565, col. 1.]

The recognition of the father's power to sell the son's interest for the discharge of his own debts is destructive of the principle of independent co-parcenary rights in the sons. To the extent required to satisfy the father's proper debts, the father and his creditors are entitled to ignore the son's co-parcenary rights in the family property. The father when he sells the family property for the discharge of his debts is not merely exercising the power of sale possessed by the son himself. The father's power cannot be limited by reason of the statutory disability imposed by s. 64, Civil P. C., upon the son as a result of the attachment of the son's interest. Nanomi Babuasin v. Mohdun Mohun (20), explained. 2 Ind. Cas. 268 (7), referred to. [p. 566, cols. 1 & 2.]

All that s. 64 of the Code provides is that any private transfer by the judgment-debtor of the property attached shall be void as against all claims enforceable under the attachment. It will not be accurate to read s. 64 as putting an end to the power of sale, because as between the transferor and the transferee, the alienation will undoubtedly be operative. If the attaching creditor is paid off or for any reason the attachment ceases to subsist, the alienee's title will be unassailable. The only effect of s. 64 is that such transfer shall not prejudice the rights of the attaching creditor. As recognized in s. 40, T. P. Act, the right of the judgment-debtor in the property is on the date of the attachment qualified by the obligation incurred by him under the earlier contract to sell and the attaching creditor cannot claim to ignore that obligation and proceed to bring the property to sale as if it remained the absolute property of the judgment-debtor. Nor can it be said that the sale by the contracting parties executed in pursuance of a pre-existing contract to sell prejudices the attaching creditor, because the sale is merely the fulfilment of the obligation to which the judgment-debtor was already subject. The utmost that the attaching decree-holder will be entitled to, in such circumstances, is the payment of the balance of the purchase money, if anything, remained due on the date of the attachment. [p. 567, col. 1.]

Consequently where son's interest had been attached in execution of a decree against father and the father had been adjudicated insolvent and the Official Receiver under orders of the Insolvency Court sold joint family property in pursuance of a contract of a sale entered into by the father prior to attachment:

Held, that the sale was not contrary to s. 64. The sale was effective to convey not merely the interest of the father but also of the son who continued to remain joint with his father.

[Case-law discussed.]

Held, further that when the Official Receiver executed the sale deed it was not in the capacity of the representatives of the general body of creditors or even in the exercise of the power possessed by him or by the insolvent to satisfy the general body of creditors that he acted. He was merely carrying out an obligation which prior to the insolvency had been incurred by the insolvent. There was no justification for holding that the order in the claim proceedings instituted by the Official Receiver precluded the person claiming under the contract of sale that he was the owner of the property.

An attaching decree-holder attaches not the physical property but only the rights of the judgment-debtor in the property.

The plaint presented for partition even if withdrawn, would unless explained afford evidence that an intention to separate had been entertained. This can hardly be read as laying down any rule of law or even a presumption. It only suggests a possible inference of fact. Where a member instituted the suit at a time when he thought that he would get some benefit out of it, but when he found that there would be nothing left after payment of the debts due by the family, he did not think it worthwhile to proceed with the suit, there is no warrant for the conclusion that he became divided merely by the presentation of the plaint. 87 Ind. Cas. 333 (25), explained.

A. against the decree of the Sub-Judge, Madura, in O. S. No. 90 of 1932.

Messrs. T. M. Krishnaswamy Ayyar and N. Sivaramakrishna Ayyar, for the Appellants.

Messrs. V. Ramaswamy Ayyar, S. Kuppuswamy and A. Bhujanga Rao, for the Respondents.

Varadachariar, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit instituted by the predecessor-in-title of respondents Nos. 1 to 5 for obtaining a declaration that he was the full owner of the suit properties and for setting aside an order passed on September 14, 1931, dismissing a claim petition that he had filed. The suit properties belonged to a joint Hindu family which consisted of five brothers and the sons of four of them. Defendants Nos. 3, 4, 5 and 6 in the present suit are four of the brothers; another brother Sundararaja Iyer had died before suit. Defendants Nos. 7 to 12 are the sons of four of the brothers. The appellants who were defendants Nos. 1 and 2 in the lower Court had obtained a decree for money payable by the five brothers personally and from out of the properties of the joint family in the hands of the five brothers and their sons. In execution of that decree, the appellants attached the interests of the sons in the joint family properties. This attachment which was made on March 15, 1930, was advisedly limited to the interests of the sons, because in the meanwhile, the five brothers had been adjudicated insolvents and their interests were being administered in insolvency. The present plaintiffs' claim is against the attachment made by the appellants was based upon an alleged contract for the sale of the suit property to him for Rs. 30,000; it was stated that his contract had been entered into by defendants Nos. 3 and 4 and the deceased brother on July 24, 1926. It was the plaintiff's case that in pursuance of this contract a sum of more than Rs. 28,000 had been paid to the vendors even before April 12, 1927, the date fixed for the completion of the contract, that after the expiry of the time fixed, the vendors had been delaying the execution of the sale deed on account of certain domestic reasons, that in June 1927, a creditor of the vendors presented a petition to adjudicate them insolvents, that accordingly the execution of the sale deed was further delayed and that finally under orders of the Insolvency Court passed on an application filed by the plaintiff claiming specific performance a sale deed was executed by the Official Receiver on November 6, 1931. The plaintiff further alleged that even before he became aware of the presentation of the insolvency petition, he had paid to the vendors the balance still remaining due, that he had already been put in possession of the property and had been in enjoyment thereof, that the moneys received by the vendors in pursuance of the contract of sale had been utilized by them for paying off family debts binding on the sons as well and that therefore the contract of sale and the sale deed subsequently executed by the Official Receiver were operative to vest in the plaintiff the whole interest of the joint family in the suit properties.

The appellants who were the contesting defendants disputed the truth of the alleged contract of sale and the payment of consideration therefor and the binding character of the sale as against the sons. This question of fact was made the subject of Issue No. 1 in the case. The appellants further contended that in any event the sale deed executed by the Official Receiver on November 6, 1931 could not affect the rights of defendants Nos. 7 to 12 and that the plaintiff could not accordingly object to the appellants' right to attach the interests of those defendants in the suit properties. This contention of law was raised by Issue No. 3 in the case. Two further questions arose in the course of the discussion of the rights of the parties in the lower Court, as to the exact position of defendants Nos. 7, 8 and 9 and their interests in the suit properties. Defendants Nos. 7 and 8 had been impleaded in the insolvency proceeding and the creditor sought to have them also adjudicated insolvents, but by a consent order they were exonerated on their agreeing that their interests in the properties of the family might be vested in the Official Receiver appointed in the insolvency. The plaintiff contended that in any event the interests of defendants Nos. 7 and 8 must be held to have passed under the sale deed executed by the Official Receiver. Defendant No. 9 instituted a suit for partition in 1928, but subsequently withdrew it, though the papers relating to the withdrawal are not on record. It has been contended on behalf of the appellants that as a result of the filing of the plaint by defendant No. 9, he became separated in status from the rest of the family and that thereafter neither his father nor the Official Receiver in the insolvency had any right to convey his interest to the plaintiff. In answer to this contention, it had been urged that the admitted withdrawal of the partition suit must, in the circumstances, be deemed to have left defendant No. 9 a member of the joint Hindu family and that accordingly his interest was effectually conveyed by the Official Receiver. The learned Subordinate Judge upheld the plaintiff's contention on all the points above set out and passed a decree in the plaintiff's favour. Hence this appeal by defendants Nos. 1 and 2.

The question of fact raised by Issue No. 1 may be very briefly disposed of. The agreement of sale is evidenced by Ex. A which is a contract written in a notebook of the plaintiffs and signed by the three brothers. Before the lower Court, the contesting defendants took up the extreme position that no moneys had at all been paid by the plaintiffs to the brothers and that the entries in the insolvents' books acknowledging the receipt of such payments were fictitious entries made with a view to enable the insolvents to secrete moneys for their own benefit. The lower Court, on a careful examination of the evidence, overruled this contention and it has not been repeated before us. The learned Counsel for the appellants confined himself to the contention that the payments by the plaintiffs must have been made only as loans to the brothers and that the suggestion of the contract to sell was only an afterthought. In effect, the appellants impeach Ex. A, as a later fabrication. Beyond putting forward this contention, the learned Counsel for the appellants was not in a position to advance any serious argument against the correctness of the finding of the lower Court on this point. The direct evidence as well as the probabilities are clearly in favour of the truth of the plaintiff's story. We accordingly confirm the finding of the lower Court on Issue No. 1.

The finding of the lower Court on Issue No. 3, was challenged by the learned Counsel for the appellants on the ground that according to a long course of decisions in this Court, the power of the brothers and of the Official Receiver as representing their estate to convey the interests of the sons in the joint family estate must be deemed to have come to an end, when the interests of the sons were attached by the present appellants in execution of their decree. In support of this contention, reliance was placed upon the decision in Gopalakrishnayya v. Peyyath Gopalan (1), Official Receiver, Coimbatore v. Arunachalam Chettiar (2), Parameswaranma v. Venkataramayya (3), Palaniappa Chettiar v. Palani Goundan (4), Official Receiver, East Godavari v. Imperial Bank of India (5) and the observations in an unreported judgment of Reddy and Ananthakrishna Ayyar, JJ. which has been filed as Ex. 24 in this case. Reference was also made to the decision of the Allahabad High Court in Allahabad Bank, Ltd., Bareilly v. Bhagwan Das Johari (6), of the Bombay High Court in Subrayya v. Nagappa (7) and of the Calcutta High Court in Kamala Bala Dasi v. Surendranath Nath (8). Before considering the effect of these decisions and the reasoning on which they rest, we may point out that the present case differs from all of them in one important respect, namely that there was in existence in this case, long prior to the attachment, a contract of sale entered into by the brothers at a time when the family was joint and they had the power to sell the full interest of the joint family in the suit properties. That this circumstance makes a very material disinction will appear when the authorities are examined.

The rights of a promisee under a prior contract of sale as against a subsequent attachment and the rights of a Court auction-purchaser under that attachment have been considered in several decisions in this Court beginning as early as in Savitri Ammal v. Ramaswami (9) and going down to Veerappa Tevar v. Venkatarama Iyer (10). See also Bipineedu v. Venkayya (11), Venkata Reddi v. Yellappa Chetty (12), Paparaju Veeraraghavayya v. Killaru Kamala Devi (13), Sitayya v. Mudaragaddi Sanyasi (14). See also Karalia Nanubhai v. Mansukhram (15), Madan Mohan Dey v. Rebati Mohan (16), Deoki Nandan Singh v. Jawad Hussain (17) and Lakshmanan v. Ramchandra (18). It was contended by Mr. Krishnaswami Iyer, the learned Counsel for the appellants, that the course of decisions beginning with Savitri Ammal v. Ramaswami (9) cannot be regarded as laying down good law in view of recent pronouncements of the Judicial Committee as to the effect of the last paragraph of s. 54, T. P. Act. He also contended that if as laid down in the Madras decisions relating to the effect of the attachment on the father's power to sell the son's interest, the father's power was at an end, the decisions dealing with the effect of an antecedent contract to sell can have no bearing on the decision of the present case. It accordingly becomes necessary to examine at some length the two sets of authorities above referred to. Though the sale deed was executed by the Official Receiver in this case, it must be taken that he had no larger power than the insolvents themselves would have had, and if, for any reason, the insolvents had lost the power to sell their sons' interests, the conveyance executed by the Official Receiver could have no greater effect; see Sat Narain v. Sri Kishan Das (19). The point for consideration therefore is whether as a result of the attachment placed by the appellants on March 15, 1930, on the interests of the sons, the power of the fathers to sell the joint family property including the sons' interests for the satisfaction of debts binding on the sons came to an end.

It may be conceded that in some of the Madras decisions very general language has been used which almost seems to lay down the proposition contended for by Mr. Krishnaswami Iyer; but on examination it will be found that in all those cases the question arose between the attaching creditor and the Official Receiver and all that was intended to be laid down by the learned Judges was that the attaching creditor was entitled to proceed to bring the sons' interest to sale and that the Official Receiver could not claim the proceeds of the sons' shares for the benefit of the general body of creditors. In Gopalakrishnayya v. Peyyath Gopalan (1) where this question was considered for the first time in this Court, the learned Judges referred to Allahabad Bank, Ltd., Bareilly v. Bhagwan Das Johari (6) as supporting their conclusion. The Allahabad decision only dealt with the question whether the interests of the sons in the joint family properties vested in the Official Receiver, on the insolvency of the father. The learned Judges did not address themselves to the question whether apart from the vesting of the sons' interest, the power to sell which the father has under the Hindu Law passed to the Official Receiver, and if so, what the effect on it was of the attachment of the sons' interest. In the later decisions of this Court which purported to follow Gopalakrishnayya v. Peyyath Gopalan (1) and repeated the language used in that case, reference has also been made to the decision of the Bombay High Court in Subrayya v. Nagappa (7), and we think we are justified in holding that the Madras decisions though using general language only intended to adopt the view laid down in Subrayya v. Nagappa (7).

Subrayya v. Nagappa (7) was based upon the effect of s. 276 of the old Civil P. O., corresponding to s. 64 of the Code of 1908. The learned Judge observed that as the effect of the attachment was to prevent the sons from alienating their shares, it must also be held to prevent the father from alienating the sons' share for the satisfaction of the father's debts. With all respect, we venture to think that this reasoning is not reconcilable with the basis on which the father's power to sell joint family property for the discharge of his own proper debts is supported in the decisions of the Judicial Committee. Chanda-varkar, J. regarded the father in such cases as merely exercising the power of alienation which the sons would have exercised in the discharge of their pious duty which they owed to him. He went on to add that the father "is virtually alienating the property for them (the sons) and on their behalf" and it was on this view that he based the further proposition that as the attachment prevented the son from alienating his (son's) interest, it must equally be held to prevent the father from alienating the son's interest. The basis of the Privy Council decisions, if we may take Nanomi Babuasin v. Modun Mohan (20) as typical of them, seems to us to be somewhat different. They observed that the recognition of the father's power to sell the son's interest for the discharge of his own debts was destructive of the principle of independent co-parcenary rights in the sons; they then proceed to state the position to be that the sons cannot set up their rights in the family property as against the father's alienation for antecedent debt or against his creditors' remedies for their debts if not tainted with immorality. The proper interpretation of this statement of the rule seems to us to be, that to the extent required to satisfy the father's proper debts, the father and his creditors are entitled to ignore the son's co-parcenary rights in the family property. If this is the true view of the father's right, it seems to us, with all respect, open to question whether it can be said, as Chanda-varkar, J. said in the Bombay case, that the father when he sells the family property for the discharge of his debts is merely exercising the power of sale possessed by the son himself. Except on this theory, it will be difficult to limit the father's power by reason of the statutory disability imposed by s. 64, Civil P. O., upon the son as a result of the attachment of the son's interest. We may also observe in this connection, that the provision in s. 53, Civil P. O., declaring that the property in the hands of a son which under the Hindu Law is liable for the payment of the debts of the deceased father shall be deemed to be the property of the deceased which has come to the hands of the son, is more consistent with the view we have above indicated as to the basis of the decisions of the Judicial Committee relating to the father's power to sell joint family property. It is not, however, necessary for the purposes of this case to decide whether the view enunciated in Subrayya v. Nagappa (7) is to be followed or not. We have therefore thought it unnecessary to refer the case to a Full Bench and we propose to deal with the case on the footing that Subrayya v. Nagappa (7) was rightly decided.

The result of the Bombay decision as well as of the decision of the Calcutta High Court in Kamala Bala Dasi v. Surendra-nath Nath (8) is only to impose on the father in a case like the present the disability imposed upon the son by s. 64, Civil P. O. We are not aware of any other rule of law which sets a limitation either on the son's power or on the father's power in circumstances like those of the present case. All that s. 64 of the Code provides is that any private transfer by the judgment-debtor of the property attached shall be void as against all claims enforceable under the attachment. It will not be accurate to read s. 64 as putting an end to the power of sale, because as between the transferor and the transferee, the alienation will undoubtedly be operative. If the attaching creditor is paid off or for any reason the attachment ceases to subsist, the aliensee's title will be unassailable. The only effect of s. 64 is that such transfer shall not prejudice the rights of the attaching creditor.

If the above is the true position, the question arises whether when a sale is made in pursuance of a contract entered into prior to the attachment, such conveyance is one contrary to the terms of s. 64 at all. We cannot agree with Mr. Krishna-swami Ayyar that the uniform course of decisions on this point referred to already is in any way opposed to the recent decisions of the Privy Council as to the effect of s. 54, T. P. Act. The argument based on s. 54 has been considered in many of the cases referred to. The question is not whether any interest has passed under the contract to sell. An attaching decree-holder attaches not the Physical property but only the rights of the judgment-debtor in the property. As explained in the decisions and recognized in s. 40, T. P. Act, the right of the judgment-debtor in the property is on the date of the attachment qualified by the obligation incurred by him under the earlier contract to sell and the attaching creditor cannot claim to ignore that obligation and proceed to bring the property to sale as if it remained the absolute property of the judgment-debtor. Nor can it be said that the sale by the contracting parties executed in pursuance of a pre-existing contract to sell prejudices the attaching creditor, because the sale is merely the fulfilment of the obligation to which the judgment-debtor was already subject. The utmost that the attaching decree-holder will be entitled to, in such circumstances, is the payment of the balance of the purchase money if anything remained due on the date of the attachment.

Mr. Krishnaswami Ayyar relied on the observations of Sir D. F. Mulla in the notes to s. 40, T. P. Act, to the effect that the attaching decree-holder will not be bound by a conveyance even in pursuance of a pre-existing contract to sell; but the learned author draws a distinction between a conveyance voluntarily executed by the judgment-debtor in pursuance of pre-existing contract and a conveyance executed by him under an order of Court in pursuance of a pre-existing contract. In the latter case, the author seems to think that the attaching creditor cannot object to the conveyance. If this distinction is well founded, it is sufficient to support the decision of the lower Court in this case because the sale deed was executed in this case in pursuance of an order of the Court. But we are inclined to agree with Mr. Krishnaswami Ayyar that there really ought to be no distinction between the two classes of cases, because in both cases, the conveyance is really not voluntary but is only the fulfilment of an obligation already incurred; only we would also hold that such a conveyance is not in reality contrary to the attachment within the meaning of s. 64, Civil P. O.

Reliance was placed by the learned Counsel for the appellants on some observations of Cuming, J. in Tarak Nath v. Sanat Kumar (21). In one part of the judgment, the learned Judge seems to grant that the vendee will have a right to claim specific performance as against the Court auction-purchaser. If that be the position, it is difficult to see the justification for his differing from the other decisions referred to already including the decision of the Calcutta High Court in Madan Mohan Day v. Rebat Mohan (16). With all respect, we prefer to adopt the view of Pearson, J., the other learned Judge who took part in Tarak Nath v. Sant Kumar (21), and that is in accordance with the weight of authority as we have already observed. Our attention was drawn by Mr. Krishnaswami Ayyar to the decision of the Judicial Committee in Nur Mahomed Peerbhoy v. Dinshaw Hormasji Motiwala (22). We do not find anything in that judgment to help the appellants. Their Lordships merely leave the question open and they have not given any indication that may be said even to throw doubt on the correctness of the decision of the several High Courts on the point.

In the view above stated, the position when the Official Receiver executed the sale deed in favour of the plaintiffs on November 6, 1931, was that he merely carried out the contract entered into by the brothers on July 24, 1926, that is more than three years before the date of the attachment, and as the sale deed was executed in pursuance of an order of Court which was in effect a decree for specific performance, though passed by the Insolvency Court, the weight of authority is clearly in favour of its having all the effects which a conveyance by the five brothers would have had. On the finding that the contract to sell was binding on the sons and that the consideration received for the sale had been utilized for the payment of antecedent debts, a sale by the five brothers would undoubtedly have been effective to convey the interest not merely of the brothers but also of all their sons who continued to remain joint with them. In view of the dates of the various proceedings taken by the plaintiffs, a further question may arise, whether the attachment placed by the appellants on March 15, 1930, could have any effect at all as against the plaintiff because though the sale deed was in fact executed on November 6, 1931, its execution was asked for by a petition dated December 21, 1928, and was ordered by the Court of first instance on December 2, 1929 (Ex. U). We are informed that the draft sale deed and the stamp paper for execution of the sale-deed in accordance with this order were produced in Court as early as in January 1930 but, that in consequence of an order of stay, the sale deed was not immediately executed and was executed only after the decision of the Appellate Court on February 9, 1931. The question arises whether on these facts, the sale deed should not be treated as one executed, if not on the date of the agreement, at least on the date of the presentation of the petition or in any event, on the date of the first Court's order. The respondent's Counsel relied in this connection on the observations in Jaharlal Bhutra v. Bhupendranath Basu (23) and Bhaskar v. Shankar (24). The learned Counsel for the appellants, however, rightly insisted that this point had not been raised in the lower Court and involved an examination of facts which do not appear on the record itself. We do not, therefore, pursue this question further.

We may here refer to one other contention of Mr. Krishnaswami Iyer. At one stage during the execution of the money decree obtained by the appellants, the Official Receiver intervened with a claim petition. He contended that the appellants were not entitled to appropriate the proceeds of the sale of the shares of defendants Nos. 6 to 12 but that he himself was entitled to deal with those shares or with the proceeds thereof. This claim was dismissed by the Subordinate Judge's Court (see Exs. 23 and 23-A) and that order was confirmed on appeal by this Court in Ex. 24. In the course of that judgment the learned Judges of this Court referring to a remark of the Subordinate Judge observed:

"If the learned Subordinate Judge means only that the Official Receiver's right of sale is extinguished, it is unobjectionable."

Mr. Krishnaswami Iyer contends that this decision of this Court precludes the plaintiff from contending to the contrary because the plaintiff's title was derived under a sale deed executed by the Official Receiver only subsequent to this date. We do not think that this contention is well-founded. In the proceedings above referred to, the Official Receiver cannot in any sense be said to have represented the present plaintiff. In those proceedings, he figured as representing the general body of creditors and claimed that the proceeds of the sons' shares should be made available for their benefit. The present plaintiff on the other hand claimed under a contract which if held binding on the estate will be binding on the Official Receiver as well and include the whole interest in the suit items. Further, when the Official Receiver executed the sale deed it is not in the capacity of the representative of the general body of creditors or even in the exercise of the power possessed by him or by the insolvent to satisfy the general body of creditors that he acted. He was merely carrying out an obligation which prior to the insolvency had been incurred by the insolvents. We see no justification for holding that the order in the claim proceedings instituted by the Official Receiver precludes the present contention of the plaintiff. The effect of an order in claim proceedings is declared by O. XXI, r. 63, Civil P. O. There is no justification for giving any greater effect to such an order. In the above view, the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge on Issue No. 3 must be affirmed and it will not be necessary to discuss the position of defendants Nos. 7 and 8 separately. We may, however, add that even if a different view should be taken as to the power of the father or of the Official Receiver under the general law, it is no longer open to defendants Nos. 7 and 8, in view of the terms of the consent order, to assert that their interests in the family property did not vest in the Official Receiver. If they are precluded, the judgment-creditor who seeks to attach their supposed interests in the family property must be held to be equally precluded.

As regards the position of defendant No. 9, the learned Counsel for the appellants contended that the observations in para. 42 of the lower Court's judgment must really be understood to be in his favour and he argued that the lower Court had somehow failed to give effect to them in framing its decree. We are unable to agree with this interpretation of the lower Court's observations. It is true that the learned Subordinate Judge set out the observations of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in Palani Ammal v. Muthu Venkatachala Monigar (25), but he was evidently of opinion that in the circumstances of this case, the effect of the institution of the suit and its ultimate withdrawal was to leave defendant No. 9 as a member of the joint Hindu family. It is unfortunate that we do not have the papers relating to the withdrawal. They were apparently not filed because the fact of withdrawal was not disputed. The appellant's learned Counsel argues that the observations in Palani Ammal v. Muthu Venkatachala Monigar (25), at pp. 258 and 259* throw on the plaintiff the onus of proving that the institution of the suit did not effect a severance and that as the plaintiff has adduced no explanation for the institution of the suit, defendant No. 9 must be held to have become divided in status. This seems to us to read too much into their Lordships' observations. Referring to Kedar Nath v. Ratan Singh (26), their Lordships said that they saw no reason to depart from the view there laid down and only added that the plaint so presented, even if withdrawn, would, unless explained, afford evidence that an intention to separate had been entertained. This can hardly be read as laying down any rule of law or even a presumption. It only seems to suggest a possible inference of fact. It is not unlikely as observed by the learned Subordinate Judge, that in this case defendant No. 9 instituted the suit at a time when he thought that he would get some benefit out of it, but that when he found that there would be nothing left after payment of the debts due by the family he did not think it worthwhile to proceed with the suit. These circumstances do not seem to us to warrant the conclusion that he became divided merely by the presentation of the plaint.

We agree with the findings of the lower Court on all the points raised and dismiss the appeal with costs of respondent Nos. 1 to 5.

BOMBAY HIGH COURT

First Appeal No. 259 of 1937

PURUSHOTTAM DAMODAR

RAICHURKAR—DEFENDANT No. 1

GANGADHAR KASHINATH SAKHARE

AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS

Hindu Law—Alienation—Mortgage—by adoptive

mother for amount greater than required for legal necessity—Mortgagee can recover only portion required for legal necessity—Difference between sale and mortgage for legal necessity, explained.

The effect of a sale of property for a larger sum than immediate necessity requires, is not necessarily the same as the effect of a mortgage for a larger sum than is required, for, it is not always possible for the father of a family to sell just that share of the property which will bring in the precise sum which is wanted to clear the debts which are binding. What the Court has to consider in the case of a sale is whether the sale should be set aside or not. The sale is either valid or invalid. A mortgage may, however, be valid for less than the whole amount advanced, or it may be valid for the whole amount against one defendant, and for part of the amount only against another defendant. In enforcing a mortgage the Court takes an account of what is due.

Where it is found that a mortgage executed by an adoptive mother was for a greater amount than was required for the legal necessity, the mortgagee is only entitled to that portion of the advance which was advanced for legal necessity. 100 Ind. Cas. 130 (1) and Hunoomanpersaud Panday v. Babooee Munraj Koonweree (2), explained, 156 Ind. Cas. 859 (3), relied on.

Mr. S. Y. Abhyankar, for the Appellant.

Mr. T. N. Walavalkar, for Respondent No. 1.

Beaumont, C. J.—This is an appeal against a judgment of the First Class Subordinate Judge of Sholapur. The plaintiffs are suing to enforce a mortgage passed on September 10, 1924, by the adoptive mother of defendant No. 1. Defendant No. 1 contends that the mortgage is not for legal necessity and therefore is not binding upon his interest in the mortgaged property. The learned Judge held that in respect of Rs. 3,200 out of the total sum of Rs. 4,000 advanced, the mortgage was for necessity, but he held that the remaining Rs. 800 was not for necessity, and he passed an order on defendant No. 1 to pay out of the mortgaged property the sum of Rs. 6,400 which was based on the view that the total principal sum secured was Rs. 3,200. On the facts, I think, there is no reason for challenging the learned Judge's finding, Rs. 3,000 was required by the adoptive mother of defendant No. 1 to pay off subsisting mortgages on the property, and the learned Judge held that a further Rs. 200 was also required for purposes of necessity. The balance, according to the allegation of the mortgagee, was required to pay off miscellaneous debts, and for the maintenance of the minor mortgagor. Admittedly, there was no evidence whatever that the adoptive mother had incurred any debt. The mortgagee merely took her word for it without any inquiry. I think, therefore, the learned Judge, was right in holding that the mortgagee had not established that more than Rs. 3,200 was borrowed for legal necessity.

On those facts, Mr. Abhyankar for the appellants contends that the mortgage is good for the full amount purported to be secured, and for that he relies on the decision of the Privy Council in Sri Krishan Das v. Nathu Ram (1). In that case the Privy Council were dealing with a sale by a manager for Rs. 3,500 and it was proved that out of that sum Rs. 3,000 was required for legal necessity. The Privy Council held that, in the circumstances, the sale was for necessity and that it was not essential for the purchaser to prove that the whole of the purchase money had been applied for necessity. The particular passage on which Mr. Abhyankar relies for his contention that the principle of that case applies to the present case, which is one of mortgage, is at p. 84*. Their Lordships say :

"The learned Judges seem to have lost sight of the true question which falls to be answered in such cases—namely, whether the sale itself was one which was justified by legal necessity. This is the point of view from which the matter is approached in the earliest case cited as the Bar in Hunoomanpersaud Panday v. Babooee Munraj Koonweree (2), decided by the Board in 1856. The case related to a charge upon property by way of mortgage, and not to a sale, but the principles to be applied appear to their Lordships to be the same as in the case of a sale of property."

I think Mr. Abhyankar's contention illustrates the danger of wresting a dictum from its context. All that their Lordships mean in the passage which I have read is that the principles to be applied in considering whether a sale is for legal necessity are the same as the principles to be applied in considering whether a mortgage is for legal necessity. But they do not, in my opinion, mean to suggest that the effect of a sale for a larger sum than immediate necessity requires is necessarily the same as the effect of a mortgage for a larger sum than is required. As their Lordships point out in that case

"it is not always possible for the father of a family to sell just that share of the property which will bring in the precise sum which is wanted to clear the debts which are binding;"

and what the Court has to consider in the case of a sale is whether the sale should be set aside or not. The sale is either valid or invalid. In the case of a mortgage the position of course is entirely different. A mortgage may be valid for less than the whole amount advanced, or it may be valid for the whole amount against one defendant, and for part of the amount only against another defendant. In enforcing a mortgage the Court takes an account of what is due, and on the taking of such account, I see no reason why a reversioner, against whom the mortgage is sought to be enforced, should not take the point that, as against his interest in the mortgaged property, the mortgage is good only for that part of the mortgage debt which was required for legal necessity. Certainly the case in Hunoomanpersaud Panday v. Babooee Munraj Koonweree (2), on which their Lordships relied in Sri Krishan Das v. Nathu Ram (1), is not an authority against the view which I have expressed, because in the actual report which their Lordships made to her Majesty they say (p. 425*) :

"And their Lordships are of opinion that the validity, force and effect of the bond, as to all and each of the sums, of which the sum of Rs. 15,000, thereby purporting to be secured, is composed, depend on the circumstances under which the sums, or such of them as were advanced by the appellant, were respectively so advanced by him."

The question was also considered by a Bench of the Patna High Court in Dwarka Ram v. Bakshi Parnaw Prasad Singh (3). In that case the Bench came to the conclusion that it was always open in a suit to enforce a mortgage, for the defendant to contend that a part of the mortgage debt was not binding upon him or upon his share of the mortgaged property on the ground that it was not borrowed for legal necessity. I think that is the correct view. I have dealt with this point, which seems to me to be free from difficulty, rather more fully than I should normally have thought necessary, because I have had several cases recently in which the point has been raised. In my view, therefore, the decree which the learned Judge made allowing to the plaintiff only that portion of the principal which was advanced for legal necessity is correct. The appellant has also contended that the learned Judge was wrong in holding that defendant No. 1 is an agriculturist. But, as the defendant himself and one of his witnesses gave evidence that he lived by cultivating lands and there was no evidence to the contrary, I think the learned Judge was right in holding that the defendant was personally an agriculturist, and in directing accounts to be taken on the basis on which he did direct them. In my opinion, therefore, the appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs.

Appeal from the Madras High Court

LORD THANKERTON, LORD ROMER AND
SIR GEORGE RANKIN

M. ETHIRAJULU NAYUDU—

RESPONDENT

Madras City Tenants' Protection Act (III of 1922), ss. 1 (3), 2 (4), 3, 6, 12—Benefits of ss. 3, 6 and 12, when available—Tenancy held was not created before commencement of Act and Act did not apply.

The latter part of the definition of "tenant" in s. 2 (4), Mad. City Tenants' Protection Act, refers to persons who, without a tenancy title, continue in possession after the termination of the tenancy, and the benefit of the remaining sections including s. 12, cannot be of avail to tenants unless and until they have shown that the tenancy in question was created before the commencement of the Act within the meaning of s. 1 (3). [p. 572, col. 2.]

By lease dated October 18, 1912, A leased the plot of land in suit to B for a period of ten years from October 1, 1912, the tenant being at liberty to erect a superstructure on the land. Shortly before its expiry on September 30, 1922, there were negotiations which resulted in an agreement by A to give a fresh lease at an increased rent, in order that further building operations should go on. On February 1, 1923, the formal lease was executed, under which the plot of land was leased to B for a term of ten years from October 1, 1922, at an increased rent. It provided that the lessee should always and in any event be entitled to be paid the price of the superstructure built on the said plot of land before he surrendered possession of the land, either on the expiry of the lease thereby granted or any other future lease or at any time, and that the price should be fixed according to the market value of the buildings as at the time of ascertainment and payment. On the expiry of the lease the lessor claimed possession and offered the present value of the superstructure as it existed at the commencement of the lease. The lessee claimed the benefit of the Mad. City Tenants' Protection Act:

Held, that though the physical possession was continuous, the possession from October 1, 1922, was attributable to a new tenancy, which was formally embodied in the lease dated February 1, 1923. The tenancy in question was not therefore created before the commencement of the Act, and the Act did not apply.

Messrs. C. S. Rewcastle, K. C. and P. V. Subba Row, for the Appellants.

Mr. W. W. K. Page, for the Respondent.

Lord Thankerton.—This is an appeal from a judgment and decree of the High Court of Judicature at Madras, in its civil appellate jurisdiction, dated March 31, 1937, which affirmed a judgment and decree of that Court, in its ordinary original civil jurisdiction, dated October 8, 1936.

In the suit, which was filed on January 25, 1933, the respondent, as plaintiff, seeks delivery of possession by the appellants of a plot of land in Mathiappan Street, Georgetown, Madras, and the superstructure thereon, mesne profits, and a declaration as to the amount payable to the appellants as the market value of the superstructure, in terms of a lease by the respondent to the appellants' father and predecessor-in-title for a term of ten years, which expired on September 30, 1932.

The only question in the appeal is whether the appellants' claim that the Mad. City Tenants' Protection Act, 1921 (Act III of 1922) is applicable in the present case is well-founded. Both Courts below have rejected this contention.

The respondent and his undivided brother, by lease dated October 18, 1912, leased the plot of land in suit to the appellants' father, for a period of ten years from October 1, 1912, the tenant being at liberty to erect a superstructure on the land. In fact there was already a superstructure thereon, erected by the previous lessee, from whom the appellants' father had bought it shortly before obtaining his own lease. The appellants' father improved the superstructure during his tenancy, and shortly before its expiry on September 30, 1922, there were negotiations which resulted in an agreement by the respondent who had become sole owner under a partition with his brother in 1917, to give a fresh lease at an increased rent, in order that further building operations should go on.

On February 1, 1923, the formal lease was executed, under which the plot of land was leased to the appellants' father for a term of ten years from October 1, 1922, at an increased rent of Rs. 100 per month, on the following recital:

"Whereas sometime prior to the expiry of the said lease the lessor agreed to grant the lessee a new lease of the said plot of land for a period of ten years commencing from October 1, 1922, upon terms and conditions hereinafter appearing, and whereas the lessee has built on the said plot of and a substantial superstructure on the strength of the said agreement."

It was provided that the lessee should always and in any event be entitled to be paid the price of the superstructure built on the said plot of land before he surrendered possession of the land, either on the expiry of the lease thereby granted or any other future lease or at any time, and that the price should be fixed according to the market value of the buildings as at the time of ascertainment and payment. It appears that, on the strength of this agreement, the appellants' father had demolished the existing building and erected a substantial structure.

The appellants' father died in 1930, and the appellants became the tenants under the lease, which expired according to its terms on September 30, 1932. On October 9, 1932, the respondent sent a notice to the appellants claiming surrender of possession and offering the present value of the superstructure as it existed at the commencement of the lease, which was put by him at Rs 3,000. On November 7, the appellants replied claiming the benefit of the Mad. City Tenants' Protection Act, and disputing the valuation and the claim, and the present suit was thereafter filed by the respondent. It may be mentioned that the trial Judge held, against the respondent, that under the lease the respondent was bound to pay the value of the superstructure as it existed at the expiry of the lease, and that the respondent accepted that decision.

The Mad. City Tenants' Protection Act came into force on February 21, 1922, and by s. 1 (3) it is provided that the Act shall apply only to tenancies created before the commencement of the Act. Under s. 2 (4) "Tenant" is defined as meaning a tenant of land liable to pay rent on it, every other person deriving title from him, and includes persons who continue in possession after the termination of the tenancy. The leading provision of the Act is to be found in s. 3, which provides:—

"3. Every tenant shall on ejection be entitled to be paid as compensation the value of any building, which may have been erected by him, by any of his predecessors-in-interest or by any person not in occupation at the time of the ejection who derived title from either of them, and for which compensation has not already been paid. A tenant who is entitled to compensation for the value of any building shall also be paid the value of trees which may have been planted by him on the land."

Under s. 6 (1) a tenant who is entitled to compensation under s. 3 and against whom a suit in ejection has been instituted, may apply to the Court for an order that the landlord shall be directed to sell the land for a price to be fixed by the Court. The appellants made an application under this section. By s. 12 it is provided that nothing in any contract made by a tenant shall take away or limit his rights under this Act, provided that nothing contained in the Act should affect any stipulations made by the tenant in writing registered as to the erection of buildings, in so far as they related to buildings erected after the date of the contract.

Their Lordships are of opinion that the latter part of the definition of 'tenant' in s. 2 (4) refers to persons who without a tenancy title continue in possession after the termination of the tenancy, and that the benefit of the remaining sections including s. 12, on which the appellants sought to rely, cannot be of avail to the appellants unless and until they have shown that the tenancy here in question was created before the commencement of the Act within the meaning of s. (3).

The appellants maintain that the tenancy which terminated on September 30, 1932, was created by the lease of 1912, the lease of 1923 being merely a continuation of the earlier lease, and they refer to the verbal agreement made before the expiry of the 1912 lease in support of this argument. But their Lordships are clearly of opinion that though the physical possession was continuous, the possession from October 1, 1922, was attributable to a new tenancy, which was formally embodied in the lease dated February 1, 1923, the increased rent thereby provided having been paid by them from October 1, 1922, in terms of the verbal agreement for a lease. Their Lordships, accordingly, concur in the view of both the Courts below, that the tenancy here in question was not created before the commencement of the Act, and that the Act does not apply.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that the appeal should be dismissed with costs, and that the judgments appealed from should be affirmed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 145—Liability accrued before dismissal of execution application—Surety, if can be proceeded against—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 128—Surety—Liability, extent of—Surety binding himself for due appearance of judgment-debtor in Court on date of hearing or as ordered by Court—Judgment-debtor absconding—Surety held liable.

There is nothing in s. 145, Civil P. O., or any other section to prevent the judgment-creditor proceeding against a surety in respect of a liability accrued before the execution application is dismissed. There is nothing in that section to suggest that the dismissal of the execution application has retrospective effect so as to excuse the surety from any liability incurred before the dismissal.

By a surety bond it was provided that the surety would secure the attendance of the judgment-debtor in Court on a particular day and thereafter when ordered by the Court to appear. The judgment-debtor appeared on some hearing and was informed about the next hearing date, when he did not appear before the Court so as to enable the Court to deal adequately with the execution application before it because the judgment-debtor absconded;

Held, that prima facie the surety was liable. Lalji Sahoy v. Odoya Sunderi Mitra (1), distinguished.

S. A. against an order of the Second Assistant Judge, Hyderabad, dated April 1, 1936.

Mr. Dingomal Narainsing, for the Appellants.

Mr. Fatehchand Assudomal, for the Respondents.

Davis, J. C.—This is an appeal against the judgment of the Second Assistant Judge of Hyderabad who confirmed an order of the Subordinate Judge at Hyderabad, dismissing the application of the appellants to execute against the surety of an absconding judgment-debtor a bond into which this surety had entered. Both the lower Courts were of the opinion that the appellants could not succeed in their application because, firstly, it had not been shown that there was any breach of any condition of the bond, and secondly, the execution application for which the bond was intended to secure the appearance of the judgment-debtor had been dismissed, and, therefore, as the proceedings in which this bond was taken and in which the judgmentdebtor had to appear were ended, so was the surety bond and the liability of the surety thereunder. The lower Courts relied on a case in Lalji Sahoy v. Odoya Sunderi Mitra (1) which, however, was under the old Act, and otherwise can clearly be distinguished from the case before us, for, there the application to proceed against the surety was made after the execution application was dismissed. Here the application was made before.

Now we think the appellants in this case should succeed. So far as the bond is concerned; it is provided that the surety shall secure the attendance of the judgment-debtor on December 20, 1932, and thereafter when ordered by the Court to appear. The judgment-debtor did not appear before the Court so as to enable the Court to deal adequately with the execution application before it because the judgment-debtor absconded. But the fact that the judgment-debtor absconds does not necessarily involve a breach of a condition of the bond that he should appear, if the bond provides, he should appear only when ordered by the Court, and if the Court has permitted him to absent himself, and he then absconds, the bond could not be enforced against the surety.

But looking at this case as we see it, it is perfectly clear that when the Court adjourned the case from time to time, it at the same time ordered, by necessary implication, if not expressly, the judgment-debtor to appear. For instance, on December 20, there is an order of the Court that "the judgment-debtor has appeared and has been informed of the next date." That the information to the judgment-debtor as to the next date was by necessary implication an order under the circumstances of this case to appear is clear from the fact that on the next hearing the judgment-debtor did appear even though he was ill and had to come to Court in a gharry. A similar order to the order of December 20, understood by the judgment-debtor as an order to him to appear, was passed on February 4, that is to say, the order was for adjournment, and by necessary implication, a clear intimation to him that he should appear on March 25, the date to which the case was adjourned, and on March 25, the judgment-debtor put in an application through his Pleader that he was ill, asked that his attendance might be excused and put in his medical certificate. His application that he might be excused - personal attendance was granted but the application itself is an admission, he had been ordered to appear and an order was passed that the hearing was fixed on April 1, 1933, and it was clearly intended by the Court to convey, and it is clear it was so understood by the judgment-debtor's Advocate, that the judgment-debtor should appear on April 1. He did not do so and absconded, and he is now to be permitted, if the judgments of the lower Courts are allowed to stand, to take advantage of the fact that he did not appear through illness and his first default was excused, to justify his second default. So we have the strange argument, which apparently commended itself to the two lower Courts, that, if a judgment-debtor in the first instance disobeys the order to attend the Court, so no order can be given to him personally to attend again, he can thereafter abscond with impunity and take advantage of his own default. We do not think that such an argument can be taken seriously, nor do we think it should have commended itself to the two lower Courts. We think that construing this surety bond reasonably, construing reasonably the orders passed by the Court and the response of the judgment-debtor in the first instance to them, it is clear in this case that he had been within the meaning of the bond ordered to appear and he disobeyed that order. Therefore prima facie the surety is liable under the terms of his bond.

But then another argument was advanced which has commended itself to the lower Courts, and that is, that because the accused absconded and the proceedings against him became infructuous and the execution application was dismissed, so the surety is discharged from this liability under the bond, though the liability was incurred before the execution application was dismissed, and though before that execution application was dismissed, the appellants or judgment-creditors had made an application to the Court dated October 5 to proceed against the surety. The learned Judges have not found, and we think they would have difficulty in finding, a case which would support this order dismissing this execution application against the surety of the judgment-debtor who has absconded and their conclusion that as he has absconded, and the execution application was dismissed on that account, he will free the surety from a liability he had incurred before the order of dismissal of the execution application was wrongly or rightly made. So far as we can see, there is nothing in s. 45, Civil P. C., or any other section to prevent the judgment-creditor proceeding against a surety in respect of a liability accrued before the execution application was dismissed, as is the case here. There is nothing in that section to suggest that the dismissal of the execution application has retrospective effect so as to excuse the surety from any liability incurred before the dismissal.

Mr. Dingomal has argued that the surety bond as worded in this case relates not only to this execution application, but to any further execution application that may be made in execution of this decree against the judgment-debtor, and that the surety for instance must be held bound for howsoever long execution proceedings may be taken against this judgment-debtor, for a period of years. We are not at present prepared to accept this proposition in all its amplitudes and it is not at present necessary for us to do so, nor is it necessary for us to give any decision upon this point because this is not the case we have to deal with. We have to deal with this particular application made in this particular proceeding upon the execution application dated October 5, 1933, and to that application and the proceedings based directly upon it, we limit this decision. We think, therefore, that the appeal should be allowed with costs throughout and the case sent back to the Court for the execution application to proceed against the surety according to law.

RANGOON HIGH COURT
Civil Revision No. 327 of 1938

RAM OUDH—APPLICANT

*versusGOVERNMENT OF BURMA

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 115—Revision on ground that evidence is being or will be rejected by lower Court, if maintainable—Mere error of law, whether ground for revision.

High Court will not entertain an application for revision on the ground that evidence is being or will be rejected by the trial Court. An interlocutory order may decide a case and may be subject to revision if it does irreparable damage to a party, but that cannot be said in the case of rejection of evidence. It is open to the party to question the decision in appeal which is the proper time at which the error, if any, should be remedied.

A mere error of law on a question which the Court has jurisdiction to decide will not in itself be a ground for interference in revision.

O. R. from an order of the Assistant District Court, Meiktila, in O. R. No. 5 of 1938.

Mr. K. C. Bose, for the Applicant

Mr. U Thin Maung, Advocate-General, for the Crown.

Mosely, J.—This is an application under ss. 115, Civil P. O., for revision of a decision of the learned Additional District Judge of Meiktila on a preliminary issue in a suit. The issue was in substance as follows:

"Whether the terms of tenancy as embodied in the deed of lease can in law be subject to a condition precedent that in reality the lease will be for ten years at a time and not for a period of five years as inserted in the deed of lease?"

The learned Additional District Judge said that no question of a condition precedent arose but that the oral agreement sought to be proved was not a matter on which the document was silent or inconsistent with its terms and could not be included under proviso (2). A preliminary objection by the learned Advocate-General is that this application for revision will not lie. I do not think that this Court or any other High Court has ever entertained an application for revision on the ground that evidence is being or will be rejected by the trial Court. A decision is quoted by the learned Advocate-General which is in exact point, Isa Adam v. Bai Mariam (1). No doubt an interlocutory order may decide a case and may be subject to revision if it does irreparable damage to a party, but that cannot be said in the case of rejection of evidence. It is open to the party to question the decision in appeal which is the proper time at which the error, if any, should be remedied. It cannot be said here either that the trial Court has not applied itself to the matter. A mere error of law on a question which the Court has jurisdiction to decide will not in itself be a ground for interference in revision. It is said for the petitioner that the plaintiff's case was really based on fraud and that if an issue were framed on fraud, this evidence will be admissible. That may or may not be so, but it is not a matter before this Court and it is not a matter decided by the trial Court. This application in revision must, therefore, be dismissed with costs—Advocate's fees, three gold mohurs.

Mya Bu, J.—I agree.

D. Application dismissed.

PRIVY COUNCIL

Appeal from the Calcutta High Court

November 10, 1939

LORD THANKERTON, SIR GEORGE RANKIN

AND SIR PHILIP MACDONELL

SUNIL KUMAR KERR—APPELLANT

versus

SISIR KUMAR KERR AND OTHERS—

RESPONDENTS

Privy Council—Practice—Question of fact not put in issue in lower Courts—Board not satisfied that evidence already taken establishes that facts if fully investigated would have supported plea—Such plea cannot be entertained by Board—Succession Act (XXXIX of 1925), s. 307—Parties dealing with executors, if have duty to enquire into facts outside will—Mortgage executed by executors held gave good title to mortgagees—Held on construction of will that no restriction was imposed on statutory power of disposal of executor.

The question of assent by the executors at the time of the mortgage of the property, regarding the trust of the mortgaged property is a question of fact, and when this question had not been put in issue or maintained in the Courts below and their Lordships are not satisfied that the evidence already taken establishes beyond doubt that the facts, if fully investigated, would have supported the plea, they cannot in accordance with the practice of the Board, entertain this plea at such a late stage. Connecticut Fire Insurance Company v. Kavanagh (1), referred to.

Much of the usefulness of the statutory power conferred by s. 307, Succession Act, on executors in India would be nullified, if a duty to enquire into facts outside the will as they existed immediately prior to the testators' death was imposed on parties dealing with executors.

A testator who was the owner of a printing, publishing and book-selling business which he had started and carried on, died leaving a will whereby he had appointed two of his sons executors and directed them to carry on the business among other things. The property contained among other properties some immovable property used as the family dwelling house and for printing press. The executors subsequently executed a mortgage of these properties. The mortgage deed made a reference to the will and the authority given to the executors to carry on the business and stated that the amount was required to fulfil the contract made with the Govt. for the exclusive licence to publish certain Govt. publications:

Held, on construction of the will that the will did not impose any restriction on the statutory power of disposal.

Held, further that it was necessary to assume, that, in a question between the executors and the beneficiaries, the executors were not entitled to use the immovable properties for the purposes of the business. But the mortgagees had no duty to enquire into facts outside the will as they existed immediately prior to the testator's death and they, therefore, got good title from the executors.

Messrs. L. P. E. Pugh, K. C. and S. P. Khambatta, for the Appellant.

Sir Herbert Cunliffe, K. C. and Mr. J. M. Pringle, for the Respondents.

Lord Thankerton.—The only question in this appeal is whether two mortgages executed by the executors of Thakur Das Kerr are binding on the estate of Thakur Das Kerr and on the properties which are the subject of the mortgages. The issue arises in a suit filed by the appellant and respondents Nos. 1 and 2 on August 31, 1929, for construction of the will of Thakur Das Kerr and for certain declarations, including a declaration that the said mortgages are invalid, inoperative and nullities and do not in any way bind the estate of the testator. Respondents Nos. 5 and 6 who alone appear in the appeal, are the representatives of the mortgagee under the first of the two mortgages. This appeal is against the judgment and decree of the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal, in its appellate jurisdiction, dated December 7, 1934, which as regards the declaration in question, affirmed the judgment of the said High Court in its ordinary original civil jurisdiction, made by Ameer Ali, J. and dated January 18, 1932, which dismissed the suit as regards the said declaration.

The testator died on October 5, 1919, leaving a will dated December 16, 1917, and a codicil dated April 16, 1919, the latter of which is not material. He was survived by a widow, four sons and three grandsons. Respondents Nos. 3 and 4 are two of the sons, and are the executors of the will. The three grandsons are sons of respondent No. 4 and are the appellant and respondents Nos. 1 and 2.

At the time of his death, the testator was the owner of a printing, publishing and book-selling business which he had started and carried on successfully under the name of R. Cambray & Co. for about 25 years. In addition to a share in ancestral property in his village of Nalkorah, he died possessed of zamindari property outside Calcutta in Baraset and Bashirat Sub-Divisions, house property in Calcutta, Govt. Promissory Notes, War Stock, and shares in railways, banks and various companies, all of which he had acquired out of the profits of the business.

The house property in Calcutta consisted of,

(a) Nos. 11-A and 11-I Halder Lane, which were used as the family dwelling-house, and in which the printing was done until 1915.

(b) No. 3 Halder Lane, to which the printing press was transferred when it was acquired in 1915.

(c) Nos. 5 and 6 Halder Lane, which were acquired in 1913 and 1911, respectively, and which were let.

The main business was carried on in hired premises in Hastings Street, with a branch in College Square.

The material provisions of the will are as follows:

"(2) I appoint my sons Dharendra Ohandra Kerr and Narendra Ohandra Kerr to be the executors of this my will with full authority to carry on the printing, publishing and book-selling business now carried on by me under the name and style of R. Cambray & Co.

(7) I will and direct that my sons with their respective families (if any) shall be entitled to reside in my said house at Bowbazar and at the ancestral house at Nalkorah in such manner as they may choose and to be maintained out of the income of my estate in the manner prevalent in my lifetime. If any of my sons or their widows do not reside in either of my said houses, he or she will not be entitled to maintenance out of my estate.

(8) I will and direct that my said sons Dharendra Ohandra Kerr and Narendra Ohandra Kerr shall receive a monthly sum or allowance of Rs. 52 and 50, respectively, as remuneration for looking after the management of my estate.

(10) I further will and direct that my executors shall be authorised in their absolute discretion to employ my sons Satyendra Ohandra Kerr and Sailendra Ohandra Kerr in the management of my estate and give each of them while so employed a salary or allowance of Rs. 15 rising to Rs. 30 a month according to ability. My said son Sriman Satyendra will not be entitled to any allowance if he refuses to be employed as aforesaid. My youngest son Sriman Sailendra besides the allowance provided herein being further entitled to a sum of Rs. 1,000 towards his marriage.

(15) I further declare it to be my express will and intention that after paying the annuities and meeting the expenses hereby directed as aforesaid, the residue of the income of my estate shall be invested in Govt. Promissory Notes or in purchasing profitable property in the vicinity of my said Bowbazar house or of my said ancestral house at Nalkorah and the said Govt. Promissory Notes or the property as the case may be shall form a part of my estate.

(16) I further declare it to be my express will and intention that the monthly sum or salary hereby directed to be paid to my sons shall on their respective deaths be payable to their respective male descendants then alive in equal shares if more than one.

(18) I lastly give devise and bequeath the rest and residue of my estate in equal shares to the male descendants of my sons living at the death of my last surviving son, those in whose descent from me a living ancestor shall intervene being excluded by the others."

The will was duly proved, and respondents Nos. 3 and 4, as executors, took possession of the estate and carried on the business.

On April 11, 1927, respondents Nos. 3 and 4, as executors, executed a mortgage in favour of Sreemutty Indira Ghosh, whom respondents Nos. 5 and 6 now represent, of the five properties in Halder Lane, to secure a sum of Rs. 65,000 with interest at 9 per cent. The mortgage, after a reference to the will, contained the following recital:—

"Whereas by the said will the testator authorised the said mortgagors to carry on the printing, publishing and book-selling business carried on by the testator in his lifetime under the name and style of R. Oambray & Co., in Calcutta and elsewhere, and whereas the said mortgagors are about to enter into contracts with the Governments of three Presidencies, namely, Bombay, Madras and Allahabad, and also Local Govt. for the exclusive licence to publish and issue verbatim reprint of the Indian Law Reports from the year 1921 to 1925 and whereas to fulfil the said contracts the mortgagors are in need of Rs. 65,000."

On September 3, 1927, the executors executed a first mortgage of the goodwill and connection of R. Oambray & Co. and the book debts outstanding and the stock in trade thereof and a second mortgage of the Halder Lane properties in favour of respondent No. 7, to secure a sum of Rs. 7,500 with interest at 10 per cent. This mortgage contained recitals similar to those in the first mortgage.

In fact, the printing and publishing of the reprints were carried out at a new branch at Madras, mainly owing to the cheaper cost of printing in Madras.

Both the Courts below have decided, on the terms of the will and the evidence, that these immovable properties were so connected with the business by the testator that the executors were entitled to mortgage them for the purposes of the business. It is true that Ameer Ali, J., lays stress rather on the terms of the will but the Appellate Court clearly relied on the evidence as to the testator's practice in treatment of his estate. Jack, J., in whose judgment Lord-Williams, J. concurred, said:—

"In this case the evidence shows that the testator pooled all his liquid funds together and mixed up the accounts of his property with those of his business, taking the expenses connected with both from the common fund. It is true that though he mortgaged promissory notes for the purposes of the business, he never mortgaged his immovable properties for that purpose. Except his ancestral properties, the remainder of his house properties including those in Calcutta, had been purchased from the profits of the business, and in one of the houses a printing press had been established. It is admitted that had funds been required for the protection of his house properties in an emergency, the executors would have been entitled to take them from the business. The beneficiaries of both the business and the house properties were the same and the executors were appointed managers of both. In these circumstances, it is difficult to say that the Calcutta house properties could be regarded as quite unconnected with the business so as not to be available in order to raise funds for the business when required."

These decisions settled not only that the mortgagees got a good title, but that, in a question with the beneficiaries, the executors were entitled to mortgage the properties.

At the hearing before the Board, the appellant put forward a contention to the effect that, at the date of the mortgage, the executors had assented to the trusts as regards both the business and the immovable properties, which had thereby become vested in them as trustees, and that, accordingly, the powers conferred on executors by s. 307 of the Succession Act, 1925, were no longer available to them. Whether this consequence would result from assent need not here be determined. The question of assent, in such circumstances, is a question of fact, and this question had not been put in issue or maintained in the Courts below their Lordships are not satisfied that the evidence already taken establishes beyond doubt that the facts, if fully investigated, would have supported the plea, and therefore, in accordance with the practice of this Board they are unable to entertain this plea at this late stage. Connecticut Fire Insurance Company v. Kavanagh (1). It follows that when they granted these mortgages, the executors, in a question between the estate and the mortgagees, must be taken to have had the powers conferred by s. 307 of the Succession Act, and only two questions arise for consideration. Firstly, having regard to s. 307 (2) (i), was any restriction on the statutory power imposed by the will in this case, and, secondly, had the mortgagees constructive notice of any defect in the proposed exercise of the power, so as to put them in bad faith?

On the first point, their Lordships are unable to find in the will any restriction imposed on the statutory power of disposal. On the second point, it is necessary to assume, contrary to the judgments below that, in a question between the executors and the beneficiaries, the executors were not entitled to use the immovable properties for the purposes of the business. If so, did the mortgagees know, or were they so put on their enquiry that constructive knowledge must be imputed to them, that the executors were not so entitled?

There is no evidence that the mortgagees knew anything outside the terms of the will and the recital in the mortgage. These told them nothing as to the starting of a new branch at Madras, and nothing as to the testator's practice, at the time of his death, with regard to treating the properties as connected with the business. Indeed, the will suggests that they are to be managed as one unit for the benefit of one set of beneficiaries. But, the question must be whether the proposed lenders had a duty to enquire into facts outside the will as they existed immediately prior to the testator's death. Their Lordships are unable to hold that the mortgagees had any such duty, and the nature of the enquiry held in the present case and the decisions below, show how impracticable it would be for any such enquiry to be made by an intending lender. In their Lordships' opinion, much of the usefulness of the statutory power conferred by s. 307 on executors in India would be nullified, if such a duty of enquiry was imposed on parties dealing with executors.

Their Lordships are therefore of opinion that the mortgagees got a good title from the executors and it becomes unnecessary to consider whether the ground of decision of the Courts below was justified, but their Lordships are not to be taken as indicating any contrary opinion.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that the appeal should be dismissed with costs and that the judgments appealed from should be affirmed.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 162 (2) —Mortgage suit—Preliminary decree passed—Appeal therefrom—Proceedings of lower Court not stayed and final decree passed—Preliminary decree confirmed—Limitation for execution—Starting point—Fresh application for final decree, necessity of.

The fact that an appeal is preferred against the preliminary decree in a mortgage suit does not prevent the Court from passing the final decree. Where no order staying proceedings pending the appeal is obtained, it is the duty of the trial Court to proceed to pass the final decree. That decree remains binding and in full force until set aside. Where the Court passes the final decree and the preliminary decree is confirmed on appeal, the limitation for an application for execution of the final decree runs not from the date of the final decree but from the date of decree of the Appellate Court in appeal from the preliminary decree. 181 Ind. Cas. 491 (3), relied on.

The decree-holder can execute the final decree without obtaining a fresh final decree after the decision of the appeal against the preliminary decree. 42 Ind. Cas. 93 (4) and 98 Ind. Cas. 499 (5), distinguished.

L. P. A. against the judgment of Mr. Justice Venkataramana Rao, Reported in 171 Ind. Cas. 680.

Mr. K. Kuttikrishna Menon, for the Appellant.

Mr. K. P. Krishna Menon, for the Respondents.

Leach, C. J.—The appellant was the defendant in a suit on a mortgage filed in the Court of the District Munsif of Parapanangadi. A preliminary decree was passed against him on July 21, 1925, and he preferred an appeal. No stay of the proceedings in the trial Court was obtained pending the hearing of this appeal and on November 9, 1925, the District Munsif passed a final decree for sale. The appeal against the preliminary decree was dismissed on March 16, 1927. On March 15, 1930, the decree-holder respondents applied for the execution of the final decree. Objection was taken by the appellant on the ground that the application for execution was barred by the law of limitation, as it had been filed more than three years after the passing of the final decree. The District Munsif rejected this contention, but dismissed the application because defendant No. 2 had died and his legal representatives had not been brought on the record. The appellant appealed to the Subordinate Judge against the order dismissing the application and the Subordinate Judge sent the case back to the District Munsif for re-consideration. The District Munsif maintained the opinion that the application was within time; but as the legal representatives of defendant No. 2 had still not been brought on the record, he again dismissed the petition. The appellant filed an appeal against this order and the Subordinate Judge held that the application was barred by the law of limitation. The decree-holder appealed to this Court and Venkataramana Rao, J. allowed the appeal, agreeing with the view of the District Munsif that the application for execution was in time. A further point was taken before the learned Judge, namely that the decree-holders were not entitled to execute the final decree obtained by them on November 9, 1925, and should have obtained a fresh final decree after the decision of the appeal against the preliminary decree. The learned Judge also decided this question against the present appellant.

When the appeal was before Venkataramana Rao, J., there was a conflict between a decision of this Court and a Bench decision of the Patna High Court. In Ahmed Kutty v. Kottakkat Kuttu (1) Madhavan Nair, J. held that where during the pendency of an appeal from a preliminary decree in a partition suit, the trial Court passes a final decree in the suit and there is no appeal, the period of limitation for execution of the final decree runs from the date of the final decree and not from the date of the decree of the Appellate Court in the appeal from the preliminary decree. In Somar Singh v. Deonanda Prasad Singh (2) the Patna High Court took the opposite view and Venkataramana Rao, J. accepted the Patna decision. It is not, however, necessary for us to consider whether he was right in so doing because the question has since been decided by a Bench of this Court consisting of King and Krishnaswami Ayyangar, JJ. in Sriramachandra Rai v. Chintamanibhatla Venkateswara Rao (3) where it was held that the period of limitation ran from the date of the appellate decree. In this case, there was an application to set aside an ex parte decree but this was dismissed. Against the order of dismissal the defendants appealed to the High Court which allowed the appeal, extending its benefits to the defendants who had not appealed on condition that they deposited the decree amount within three months. The deposit was not made and the ex parte decree therefore stood as against the defendants who had not appealed. The decree-holder filed his application more than five years after the date of the ex parte decree. It was held that it was in time because limitation ran from the date of the appellate decree. This decision governs this case and the question must, therefore, be decided against the appellant.

With regard to the second contention, namely, that there can be no execution proceedings until a second final decree has been obtained, it falls to be observed that this objection was not taken in the Court of the District Munsif or in the Court of the Subordinate Judge, and as Venkataramana Rao, J. has pointed out, if the objection had been taken, it would have been open to the District Munsif to treat the application for execution as an application for a final decree and pass a final decree if it was necessary. Although it was not necessary in these circumstances for the learned Judge to decide the question, he did so and came to the conclusion that a fresh application for a final decree or amendment of the original decree was not necessary. With this conclusion we are in entire agreement. No authority has been quoted to the contrary. The learned Advocate for the appellant has relied on certain observations of Banerji, J. and of Tudball, J. in Gajadhar Singh v. Kishen Jivan Lal (4) approved of by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Jowad Hussain v. Gendan Singh (5) Banerji, J. said:

"It seems to me that this rule—i. e. the rule regulating application for final decree in mortgage actions—contemplates the passing of only one final decree in a suit for sale upon mortgage. The essential condition to the making of a final decree is the existence of a preliminary decree which has become conclusive between the parties. When an appeal has been preferred, it is the decree of the Appellate Court which is the final decree in the cause."

Tudball, J. said:

"When the Munsif passed the decree, it was open to the plaintiff or the defendant to accept that decree or to appeal. If an appeal is preferred, the final decree is the decree of the Appellate Court of final jurisdiction. When that decree is passed, it is that decree and only that which can be made final in the cause between the parties."

The question now under consideration was not under consideration in those cases. The fact that an appeal was preferred against the preliminary decree did not prevent the Court from passing the final decree. As I have pointed out, no order staying proceedings was obtained and it was the duty of the trial Court to proceed to pass the final decree. That decree remains binding and in full force until set aside. The preliminary decree was confirmed on appeal and therefore did not affect the validity of the final decree which had been passed. For the reasons indicated, the appeal will be dismissed with costs.

Hindu Law—Widow—Maintenance—Members agreeing to pay maintenance at certain rate—Rate, when subject to variation according to family fortunes—Method of obtaining variation—Deed of such agreement, construction of—Decree awarding maintenance—Practice of Courts—Manager's power to enter in agreement regarding granting of maintenance—Past and future maintenance—Decree—Variation—Practice.

Under the Hindu Law the widow's right to maintenance is dependent upon the family fortunes and so is liable to fluctuation both up and down in sympathy with them; and the parties concerned can contract themselves out of this and undertake to pay and receive a fixed and unvariable sum irrespective of the state of the family's finance at any given time. But they must say so in express terms. When they agree to a certain rate, and say nothing more, they are, merely reaching agreement on one question, namely the fair rate applicable to a given set of circumstances. They do not usually mean to abrogate the rest of the law which states that that rate shall be liable to variation if and when circumstances alter, and indeed, to cease altogether under certain conditions. An implied term has to be read into the contract that the agreement is subject to the usual incidents of Hindu Law and is to be read along with it and interpreted in that light. Variation is permissible only when the circumstances have altered to such an extent as to justify a variation of the figures agreed upon and they are altered before the accrual of the cause of action for maintenance. The only method of obtaining relief would be by showing that the agreement has ceased to subsist, or that the circumstances which, according to its implied meaning, will justify a variation, have come into play.

The right to alter or rescind rate of maintenance fixed for payment to a widow does not rest in the hands of either one side or the other but depends upon external circumstances which apply equally to both. [p. 584, col. 2.]

A deed whereby it is agreed to pay maintenance to a Hindu widow must be construed in the light of the surrounding circumstances and with reference to the practice and usage in these matters: to do otherwise would result in an unjust conclusion. [p. 582, col. 1.]

In decrees where maintenance is awarded, Courts should insert words which would enable them on application to set aside or modify their orders as circumstances might require, and in such cases, the remedy would be the more appropriate one by application under the leave reserved Gopika Bai v. Dattatraya (14), relied on. [p. 584, col. 2.]

The manager of a joint Hindu family has the right to settle maintenance claims. When he does so, he acts on behalf of the family as a whole; so it is bound by his action.

Ordinarily the questions regarding the payment of past and future maintenance would be separate and independent and so in the absence of an express statement to the contrary, it must be assumed that they were treated separately.

Obiter.—If a decree directs the doing of a certain thing, then that thing must be done unless and until the decree is altered or provides on the face of it for the limits of its own existence. It is not like a contract which can be varied by common consent and in which the law, recognizing the unwillingness of the average person to put into writing clauses which are too obvious to his mind to require mention, takes into consideration the surrounding circumstances. No such laxness can ordinarily be imputed to Judges. Their decrees can only be varied or altered by the Court itself and only in a particular way.

Judgment.—The plaintiff is a Hindu widow who is suing the members of her late husband's family for maintenance. The claim is founded on a deed, Ex. P-1, dated June 4, 1925, which was executed by Bapuji, the plaintiff's father-in-law who is now dead. The suit is against his sons. The following genealogical tree will show the relationship between the parties.

The deed, in so far as it is relevant for the purposes of this case, is in the following terms.

"I promise to give you Rs. 250 annually for your maintenance. I shall give you the above-mentioned rupees every year on the first of April. According to that deed your first year of maintenance begins from the date—April 1, 1925. I promise to give you, your maintenance every year in advance that is as soon as the new year begins. I have already promised to give you Rs. 250 for the first year of your maintenance that is for the year 1925-26 before the registering officer. I shall give you Rs. 250 on the date—April 1, 1926, for your second year of maintenance, that is for the year 1926-27. Thus in this way I shall give you Rs. 250 every year for your maintenance until you are alive. I have got three sons at present. There has been no partition between them and myself. We are all one family. My eldest son died while we were a joint family. At present I am the karta of the family. I shall give you your maintenance amount as I have agreed till my life. But after my death all my sons must also give you Rs. 250 for your maintenance once every year as I have agreed. By this deed all my sons are bound to maintain you. A mutual understanding between you and me has been concluded for your past maintenance. I do not owe anything to you for your past maintenance."

It will be observed that the deed has three marked features. The first is that the maintenance is payable in advance: accordingly the suit which was filed on November 16, 1933, is in the main for the Rs. 250 due on April 1, 1933, for the year 1933-34. There is also a small claim for Rs. 2-8-0 on account of the previous year, the contention being that the amount paid for that year fell short of the Rs. 250 due by this sum of Rs. 2-8-0. The balance of Rs. 60 is for the interest which the plaintiff says she has made herself liable for on a loan which she was forced to borrow owing to the defendants' omission to pay the Rs. 250 for which this suit has been brought.

The second outstanding feature of the deed is that Bapuji, though acting as karta of the family and though settling a maintenance allowance which under the Hindu Law would normally vary according to the fortunes of the family, has nevertheless contracted on behalf of his sons as well as himself, that the plaintiff will be paid Rs. 250 a year for the period of her life.

The defendants contend that this contract must be construed in the light of the surrounding circumstances and that there must be read into it an implied clause which makes the undertaking to pay Rs. 250 a year subject to variation in the family fortunes.

They also urge that Bapuji had no power to bind them contractually except to the extent that the manager of a joint Hindu family can bind the other members: that an undertaking of this sort (if there is no implied term as above), which takes no account of possible fluctuations in the family fortunes, is on the face of it imprudent, and therefore the family is not bound to honour it when its fortunes decline, as they have at the present juncture.

The third feature is that the agreement settles not only the amounts payable in the future but also all claims in respect of arrears. The plaintiff's contention is that she gave up her right to a lump sum in respect of arrears, which she says were then due, on condition that she would be paid a steady and unvarying allowance of Rs. 250 a year irrespective of fluctuations in the family fortunes. The argument against this is that the clause dealing with arrears has nothing to do with the rest of the agreement. It merely states that the parties have come to a mutual understanding about the matter and agree that nothing is now due. This forms no part of the consideration for the remainder of the agreement and merely recites a settled fact.

The defendants admit that the agreement was executed by their father, and admit the plaintiff's right to maintenance, but they contend that since that agreement was executed, there has been a sharp decline in the family income and that therefore the amount fixed in the agreement must now be reduced. The plaintiff replies that there can be no reduction and relies on the terms of her bond.

The first Court upheld the plaintiff's contention and decreed her claim, though on agreement (which also gave the defendants liberty to appeal) instalments were allowed. The lower Appellate Court agreed with the defendants. In second appeal the learned Judge, from whose decision the appeal has been filed, agreed with the first Court and so allowed the appeal and restored the original decree. The defendants appeal again.

Two things are, we think, beyond doubt. First, that under the Hindu Law the widow's right to maintenance is dependent upon the family fortunes and so is liable to fluctuation both up and down in sympathy with them; and second, that the parties concerned can contract themselves out of this and undertake to pay and receive a fixed and unvariable sum irrespective of the state of the family's finance at any given time; that is to say, as Pollock, J. has put it, they can contract themselves out of the realm of status and enter the domain of contract and can agree to regulate their relations henceforth according to the terms of an agreement. The first thing, therefore, to look to is the deed and that is what the learned Judge whose decision we are now considering has done.

According to him, the deed is plain. It says that the plaintiff is to be paid Rs. 250 for her life and is to be paid not only by the father Bapuji but also by his sons after his death. It does not make this payment subject to fluctuations and does not say that the figure is liable to variation on the happening of a given event. Therefore, the learned Judge holds, full effect must be given to these terms.

There can be no doubt that that is what the deed actually says and had there been no complications, we would have had no hesitation in agreeing with that view. But we feel that the matter is not as simple as that. The deed must be construed in the light of the surrounding circumstances and with reference to the practice and usage in these matters: to do otherwise would result in an unjust conclusion.

The right, and in fact the duty to do so, is conferred by the fifth proviso to s. 92 of the Evi. Act. The reason for allowing an exception of this kind is given by Lord Campbell in Humfrey v. Dale (1). His remarks with the necessary modification are apposite here. He says:—

"Merchants and traders, with a multiplicity of transactions pressing on them, and moving in a narrow circle, and meeting each other daily desire to write little, and leave unwritten what they take for granted in every contract. In spite of the lamentations of Judges, they will continue to do so; and in a vast majority of cases, of which Courts of law hear nothing, they do so without loss or inconvenience; and, upon the whole, they find this mode of dealing advantageous even at the risk of occasional litigation. It is the business of Courts reasonably so to shape their rules of evidence as to make them suitable to the habits of mankind, and such as are not likely to exclude the actual facts of the dealings between parties when they are to determine on the controversies which grow out of them. It cannot be doubted, in the present case, that in fact this contract was made with the usage understood to be a term in it; to exclude the usage is to exclude a material term of the contract, and must lead to an unjust decision."

If we might paraphrase that we would say that in spite of the lamentations of Judges, Hindu widows and members of joint Hindu families dealing with widows and other maintenance holders will not employ skilled draftsmen for the drawing up of their deeds, and will persist, much to the embarrassment of Courts and Judges, in resorting to crude instruments fashioned by crude craftsmen.

It is possible that in a poor country like

India where skilled legal advice is not easily available and indeed is a luxury resorted to only as a last resort, this occasions no great ill in a large class of cases which never reach the Courts, but unless this is borne in mind when a case does find its way into the Courts, injustice is likely to result.

People who enter into these agreements may not be learned in the law but they are usually steeped in an atmosphere of Hindu tradition and know well enough Hindu ideas and usage about these matters. They know that the amount claimable by a Hindu widow for her maintenance fluctuates with the family fortunes, and consequently when agreeing to any particular rate all that they mean is that that is the fair rate when the family fortunes are at a certain ebb. Therefore their undertaking is to pay at that rate so long as the family income and expenditure remains where it is at the date of the agreement. All concerned understand that if the income increases and there is no corresponding increase in the expenditure, as for example having more mouths to feed, then so also will the amount claimable by the widow; on the other hand, if it decreases, then so also will the sum agreed upon.

The agreement in such cases is not so much about the right, nor yet the circumstances in which it is claimable, for about that ordinarily there neither is nor can be room for controversy, but about the rate which is reasonable in a given set of circumstances, and that is all that they usually apply their minds to.

There is thus force in the appellants' contention that an implied term should be read into the contract, and we think this follows from the observations of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Sreemutty Soorjeemoney Dossee v. Denobundoo Mullick (2) at p. 550:

"The Hindu Law, no less than the English Law, points to the intention as the element by which we are to be guided in determining the effect of a testamentary disposition; nor, so far as we are aware, is there any difference between the one law and the other as to the materials from which the intention is to be collected. Primarily the words of the will are to be considered. They convey the expression of the Testator's wishes; but the meaning to be attached to them may be affected by surrounding circumstances, and where this is the case those circumstances no doubt must be regarded. Amongst the circumstances thus to be regarded, is the law of the country under which the will is made and its dispositions are to be carried out. If that law has attached to particular words a particular meaning, or to a particular disposition, a particular effect, it must be assumed that the Testator, in the dispositions which he has made, had regard to that meaning or to that effect, unless the language of the will or the surrounding circumstances displace that assumption."

The right to maintenance is, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, governed by the Hindu Law, and is, as Pollock, J. has put it, matter of status. The incidents attaching to it are well known and the term itself has acquired a particular meaning when used in relation to a given set of facts like the ones we have present here, and although it is true that such persons may contract themselves out of this status we hardly think that they intend to do so altogether unless they say so in express terms. When they agree to a certain rate, and say nothing more, they are, we think, merely reaching agreement on one question, namely the fair rate applicable to a given set of circumstances. We do not think that they usually mean to abrogate the rest of the law which states that that rate shall be liable to variation if and when circumstances alter, and indeed, to cease altogether under certain conditions.

The force of this is seen when we turn to another class of cases. It is a rule of Hindu Law that a widow loses her right to maintenance (except at a starving rate) if she becomes unchaste, also that while unchaste she is not entitled to any maintenance at all. So also it is well-settled that the right ceases upon re-marriage. It has never been doubted that these rules obtain in full force, unless expressly abrogated, even when there has been a decree or an agreement of the kind now under contemplation. See Vishnu Shambhog v. Manjamma (3), Daulta Kuari v. Meghu Tewari (4), Nagamma v. Virabhadra (5), Mayne's Hindu Law, 10th Edn. 831. The true principle then is, we think, that when one contracts oneself out of status one must include in the agreement expressly or by necessary implication every point on which the laws appertaining to that status are intended to be set aside; either that or agree wholly to leave the realm of status and expressly agree from thenceforth to be governed, solely by the laws of contract in all matters touching the subject-matter of the agreement. Unless that is done, the ordinary law will continue to apply in all other respects. An implied term has to be read into the contract that the agreement is subject to the usual incidents of Hindu Law and is to be read along with it and interpreted in that light.

This, as we understand it, is the principle upon which decrees, including compromise decrees, and also agreements, have so repeatedly been held to be subject to variation in the absence of an express direction to the contrary, when on the face of it they do not appear to be so. In any event it is the only legal foundation we are able to find for the long line of rulings which deal with this matter. But however that may be, and whether these were the reasons which prompted the learned Judges who so interpreted the law or not, the fact remains that maintenance decrees and agreements have so repeatedly been treated as subject to variation in the absence of an express direction to the contrary that that has now become the settled practice, and to hold otherwise at this stage would seriously disturb existing rights and might ruin families which have placed their hands to documents on the assumption that that was the law. It is, in our opinion, a class of case to which the rule of stare decisis should apply.

Turning now to the rulings on this point, they can be summarised thus. The Calcutta High Court enunciated the rule as far back as 1868 in Sreeram Bhattacharjee v. Puddomokhee Debia (6), and applied it to a compromise decree in the year 1879 in Rajendernath Roy v. Ranee Putto Soondery Dassee (7). The Bombay High Court made similar observations in connection with decrees in a Full Bench case decided in the year 1878. It is reported in Sidlingappa v. Sidava (8). The Allahabad High Court followed suit in a case decided in the same year in which an earlier decree had directed payment of a particular sum "so long as the firm of Gulab Rai Ohura Mal (the family firm) should exist," a provision not unlike the one found here. That decision is reported in Ruka Bai v. Ganda Bai (9). Madras comes next with three decisions, one in 1884, one in 1888 and the other in 1899. The first two, though obiter, uphold this principle, and the third is directly in point. These decisions are Vijaya v. Sripathi (10), Venkanna v. Ait- amma (11) and Bangaru Ammal v. Vijaya-machi Reddiar (12). Then comes a decision from this Province decided in 1900: Narayan Rao v. Janki Bai (13). It was also a case of a decree. There is also another Bombay case to the same effect in that year; Gopika Bai v. Dattatraya (14). These decisions have been followed since and the rule has been reproduced in the latest text books. See Mayne's Hindu Law 10th Edition, p. 835 and Mulla's Hindu Law, 8th Edition, p. 596, para. 56. The same rule was applied to agreements as distinct from decrees in Thakur Sheo Mangal Singh v. Bodhi Kuar (15), and in Subramanian Patter v. Vembammal (16). We have not been shown any case to the contrary. There are therefore strong reasons for applying the principle of stare decisis. A decision the other way round is Mohieswara Rao v. Durgamba (17). There the agreement provided.....expressly that the sum fixed was not to be varied. That illustrates the rule we have been expounding. When the contract or decree, either expressly, or by necessary implication, provides that there shall be no variation, then the Hindu Law rule of variation is excluded. To the same effect is Purshottamdas v. Rukmini (18).

We may observe in passing that it would save trouble, and in many cases unnecessary litigation, if agreements, and certainly decrees, were to be more specific and were to include clauses allowing variation instead of leaving them to be inferred. So far as decrees are concerned, it is the more logical, and certainly the more convenient course, and in England there would always have to be "liberty to apply" clause. Without it variation would not be permissible. Of course the rules of Hindu Law do not obtain there and that makes a difference, but the rules for construing decrees ought to be the same in both countries; and in any case a clause of that kind would avoid the necessity for bringing a fresh suit to have the decree varied. This was pointed out by Parsons, J. in Gopikabai v. Dattatraya (14) and we reproduce his observations for the future guidance of Courts in this Province.

"We think that, in decrees where maintenance is awarded, Courts should insert words which would enable them on application to set aside or modify their orders as circumstances might require, and in such cases the remedy would be the more appropriate one by application under the leave reserved."

We turn now to a more difficult question. Granting that an agreement of the kind we are considering can be varied, the question arises as to how it can be done and from what date the variation is to take effect.

It was argued that the only logical rule is that so long as the contract subsists, it must be enforced as it stands and if variation is desired, then the contract itself must be varied in one of the ways known to law before variation can be permitted, and then the variation will, in the absence of an express agreement to the contrary, take effect from that date and will affect only the future and not the past.

We agree that this is so but what is the contract? If what we have said is correct, then there is an implied condition in it incorporating the usual incidents of Hindu Law relating to this matter. It must be remembered that there is no case here either for rescission or for rectification of an instrument. The only circumstances in which rectification is possible are enumerated in s. 31 of the Specific Relief Act, namely when through "fraud or mutual mistake of the parties the instrument does not truly express their intention."

There is no case of fraud here nor yet of mutual, or to use a more correct expression, common mistake, nor does the instrument fail to express the intention of the parties. If the principles which we have been analysing are correct, then both sides understood quite clearly what was meant and expressed their intention adequately enough for all legal purposes. There is therefore no room for rectification; nor are there grounds for rescission. That is dealt with in s. 35 and the only ground relevant here is the one given in cl. (a):

"where the contract is voidable or terminable by the plaintiff."

As we read the law, the right to alter or rescind does not rest in the hands of either one side or the other but depends upon external circumstances which apply equally to both.

The issue before the Court in such cases is therefore a simple one. Have the circumstances changed to the necessary extent? If they have, then variation is permissible; if not, then it is not. If that is so, then it does not matter when the question is raised; that is to say, whether by a suit in which the family sue for a declaration (not for rescission or rectification) be it observed, for on these assumptions there is nothing to rectify or rescind), or by way of defence when the maintenance-holder sues. The issue in either case will be the same: have the circumstances altered to such an extent as to justify a variation of the figure agreed upon, and did they alter before the cause of action for the maintenance accrued? This, we think, follows from a decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council.

It was doubted for a time whether a widow could sue in respect of arrears, and some Courts held that this was a matter within the discretion of the Courts and that the Court could, for sufficient reason, refuse to award any arrears, or that it could award arrears at a lower rate than that fixed for her future maintenance. But their Lordships of the Privy Council overruled this in Ekradeshwari Bahausin v. Homeshwar Singh (19) and held that "such arrears if they truly exist, fall within the range of the widow's right to maintenance."

Therefore, as we see it, all that the Courts are required to determine is whether the right to the figure claimed existed when the cause of action accrued. If it did, the widow is entitled to it whatever the date of suit (questions of limitation aside); if not, then the figure must be fixed in accordance with the state of the family fortunes at the date when the right accrued. Whether the issue is raised by way of attack or in defence is immaterial. The point for determination is the same in either event.

We observe in passing that it is not any and every alteration in circumstances which will justify variation. The alteration in fortune must be substantial and of a kind which will justify an inference that the parties could not possibly have intended the old rate to continue in the altered circumstances. It is also to be observed that the alteration must have occurred before the cause of action to the maintenance holder accrued.

It is only when both elements are present that a departure from the figure agreed upon can be justified.

The decisions deal mainly with decrees and would appear to indicate a different rule, namely that unless a decree provides on the face of it machinery for its own alteration, variation can only be obtained by a separate suit properly framed for the purpose. But a decree, we think, stands on a different footing. There is not there, or at any rate ought not to be, room for implied clauses and unexpressed understandings. If a decree directs the doing of a certain thing, then that thing must be done unless and until the decree is altered or provides on the face of it for the limits of its own existence. It is not like a contract which can be varied by common consent and in which the law, recognising the unwillingness of the average person to put into writing clauses which are too obvious to his mind to require mention, takes into consideration the surrounding circumstances. No such laxness can ordinarily be imputed to Judges. Their decrees can only be varied or altered by the Court itself and only in a particular way.

It is true that owing to the unfortunate practice which has grown up in the matter of drawing up maintenance decrees, they now have to be construed, for reasons stare decisis, as liable to alteration even though they do not say so. But though we would not feel justified in making a greater departure than is necessary from normal rules of construction in the case of decrees, we do not think that the same considerations apply to contracts which have not merged in a decree.

The rulings are as follows. In the following cases a decree had fixed the rate and it was allowed to be varied as regards the future, or so we gather, though it is not expressly so stated in some of the judgments. Ruka Bai v. Ganda Bai (9), Bangaru Ammal v. Vijayamachi Reddiar (12), Gopikabai v. Dattatraya (14). To the same effect is Subramanian Patter v. Vembammal (16), the only difference being that the rate there was fixed by a document and not in a decree. These rulings are not of much assistance because they do not determine whether a separate suit is necessary. That question can naturally only arise in a suit for arrears.

It did arise, however, in the following cases. In Maharana Shri Ranmalsangji v. Bai Shri Kundan Kuwar (20) modification (20) 26 B 707; 4 Bom. L R 531.

of the rate fixed de futuro was sought in execution of the decree fixing it. It was held that the decree could not be altered in execution and that the proper remedy was a separate suit. This, we think, lays down the right rule as regards decrees in spite of a sentence in the judgment of Westropp, C. J. in Sidlingappa v. Sidava (8) which indicates other possibilities :

"unless either party, by suit or otherwise brought to the notice of the Court that circumstances rendered it equitable that the rate should be enhanced or reduced."

But, as we have said, we do not think this rule applies to agreements for, as we have explained, an agreement can only be varied or rescinded (apart from common consent) when the conditions specified in s. 31 or 35 of the Specific Relief Act are present. Therefore unless the agreement provides on the face of it for variation, or that is the necessary implication, it cannot, in the absence of a subsequent agreement modifying it, be varied either by suit or otherwise so long as it subsists. Consequently the only method of obtaining relief would be by showing that the agreement has ceased to subsist, or that the circumstances which according to its implied meaning will justify a variation, have now come into play.

The decision in Sidlingappa v. Sidava (8) does not assist us because there the claim was made for the first time in the suit itself. The rate had not been fixed previously either by agreement or in a decree.

In Thakur Sheo Mangal Singh v. Bodhi Kuar (15) the rate had been fixed in an agreement. The suit was by the maintenance holder for arrears, claiming at the agreed rate. The defendant was allowed to set up a plea of altered circumstances by way of defence and to obtain relief accordingly. Similar prayers were allowed in Rajendra Nath Roy v. Ranee Putto Soondery Dassee (7) and in Narayan Rao v. Janki Bai (13): in both these cases the rate had been fixed by a decree, a compromise decree in the first case and an ordinary decree after contest in the other. There can, therefore, be no doubt that the plea can be set up either by way of attack or by way of defence and that it can relate to arrears of maintenance. But none of these cases decide when the altered circumstances must come into existence so as to affect the claim, nor is it possible to deduce any rule in respect of this from the facts given. This therefore is a matter which is of first impression. In our opinion the only possible rule is the one we have given.

As we have said the Judicial Committee has decided that if the widow's right to arrears truly exists, then she is entitled to recover them. The extent of this right can only be determined with reference to the circumstances as they exist on the date when the right accrues. Therefore any alteration in circumstances after the right has matured cannot avail either side. They can only affect a right which accrues after they themselves have come into existence.

Turning back now to the deed sued on and reading it in the light of these observations we do not think that the parties contracted themselves wholly out of the realm of status. All they did was to settle the rate of maintenance applicable to the circumstances of the family at the date of the agreement. We hold, therefore, that it is subject to variation both up and down if the circumstances of the family can be shown to have altered, and the basis for this decision is that that was the implied understanding between the parties and the sense in which the words found in the document were used.

We do not think that the words making the sum settled payable for life make any difference, for that would be the case under the Hindu Law as well. The right enures through life, but the amount payable is subject to variation, and if the true principle be that the amount was settled with reference to the circumstances of the family as they existed at the date of the agreement, then the true construction of the document, read in the light of the circumstances in which it was executed, is that maintenance is to be paid for life, and that the rate fixed is to enure for life also, unless the fortunes of the family change either for better or for worse. In that event the rate will be liable to alteration either up or down provided of course the circumstances altered before the sum became due.

The defendants raised this plea in this case. Therefore, the burden will be on them to show that the agreement to which their father set his hand has ceased to subsist. That is to say, they will have to prove that the family circumstances altered for the worse before April 1, 1933, when the Rs. 250 due for 1933-34 became due; and as regards the sum 2-8-0 due on account of the previous year that they had altered on April 1, 1932, as well.

There is also an item of Rs. 60 in the claim. The plaintiff says that she had to borrow money because the maintenance due to her was not paid in advance and that this represents the interest on that loan. If she succeeds in proving this, then she will, in our opinion, be entitled to it provided she borrowed at a reasonable rate, reasonable that is to say, in the circumstances in which she was placed. The test will be whether she could have obtained money at a lower rate if she had made reasonable efforts to do so. The state of the family circumstances is a matter peculiarly within the knowledge of the other side, and so unless they either pay the widow her money when it is due, or make her a reasonable offer, telling her the reason for the reduction, on or before the date on which the sum is due, she is entitled to assume that there has been no alteration in circumstances. If that has not caused her to act to her detriment, then of course no complication arises, for no damage or loss can be said to have resulted to her. But if she has been caused thereby to act to her detriment (and that is a matter which she must allege and prove), then an estoppel arises and she will be treated exactly as if the circumstances had not altered. If they had not altered, she would have been entitled to her money on the dates due, and if she was not paid promptly, she would be entitled to borrow on such reasonable terms as she was in a position to obtain. The defendants would then be liable to make good that loss to her.

Two more points remain but they need not detain us long. The defendants contended that they were not liable for an agreement made by their father. We are of opinion, that they are. The agreement was made as manager, and the manager of a joint Hindu family has the right to settle maintenance claims. When he does so, he acts on behalf of the family as a whole; so it is bound by his action. On the interpretation which we have placed upon the agreement, the father acted within his powers, and there is no suggestion that the sum fixed was so unreasonable as to place the matter beyond the manager's implied authority.

The other point is that the rate was fixed at Rs. 250 on consideration that the plaintiff gave up her right to arrears. We are unable to read the document in that way. It does not state that this formed any part of the consideration for the payment of the Rs. 250 a year. We are of opinion, that that clause is an independent one reciting a settled fact. Ordinarily the two questions would be separate and independent and so in the absence of an express statement to the contrary, we must assume that they were treated separately there.

The result is that the appeal succeeds. The decree of this Court is reversed and the order of the lower Appellate Court remanding the case for a determination of the remaining issues is upheld.

As regards costs it was the duty of the defendants either to pay the sum promised or to tender a lesser amount, giving their reason. Since they have done neither, they will pay the entire costs of this litigation from the beginning whatever the result.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT

Civil Rule No. 555 of 1939

August 4, 1939

NASIM ALI AND NARSINGH RAO, JJ.

PRAFULLA KUMAR MAITY AND OTHERS—
PETITIONERS*versus*UDAY CHANDRA PRADHAN AND OTHERS
—OPPOSITE PARTY*Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), s. 28-G—
Whether affects law of estoppel contained in Evidence Act (I of 1873)—Estoppel.*

The Evi. Act is an existing Indian Statute falling in the Concurrent List in Sch. VII to the Govt. of India Act. The Amending Act which introduced s. 28-G was passed by the Provincial Legislature of Bengal and it did not receive the assent of the Governor-General-in-Council. Consequently, the Provincial Legislature never intended to affect the law of estoppel as contained in the Evi. Act. There is a presumption that a Legislature acts intra vires.

Where therefore relying on the representation of the petitioners that they were mokarari mourasi raiyats, the opposite party advances money to them on the mortgage of the tenancy, the petitioners are precluded thereafter from showing that they were occupancy tenants.

Mr. Sarat Chandra Jana, for the Petitioners.

Messrs. Amarendra Nath Bose and Soroj Kumar Maity, for the Opposite Party.

Nasim Ali, J.—The only point for determination in this Rule is, whether the petitioners are precluded from showing that they are occupancy raiayats. The learned Subordinate Judge has found that the petitioners represented to the opposite party that they were mokarari mourasi raiyats and relying on that representation the opposite party advanced Rs. 5,000 to the petitioners on the mortgage of the tenancy. This finding is based on the evidence of opposite party No. 1. It is consequently a finding of fact and cannot be interfered with in revision. The contention of Mr. Jana on behalf of the petitioners, however, is that the law of estoppel cannot be invoked in a proceeding under s. 26 G, Ben. Ten. Act, as that section clearly states that the mortgagor would get back his property notwithstanding anything contained in any contract or in any other law for the time being in force. His argument is that the Evi. Act which contains the law of estoppel is included within the words "any other law for the time being in force." I am unable to accept this contention. The section really proceeds on the footing that the mortgagor is an occupancy raiyat and the Legislature was evidently thinking of the rights in the property, as for example, the law of mortgage. The Evi. Act is an existing Indian Statute falling in the Concurrent List in Sch. VII, to the Govt. of India Act. The Amending Act which introduced s. 26-G was passed by the Provincial Legislature of Bengal and it did not receive the assent of the Governor-General-in-Council. Consequently, the Provincial Legislature never intended to affect the law of estoppel as contained in the Evi. Act. There is a presumption that a Legislature acts intra vires. Consequently, opposite party No. 1 is entitled to invoke the principle of estoppel in order to defeat the petitioners' claim for re-transfer of the mortgage property. The Rule is accordingly discharged with costs, the hearing-fee being assessed at one gold mohur.

Narsingh Rau, J.—I agree.

D. Rule discharged.

LAHORE HIGH COURT

Criminal Revision No 1045 of 1938

December 7, 1938

BHIDE, J.

BEHARI LAL SUD—ACCUSED—PETITIONER
versus

EMPEROR—RESPONDENT

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 193—Statements forming subject-matter of charge under s. 193 need not be material for decision of suit—Question arises only for purpose of sentence—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 439—Prosecution under s. 193—Lower Courts concurring—Order, if can be revised—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. VI, r. 5—Rejected replication though cannot be treated as pleading, can be placed on record and used to contradict statements by petitioner under s. 145, Evidence Act (I of 1872).

It is not necessary that the statements which form the subject-matter of a charge under s. 193, I. P. C. should be material for the decision of the suit and the question can only be considered for the purpose of the sentence in the event of a conviction. Jugal Chandra Dalal v. Emperor (1) and Emperor v. Babu Ram (2), referred to.

Revision can only be granted, if there is some error of law, some irregularity, or some abuse of or failure to exercise jurisdiction. It is inadvisable for the High Court to interfere in revision when two Courts have concurred in holding that a prosecution is in the interests of public policy. In case of a prosecution under s. 193, I. P. C., such a course is not even in the interests of the accused person as it deprives him of the only means of clearing his character, which would otherwise remain affected by the fact of the complaint having been made and endorsed by the Court of appeal; Ganda Singh v. Bisakhi (3) and 95 Ind. Cas. 312 (5), relied on.

Though the replication which is rejected cannot be treated as a pleading, the Court can place the replication on the record with its order thereon. The replication can be used as a previous statement to contradict the statements made by the petitioner in Court under s. 145, Evi. Act.

Cr. R. from the order of the District Judge, Ambala, dated July 4, 1938.

Messrs. B. R. Puri and Jindralal, for the Petitioner.

Messrs. Nand Lal Salooja and Feroze-ud-Din Ahmad, for the Advocate-General, for the Crown.

Order.—The petitioner in this case was ordered to be prosecuted under s. 193, I. P. C., in respect of certain statements made by him as a witness in the course of a suit for recovery of Rs. 1,000 instituted by him. The statements were in conflict with those in a replication which was sought to be put in by him under O. VI, r. 5, Civil P. C., but which was rejected by the Court. The replication was, however, placed on the record and was used to contradict the statements made by the plaintiff in the course of his evidence. The plaintiff's suit was dismissed and thereafter on an application made by the defendant the trial Court sanctioned the plaintiff's prosecution under ss. 193, 199 and 209, I. P. C. On appeal the learned Sessions Judge held that prosecution under ss. 199 and 209, I. P. C. was not sustainable. He therefore ordered that the prosecution should be under s. 193, I. P. C. only. A petition for revision of this order has now been presented to this Court. The conflicting statements made by the plaintiff in the course of his evidence and in the replication which are to support the charge under s. 193, I. P. C., have been given in the order of the learned Subordinate Judge who sanctioned the prosecution as well as in the complaint filed in pursuance of that order. The fact that the statements in question were made by the plaintiff is not disputed and there can be no doubt that the statements are in conflict and cannot prima facie be reconciled. The learned Counsel for the petitioner raised only two points before me:

(1) That the replication having been rejected by the trial Court should not have been placed on the record and could not legally be made use of for the purposes of prosecution under s. 193, I. P. O., and (2) that the statements in respect of which the prosecution has been ordered were not material for the purposes of the suit.

As regards the first point, it is true that the replication having been rejected could not be treated as a pleading but the Court was right in placing the replication on the record with its order thereon, as the order was liable to be challenged in appeal and was indeed so challenged. The replication could be used as a previous statement to contradict the statements made by the petitioner in Court under s. 145, Evi. Act and was so used. When the petitioner was confronted with para. 2 of the replication, he gave at first an evasive answer that the para. may or may not be true but later on admitted that it was true. Paragraph 2 of the replication has thus become a part of the petitioner's statement in Court. No attempt was, however, made by him to reconcile his statements in Court with those in the replication. The petitioner's statements in Court are contradicted by the replication and in some respects even by the evidence of his own witnesses.

As regards the second point, the learned Counsel for the Crown pointed out that it is not necessary that the statements which form the subject-matter of a charge under s. 193, I. P. O., should be material for the decision of the suit and the question can only be considered for the purpose of the sentence, in the event of a conviction. In support of this contention, reference was made to the language of s. 193, I. P. O. and also to Jugal Chandra Dalal v. Emperor (1), which follows Emperor v. Babu Ram (2), and certain other rulings. The correctness of this contention of the learned Counsel for the Crown was eventually conceded by the learned Counsel for the petitioner also. Moreover, some of the statements, which form the subject-matter of the complaint were material to the suit. For instance, the petitioner's statement that the money was paid by L. Durga Das in his presence, a statement which appears to be contradicted by his own witnesses, was material to the suit. So also the statement that the petitioner did not know whether the sum of Rs. 1,000 was to be contributed solely by the petitioner or by other persons was also material to the question, whether this sum, even if it was paid could have been paid by the petitioner alone. It may be pointed out in this connection that it was stated in the replication that money was to be contributed equally by the plaintiff and other persons. The learned Counsel for the Crown has drawn my attention to certain other conflicting statements of the petitioner on the question whether the sum of Rs. 1,000 was advanced as a loan and has urged that these should also be made the subject-matter of the charge. But I do not think it necessary or proper that this matter should now be taken up in revision.

The scope of revision in cases of this description is limited. It was held in Ganda Singh v. Bisaki (3), following the decision in In the matter of Alanda Hussain (4), that revision can only be granted, if there is some error of law, some irregularity, or some abuse of or failure to exercise jurisdiction. A similar view has been expressed in Behram v. Emperor (5), where it was held that it is inadvisable for this Court to interfere in revision when two Courts have concurred in holding that a prosecution is in the interests of public policy. It was further remarked that such a course is not even in the interests of the accused person as it deprives him of the only means of clearing his character which would otherwise remain affected by the fact of the complaint having been made and endorsed by the Court of appeal. I express no opinion whatever on the merits of the case; but as matters stand at present, it cannot be said that there was no prima facie case against the petitioner. It seems unfortunate that a person in the position of the petitioner should have made conflicting statements of the kind that are to be found in his evidence and that no attempt should have been made to remove or reconcile them. In the circumstances the petitioner

Appeal from the Lahore High Court
November 7, 1939

LORD THANKERTON, LORD ROMER AND
SIR GEORGE RANKIN.

Lala RAM SARUP—APPELLANT

versus

THE COURT OF WARDS, THROUGH THE DEPUTY COMMISSIONER, DELHI,

AND OTHERS—RESPONDENTS

Contract—Champertous transaction—Agreement to finance suit in consideration of having share in property, if recovered—When opposed to public policy—Points to be considered—Agreement held valid.

Champertous transactions are in their essence speculative and the fairness or otherwise of a particular bargain is almost always open to some debate. In applying the principle that "a fair agreement to supply funds to carry on a suit in consideration of having a share in the property, if recovered, ought not to be regarded as being, per se, opposed to public policy", it is essential to have regard not merely to the value of the property claimed but to the commercial value of the claim. This has to be estimated by the parties in advance of the result; and where they have weighed the probabilities in a manner which has not operated unfairly, it is more reasonable to regard this as confirming their shrewd estimate of the chances, than to condemn the agreement outright as unfair, by reason only of the possibility that a great gain to the claimant would have had to be shared with the financier. Though it is clearly not conclusive, the proportion to be retained by the claimant is an important matter to be considered when judging of the fairness of a bargain made at a time when the result of the litigation is problematical. The uncertainties of litigation are proverbial; and if the financier must needs risk losing his money, he may well be allowed some chance of exceptional advantage. Ram Oomarr Oondoo v. Chunder Canto Mookerjee (1), referred to.

Held, that the agreement was valid and binding.

Messrs. J. P. Eddy, K. C. and A. P. Pennell, for the Appellant.

Mr. W. Wallach, for the Respondents.

Sir George Rankin.—The appellant Lala Ram Sarup and respondent No. 4, Lala Alopri Parshad (herein called the plaintiffs), brought the suit out of which this appeal arises in the Court of the District Judge at Delhi on October 16, 1928. The suit was brought upon an agreement of a champertous nature dated October 2, 1920, and made between the plaintiffs and one Saleem Mahomed Shah. Saleem had since January 26, 1920, been suing in the Court of the District Judge at Delhi to establish his legitimacy as son to Shahzada Mirza Souriya Jah of the Moghul dynasty, who had died in 1913 possessed of considerable property. Besides Saleem, Souriya had left him surviving two widows and two daughters. The Court of Wards had in 1913 taken over his whole estate as belonging to these female heirs, giving a compassionate allowance to Saleem as a temporary measure. It had been decided by the Chief Commissioner that the Court of Wards should not, upon its own responsibility, recognise Saleem as entitled to succeed to any portion of the estate, but that he should be invited to obtain the decision of a Civil Court, and informed that the Court of Wards would give all possible aid to the Civil Courts in order to arrive at an early decision with the least possible cost to the litigants. His application for a loan was not unnaturally refused by the Court of Wards; who gave him instead some inexperienced advice about bringing a friendly suit for a mere declaratory decree on a court-fee of ten rupees and about suing in forma pauperis. By June, 1919, he had approached a Muslim lawyer of Delhi by name Abdur Rahman. This gentleman was a Khan Bahadur and has since become a Knight and a Judge of the High Court of Madras. Having made an arrangement with Saleem to take a fee payable by monthly instalments of Rs. 100, he undertook the case and acted for Saleem throughout. On January 26, 1920, Saleem attempted to proceed in forma pauperis by filing an application under O. XXXIII, Civil P. C. containing the same particulars as a plaint. He impleaded the Court of Wards, his father's junior widow and daughter and the husband of a deceased daughter. The senior widow had died in 1919. Two Schs. (P-1 and P-2) were annexed to the application being lists of the movable and immovable property left by Souriya according to such information as Saleem had been able to obtain. P-2 comprised a considerable number of immovable properties, some of which had been held by Souriya as jagirs and were not heritable. The claim was for possession or administration of the whole movable and immovable property left by Souriya on the footing that by a family custom overriding the Muhammadan Law, Saleem as the only son was the sole heir. He asked for mesne profits, accounts and enquiries and other relief and valued his suit at ten lacs of rupees. The Court of Wards did not, however, fulfil the expectations which it had held out as regards facilitating an early decision in a friendly and inexpensive suit. Mr. Modad Ali, its manager, opposed the grant of leave to sue in forma pauperis on a number of grounds, with the result that the Subordinate Judge on April 7, 1920, framed four issues and adjourned the case till August 3, 1920, for evidence and arguments on the question whether leave should be given. When August came, Saleem, despairing of progress along these lines, had got into touch with respondent No. 4, Alopi Parshad, who at that time (and until 1923) carried on business with the appellant, Ram Sarup, as money-lenders and bankers. Saleem succeeded in arranging that they should find the money to pay the court-fee (Rs. 3,000) so that his suit should proceed in the ordinary way and not in forma pauperis, and also that they should meet all the expenses of the litigation. Mr. Abdur Rahman on August 27, 1920, applied to the Court and obtained leave to put in the court-fee by October 4. The money was paid into the Treasury on October 2, and on October 8, the Court made an order treating the application made under O. XXXIII, as a plaint.

The agreement for finance (which is now sued upon) is a registered instrument dated October 2. It recites that Saleem had only an allowance of Rs 100 per month, that he had filed a case in forma pauperis, and that it could not be quickly or satisfactorily conducted in that way. A long list of immovable properties is attached to the agreement: it is said to be in the same terms as the list attached to the application under O. XXXIII. The agreement provides that the financiers, the present plaintiffs, should bear all the expenses of the case, and in return therefor, should get a three annas share of the immovable property recovered, provided that this should be increased to four annas should the case be taken on appeal to the Privy Council. It was to be in Saleem's option either (a) to have the property partitioned and give the plaintiffs their share, or (b) to have the property valued and pay the plaintiffs in cash.

It is not disputed that the plaintiffs carried out their part of the agreement, providing whatever money was required of them; such monies as had previously been raised by Saleem and paid to Mr. Abdur Rahman being refunded out of the sums provided by the plaintiffs.

The suit was decided by the Subordinate Judge on May 10, 1925. By his judgment of that date he disposed of a large number of issues which had apparently been argued before him for sixteen days. He found that Saleem was the legitimate son of Souriya; that a document put forward as Souriya's will was not proved and was otherwise invalid; that the alleged family custom of succession excluding females was not proved; and that the succession to the property of Souriya was governed by the rules of Muhammadan Law, so that Saleem was entitled to a 14-32nds share and no more. As regards the immovable property of Souriya, he found that there was hardly any dispute, the Court of Wards having filed two lists at Saleem's instance; but the record before their Lordships in the present appeal does not enable them to say what properties were held to have descended to the heirs of Souriya. He found that the claim in respect of movables was barred by limitation except as regards any movables which came to the hands of the Court of Wards. He thought it unnecessary to direct accounts or administration as the property was under management by the Court of Wards, and he confined his decree to a direction in Saleem's favour "for possession of 14-32nds share of the estate of his late father." From this decree neither side, upon consideration, thought fit to bring an appeal.

In consequence of the decision, the Court of Wards on July 16, 1925, was placed in charge of Saleem's share with retrospective effect on the ground that he was a co-sharer with female wards. Soon afterwards, on September 17, 1925, Saleem died leaving a widow and a daughter (defendants Nos. 2 and 3 in the present suit). As neither these ladies nor the Court of Wards were willing to recognise the plaintiffs' claim under the agreement of October 2, 1920, the present suit was brought against them on October 16, 1928, asking for a decree for possession of 21-256ths share in the immovable properties belonging to Souriya's estate, and for partition thereof, as well as for mesne profits since May 10, 1925. The plaintiffs, Ram Sarup and Alopi Parshad, gave evidence and called on their behalf Mr. Abdur Rahman. For the defendants, Mr. Modad Ali, manager of the Court of Wards, Saleem's widow and a collateral relation of his called Nazir-ud-din were the main witnesses. The learned Subordinate Judge (October 30, 1935), held that the plaintiffs' claim being a claim for specific performance of an agreement was by virtue of Art. 113 of the Schedule to the Lim. Act of 1908 barred as having been brought in October, 1928, more than three years from the date of the decree of May 10, 1925. But he found in the plaintiffs' favour that Saleem was not of weak intellect, that the agreement of October, 1920, was executed by him of his own free will, and that the agreement was not unlawful nor opposed to public policy. The High Court on appeal (June 10, 1937,) reversed the trial Court's decision as to limitation, holding that time did not begin to run against the plaintiffs on the date of the decree of May 10, 1925, but only when the plaintiffs had notice that performance was refused. But the learned Judges having referred to the evidence as to Saleem's being given to drink and being of weak intellect held that it was "highly probable that Saleem Mohammad Shah was induced to enter into an unfair bargain whereby he agreed to give up property worth a lac and fifty thousand rupees for a sum of ten or twelve thousand rupees." They held that the agreement of October 2, 1920, was highly detrimental to his interest and was inequitable and unenforceable. They assessed the reasonable expenses of Saleem's suit at Rs. 8,440 and gave the plaintiffs a decree for that sum, refusing them any costs on the ground that the Court of Wards had offered Rs. 8,500 before the suit was filed.

Upon the question of limitation their Lordships agree with the High Court that Saleem's obligation under the agreement sued upon was not that on the same day as that on which the trial Court should give judgment he should get the property partitioned or valued and should transfer the plaintiffs' share of the lands or pay the plaintiffs the value thereof in cash. The May 10, 1925, cannot be regarded as the date fixed for the performance of the agreement of October 2, 1920.

On the merits, however, their Lordships consider that the High Court have taken an unduly unfavourable view of the agreement, which was neither extortionate nor inequitable. There is some dispute as to the amount of money found by the plaintiffs for the purposes of Saleem's suit. The plaintiffs produce four cheques amounting to Rs. 19,000 which were paid by them to Mr. Abdur Rahman and are dated August 23, 1920, (Rs. 5,000), January 13, 1921, (Rs. 500), February 21, 1921 (Rs. 10,000), and June 6, 1921, (Rs. 3,500). Both they and Mr. Abdur Rahman deposed that these cheques were all given for the expenses of the suit. The latter says that by January, 1920, he had agreed with Saleem for an inclusive fee of Rs. 10,000 to be paid in monthly instalments of Rs. 100. The widow and Nazir-ud-Jin say that the fee agreed on was Rs. 2,000, but the trial Judge thought that there was "no reason to disbelieve the statement of Sir Abdur Rahman that his fee was Rs. 10,000." The learned Judges of the High Court do not say that they disbelieve the statement but express the opinion that a fee of Rs. 10,000 was highly excessive. The plaintiffs cannot be held responsible for fixing the fee, which had been settled before they were approached, and their Lordships think it sufficiently proved that the fee was paid by the plaintiffs. The learned Subordinate Judge was satisfied that "about Rs. 10,000 in all must have been spent on carrying on the litigation by the plaintiffs," but as there was a junior Counsel and some expense upon commissions to examine witnesses, it seems reasonably clear that the expenditure exceeded that figure by several thousands of rupees. According to Sir Abdur Rahman he got the money from the plaintiff's cheques and used it all for the suit; giving money to Saleem, who kept an account of his expenditure which he showed to Sir Abdur's clerk and himself when asking for more money. It seems quite probable therefore that the whole Rs. 19,000 was expended in this manner, and had the case gone on appeal to the High Court further moneys to a considerable amount might have become necessary. What then in the events that have happened has been the plaintiffs' reward? It is now admitted that, as the Court of Wards accounts show, the total value of Saleem's share of his father's estate is Rs. 88,753 of which three-sixteenths is Rs. 16,641. So that the plaintiffs have got a poor return for their venture if indeed they have not actually lost money by it. The trial Judge on a review of these matters held that the agreement sued on was neither unlawful nor opposed to public policy and their Lordships agree. The learned Judges of the High Court based a contrary opinion mainly upon the statement of Alop Parshad that he had seen the properties in Delhi which were mentioned in the agreement, and could approximately assess the value of those outside the city; and that he estimated the value of them all, including the jagirs, at about eight lacs of rupees. Mr. Modad Ali, the Court of Wards' manager, deposed: "The value of the property was fixed by the plaintiff (i. e. Saleem) as ten lacs in which he claimed his own share, but the value of the whole property in fact was about three lacs." The learned Judges of the High Court taking three sixteenths of eight lacs as Rs. 1,50,000 say that by the agreement in suit Saleem "agreed to give up property worth a lac and fifty thousand rupees for a sum of ten or twelve thousand rupees." This, their Lordships think, is to mistake the business meaning of the transaction. Though the Court of Wards was not minded to accept Saleem as Souriya's legitimate son, he had, and was thought by his lawyer and by the plaintiffs to have, a good chance of establishing his legitimacy. Even so, he had certain difficulties to overcome, e. g., as regards the alleged will of Souriya. But beyond that lay a great difficulty—that of proving a custom, in derogation of the rules of Muhammadan succession, whereby he could succeed to the whole estate. On this point he would indeed appear to have had little chance of success. To speak of the plaintiffs as though they were having three-sixteenths of eight lacs handed to them for ten or twelve thousand rupees is therefore a serious mistake. But in truth the figure of eight lacs refers in part to property which was not heritable at all, and takes no account of any mortgages or charges, still less of any question as to debts left by Souriya. The shrinkage in the value of Saleem's inheritance to the figure of Rs. 88,753 may be due in part to a fall in values not expected in October, 1920; but even that is not a contingency too remote to be taken into account by business men striking a bargain for the finance of a suit to recover immovable property. The High Court's conclusion appears to have been influenced by the evidence that Saleem was given to drink and of weak intellect. This they regard as rendering it "probable that he was induced to enter into an unfair bargain." But there is no evidence that the agreement sued upon was entered into by him while under the influence of drink and much to show that he took a long time to consider it, consulted with his wife and his lawyer and fully understood it. The evidence that he was of weak intellect is very thin indeed, and Sir Abdur Rahman denied this though he admitted that Saleem was occasionally intoxicated. The trial Judge had very correctly dealt with the evidence upon this aspect of the case and had found against the contentions of the defendants, which the High Court appear to have accepted on the ground that they were "highly probable." The fairness of the agreement of October 2, 1920, must be considered independently of unproved suggestions that it may have been improperly obtained.

Champeritous transactions are in their essence speculative and the fairness or otherwise of a particular bargain is almost always open to some debate. Saleem was a poor man with a reasonable, and as it turned out, a just claim. He was put by the Court of Wards in the position of having to undertake expensive litigation. He was well justified in his own interest in resorting for finance to persons willing to take a risk; and the plaintiffs prima facie justified in helping him to his rights upon terms that they would share in his good fortune if he succeeded and lose their money if he failed. Not only is there no proof to support the suggestion that the agreement of October 2, 1920, was obtained by unfair means or was not fully considered by Saleem and freely accepted by him, but in the events which have happened it appears that, after taking all risks of the suit being unsuccessful, the plaintiffs notwithstanding that it succeeded are likely—to put it no higher—to gain little or nothing by the transaction. Had the suit succeeded in all respects, the plaintiffs' reward would doubtless have been high but Saleem would have become a rich man retaining thirteen annas in the rupee. In applying the principle that "a fair agreement to supply funds to carry on a suit in consideration of having a share in the property, if recovered, ought not to be regarded as being, per se, opposed to public policy." Ram Coomarr Coondoo v. Chunder Canto Mookerjee (1)], it is essential to have regard not merely to the value of the property claimed but to the commercial value of the claim. This has to be estimated by the parties in advance of the result; and where they have weighed the probabilities in a manner which has not operated unfairly, it is more reasonable to regard this as confirming their shrewd estimate of the chances, than to condemn the agreement outright as unfair, by reason only of the possibility that a great gain to the claimant would have had to be shared with the financier. Though it is clearly not conclusive, the proportion to be retained by the claimant is an important matter to be considered when judging of the fairness of a bargain made at a time when the result of the litigation is problematical. The uncertainties of litigation are proverbial; and if the financier must needs risk losing his money, he may well be allowed some chance of exceptional advantage. Their Lordships agree with the trial Judge in thinking that the agreement of October 2, 1920, is valid and binding.

The order to be made on this appeal should, in their Lordships' opinion, direct that the appeal be allowed, and the decree of the High Court dated March 18, 1937, set aside; declare that the agreement dated October 2, 1920, should be specifically performed; that the defendants should be permitted to elect whether to have a valuation of such of the properties mentioned in the said agreement as were recovered by Saleem Mahomed Shah in Suit No. 235/127 of 1920-22 in the Court of the Senior Subordinate Judge at Delhi and to pay three-sixteenths of such value to the plaintiffs, or to have a partition thereof; that the present suit should be remanded to the trial Court for further consideration in accordance with these directions and such other directions in that behalf as the High Court may think fit to give, having regard to the fact that some of the said properties are under management by the Court of Wards. Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly. The defendants must pay the plaintiffs' costs in the trial Court and in the High Court as also the appellant's costs of this appeal.

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY

Criminal trial—Evidence—Riot—Riot as result of party faction in village—Cause of trouble should be ascertained—Riot alleged as result of threats by accused to prevent complainant's servant from working for him—Threats, proof of—Hearsay evidence of complainant as to what his servant told him regarding threats—Admissibility of—Story of unjustified attack not supported by unambiguous and unimpeachable evidence—Value of.

In a case of riot which is the result of a party faction in a village where the evidence on either side is liable to be prejudiced, it is necessarily of importance to ascertain the cause of the trouble [p. 595, col. 1.]

Where the prosecution allege that the riot was the result of the threats and attempts of the accused to prevent the servant of a complainant from working for his employer, the only way the prosecution can prove these threats is by the evidence of some one who heard them uttered. The hearsay evidence of the complainant with regard to what the servant told him that the accused persons had said, is inadmissible unless, possibly, it is impossible to secure the attendance of the servant. [p. 595, cols. 1 & 2.]

It is possible to believe a story of an apparently unjustified attack when it is supported by unambiguous and unimpeachable evidence. But when the evidence tendered is not of that description, it is unsafe to accept it unless it is supported by circumstances indicating its truth. Evidence of previous threat is evidence of such a nature. [p. 596, col. 2.]

Cr. R. P. against the order of the Sessions Judge, Bhagalpur, dated December 22, 1938.

Messrs. N. N. Sinha and S. S. Bose, for the Petitioners.

The Govt. Pleader, for the Opposite Party.

Order.—The petitioners have been convicted of rioting and assaults committed in prosecution of the common object of the rioters and sentenced to various terms of imprisonment. Their appeal against their convictions and sentences to the learned Sessions Judge was dismissed.

The case for the prosecution was that in village Bishunpur the Rajput inhabitants are divided into two hostile parties, one of them headed by the petitioner Dharam Narain Singh. The complainant Mahabir Singh formerly belonged to this party but has now gone over to the other side. According to the evidence of the complainant, the result of this was that attempts were made by the petitioners to prevent Babulal (his ploughman) from working for him and that the attempt to deter Babulal from doing so ultimately resulted in the riot which is the subject-matter of this prosecution. The story told by the complainant was that when he went to call his ploughman, Babulal, on the Sri Panchmi day, the latter refused to work alleging that the petitioners Dharam Narain Singh and Narsingh Singh had told him not to do so. He was ultimately persuaded to work on that day, however, but on the next day he again failed to turn up and when the complainant went to fetch him, Babulal is alleged to have said that he had been threatened by Dharam Narain Singh and Narsingh Singh if he worked for the complainant. Babulal is again said to have been persuaded by the complainant to resume work but on the way they were met by the petitioners and an altercation ensued during which Babulal was abused and the petitioners stated that they would not allow him to go with the complainant. The complainant took hold of Babulal's hand and insisted upon taking him when the petitioner, Jagat Narain Singh, gave an order in consequence of which the other petitioners assaulted Mahabir Singh and two other persons on the prosecution side. Babulal was not examined at the trial although his name appeared in the list of prosecution witnesses to be examined and summons was actually served on him. But for the trial Court believing that Babulal was to be examined, it is difficult to understand how the complainant was allowed to make statements as to what Babulal was alleged to have told him about the threats which had been made by Dharam Narain Singh and Narsingh Singh if he continued his work for the complainant. When it was found that the prosecution were not producing Babulal as a witness, the defence moved the Court to examine him as a Court witness. It appears from a note on the petition that was filed for that purpose that the prosecution objected on the ground that he had been won over by the defence. The Court nevertheless directed Babulal to be summoned as a Court witness, but the summons was not served. The report of the process-server was that he had gone to the house of Babulal and not finding him there had affixed the summons to the house. No further attempt was made to secure the attendance of Babulal. The Courts below have justified the conviction on the ground that apart from the evidence of Babulal there was sufficient evidence to sustain the conviction in spite of the fact that the trial Court found it necessary to reject the greater part of the evidence adduced by the prosecution on the ground that it was partisan evidence.

In a case of this description which is the result of a party faction in a village where the evidence on either side is liable to be prejudiced, it is necessarily of importance to ascertain the cause of the trouble. Now, the prosecution alleged that the cause of the riot under investigation was that in spite of the threats and attempts of the petitioners to prevent Babulal from working for his employer, the latter was actually about to do so when he was obstructed by the petitioners and Mahabir Singh and his companions were assaulted. The genesis of the riot therefore was the threat by the petitioners to Babulal and the success of the latter's employer in persuading him to ignore the threats. The only way the prosecution could prove these threats was by the evidence of some one who heard them uttered and there is no indication that anybody heard these threats except Babulal himself. He therefore was the only person competent to prove them. The hearsay evidence of the complainant with regard to what Babulal told him that the accused persons had said was inadmissible unless, possibly, it was impossible to secure the attendance of Babulal. The process-server's report does not indicate that it was impossible to secure Babulal's attendance. The mere fact that the latter was not at his home when the process-server visited, it is insufficient material from which to draw an inference that Babulal had permanently disappeared or that he was avoiding the service of summons. In my view, therefore, the complainant's evidence with regard to the threats said to have been held out by the petitioners prior to the occurrence was inadmissible.

The learned Govt. Pleader, however, referred to the evidence of the complainant with regard to what took place at the time of the occurrence. After stating what Babulal was alleged to have said to him with regard to the threats he (the complainant) went on to say that he persuaded Babulal to accompany him and they stated:

"When we had gone to the south of Laldhari's house, the accused surrounded me, Narsingh Singh and Dharam Narain Singh abused Babulal, I protested. There was altercation between us as they said that they would not allow Babulal to go and I insisted on taking him with me. I caught hold of Babulal and wanted to take him away forcibly. Jagat Singh ordered and Narsingh hurled his pharsa at me."

In this passage we have direct evidence that Narsingh and Dharam objected to Babulal going to the complainant on the day of the occurrence. But this evidence does not indicate whether Babulal was willing to go with the complainant or whether it was his desire to refrain from doing so. The fact that the complainant caught hold of Babulal to take him away forcibly, as he says, may indicate that Babulal was undecided what to do or it may, on the other hand, indicate that the complainant caught hold of him merely to prevent his being detained by the accused. In any case, the best evidence on that point would have been the evidence of Babulal himself and in a case like this where the evidence was mainly of a partisan nature, it is regrettable that a more serious attempt was not made to procure that evidence. Section 540, Criminal P. C., provides :

"Any Court may, at any stage of any enquiry, trial or other proceeding under this Code, summon any person as a witness, or examine any person in attendance, though not summoned as a witness, or re-call and re-examine any person already examined; and the Court shall summon and examine or re-call and re-examine any such person if his evidence appears to it essential to the just decision of the case."

It is manifestly therefore the duty of the Court to summon and examine any person whose evidence the Court considers essential to the just decision of the case. It cannot be denied that in the present proceedings the evidence of Babulal was essential and the Court itself recognized that by directing summons to be issued to him, the Court should have been vigilant to satisfy itself that a real attempt was made to serve the summons on Babulal or to take further steps to secure his attendance. Its omission to do so has resulted in the admission of inadmissible evidence and the absence from the record of the best possible evidence of Babulal's attitude when the petitioners endeavoured to detain him from accompanying his employer. The explanation which the Magistrate has given to this Court is extremely unsatisfactory. It is as follows:

"On March 23, 1935, the accused filed a petition that Babulal should be examined as a Court witness which was allowed and summonses were issued against him but he could not be found. Thereafter the defence did not apply for enforcing his attendance."

It was not on March 23, but on May 23, that the accused filed a petition for the examination of Babulal. There is no order in the order-sheet either on March 23, or on May 23, or on any other date to indicate that this petition was filed or what the Court's order was with regard to it or why the Court did not take further steps to secure his attendance. All that can be found in the record is the order on the petition itself that Babulal should be summoned as a Court witness and the process-server's report on the back of the summons which I have already referred to above. That report so far from showing that Babulal could not be found merely showed that no attempt was made to find him. The Magistrate's remark that the defence did not apply for enforcing his attendance is entirely beside the point. It was the duty of the Court to secure the attendance of this important witness. The Magistrate goes on to say that

"Babulal's evidence could at best have been partisan evidence. Reliance has been placed for proof of the common object on very much superior evidence."

What is meant by this ambiguous statement I am unable to understand. If the Magistrate meant that Babulal would have deposed for the prosecution regardless of the true facts that idea is negated by the prosecution's attitude towards him. As I have already stated, when the accused applied for Babulal to be examined the prosecution stated that he had been gained over by the defence. If, however, the Magistrate meant that Babulal would have deposed in favour of the defence regardless of the truth, it seems difficult to believe that the petitioners had behaved towards Babulal in the manner alleged by the prosecution, namely that they at first threatened him if he continued working for his employer and then forcibly attempted to prevent him from doing so. In the circumstances I am far from satisfied with the manner in which the trial was conducted and in the absence of the evidence of Babulal do not feel justified in accepting the view taken by the Courts below that there is sufficient reliable evidence to sustain the convictions. Without evidence as to the preceding threat, the bald prosecution case is that for no apparent reason the petitioners suddenly appeared and forcibly attempted to prevent Babulal from accompanying his employer. It is possible to believe a story of an apparently unjustified attack when it is supported by unambiguous and unimpeachable evidence. But when the evidence tendered is not of that description, it is unsafe to accept it unless it is supported by circumstances indicating its truth. Evidence of previous threat is evidence of such a nature. It is missing in the present case. The result is that the Rule is made absolute and the petitioners are acquitted and their conviction and sentences are set aside.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), ss. 100 (as amended by s. 50 of Act XX of 1929), ss. 5, 2 (d)—S. 50 of Amending Act is retrospective—"Transfer" in s. 100, if includes auction sale or auction-purchasers.

The amendment of s. 100, T. P. Act in s. 50 of Act X of 1929 is in a section which is not mentioned by s. 63 of that Act as not retrospective and therefore s. 50 of the Amending Act which amended s. 100, T. P. Act is retrospective.

The word "transfer" in s. 100 as amended must be read as defined in s. 5. This definition cannot include an auction-purchaser as he is not a person to whom the judgment-debtor has conveyed his property. Section 100, as amended, does not therefore refer to auction sales or auction-purchasers. Therefore an auction-purchaser is not protected by s. 100.

Ex. S. A. from the decision of the District Judge, Aligarh, dated December 10, 1936.

Mr. B. Malik, for the Appellant.

Bennet, J.—This is an execution second appeal brought by R. B. Rai Indra Narain who objected to the execution of a decree by the decree-holder Mohammad Ismail and the objection was dismissed by the execution Court and that order was confirmed by the lower Appellate Court. The facts are that on June 12, 1913, there was a compromise decree granted to the respondent Mohammad Ismail by which he was to get Rs. 10 per mensem from his relatives and this sum was to be a charge on the property. Mohammad Ismail several times put his decree in execution and recovered his maintenance allowance. On May 20, 1933, the appellant Indra Narain purchased this property at an auction sale on a decree against the owners Irshad Ali and Masum Ali who were apparently the persons liable under the decree of Mohammad Ismail or their descendants. The objection is that the auction-purchaser had no knowledge of the charge and that he was a bona fide purchaser for value. Learned Counsel for the auction-purchaser-appellant claims that his client is protected by the amendment of the T. P. Act, s. 100, which was made by s. 50 of the Amending Act (Act XX of 1929). This section deals with charges and the amendment provides:

"save as otherwise expressly provided by any law for the time being in force no charge shall be enforced against any property in the hands of a person to whom such property has been transferred for consideration and without notice of the charge."

The execution Court wrongly held that this amendment did not have retrospective effect but the amendment in s. 50 of Act XX of 1929 is in a section which is not mentioned by s. 63 of that Act as not retrospective and therefore s. 50 is retrospective.

The lower Appellate Court pointed out that the execution Court was wrong in this respect but the lower Appellate Court considered that the rule of lis pendens laid down in s. 52, T. P. Act, would apply against the appellant. It is difficult to see exactly what the lower Appellate Court meant as the decree on which Mohammad Ismail relies was of June 12, 1913, and the matter has now arisen long subsequent to that decree, so there is no question of a transfer while litigation was pending. We cannot therefore justify the order of the lower Court on the ground set forth by that Court. But it seems to us that the appellant is incorrect in relying on s. 100 as amended. The appellant is an auction-purchaser and the amendment is in regard to "any property in the hands of a person to whom such property has been transferred for consideration." Now it appears to us that the word "transfer" must be read as defined in s. 5. Section 5 states: "In the following sections 'Transfer of Property' means an Act by which a living person conveys property....." This definition cannot include an auction-purchaser as he is not a person to whom the judgment-debtor has conveyed his property. An auction-purchaser is a person who has acquired the right, title and interests of the judgment-debtor by the order of the Court. In s. 2, sub-s. (d), it is stated:

"But nothing herein contained shall be deemed to affect (d) save as provided by s. 57 and Chap. IV of this Act any transfer by operation of law or by or in execution of a decree or order of a Court of competent jurisdiction."

When we turn to s. 57, we find that there is a definite mention of property sold in execution of a decree and the word "transfer" is not used. In Chap. IV no doubt s. 100 is one of the sections but it does not refer to auction sales. There were certain sections, Nos. 85 to 90, in the original Chap. IV which contained provisions for auction sale. Doubtless the reference in s. 2 (d), T. P. Act, to Chap. IV is to these particular provisions in s. 85 to s. 90. As s. 2 (d) clearly provides that nothing in the Act shall apply to any transfer in execution of a decree other than so provided in

Chap. IV it is clear that s. 100 as amended does not refer to auction sales or auction-purchasers. No ruling has been produced by learned Counsel for the appellant to support his claim that his client was protected by s. 100 as amended. The rulings cited are all previous to the amendment of s. 100 and it is not necessary to consider them. For these reasons, we dismiss this second appeal. No costs are granted as no one appears for the other side in this appeal.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 499, 514, 537, 439—Bail—Surety—Conditions on which accused was released not forming part of bail bond—Surety, however, signing order-sheet containing terms—Whether form part of bond—Procedure under s. 514 not followed—Facts not showing failure of justice—Interference in revision.

Where although the conditions imposed on the accused before releasing him on bail do not form part of the bail bond executed by the surety, yet if the surety has signed the order-sheet of the Magistrate against the part which contains the undertaking on which he accepted the bail bonds, the order-sheet with the surety's signatures itself becomes a part of the contract between the parties.

Where the Magistrate has failed to follow the procedure under s. 514, Criminal P. O., in holding the surety to his bond without calling upon him to show cause why the penalty should not be paid, although such an omission is not justifiable, yet if the facts show that such an omission has not occasioned any failure of justice it is sufficient to prevent interference in revision.

Cr. R. against an order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Monghyr, dated July 19, 1939.

Mr. G. P. Shahi, for the Petitioners.

The Assistant Govt. Advocate, for the Crown.

Judgment.—The petitioners stood bail for certain persons accused of offences under ss. 143 and 447 of the I. P. O. Before accepting the bail bonds into which they entered, the learned Magistrate who took the bonds made it clear that the release of the accused persons was to be conditional. The Court Sub-Inspector had prayed that the bailors' fitness might be enquired into, and the Magistrate did not consider this necessary, especially when the bailors were substantial people. As regards the conditional release of the accused persons he added.

"The bailors undertake before me orally that they would keep the accused in Monghyr so that they may neither re-join the Satyagraha at Lagar nor do they instigate others to join or carry on the movement there. I accept their undertaking on the distinct understanding that if any report is received showing contravention of this undertaking, I will at once cancel the bail and forfeit the bail amount. On this condition I accept the bail bond and order the release of the three accused on bail at once."

This was a part of the order passed by the Magistrate on July 7, 1939, and was signed in the margin by the bailors, the petitioners before me. On the 19th of the same month the Magistrate appears to have received a report from the Police saying that two of the accused persons had been to Gogri and had made arrangements for volunteers to be sent in batches to Lagar to offer Satyagraha.

He thus found that the undertaking given by the bailors had been violated "as the accused themselves say that they had gone to Gogri", and he cancelled the bail bonds of those two accused persons and also forfeited the bail amount of Rs. 200 of the bailors. He further directed the issue of distress warrants at once for realization of the amounts.

On July 24, the petitioners applied to the Magistrate and prayed for being exempted "from the liability of paying penalty". The application was apparently rested on the ground that the petitioners "executed the bail bond in which there was nothing regarding the accused persons not going anywhere, that is, in ordinary course of business the bail bond had been executed", though in the next paragraph of the applicant it was said "of course in the order-sheet mention of the fact was made that the accused persons should 'not go to Lagar and take any part, etc.'" In the next paragraph it was stated that it appeared that Suresh Chandra Misra (one of the accused persons) went to Bihpur and thence to Gogri and met the Inspector of Police who asked him to go back to Monghyr and he at once came to Monghyr and surrendered before the Court and admitted his mistakes in leaving Monghyr on some economical grounds. The learned Magistrate refused the application of the petitioners and noted that "the conditions were explained to the bailors in Court and the latter put in their signatures in the order-sheet."

Against the dismissal of the petitioners' application of July 24, to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, an appeal was preferred to the District Magistrate. The argument in the appeal appears to have been that the bail bonds did not contain the conditions imposed by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, and that, therefore, the bail could not be forfeited for breach of those conditions. The learned District Magistrate dismissed this as a "merely technical argument to wriggle out of the situation". He dismissed the appeal.

It has been contended by Mr. Shahi, who appears for the petitioners, that the procedure followed by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, in holding the petitioners to their bond was wrong and that the petitioners should have been heard before the order of forfeiture was passed. This contention must clearly be accepted.

The learned Advocate has further contended that the conditions which I have quoted from the order-sheet of the Magistrate form no part of the contract of bail and that the liability of the petitioners must be determined on the terms of the bail bonds themselves. But if it be a fact that the petitioners signed the order-sheet of the Magistrate against the part which contains the undertaking on which he accepted the bail bonds, the 'order-sheet with the petitioners' signatures itself becomes a part of the contract between the parties. If a contract is required to be in writing, it is not the law that it must be contained in one piece of writing alone and the full terms of contracts in writing have often to be gathered from a series of letters passing between the parties put together. I am, therefore, unable to accept the petitioner's contention that their liability is confined to the bail bonds alone, and I hold that bail was accepted, as the Magistrate put it in his order of July 7, "on the distinct understanding that if any report is received showing contravention of this undertaking I will at once cancel the bail and forfeit the bail amount."

This is a case where the Magistrate concerned undoubtedly failed to follow the appropriate procedure under s. 514 in that he held the petitioners to their bonds without calling upon them to show cause why the penalty should not be paid. But it is also a case where there is no real dispute about the facts. In fact, the only point mooted below was that the "distinct understanding" was no part of the contract of bail, and this, as I have already held, is quite untenable. It was suggested by Mr Shahi that there is no proof that the signatures against the Magistrate's order of July 7, which purport to be the signatures of the petitioners were in fact made by them. But the answer to this is furnished by what the Magistrate has said in his order of July 31, on the petitioners' application of the 24th of that month and by the failure of the petitioners to challenge it in appeal. There is also no question that the Magistrate did receive a report on July 19, regarding the doings of at least one of the accused persons for whom the petitioners had stood bail, nor indeed about the doings of that accused contrary to the conditions imposed by the Magistrate before agreeing to accept bail.

Section 537 of the Criminal P. O. provides (to quote those portions which are now material) that "no order passed by a Court of competent jurisdiction shall be reversed or altered on revision on account of any error, omission or irregularity in any enquiry or other proceedings under this Code unless such error, omission, irregularity has occasioned a failure of justice."

It seems to me quite clear that this is sufficient in the circumstances of this case to prevent interference in revision, though it must not be understood that this is in any sense an approval of the carelessness shown by the Magistrate in his proceeding under s. 514.

The application is dismissed.

Tort—Negligence—What is—Ordinary, prudent and reasonable man is not required to drive on assumption that he shall meet obstruction on highway—Issue whether driver's negligence was cause of accident, is one of fact.

Negligence is the omission to do something which a reasonable man, guided upon those considerations which ordinarily regulate the conduct of human affairs, would do or doing something which a prudent and reasonable man would not do. The ordinary, "prudent and reasonable man is not required to drive on the assumption that he will meet with improper obstructions on the highway. Merely because the ordinary man knows that at times others unlawfully place obstacles on the highway, drive at a furious pace, turn across the road without giving the recognized sign, he is not to be penalized, when he is behaving as a reasonable and prudent man would [p. 602, col. 1.]

The question of contributory negligence is one of fact.

The issue whether the driver's negligence was the cause of the accident can be treated as a question of fact. Tart v. G. W. Chitty & Co. (1), and Baker v. R. Longhurst & Sons Ltd. (2), not followed. Tidy v. Battman (4), and Griffiths v. East & West India Dock Co. (5), relied on.

S. A. from the decree of the Additional District Judge, Lahore, dated March 31, 1938.

Mr. J. G. Sethi and Diwan Mehr Chand, for the Appellant.

Mr. Ishwar Das Khanna, for the Respondent.

Judgment.— This is a second appeal from the judgment of the Additional District Judge, Lahore, upholding the judgment of the trial Judge in favour of the plaintiff except on the amount of damages. The plaintiff sued the defendant for damages for the defendant's negligence in leaving a steam-roller on the Mall, Lahore, unlighted, with which the plaintiff's car collided. The defendant pleaded that the driver of the car was exclusively to blame for the accident by reason of his rash and negligent driving, that there was no obstruction caused by the steam-roller, that the steam-roller was lighted and that a chaukidar was present: admitting the presence of the steam-roller on the left-hand side of the roadway, the defendant pleaded further, that he did all in his power to warn approaching traffic. Amongst the issues framed were the following:

(1) Whether there was no chaukidar and proper lights on the steam-roller on the highway and this led to the collision.

(2) Whether the collision was due to the negligence and rash driving of the person driving the car.

The learned trial Judge found on the first of these issues that the steam-roller was on the left side of the road midway between two lamp posts, where the light was dim, and under a pipal tree. He refused to accept the evidence for the defendant that after a break-down the steam-roller had been moved to the extreme left of the roadway. He found also that there was no chaukidar, and no light on the steam-roller. He found also that the impact took place on account of the negligence of the defendant and his servant. He did not discuss the second of the issues set out above separately; he referred to his discussion on Issue No. 1. There was no issue on the question of contributory negligence as such: such an issue did not arise on the pleadings: the defendant's case throughout both in his pleadings and evidence was that on his part there had been no negligence. The notice of appeal to the District Judge re-asserts the same position which is summed up in para. 5:

"It is sufficiently proved that there was a chaukidar and a proper light on the spot and that the alleged impact was due to the gross negligence and carelessness and rash driving on the part of the driver of the car."

The two questions argued before the learned District Judge were whether the damage to the plaintiff's car was the result of the negligence of the defendant's servant and what damage had been suffered. The learned District Judge accepted Mr. Wilson's evidence. Mr. Wilson who was driving a car in the opposite direction saw the accident. Earlier he had driven in the other direction and himself narrowly escaped driving into the steam-roller. His evidence shows that the steam-roller in such a position was in the nature of a trap. There is no evidence to show that the speed of the car was excessive. The main ground of appeal to this Court is stated thus:

"When the learned District Judge held that it may be that the sidelights of Mr. Wilson's car were contributing to prevent the driver from seeing the steam-roller, he ought not to have held that the damage to the plaintiff's car was due to the negligence of the servant of the defendant."

It is clear that such a finding would not relieve the defendant of liability for his negligence, if his negligence caused the accident and there was no contributory negligence on the part of the driver. In the arguments before me, the learned Counsel for the defendant introduced a new line of argument altogether. He was confined to questions of law, and with a finding of fact against him on the question of negligence and no finding of contributory negligence in his favour, he was compelled to argue that on the plaintiff's case, it was not open to the Judge to find for the plaintiff, i. e., that if the case had been tried by a jury, the question of contributory negligence would not have been left to the jury. The argument was based on two English cases, Tart v. G. W. Chitty & Co. (1) and Baker v. R. Longhurst & Sons, Ltd. (2) In both these cases the negligence of the defendants consisted in having vehicles on the road without rear lights; in the former case the vehicle was a steam-lorry and in the latter a horse and cart; in both cases the plaintiffs riding motor-bicycles, rode into the unlighted vehicle from behind. The Appellate Courts held in both cases that the trial Courts were bound to find the plaintiffs guilty of contributory negligence. In the second case Scrutton, L. J. said:

"Either he (the plaintiff) was going at a pace at which he could not stop within the limits of his vision, or, if he could stop within the limits of his vision, he was not looking out. In either event he was guilty of negligence."

In Tart v. G. W. Chitty & Co. (1), Swift, J. said:

"Here, to my mind, it is perfectly clear, however wrongly and improperly the defendants acted in putting their steam lorry in the place where it was, the plaintiff might by the exercise of ordinary care have avoided the collision, and he must therefore have failed to exercise ordinary care, and, as a matter of law, was guilty of negligence and such negligence should have been found as a matter of law on those facts by the County Court Judge."

Now it has never, so far as I am aware, been suggested that the issue of negligence is a question of law: but the cases cited above make it possible, if the facts are disclosed in the plaintiff's case, to treat the question of contributory negligence as one of law. The most obvious criticism of this view is that at the same time the defendant might be relying on the same facts as evidence of negligence on the part of the plaintiff, in England in a counter-claim, in the Punjab in a suit consolidated with the original suit and the issue whether the plaintiff was guilty of negligence would have to be treated as a question of fact. The leading authority on the question of contributory negligence is Dublin, Wicklow and Wexford Railway Co. v. Slattery (3). Four of the majority of five Lords of appeal expressed themselves clearly on this point: Lord O'Hagan said:

"The questions raised at the trial were questions of fact only. first whether the defendants had been guilty of negligence and secondly, whether contributory negligence could be ascribed properly to the unfortunate person, who lost his life."

Lord Hatherley was the member of the Court on whose judgment, it may be said the proposition that the issue of contributory negligence might, in certain circumstances, be treated as a question of law, is based. His view is put shortly in the following passage:

"If such contributory negligence be admitted by the plaintiff or be proved by the plaintiff's witnesses while establishing negligence against the defendants, I do not think there is anything left for the jury to decide, there being no contest of fact."

Lord Hatherley's dictum has been discussed and applied in several later cases, but until the decisions of 1933 were pronounced, it had not been applied in any case in which "the relation of cause and effect between the plaintiff's negligence and the injuries complained of was not clear." In the most recent decision of the Court of Appeal in England, Tidy v. Battman (4), the principle enunciated in Baker v. E. Longhurst & Sons, Ltd. (2) and Tart v. G. W. Chitty & Co. (1), was not accepted by the Court, which consisted of Lord Hewart, Lord Wright and Lord Justice Slesser. In very short judgments the three learned Judges, dealing with facts stronger in the defendant's favour, if anything, than those in Baker v. E. Longhurst & Sons, Ltd. (2), laid down very emphatically that the issue of contributory negligence was a question of fact. It may be that, notwithstanding the general rule, there are cases where the relation of cause and effect is so clear that the Court might hold on the plaintiff's evidence that there was no question for the jury: as Lord Esher said in Griffiths v. East and West India Dock Co. (5):

"The question of contributory negligence ought never to be withdrawn from the consideration of a jury except in a very extreme case but, when the evidence was so strong that it would be wholly unreasonable for the jury to find otherwise than that the plaintiff had been guilty of contributory negligence, then it was the duty of the Court to stop the case."

In ascertaining whether in a particular case "it is wholly unreasonable to find otherwise," it is essential to remember what is the test of negligence and, so far as I can see, it is because Scrutton, L. J.'s dictum which seems so simple and logical, ignores the test, that it fails to be useful. In the first place, whether an act is negligent or not depends on all the surrounding circumstances the dictum seems to me to ignore the surrounding circumstances in Evans v. Downer & Co., Ltd., which is summarized in a note to the report in Baker v. E. Longhurst & Sons, Ltd. (2), it was said: "In the peculiar circumstances of this case, there was just enough evidence to support the jury's verdict;" curiously enough the peculiar circumstances in that case were not unlike the circumstances of the present case—the vision of the driver was impeded by the approaching lights of a third vehicle. The chief objection to the dictum is that it sets up perfection on the part of the driver as the standard: the law does not require so high a standard of conduct. "Negligence," said Baron Alderson in Blyth v. Birmingham Water Works Co. (6).

"is the omission to do something which a reasonable man, guided upon those considerations which ordinarily regulate the conduct of human affairs, would do or doing sometimes which a prudent and reasonable man would not do"

The ordinary prudent and reasonable man is not required to drive on the assumption that he will meet with improper obstructions on the highway: because the ordinary man knows that at times others unlawfully place obstacles on the highway, drive at a furious pace, turn across the road without giving the recognised sign, is he to be penalized, though he is behaving as a reasonable and prudent man would? An affirmative answer would encourage the real law-breaker.

I may conclude this discussion by a brief reference to an American case. In some of the American Courts [e.g., see Stone v. Muller (7).] the doctrine of Scrutton, L. J. is applied; the Rule is there called the "drive within radius of your lights rule." Other Courts in America hold that the question to be determined in such cases as the present is whether the driver should have seen the obstruction. In the judgment in Morehouse v. City of Everett (8), the following passage occurs:

"The rule contended for is, in our opinion, entirely too broad, and if put in effect, would have very serious and unjust results. It loses sight of the fact that one driving at night has at least some right to assume that the road ahead of him is safe for travel, unless dangers therein are indicated by the presence of red lights; it does not take into consideration that visibility is different in different atmospheres;"

and though in that case the driver had driven his car into a very large obstruction, a wooden dwelling-house which occupied practically the whole breadth of the roadway, the Court held that the driver was not guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law and that the question had been properly left to the jury. I have no doubt that, in the case now before me, the issue whether the driver's negligence was the cause of the accident was properly treated as a question of fact. There was, in my opinion, ample evidence to support the finding that the driver was not guilty of contributory negligence, and, indeed if the question were open to me for decision, I should so find. No attempt was made to show that the speed of the car was excessive and owing to the position on the road in which the steam-roller was left, it created a trap for the driver. I find no reason for interfering with the amount of damages awarded. Again, I have the power to interfere only, if a question of law is involved. The evidence of the amount of damage is sufficient to support the findings. I dismiss the appeal with costs.

O. P. Land Revenue Act (XVIII of 1881), ss. 33, 152—Jurisdiction of Civil Court—Lambardar co-sharer paying land revenue on behalf of co-sharers as zabti bhogra—Suit to recover such amount from co-sharers—Civil Court, if can entertain—Land tenure—Zabti bhogra—Assessment of—If can be challenged in civil suit.

For a case to come under cl. (10) of s. 152, O. P. Land Revenue Act, the matter complained of and which gives rise to the suit must actually be connected with or arise out of an actual collection or some process for the recovery of arrears of revenue. [p 604, col 1.]

Where a lambardar co-sharer pays the whole of the revenue and brings a suit against other co-sharers to recover the amount paid by him on their behalf as zabti bhogra, the cause of action does not arise out of the collection or anything connected with the collection but rather from a payment made to the defendants' use and in view of s. 33 which presupposes that the Civil Courts have jurisdiction to hear suits by lambardars for arrears of revenue payable through them by the proprietors whom they represent, such a suit does not fall within s. 152 (b) (10). Such a claim is one under s. 69, Contract Act, and the Civil Court has jurisdiction to entertain it.

Once the assessment is made and left unchallenged, it becomes binding upon the co-sharers' gaontias. When no steps are taken to contest the assessment made at the time of the settlement, it cannot be challenged in a civil suit and a partition among the co-sharer gaontias does not put an end to the liability for zabti bhogra. Mr. P. Misra, for the Appellant.

Messrs. S. C. Mazumdar and G. C. Das, for the Respondents.

Harries, C. J.—This is a Letters Patent Appeal from a decision of Mohammad Noor, J. in second appeal. The plaintiff brought the suit out of which this appeal arises against his co-sharer gaontias for a sum said to be due as arrears of zabti bhogra. The plaintiff was a co-sharer gaontia and lambardar of village Kharmunda, whereas the defendants were his co-sharer gaontias. In Govt. khalsa villages in the Sambalpur District, there are gaontias who are village managers having proprietary rights in their homefarm lands. These lands are called the gaontia's bhogra or sir lands. The co-sharer gaontias are allowed 25 per cent. of the collections of the village as payment for their duties as managers of the village, and they are bound to make over the balance of the collections through the lambardar to the Govt. The bhogra lands of each gaontia are assessed to revenue, and if the revenue payable on a particular gaontia's bhogra lands is equal to that particular gaontia's share in the 25 per cent. of the total village collections, then the gaontia has to pay over the whole of the collections made to the lambardar. If the assessment on the bhogra lands is more than that particular gaontia's share in the 25 per cent. of the collections, the gaontia has to pay the lambardar not only the whole of the collections made but the difference between the amount assessed on his bhogra lands and his share of the 25 per cent. of the total village collections. On the other hand, if the assessment on the bhogra lands is less than his share of the 25 per cent. of the village collections, the gaontia is entitled to deduct from the collections made the difference between his share of the 25 per cent. of the village collections and the assessment on his bhogra lands. He, of course, has to pay the balance over to the lambardar. In cases where the assessment on the bhogra lands is greater than the gaontia's share of the 25 per cent. of the total collections, the difference is known as zabti bhogra. Where the gaontia is entitled to keep back money out of his collections to make up the difference between his share in 25 per cent. of the collections and the assessment on his bhogra lands, the amount which he is entitled to keep back is known as purskar.

In the present case the defendant's share in the village was five annas four pies, and in lieu of this share, they were admittedly holding a hamlet of the village Kharmunda known as Darangapali. Zabti bhogra payable by the defendants was assessed at Rs. 52 per annum. According to the plaintiff's case, he as lambardar had paid the whole of the revenue due from the gaontias to the Govt. and, according to him, the defendants had refused to pay the amount claimed in this suit as zabti bhogra. The learned Munsif who heard the case at first instance, dismissed the plaintiff's claim for zabti bhogra but on appeal this decree was reserved, and the plaintiff's claim decreed. In second appeal Mohammad Noor, J. affirmed the decree of the lower Apoellate Court and dismissed the appeal. It has been argued before us that the amount of zabti bhogra alleged to be payable by the defendants was not satisfactorily proved in this case. The lower Courts relied upon a document (Ex. 1) which is a table showing the zabti and puraskar lands of village Kharmunda. It is said that this document is not part of the Record of Rights, and accordingly it does not prove the amount payable by the defendants as zabti bhogra. This point does not appear to have been made in any previous hearing, and from a perusal of the judgment of the learned Munsif and of the learned Subordinate Judge, it is clear that the defendants never challenged the fact that zabti bhogra at the rate of Rs. 52 per annum was assessed on the defendants' lands. The defendants contended that they had never paid this sum and that the assessment was excessive, but that those contentions are very different from the contention now put forward, namely that the amount assessed on these lands was never proved. It is clear that in the Courts below it was admitted that the assessment amounted to Rs. 52 per annum, and that what was challenged was the legality of the assessment.

In my judgment, it is not open to the defendants to challenge the validity of the assessment of zabti bhogra in the Civil Court. Such was assessed at the time of settlement and steps should then have been taken to contest the assessment. Once the assessment was made and left unchallenged, it became binding upon the defendants, and they cannot in a suit, such as the present one, challenge the validity of that assessment. The defendants also alleged that this village had been partitioned in the year 1885 and that this partition put an end to any liability which may have existed for the payment of zabti bhogra. I entirely fail to appreciate how a partition could put an end to such a liability; in any event the zabti bhogra of Rs. 52 per annum was assessed on the defendants' bhogra lands as late as the year 1927, that is 42 years after the partition. In those circumstances, it cannot possibly be said that the partition has in any way affected the defendants' liability to pay zabti bhogra. It was contended before Mohammad Noor, J., and has again been contended before us that the Civil Courts had no jurisdiction to entertain this suit. Reliance is placed on s. 152 (b) (10), C. P. Land Revenue Act, (Act XVIII of 1881). The relevant portion of that section is in these terms :

"Except as otherwise hereinbefore provided, (a) no Civil Court shall entertain any suit instituted, or application made, to obtain a decision or order on any matter which the Governor-General in Council the Chief Commissioner or a Revenue or a Settlement Officer is, by this Act, empowered to determine or dispose of; and in particular (b) no Civil Court shall exercise jurisdiction over any of the following matter:—

(10) claims connected with, or arising out of the collection of revenue, or any process enforced on account of an arrear of revenue, or on account of any sum which is under this or any other Act realizable as revenue."

According to the appellants, this is a claim connected with or arising out of the collection of revenue and hence no Civil Court has jurisdiction to decide it. The claim, it is said, is a claim for zabti bhogra, that is a claim for a form of revenue. It must be remembered that in this case the plaintiff-respondent as lambardar had paid the whole of the revenue due, and this claim was for the amount which the defendants should have paid the plaintiff as zabti bhogra. The plaintiff had in fact paid this sum to the Govt. on the defendants' behalf, and in this suit he was claiming from the defendants money which he had paid to their use. The defendant-appellants have to concede that this claim is not a claim to recover an amount due as revenue, but they urge it is a claim connected with or arising out of the collection of revenue. Claims connected with or arising out of the collection of revenue must be claims which have arisen through actual collection. It is to be observed that cl. (10), deals not only with claims connected with or arising out of the collection of revenue but also with claims connected with or arising out of any process enforced on account of arrear of revenue, or on account of any sum which is under this or any other Act realizable as revenue. It appears to me that this clause deals with claims arising from actual collections or from the processes to enforce the realization of arrears of revenue or arrears of sums realizable as revenue. To come within this clause, the matter complained of and which gives rise to the suit must actually be connected with or arise out of an actual collection or some process for the recovery of arrears of revenue. The cause of action must be intimately connected with the collection or with the process for the recovery of revenue. In the present case this zabti bhogra was not collected by the lambardar from the defendants. The amount was actually paid by the lambardar to the Govt. though he had never received it from the defendants. The present suit is a suit to recover a sum which the plaintiff has paid on behalf of the defendants, and in my view the present claim is not a claim connected with or arising out of actual collection. In fact, it was the failure to collect the revenue before actual payment by the lambardar which gives rise to this suit. The cause of action does not arise out of the collection or anything connected with the collection but rather from a payment made to the defendants' use. It appears to me that s. 33, C. P. Land Revenue Act, makes it clear that a suit such as the one now before the Court does not fall within s. 152 (b) (10) of that Act. Section 33 provides that

"when any local area is under settlement, the Chief Commissioner may invest any Subordinate Settlement Officer with the powers of any of (the last five classes) of Courts described in s. 4 of (the Central Provinces Civil Courts Act, 1885), and the Chief Settlement Officer with the powers of a Court of a Deputy Commissioner described in the same Act, (s. 7), for the trial, in the first instance, of any of the following classes of suits instituted within such area:

(b) suits by lambardars for arrears of revenue payable through them by the proprietors whom they represent;"

This section gives Revenue Officers during a settlement powers to hear certain suits, which clearly would otherwise be heard by the Civil Courts. The section presupposes that the Civil Courts have jurisdiction to hear suits by lambardars for arrears of revenue payable through them by the proprietors whom they represent. It is to be observed that by reason of s. 4 (a) "proprietor" includes a gaontia of a Govt. village in the Sambalpur District. The defendants, who are gaontias in a Govt. village are, therefore, within the purview of s. 33, C. P. Land Revenue Act. After the settlement is completed, the powers given to the Settlement Officer to hear these claims is terminated; and s. 39 of the Act provides:

"When the settlement of any local area has been notified as completed, all the powers exercised by the Settlement Officers in such area shall cease, and all suits and applications pending before such officer shall be transferred to such of the Courts ordinarily having jurisdiction in such cases as the Commissioner of the Division directs, or, if there are no such Courts, shall be disposed of in such manner as the Chief Commissioner directs."

These sections clearly show that during the pendency of settlement operations claims otherwise cognizable by the Civil Courts may be dealt with by Settlement Officers but when the settlement has been completed, the powers of the Settlement Officers are terminated and all pending suits are transferred back to appropriate Civil Courts. Unless claims by a lambardar against co-sharers for arrears of revenue paid on their behalf are cognizable by the Civil Courts, then s. 33 and the following sections of the C. P. Land Revenue Act, are unintelligible. In my view the present claim is a claim under s. 69, Contract Act, and is not a claim connected with or arising out of the collection of revenue, and the Civil Courts had jurisdiction to entertain the claim. In my view the decision of Mohammad Noor, J. is right and should be affirmed. I would, therefore, dismiss this appeal with costs.

Easements Act (V of 1882), ss. 1, 4—Applicability to Burma—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 26—Tenant of one land, if can acquire for himself or on behalf of landlord right of way, as of right upon another land of his own—Easement—Rights of way—Ownership of two estates not co-extensive and equal in validity—Easement, if extinguished by unity of possession of dominant and servient tenements.

Although the Easements Act does not apply to Burma, the Court must have regard to that Act in considering the question relating to an easement. 160 Ind. Cas. 786 (1), relied on.

No doubt the possession of the tenant is the possession of the landlord, but a tenant of one land cannot acquire, either for himself or on behalf of his landlord, a right of way as of right upon another land of his own; that is a principle of the English Law repeated in s. 4, Easements Act. *Moahosoodun Dey v. The acquisition of a right of way is not extinguished, but only suspended, by unity of possession of the dominant and servient tenements where the ownership of the two estates is not co-extensive and equal in validity, the dominant tenement being held for a term of years only and the servient tenement in full right of ownership. 10 Ind. S. A. against the decree of the District Court, Mergui, in C. A. No. 9 of 1938.

Dr. Ba Han, for the Appellant.

Mr. Maung Aung Gyaw, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—The plaintiff-respondents, U Po Nyun and his wife, sued the defendant-appellant, Tan Sit Shan, for a declaration of a right of way and an injunction to restrain the defendant from obstructing it. They obtained a decree in the trial Court, which was upheld on appeal to the District Court. The facts of the case are that U Po Nyun and his father before him have owned the mill-site shown as B in the plan Ex. A for 60 or 70 years. This land was leased to one U Chein for 15 years. U Chein first erected a boat-building shed on it and 12 years later a mill, without obtaining a fresh lease. That mill was sold to Ba Swee Seng (Ban Shwe Sin) company, of which plaintiff No. 1 was one of the partners. That company was in possession of the mill for 26 or 27 years up to 1932, so the sale to them was in 1905 or 1906. U Chein came on the land 26 years before then, that is, in 1879 or 1880, and built the mill in 1891 or 1892, and he and then after his death his wife Daw Lu Ngon owned the mill for 14 years before she sold it to Ban Swee Seng Company in 1905 or 1906. The company went into liquidation in 1932, and another party in 1934 bought the mill buildings and they were dismantled and taken away. The defendant bought from Ban Swee Seng Company at the same auction in 1934 the land shown in the plan as A, over which the road in question, marked O D runs. Ban Swee Seng Company had bought this land from the original owners some three years after they had bought the mill buildings from Maung Chein, i. e. in 1908 or 1909. The defendant has built a substantial granary at the place marked by me as X in Ex. A, where the road O D debouches on the municipal road EF. Exhibit B, plan of 1901-2, shows that the road existed in its present width and state in that year. The evidence showed that U Chein was exercising a right of way over this road since he built the mill in 1891 or 1892 for some 14 years up to 1905 or 1906, and that Ban Swee Seng Company exercised a right of way over it after that, from 1905 or 1906 until it bought the land on which the road stood in 1908 or 1909, after which it continued to use the same road over its own land. In all 17 years user or at the most 18 years user as of right over another's land was proved.

Before U Chein's time there was admittedly a footpath of unknown width on the same site as this road. The plaintiffs claim a right of way over the whole length of the road for width of 18 feet. A right of way is not denied, but it is denied in this appeal that a right of way for carts over a width of 18 feet was acquired. The evidence, that of the plaintiff and his witness Za To (P. W. No. 2), goes to show that the road which led from the mill buildings to the municipal road was only used qua cart road after the mill was built. Both the plaintiff and U Za To say that the road was only made into a cart road and a bridge built over the creek when the mill was built. When there was a boatshed on the land, there was a footpath on the same alignment, but Za To makes it clear that it was then only a footpath, and it would seem that carts could not have used it before there was a bridge. A right of way is acquired under s. 26, Lim. Act, by enjoyment by any person claiming title thereto as an easement and as of right without interruption and for 20 years. Although the Easements Act does not apply to Burma, no doubt the Court must have regard to that Act in considering the question now under consideration: Daw Gyan v. U Maung Maung (1) at p. 752.

It is the law that the possession of the tenant is the possession of the landlord Gaford v. Moffat (2), but a tenant of one land cannot acquire, either for himself or on behalf of his landlord, a right of way as of right upon another land of his own; that is a principle of the English Law repeated in s. 4, Easements Act, which defines "easement" as a right which the owner or occupier of certain land possesses in respect of certain other land not his own; see Modhoosoodun Dey v. Bissonauth Dey (3) at pp. 365, 366 and Subba Rao v. Lakshmana Rao (4). No doubt the acquisition of a right of way was not extinguished but only suspended, by unity of possession of the dominant and servient tenements, for the ownership of the two estates was not co extensive and equal in validity, the dominant tenement being held for a term of years only, the servient tenement in full right of ownership, Tinkowri Pathak

v. Ram Gopal Pathak (5). But there is no evidence of user after the mill went into liquidation.

The learned District Judge said that although plaintiff No. 1 was a partner of the company he was always the owner of the land Ex. B, and used the road as such quite apart from the user of it by his tenant, the mill company; but it is clear from the evidence that the use of the road as a cart road was by the tenant mill company and its customers only. For these reasons it appears to me that 20 years uninterrupted user of the right of way claimed, i. e. of an 18 feet cart road, was not proved on behalf of the plaintiffs, but only 17 or at the most 18 years user was proved. This appeal must be successful and the plaintiff's suit dismissed with costs in this Court, Advocate's fee four gold mohurs. As, however, the defendant adduced what was undoubtedly shown to be false evidence on a point never taken in the written statement, that the company paid rent to the previous owner of the land Ex A before the company bought that land, the parties will pay their own costs in the two lower Courts.

Where during the pendency of a suit by a depositor against a Co-operative Bank to recover the amount of the deposit, a scheme of compromise under s. 24-A of the Bihar and Orissa Co-operative Societies Act is sanctioned by the Registrar of Co-operative Societies, the compromise is binding on the plaintiff depositor under s. 24-A (2) of that Act although he is not party to the compromise and a decree passed in the suit is only a security for the debt that is owing to the decree-holder and has the effect of establishing that debt as against the Bank and though the compromise is no bar to the passing of a decree, it is a clear bar to execution of the decree. The compromise bars execution, not by reason of any express provision in the Bihar and Orissa Co-operative Societies Act, but under the general law.

A. from an order of the Subordinate Judge, Arrab, dated May 25, 1939.

Messrs. Mahabir Prasad and Brahmadeva Narain, for the Appellant.

Messrs. S. M. Mullick and Harnarayan Prasad, for the Respondent.

Dhavlé, J.—This is an appeal from a decision disallowing objection of the appellant, the Buxar Central Co-operative Bank, Ltd., that execution of a decree obtained against it by the respondent is barred by a scheme of compromise under s. 24-A of the Bihar and Orissa Co-operative Societies Act (VI of 1935) which was sanctioned by the Registrar of Co-operative Societies on October 15, 1936. In 1927, the respondent deposited Rs. 13,000 with the appellant. In 1935 correspondence began between the parties regarding the re-payment of this sum, and failing to get satisfaction, respondent filed a suit on February 3, 1936, for the recovery of his deposit. During the pendency of the suit the scheme of compromise under s. 24-A of the Act was agreed to by the required majority of creditors and sanctioned by the Registrar under sub-s. (2) of s. 24-A of the Act. The respondent's suit was decreed on December 18, 1936. An appeal was preferred by the appellant against this decree and dismissed by Wort, J. (Chatterji, J. concurring), who found that there was nothing either in the alleged arrangement (that is to say, the "scheme of compromise", the factum of which is not disputed before us) or in the Act itself which would bar plaintiff's claim or bar his action for the money or balance of the money deposited by him. The learned Judge went on to add

"I propose to say no more for fear of dealing with matters which are not strictly before us in this appeal, the substance of the decision of this Court being that the plea taken up by the defendant society was not a bar to the plaintiff's suit."

When the respondent put the decree into execution, the appellant again pleaded the scheme of compromise by way of a bar. The lower Court found no provision in the Bihar and Orissa Co-operative Societies Act (Act VI of 1935)

"ousting the jurisdiction of the Civil Court, either to entertain a suit for money deposited with the Central Co-operative Bank or for execution of a decree for such money obtained in a Civil Court", and arrived at the conclusion that the provision in s. 24-A that the order of the Registrar shall be final "would not bar a proceeding in the Civil Court instituted before such scheme was contemplated or sanctioned."

The objection of the judgment-debtor-appellant was accordingly dismissed.

It is not very clear from the order of the lower Court how far the contention advanced on behalf of the decree holder that as a depositor he was not a creditor of the judgment-debtor within the meaning of s. 24-A was accepted by the lower Court; but Mr. Sushil Madhab Mullick, who appears for the decree-holder-respondent, does not dispute the position that as a depositor the respondent was a creditor of the appellant. Sub-s. (2) of s. 24-A of the Act makes the compromise agreed to by the specified majority, if sanctioned by an order of the Registrar, "binding on all the creditors, or the class of creditors, as the case may be, and also on the Society". It was suggested on behalf of the respondent that he was not a party to the compromise; but sub-s. (2) makes his individual participation absolutely immaterial. It has not been suggested on behalf of the respondent that the compromise, which was published in the Gazette with the order of the Registrar sanctioning it as required by sub-s. (4) of s. 24-A, was in any respect informal. The learned Subordinate Judge fell into an error in thinking that in this execution proceeding he was asked to hold that the finality of the order of the Registrar barred "a proceeding in the Civil Court instituted before such scheme was contemplated or sanctioned". It was the suit of the respondent that had been instituted before the order of the Registrar sanctioning the compromise; but the execution proceeding itself came years after that order. It is true that the scheme was pleaded as a bar to the suit itself, but in overruling the plea Wort, J. was careful enough "to say no more for fear of dealing with matters which are not strictly before us in this appeal". The learned Subordinate Judge has missed the point of this reservation. The compromise with the sanction of the Registrar bars execution, not by reason of any express provision in the Bihar and Orissa Co-operative Societies Act, but under the general law. A judgment-debtor is always entitled to resist execution on the basis of a compromise if the compromise is binding on the decree-holder and has the effect of barring execution. It has been contended on behalf of the respondent that the compromise in the present case contains nothing to bar execution of the decree obtained by him. Now, it is true that the compromise says nothing expressly about any decrees obtained or to be obtained by any creditor of the Buxar Central Co-operative Bank. Indeed, it does not purport to impose any obligations on any of the creditors of the Bank. What it does do is to make such provisions as that in the first place at least 75 per cent. of the Bank's recoveries on account of principal shall be distributed strictly pro rata among the creditors, towards the principal, and that all recoveries on account of interest shall, after meeting certain indispensable and also unforeseen expenditure, be similarly paid towards interest at certain flat rates. There are other restrictions imposed on the Bank as regards the manner in which it is to conduct its business. It is also provided that the lands purchased by the Bank may be sold to any creditor in set-off of his deposit, provided he is the highest bidder, and that the scheme is to be in operation for five years, unless it is revised earlier with the approval of the Registrar, if the financial position of the Bank should require it. This was the "scheme of compromise" which the Registrar sanctioned as in the best interests of all the parties concerned. It is plain that it would be no compromise at all if its effect was to impose no obligations on the creditors. It may, indeed, be doubted whether it would be binding as a compromise upon the Bank in the absence of any consideration moving from the creditors for the restrictions to which the Bank is subjected under the scheme. When pressed with this aspect of the matter, Mr. Mullick argued that what the respondent may be taken to have given up was his right to attach all the income of the Bank. But it is plain that at the time the scheme of compromise was arrived at, neither the respondent nor any other creditor of the Bank had any such right; the respondent still had to obtain his decree. It seems to me impossible to read the sanctioned scheme of compromise in any other light than as an arrangement under which creditors were to refrain from levying execution in return for the restrictions imposed upon the Bank as regards the disposal of its income and property. Mr. Mullick has contended that in this view the decree obtained by the respondent would become a nullity. But there is no substance in the contention. The decree is only a security for the debt that is owing to the respondent, and has the effect of establishing that debt as against the appellant; and though the compromise was no bar to the passing of a decree establishing the respondent's debt, it is, in my opinion, a clear bar to execution.

I would accordingly allow this appeal with costs.

Harries, C. J.—I agree.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 102—Decree in suit to recover sums payable by khatedar to inamdar as superior holder—Second appeal, if lies—Bombay Land Revenue Code (Act V of 1899), ss. 86, 87—Co-sharer not registered as managing inamdar, whether can bring suit directly against khatedar—His remedy.

Sums payable by a khatedar to an inamdar as superior holder are "dues", and a suit to recover such dues is not cognizable by a Court of Small Causes, and a decree passed in such suit is subject to a second appeal. 27 Ind. Cas. 350 (1), relied on.

The object of the entry of the names of co-sharers in the village khatavani is to enable the village officers to distribute the land revenue among them; it is only the registered managing inamdar who has the sole right to manage the village, i. e., to recover revenue, etc. If any of the village khatedars fail to pay the land revenue into the hands of the village officers, then it is for the managing inamdars to seek assistance from the mamlatdars under ss. 86 and 87, Bom. Land Revenue Code, or to file a suit against them in a Civil Court. But other co-sharers who are not recognized as managing inamdars cannot file a suit or seek assistance against the khatedars directly. Their remedy is to sue the managing inamdars for an account and to recover their share in the land revenue which may have been recovered or which may have been negligently omitted to be recovered by the managing inamdars.

S. A. from the decision of the District Judge, East Khandesh at Jalgaon, in Appeal No. 239 of 1936.

Mr. G. M. Joshi, for the Appellant.

Mr. Y. D. Dikshit, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—The appellant is one of the co-sharers of the inam village of Shindi Digar, his share being annas 3 and 9 3/7 pies. The respondent and one Gopal Shankar are the managing inamdars of the village. The inamdars of the village are said to be alienees of land revenue. The plaintiff is said to be a co-sharer who is recognized in the khatavani as holding a share of 3 annas and 9 3/7 pies. The village land revenue is recovered by the village officers and then distributed among the different sharers according to the shares as entered in the village khatavani. The respondent holds certain lands for which he has to pay Rs. 16-13-3 as land revenue every year. He did not pay the assessment for the year 1928-29, and the plaintiff filed this suit to recover his share in that amount together with interest thereon by way of damages. Both the lower Courts upheld the respondent's contention that the plaintiff was not entitled to file a suit directly against a khatedar tenant to recover his share in the land revenue, and he has presented this second appeal. A preliminary objection is raised that as the claim is such as can be taken cognizance of by a Small Cause Court and is less than five hundred rupees, no second appeal is maintainable under s. 102, Civil P. O. But it was held in Madhavrao Moreswar v. Rama Kalu (1) that sums payable by a khatedar to an inamdar as superior holder are "dues," and a suit to recover such dues is not cognizable by a Court of Small Causes, and a decree passed in such suit is subject to a second appeal. I therefore hold that this second appeal lies; but on merits, the appeal must fail.

Admittedly, the appellant's name is not registered as a sharer in Village Form No. 3. It is true that the appellant's name is entered in the khatavani as a sharer. But as stated in s. 176 of Joglekar's Alienation Manual (p. 144), the object of the entry of the names of co-sharers in the village khatavani is to enable the village officers to distribute the land revenue among them. Section 171 of that Manual (p. 112) shows that it is only the registered managing inamdar who "has the sole right to manage the village, i. e., to recover revenue, etc." Were it not so, every co-sharer, who is not registered in the Village Form No. 3 as such, might file a suit to recover his own share individually from the different khatedars in the village. It is to avoid a confusion which necessarily would arise from this that managing inamdars are appointed, and village officers recover the land revenue from the khatedars on behalf of all the inamdars. It is for them to distribute the land revenue thus recovered among the recognized co-sharers. If any of the village khatedars fail to pay the land revenue into the hands of the village officers, then it is for the managing inamdars to seek assistance from the mamlatdars under ss. 86 and 87, Bom. Land Revenue Code, 1879, or to file a suit against them in a Civil Court. But other co-sharers who are not recognized as managing inamdars cannot file a suit or seek assistance against the khatedars directly. Their remedy is to sue the managing inamdars for an account and to recover their share in the land revenue which may have been recovered or which may have been negligently omitted to be recovered by the managing inamdars.

It is urged in this case that the khatedar being himself a managing inamdar, he cannot file a suit against himself. But there is another managing inamdar in this case who could have filed a suit against the respondent. But, even if there be only one managing inamdar, he is liable to account to his co-sharers not only for the land revenue recovered by him through the village officers, but also by way of damages for whatever he has failed to recover owing to negligence or laches or through his own default. The present suit is filed against the respondent in his capacity as a khatedar and not as a managing inamdar. Such a suit is rightly held to be not maintainable. I therefore dismiss the appeal with costs.

DALIP SINGH, J.

BALDEV SINGH—DEBTEE—HOLDER—

versus

SHER SINGH AND ANOTHER—JUDGMENT—

DEBTORS—RESPONDENTS

Res judicata—Execution proceedings—Decision held not res judicata in subsequent execution proceedings—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 60—Question whether judgment-debtor is agriculturist has to be decided with reference to date of attachment—Second appeal—Point of law patent on record can be raised for first time in second appeal.

Res judicata in execution proceedings is not governed by the specific terms of s. 11, Civil P. O. which applies only to suits. It is only the general principles of res judicata that apply in execution proceedings. Where the subject-matter of the previous execution proceedings is not the same as in the subsequent execution proceedings, the decision about the judgment-debtor not being proved to be an agriculturist in the previous execution application is not res judicata in the subsequent execution application.

The question whether the judgment-debtor is an agriculturist has to be decided with reference to the date of the attachment and whether the property is attachable or not has to be decided with reference to the situation on that date. A man might cease to be an agriculturist within the meaning of s. 60, Civil P. O. Surely it cannot be argued if a man had so ceased to be an agriculturist that his property could not be attached because at the time of the decree he might have fallen within the definition of agriculturist. Similarly, a man might become an agriculturist and his property might not be liable to attachment at the time when it is attached and it cannot be argued that because at the date of the decree he was not an agriculturist therefore the property was liable to attachment. Where therefore the property is attached when in the possession of and owned by legal representative who is a non-agriculturist, the property therefore is liable to attachment and sale on that date. It is beside the question to discover whether the original debtor was or was not an agriculturist within the meaning of s. 60. 167 Ind. Cas 457 (1), distinguished, 177 Ind. Cas. 235 (2), explained.

A point of law patent on the record can be raised for the first time in second appeal.

Mr. Qabul Chand, for the Appellant.

Mr. F. C. Mittal, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—In this case the decree was obtained by the decree-holder against Sher Singh personally and Bhola Singh as legal representative of one Mithe to the extent of the property of Mithe in the hands of Bhola Singh. An execution application was filed against certain property on August 7, 1936, and in the course of that certain property was attached. Bhola Singh filed objections under s. 60, Civil P. O., alleging that the house attached belonged exclusively to him and that he, Bhola Singh, was an agriculturist and the previous owner Mithe was also an agriculturist and hence the house was not liable to attachment. These objections were rejected on August 5, 1937, the Appellate Court holding that Mithe was not proved to be an agriculturist and that it was the status of Mithe which determined whether the property was or was not liable to attachment under s. 60. The Court followed Hirda Ram v. Mohammad Din (1) a Single Bench ruling of this Court. On April 2, 1938, a second execution was taken out against Bhola Singh and his half share in a different house was attached. Objections under s. 60 were again put in on May 18, 1938. The Appellate Court decided on the authority of Hirda Ram v. Mohammad Din (1) and Firm Gurparshad Dewat Ram v. Kishen Chand (2) a Division Bench ruling of this Court, that Mithe was an agriculturist and his status determined whether the property was attachable or not and therefore Bhola Singh being a non-agriculturist did not affect the question. The decree-holder has come in second appeal from this decision.

It is contended by him firstly that it is res judicata that Mithe was not an agriculturist. The learned Counsel for the respondents contends that this plea was not raised in the Courts below and should not be allowed to be raised now. The reply is that this is a point of law patent on the record. The question resolves itself into a decision whether the whole of execution record is one, though there may have been separate execution applications, or whether each execution application is a separate record. If the latter is the correct view, then no doubt this plea could not be patent on the present record. On the whole, however, I am inclined to think that the whole execution record is part of one record and therefore the point is one that can be raised. I do not, however, agree that the finding is res judicata in the case. Res judicata in execution proceedings is not governed by the specific terms of s. 11, Civil P. O., which applies only to suits. It is only the general principles of res judicata that apply in execution proceedings and to my mind as the subject-matter of the previous execution proceedings was not the same as in the present execution proceedings, the two houses being different, the decision about Mithe, not being proved to be an agriculturist in the other execution application is not res judicata in the present execution application. To take a simple illustration, if on a certain mortgage a person contended that he was a member of an agricultural tribe and the mortgage was not binding on him qua the property mortgaged, and it was held that he was not proved to belong to that agricultural tribe, would it be res judicata in the case of certain other property that the mortgagor did not belong to an agricultural tribe as between the same parties? I should doubt this very much. The title litigated is not really the same. Following this principle I would hold therefore that the matter is not res judicata except of course qua the property which was then attached where the matter would be in my opinion res judicata.

The next point is whether Hirda Ram v. Mohammad Din (1) and Firm Gurparshad Dewat Ram v. Kishen Chand (2) govern the case. The facts are not entirely the same. In Hirda Ram v. Mohammad Din (1), the decree was obtained against the original judgment-debtor and the property was attached during his lifetime. The question therefore in that case might well have been decided on the status of the man to whom the property belonged at the time when it was attached. Firm Gurparshad Dewat Ram v. Kishen Chand (2) is a Division Bench ruling, but it appears to me that the decision in that case is obiter dicta because that ruling itself states that the points which it decides do not arise as in that case both the original judgment-debtors and his legal representatives were agriculturists within the meaning of s. 60. The matter therefore is, I think, free for decision. To my mind the question has to be decided with reference to the date of the attachment and whether the property is attachable or not has to be decided with reference to the situation on that date. It seems perfectly clear to me that a man might cease to be an agriculturist within the meaning of s. 60. Surely it could not be argued if a man had so ceased to be an agriculturist that his property could not be attached because at the time of the decree he might have fallen within the definition of agriculturist. Similarly, a man might become an agriculturist and his property might not be liable to attachment at the time when it is attached and it could not be argued that because at the date of the decree he was not an agriculturist therefore the property was liable to attachment. Once this fundamental principle is clearly grasped, it becomes clear that in this case the property was attached when in the possession of and owned by Bhola Singh who has been held to be a non-agriculturist. The property therefore was liable to attachment and sale on that date. It is beside the question to discover whether the original debtor was or was not an agriculturist within the meaning of s. 60. The very words of s. 60 make this clear, for, it speaks of property belonging to an agriculturist, not property that once belonged to an agriculturist. A dead man cannot own any property, and the property at the date of the attachment in this case belonged to Bhola Singh who is held not to be an agriculturist. I would therefore accept this appeal and dismiss the objection petitions with costs throughout. As the point of res judicata and the second point decided are both arguable, I would allow a Letters Patent Appeal, if applied for.

(1) A I R 1936 Lah. 895; 167 Ind. Cas. 457; 9 R. L. 493.

ALLAHABAD HIGH COURT Special Bench

Miscellaneous Case No. 167 of 1939

September 22, 1939.

IQBAL AHMAD, RAOHYPAL SINGH AND HUNTER, JJ.In the matter of BHAIRO DUTT
BHANDARI, AN ADVOCATE, RANIKHET*Legal practitioner—Professional misconduct—Investments of his savings by Advocate, when constitute engagement in money-lending business—Findings on questions of fact recorded by Bar Tribunal—When accepted by High Court.*

What does or does not constitute money-lending business must depend on the facts and circumstances of each case and is not capable of an exact definition. The question is a mixed question of fact and law and the answer to the question must depend on the facts found in each particular case. An element of continuity and habit is essential to constitute the exercise of a profession or business. [p. 613, col. 1.]

Investments of his savings by an Advocate do not necessarily amount to engagement in money-lending business, the more so when such investments are few and far between and are mostly made to relations and friends. Nevertheless, if investments by way of loan are made as a matter of regular business and for gain, there can be no escape from the conclusion that such investments constitute engagement in money-lending business. [p. 613, col. 2.]

[English and Indian Case-law relied on.]

The question whether a particular Advocate has violated the recognized canons of professional etiquette is primarily a matter that concerns the Bar Council and consequently the High Court ordinarily accepts findings on questions of fact recorded by the Bar Tribunal provided the findings are not perverse. [p. 613, col. 2.]

Mr. N. P. Asthana, for the Crown.

Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru and Mr. A. P. Pandey, for the Opposite Party.

Iqbal Ahmad, J.—On the receipt of a complaint of one Prem Singh, dated December 23, 1937, about the alleged professional misconduct of Mr. Bhairo Dutt Bhandari, an Advocate on the rolls of this Court and practising in the Courts at Ranikhet, this Court referred the case for inquiry to the Bar Council and the case was in due course enquired into by a tribunal of the council appointed by the Hon'ble the Chief Justice. The charge framed by the Tribunal against the Advocate was as follows:

"That you, Mr. Bhairo Dutt Bhandari, an Advocate on the rolls of the High Court of Judicature at Allahabad while practising in the Courts of the Kumaun Division, subordinate to the said High Court, have been for a considerable time past carrying on money-lending business which is against the rules governing professional etiquette and have thereby been guilty of professional misconduct."

The Advocate concerned filed a written statement in the course of which he admitted that during a period of ten years, viz., from 1926 to 1936, he advanced loans on promissory notes and mortgages on no less than 12 occasions. Out of these 12 transactions of loan, three advances were on the security of immovable properties and the rest of the advances were made on the basis of promissory notes. All the three mortgages were in favour of the minor sons of the Advocate and so were some of the promissory notes and the rest of the promissory notes were in favour of the Advocate himself. Out of the 12 transactions, three took place in 1930 and the remaining nine advances were made in the course of nine years one in each year. It was alleged in the written statement that the Advocate had from time to time set aside certain sums of money for the use and benefit of his minor children and had invested the amounts from time to time solely with the intention to benefit his sons. It was also mentioned in the written statement that the loans referred to above were made either to the relatives or to the friends of the Advocate or his family. The Advocate also submitted that interest was charged on most of these loans only because the borrower expressed a preference to having the transactions placed on that basis. His motive, in most cases, according to the Advocate, was not gain but the obliging of friends.

Prem Singh, the complainant, did not appear to substantiate the complaint before the Tribunal, but as the fact of loans being advanced by the Advocate was admitted by him in his written statement, the Tribunal proceeded with the enquiry in the course of which it recorded the evidence of the Advocate and of two witnesses produced by him and then, on consideration of the materials before it, came to the conclusion that the charge referred to above was not established against the Advocate and forwarded its finding to this Court. The learned Advocate-General filed objections to the finding maintaining that the finding was contrary to the weight of evidence in the case and was erroneous in law. After hearing the learned Advocate-General and considering the findings on questions of fact recorded by the Tribunal, we have decided, though not without some hesitation, to accept the findings of the Tribunal. The charge framed against the Advocate is with respect to the breach of the following rule framed under s. 15, Bar Councils Act (XXXVIII of 1926):

"No Advocate while practising shall engage in trade or business or accept an appointment carrying a salary without previously obtaining the permission of the Bar Council and the High Court."

The question that arises for consideration is whether the advances of loan admitted by the Advocate do or do not amount to engagement in money-lending business by the Advocate and the answer to the question is beset with considerable difficulty. Investments of his savings by an Advocate do not necessarily amount to engagement in money-lending business, the more so when such investments are few and far between and are mostly made to relations and friends. Nevertheless, if investments by way of loan are made as a matter of regular business and for gain, there can be no escape from the conclusion that such investments constitute engagement in money-lending business. What does or does not constitute money-lending business must depend on the facts and circumstances of each case and is not capable of an exact definition. The question is a mixed question of fact and law and the answer to the question must depend on the facts found in each particular case. The view that we take finds support from the decision in Edgell v. MacElwee (1). In the course of his judgment in that case McCardie, J. made the following observations:

"A man does not become a money-lender by reason of occasional loans to relations, friends, or acquaintances, whether interest be charged or not. Charity and kindness are not the bases of usury. Nor does a man become a money-lender merely because he may upon one or several isolated occasions lend money to a stranger. There must be more than occasional and disconnected loans. There must be a business of money lending, and the word "business" imports the notion of system, repetition, and continuity. . . . The line of demarcation cannot be defined with closeness or indicated by any specific formula. Each case must depend on its own peculiar features. It is ever a question of degree."

In Litchfield v. Dreyfus (2) it was observed that:

"speaking generally, a man who carries on a money-lending business is one who is ready and willing to lend to all and sundry, provided that they are from his point of view eligible."

To the same effect are the observations contained in Granger and Sons v. Gough (3) at p. 343. Lord Morris is reported to have observed as follows:

"There can be no definition of the words "exercising a trade." It is only another mode of expressing "carrying on business"; but it certainly carried with it the meaning that the business or (1) (1918) 1 K B 205; 87 L J K B 738; 118 L T 177.

(2) (1908) 1 K B 584; 75 L J K B 447; 22 T L R 385.

trade must be habitually or systematically exercised and that it cannot apply to isolated transactions. There is no special legal meaning to the words "exercising a trade," and it must be considered with regard to what would be its ordinary or popular meaning, and that must in each case depend on the facts of that particular case; and we are not to canvass what might be a logical outcome from any decision when it is the fact of a particular case that are solely decided on. I have heard no suggestion of any plainer or more intelligible meaning for the words "exercise his trade" than the words themselves convey."

The question under consideration formed the subject of decision by a Full Bench of this Court in Ram Sarup v. Tika Ram (4) and the view taken by that Bench was that an element of continuity and habit is essential to constitute the exercise of a profession or business. That this is so is apparent from the following observations made in the course of the judgment:

"The Vakil has admitted that from time to time he entered into transactions for the sale of grain, salt, cotton seeds, etc., by way of speculation, but he has not done so habitually. He has mentioned eight instances, seven of which were instances of business carried on in the years 1915, 1916 and 1917. It does not appear that he has habitually or systematically exercised the profession of a trader in addition to his work as a Vakil. We do not think, therefore, that he can be held to have violated the provisions of the rule to which we have referred."

On the other hand if it is found that money-lending transactions by an Advocate are numerous, continuous and systematic, the Advocate must be held to have entered into money-lending business and to this effect is the decision of a Full Bench of the Madras High Court in Chinnappa v. Timma Reddi 8 Ind. Cas. 617 (5). The Pleader concerned in that case had nearly a hundred money-lending transactions in his own name and in that of his minor son and it was found that the transactions in the son's name were only a shield or screen and that they really were transactions by himself and it was held that the Pleader had engaged in money-lending business. The cases noticed above illustrate in a remarkable degree the difficulty, rather the impossibility, of fixing a line of demarcation and in formulating a hard and fast rule as to what does and what does not constitute money-lending business and it is this state of uncertainty that has to a great extent turned the scale in the present case in favour of the Advocate and has induced us not to interfere with the finding of the Tribunal.

The question whether a particular Advocate has violated the recognized canons of professional etiquette is primarily a matter that concerns the Bar Council and consequently this Court ordinarily accepts findings on questions of fact recorded by the Bar Tribunal provided the findings are not perverse. In the present case the Tribunal accepted the evidence of the Advocate and of his witnesses and held that the advances of loan which he made were made to close acquaintances, relations and friends. The Tribunal further held that the loans advanced by the Advocate were occasional and disconnected and did not amount to engagement in money-lending business. While we consider that the case is one on the border line and that the Advocate by making 12 advances in the course of ten years dangerously sailed near the wind, we are not prepared to hold that the conclusion arrived at by the Bar Tribunal is erroneous and we must therefore accept the finding that the charge was not brought home to the Advocate. Before parting with the case we must, however, observe that it is in the interest of the Advocates themselves that before they make advances by way of loan, they should obtain the previous sanction of the Bar Council and of this Court. It may be that in a particular case half a dozen advances made during a particular period may not be held to amount to engagement in money-lending business, but seven advances by way of loan made during the same period may be held to amount to engagement in money-lending business. It is this state of uncertainty that Counsels caution on the part of the Advocates in their own interest and we hope and trust that the requisite caution will be exhibited by members of the profession in future. In the circumstances of the present case, we make no order as to costs.

Civil Revision Petition No. 138 of 1939

PETITIONER

versus

Musammat GOBINDI—DEFENDANT—

RESPONDENT

Punjab Debtors' Protection Act (II of 1936), s. 3 6)—Sum advanced without interest, for purchase, whether loan—Registration Act (XVI of 1908), s. 17 (1) (c)—Entry of such advance, if receipt—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 115 (c)—Mistake as to onus—Revision lies.

A sum given without interest as a payment in advance for a property which is to be sold, cannot be called a loan within the meaning of the Punjab Debtors' Protection Act.

The entry, that is no more than a memo of a sum advanced for a purchase of a property is not a receipt of money received for a sale of an immovable property and therefore does not need registration.

The mistake as to onus gives rise to a revision petition.

O. R. P. from a decree of the Senior Sub-Judge, Rohtak, dated November 10, 1938.

Mr. F. C. Mittal, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Qabul Chand, for the Respondent.

Order.—In this case the question is whether the sum claimed by the plaintiff was or was not paid. Both Courts below have held that the plaintiff has failed to prove that any consideration passed as alleged by him on the date in question. The learned Counsel for the petitioner, however, contends that once execution was proved of the entry, which appears to have been accepted by the learned Senior Subordinate Judge, the onus shifted on to the respondent to prove that the entry was made without consideration. Ordinarily speaking, this would no doubt be so. The learned Counsel for the respondent contends that the mistake as to onus does not give rise to a revision-petition, but there are rulings of this Court to the contrary and I hold that the question of onus may give rise to a revision petition. The second point is that the matter being a loan under the Debtors' Protection Act and the plaintiff being a money-lender, it was for him to prove consideration. I do not think the sum given in this case can be called a loan; there was no interest, nor was it in substance a loan. It could only be looked upon as a payment in advance for a shop which was to be sold. The learned Counsel for the respondent next contends that the entry needs registration. I am of opinion, after considering this objection and the entry, that the entry is no more than a memo of a sum advanced and though it is stated that the object is finally to have a sale, I do not consider that this is a receipt of money received for a sale of an immovable property and, therefore, does not need registration.

Lastly, it is contended that even if the onus shifts, the circumstances of the long delay by the petitioner in bringing this suit shift the onus back on to him to prove consideration. The learned Counsel for the petitioner contends that the reason for the delay was that the plaintiff did not want his money back but wanted the property agreed to be sold, but as the property agreed to be sold could not be specified because it was not mentioned clearly in the agreement, the petitioner delayed as long as possible hoping that Hira Lal would accede to his request to have the property sold and, therefore, he did not immediately bring a suit. But the petitioner himself admits that Hira Lal had refused to carry out the bargain, his witnesses say within a month of the contract; he himself says within a year. Hira Lal appears to have lived for a year and a half and yet the petitioner did not bring a suit. This seems to me abnormal and on the whole, therefore, I do not consider that I should upset the decision of the Courts below and I, therefore, dismiss the petition but make no order as to costs of this petition. I point out to the learned Senior Subordinate Judge that the trial Court had held that Hira Lal was not proved to have thumb-marked the registered sale deed; it was little use, therefore, finding that the thumb-marks on the entry and the registered sale-deed are the same without a finding that Hira Lal had signed the registered sale deed. I have gone into the matter and consider that Hira Lal may be held to have thumb-marked the registered sale-deed and therefore the execution of the entry is proved.

RANGOON HIGH COURT

Criminal Revision No. 158-B of 1939

June 19, 1939

MOSELY, J.

KUMARAPAN AND ANOTHER—APPLICANT
versus

THE KING—RESPONDENT

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 514, 106—Bond for appearance of accused—Forfeiture—Recording of evidence—Burden to give explanation why accused was unable to attend Court—Bond under s. 106—Evidence to prove fresh breach of peace and forfeiture of bond—Opportunity of cross-examining witness—Witness on whose evidence forfeiture is established examined in absence of accused—Whether should again be examined in presence of accused—Forfeiture should not be ordered without giving accused or surety chance to prove their allegation.

In cases where a bond has been executed for appearance merely, it is often unnecessary for the Magistrate to record any evidence at all. The Magistrate knows by his own observation that the accused failed to appear in his Court. The burden of proving the negative, that is to say that the accused absented themselves without reasonable cause for their non-appearance, is not upon the prosecution and it is for the surety to give an explanation why the accused person was unable to attend Court.

Obiter.—In case of bond under s. 106, Criminal P. O., it is necessary for the Magistrate to record evidence to prove the commission of a fresh breach of the peace and the forfeiture of the bond. Such evidence need not, according to the terms of s. 514, be taken in the presence of the respondent, but when the respondent appears and shows cause, he must be given an opportunity of cross-examining the witnesses upon whose evidence the Magistrate had directed him to show cause why the bond should not be forfeited. The section does not require that before a final order is made the witnesses on whose evidence the forfeiture is held to be established, if they have been previously examined in the absence of the accused, must again be examined in his presence. Queen-Empress v. Har Chandra Chowdhury (3), dissented from. The Empress v. Nobin Chunder Dutt (1), relied on. In re Mohesh Chundra Roy (2), explained.

Where the Magistrate directs forfeiture of bond executed for the appearance of accused and directs the surety to pay penalty without giving the accused and the surety an opportunity of showing cause by adducing evidence, as to why the accused failed to appear, the order is bad must be set aside.

Order.—The applicants in revision went bail to the amount of Rs. 100 each for certain persons accused of trespass, an offence under s. 447, I. P. O. On a date at a later stage of the case to which the case was adjourned only two out of the six accused were present. The Advocate for the remaining accused filed a petition stating that they had started by boat from their village, and that they had probably been detained by a storm. The Magistrate recorded his grounds for belief that this was not so, and called upon the sureties under s. 514, Criminal P. O., to show cause why their bonds should not be forfeited to the amount of Rs. 100 each. The sureties showed cause in writing to the same effect as that mentioned. The Magistrate did not believe this explanation as he said that two of the accused had been able to come, and, in any event, the other accused should have appeared as soon as possible after the date fixed, and should have explained their non-appearance. It was ordered that the sureties pay a penalty of Rs. 100 each. In appeal the penalties were reduced to Rs. 50 each on each surety. It is now contended in revision that the Magistrate's order was bad because it had not been proved to the satisfaction of the Court that the bond had been forfeited, that a formal inquiry should have been held by the Magistrate, and that in any case it should have been found that there was sufficient reason for the non-appearance of the absent accused on the date fixed: The Empress v. Nobin Chunder Dutt (1), is cited as authority in this connection. Section 514, Criminal P. O., of 1898, which is substantially the same as the Code, current in 1879, says

"Whenever it is proved to the satisfaction of the Court by which a bond under this Code has been taken, or when the bond is for appearance before a Court, to the satisfaction of such Court, that such bond has been forfeited, the Court shall record the grounds of such proof, and may call upon any person bound by such bond to pay the penalty thereof, or to show cause why it should not be paid."

The only authority that I can find on the subject is the above cited case and two other cases, also from the Calcutta High Court in In re Mohesh Chundra Roy (2), and Queen-Empress v. Har Chandra Chowdhury (3). These are all cases of breach of a bond executed either by the surety or by the accused under s. 106, Criminal P. O., and not bonds for the appearance of accused persons. In two of these cases there was no relevant evidence against the accused on record and the Magistrate had wrongly relied on evidence implicating him in cases against other persons without recording further evidence himself. In the third case, which was against the surety, the Magistrate had relied on the case in which the accused was convicted, and that evidence was not relevant against the surety: vide s. 43, Evi. Act (but see now sub-s. (7) of s. 514).

In such cases it is obviously necessary for the Magistrate to record evidence to prove the commission of a fresh breach of the peace and the forfeiture of the bond. Such evidence need not, according to the terms of s. 514, be taken in the presence of the respondent, but clearly, as was said in The Empress v. Nobin Chunder Dutt (1), when the respondent appears and shows cause, he must be given an opportunity of cross-examining the witnesses upon whose evidence the Magistrate had directed him to show cause why the bond should not be forfeited. I do not agree with what was said in Queen-Empress v. Har Chandra Chowdhury (3), that the section requires that before a final order is made, the witnesses on whose evidence the forfeiture is held to be established, if they have been previously examined in the absence of the accused, must again be examined in his presence. In re Mohesh Chundra Roy (2), is cited as authority for that proposition, but it is clearly no authority, for all that is said there is that evidence should be re-recorded by the Magistrate before calling upon the person bound by the bond to pay the penalty thereof. Where a bond has been executed for appearance merely, I am of the opinion that it is often unnecessary for the Magistrate to record any evidence at all. The Magistrate knows by his own observation that the accused failed to appear in his Court. The burden of proving the negative, that is to say, that the accused absented themselves without reasonable cause for their non-appearance, is not upon the prosecution and it is for the surety to give an explanation why the accused person was unable to attend Court.

In the present case, however, in view of the petition put in and as two accused persons did appear, it was clearly the duty of the Magistrate to examine them as to the reason put forward for the non-appearance of the other accused. One of the two accused who did appear came from the same village as the four defaulters and the other accused from evidently a neighbouring village, who presumably would come by the same route. It does not necessarily follow, of course, that either of the two accused who did appear came from their villages on the day in question, they might have come from elsewhere. The other reason given by the Magistrate, I think, is no reason if the accused persons were really unable to appear because of the storm. They were not bound to come all the way to Court to explain how they had been detained. In my opinion, however the Magistrate's proceedings were bad for another reason—the simple reason that the accused persons should have been given an opportunity of proving their allegation, if they so desired, by adducing evidence. It is quite possible that the storm was so bad that they really were detained by it, and so were unable to attend Court.

There is another matter which should be remarked on in the present case. This prosecution for trespass was apparently a petty case. It started on June 30, 1938. All the accused were present on August 5, the date fixed for the case, when it appears that the Magistrate himself was absent. On September 5, four out of the six accused were present and two were sick. On September 30, the same thing happened. On October 20, all six accused were present and some only of the prosecution witnesses were examined. On October 31, all six accused were present, but nothing was done on the excuse that a cross case had not been finished. The next hearing (the sixth hearing) was on November 11, the date in question, when four accused were absent. There were no less than six subsequent adjournments before orders were passed on February 21, when the accused, were fined Rs. 10 each. It is no wonder, in view of the lamentable delay in trying this trivial case, if some of the accused made only a half-hearted attempt to appear on the sixth occasion. As the Magistrate did not give the respondents a proper opportunity of showing cause, the order directing the forfeiture of the bonds will be set aside and the amounts paid refunded to the applicants.

LORD MACMILLAN, SIR GEORGE RANKIN
AND MR. M. R. JAYAKAR.

SATISH CHANDRA GIRI—APPELLANT

versus

DHARANIDHAR SINGHA ROY AND OTHERS—RESPONDENTS

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 9, 92—Religious endowment—Mahant having two capacities, secular and religious—Both offices interdependent and inseparably blended—Suit relating to religious office, whether falls under explanation to s. 9—Jurisdiction of Civil Court to remove such mahant from both offices—True test to be applied in considering such removal—S. 92, scope of—Temple a trust within purview of s. 92—Entire office of mahant is indivisible and falls under s. 92—Suit for only religious part of mahant's duties is maintainable.

Where the secular and the religious duties of the mahant in the temple are interdependent and inseparably blended, efficient discharge of the one depends on the control of the other. In other words, in all such religious endowments, where tradition and custom play a vital part in intermingling the two functions, their division is unthinkable. Where such an office is connected with an endowment which has valuable properties and is associated with the control of extensive funds, even if the two capacities of the office can be separated, and the mahantship on its spiritual side regarded as purely an office or dignity, the office is of such a nature that a suit relating to it must fall within the purview of the explanation to s. 9 of the Civil P. O., as being a suit of a civil nature lying within the competence of a Civil Court, notwithstanding that the functions of such office are associated with religious rites or ceremonies. 33 Ind. Cas. 583 (1), referred to. [p 622, col. 1.]

The matter relating to the removal of the mahant of such an institution from both the capacities, secular as well as religious, is one for the consideration of the Civil Court, which must necessarily enjoy a wide discretion to decide what form of punitive or ameliorative order will suit the requirements of the case. But the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts to decide such questions can no longer be doubted. The true rule in such matters can be stated to be that if it be found by the Court that the functionary, in the exercise of his duties, has put himself in a position in which the Court thinks that the obligations of his office in connection with the endowment can no longer be faithfully discharged without danger to the endowment, that is a sufficient ground for his removal, if need be, from both his offices. Observations of Mohammad Noor, J., in 138 Ind. Cas. 417 (3), approved. [p. 622, col. 2.]

Where the mahant of a temple which is a trust for public purposes of a charitable or religious nature within the purview of s. 92 of the Civil P. O., has two capacities secular as well as religious, the entire office of mahant held by the same individual is indivisible and falls within the operation of s. 92. No words are to be found either in s. 92 or elsewhere excluding the religious part of the mahant's duties from the operation of that section. The only limit to the Court's jurisdiction to entertain suits under that section is to be found in the provisions of s. 9 of the Civil P. O., but, the spiritual portion of the office being intimately connected with the exercise of rights to property, a suit relating to it cannot be said to be outside the purview of s. 9. [ibid]

Messrs. C. S. Rewcastle, K. C., J. M. Parikh, S. C. Chaudhuri, for the Appellant.

Messrs. A. M. Dunne, K. C. and H. R. Abdul Majid, for the Respondents.

Mr. M. R. Jayakar.—These two appeals are against a decree dated July 6 and August 24, 1934, of the High Court of Judicature at Calcutta, modifying a preliminary decree, dated November 6, 1929, of the Court of the District Judge of Hoogly. The suit in which the decrees were passed was instituted under s. 92 of the Civil P. O., 1908, by certain persons claiming to be interested in the administration of the shrine of Sri Taraknath near Calcutta, against one Satish Chandra Giri, the appellant in the main appeal (No. 29 of 1934) (hereinafter called the appellant), who was described as the shebait or mahant of the said shrine.

The shrine of Taraknath, though sometimes referred to in the present proceedings as a math, is in reality a temple containing an idol called Sri Taraknathji. Its origin is lost in antiquity. The High Court of Calcutta has in its judgment traced its history back to 1747 A. D., and there is no doubt that it is a very ancient public, religious and charitable endowment, of which the appellant had been for many years the mahant. It is unnecessary for the purposes of this appeal to enter into the details of its antiquity. It is sufficient to say that the succession to the mahantship descended from one Mohan Giri, the mahant in 1769, who acquired properties while he held that office. These properties along with the mahantship came to be vested, through successive holders, in one Madhab Giri in or about the year 1864. On November 17, 1873, he executed a document in favour of his senior chela Shamchand Giri. By that document, Madhab Giri, who was at that time about to face a trial for sexual misbehaviour, appointed Shamchand Giri to manage, in the event of his incarceration, the properties of the temple during his absence. The properties were stated to be of twofold character: debottar (properties belonging to the temple) and nij (private properties of the mahant), of which a list was appended to the document. The document also provided that, on the return of Madhab Giri, Shamchand Giri was to hand over to him possession of both classes of property and render an account in respect of each, but if Madhab Giri died before his return, Shamchand Giri was to succeed him.

Madhab Giri was convicted and sentenced on November 25, 1873. After his release in December 1876, he obtained possession of all the properties from Shamchand Giri, but the latter instituted a summary suit for possession against Madhab Giri and obtained a decree on August 28, 1877.

On December 29, 1877, Madhab Giri instituted a suit against Shamchand Giri, on the strength of the document mentioned above, for the recovery of the properties in Shamchand Giri's possession. There were inter alia two schedules annexed to the plaint: schedule Ka, which was a list of debottar properties and schedule Kha, a list of the properties claimed as nij. Madhab Giri prayed, amongst other things, that, according to the document of November 17, 1873, Shamchand Giri was bound to deliver possession and was not entitled to deny Madhab Giri's title or set up an adverse one and that it might be declared that the properties mentioned in schedule Kha were Madhab Giri's personal or private properties. Shamchand Giri contested the suit, mainly on the ground that he had no knowledge of the said document, that Madhab Giri had forfeited his title to the office of mahant by reason of his sexual misbehaviour and that Shamchand Giri had been duly appointed mahant in his place.

On December 5, 1878, the District Judge delivered judgment, holding that Shamchand Giri was not a duly appointed mahant, that Madhab Giri had not forfeited the mahantship on account of his misbehaviour, that the document of November 17, 1873, was genuine and Madhab Giri was entitled to keep possession of the properties therein mentioned. The District Judge further held that the properties in schedule Kba were not the nij properties of the mahant. In the result, he held that Madhab Giri was entitled to recover possession of the office of mahant, with the properties in both the schedules Ka and Kha, which belonged to the endowment of the idol. Madhab Giri's claim to the properties in schedule Kha as his private properties was dismissed. A decree dated November 5, 1878, giving effect to the judgment, was drawn up. There was an appeal by Shamchand Giri and cross objections by Madhab Giri. It is to be noted that in his cross-objections Madhab Giri raised no objection to the decision of the District Judge that the properties in schedule Kha were not the private properties of the mahant. Madhab Giri thereafter applied for possession in accordance with the decree, making no distinction between the two kinds of properties and eventually he recovered possession of both. These facts may not operate as an estoppel against the appellant, but their evidentiary value cannot be denied in connection with the appellant's contention in the present suit that the said properties and their accretions are his private properties.

Madhab Giri died on March 11, 1893. He left a will dated March 5, 1893, whereby he appointed the appellant his successor as mahant and also executor of the will. He devised the nij properties to the appellant absolutely. The appellant accordingly ascended the gadi and applied for probate of the will, which was granted by the High Court of Calcutta on July 1, 1895.

In September 1922, four persons, who are now respondents Nos. 1—4 in the first appeal and appellants Nos. 1—4 in the second appeal here, and three others, who have since died, instituted the present Suit (No. 28 of 1922) in the Court of the District Judge of Hoogly, against the appellant. During the pendency of the suit, three other persons were added as plaintiffs and they are parties to these appeals. All these persons are hereinafter referred to as plaintiffs.

The suit was instituted under s. 92 of the Civil P. C. There were 13 prayers, out of which the following are material at the stage of this appeal:—

"1. For a declaration that certain properties specified in the schedules annexed to the plaint were not the nij properties of the appellant, but belonged to the deity.

2. For a declaration that the appellant was not a fit and proper person to continue as mahant or trustee of the said trust estate and that he might be removed from such office by the order of the Court.

3. That in his place a fit and proper person be appointed as mahant and trustee of the temple and of its properties.

4. That all the properties adjudged to be trust properties be vested in the new mahant and that the appellant be directed to make over their possession to him.

5. For an account.

6. For the settlement of a scheme for the proper management and control of the trust properties."

The appellant contested the suit and denied the material allegations contained in the plaint. He filed a lengthy written statement. Shortly stated, his defence was that the temple was not a public, religious or charitable endowment within the meaning of s. 92; that the mahant managed the debottar properties as malik owner, that he took his predecessor's nij properties under an absolute bequest contained in his will, that he could and did acquire new properties, which were his nij properties, that he was not of immoral character, as alleged in the plaint, nor was he guilty of a breach of trust, nor of mismanagement or misappropriation of any part of the trust properties, that he was a fit and proper person to act as mahant, having acted as such for over 30 years and that he was not liable to render an account of the trust properties.

On these pleadings, the District Judge framed appropriate issues and delivered judgment on November 6, 1929. He found all the issues in favour of the plaintiffs and also that the charges of immorality and misappropriation made against the appellant were proved. A decree was passed, of which the following are the material terms:

"1. The Tarkeshwar endowment was a public, charitable and religious trust.

2. The properties mentioned in certain schedules to the plaint were debottar properties of the temple.

3. The appellant was not entitled to have any nij property of his own and the properties claimed by him as nij, whether acquired in his own name or in the names of other persons, belonged to the temple.

4. The appellant was not a fit person to continue as mahant, that he was removed from that office and was to forthwith make over possession of all properties to the temple, to be vested in the Receiver, pending further orders.

5. The appellant was to render accounts of both sets of properties, from the day he ascended the gadi to the present time.

6. A scheme for the proper administration and control of the trust estate was to be framed."

Against the said judgment and decree, the appellant filed an appeal (No. 1 of 1930). Plaintiffs also filed a cross-objection on the ground that, upon the findings arrived at, the Court below ought to have directed accounts to be taken from the appellant on the footing of wilful default. The appeal and cross objection were eventually heard by a Bench of the High Court of Calcutta (Manmatha Nath Mukerji and Sarat Kumar Ghose, JJ.) who affirmed the findings of the District Judge and his decree, with the following variations:—

"1. The order for accounts against the appellant was set aside

"2. Certain properties claimed in the plaint and held by the District Judge to be debottar properties were excluded from the decree."

The appellant's appeal and the plaintiffs' cross-objection were dismissed.

On the question of misappropriation and breach of trust by the appellant, the learned Judges held that the appellant had diverted trust funds for the purpose of self-aggrandisement and for the benefit of others who were not entitled thereto and that gross breaches of trust on a most gigantic scale had been proved against the appellant. On the issue relating to the appellant's moral character and habits of life, the High Court went into the details of the charges made against him and held them substantially proved. About the appellant's fitness to continue as mahant and his liability to be removed from his office, the learned Judges observed that by reason of the continuous course of the misappropriation of trust properties in which the appellant had indulged on a most extensive scale, the breaches of trust which he had systematically committed in respect of such properties, the unfounded claim thereto which he had persistently put forward and in pursuance of which he had treated such properties as his own properties, and the life he had led which was repugnant to the intention of the trust, the appellant had rendered himself unfit to continue in such office. They further observed that infinitely more than what would justify the removal of a trustee of a public, religious and charitable endowment had been established, that, on the most charitable view of the appellant's conduct and his dealings with the endowment, it was impossible to resist the conclusion that the interest of the endowment peremptorily demanded the removal of the appellant from his office as mahant. In setting aside the District Judge's order for accounts against the appellant and in dismissing the plaintiffs' cross-objection on the same question, the learned Judges left it open to the deity or anybody, who would represent him in future, to recover such other properties as there might be belonging to the endowment and to sue the appellant for accounts.

The question of framing a suitable scheme was considered by the District Judge after the other issues had been decided. He delivered a separate judgment framing a scheme for the administration of the endowment. It was the subject of a separate appeal to the High Court and was disposed of by a separate judgment.

The appellant applied to the High Court for a certificate of fitness. It was granted to him in the main appeal (No. 29 of 1934) and refused in the appeal (No. 30 of 1935) relating to the framing of the scheme. A certificate (appeal No. 2 of 1935) was likewise granted to the plaintiffs respondents in respect of the liability of the appellant to account on the basis of wilful default.

Since the leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council was granted, the scheme has been given effect to and a new mahant and a committee of management have been appointed. They have taken over charge of the property from the Receiver. It is to be noted that the new mahant is not a party to the appeals before the Board and there is no question now before their Lordships relating to the scheme.

From the foregoing history of the proceedings it is clear that many of the questions arising in the appeal are concluded by concurrent findings of fact and there is strong reason in the present case why their Lordships should be slow to depart from the rule of practice, which, though not a rule of law nor a rigid rule, plays an important part in the exercise of the prerogative—that concurrent findings of facts will not be disturbed.

The question about the nij properties, which had been decided against the appellant, falls under this category. These properties are admittedly accretions to the original nucleus of five putni taluks, having been acquired out of their income.

In the light of past events, their Lordships find no difficulty in understanding the contention of the appellant and his predecessors as regards the nij properties. They were throughout claimed as the private and absolute properties of the mahant. Before the Board, however, the appellant's Counsel sought to make a distinction and endeavoured to place them in an intermediate category of properties which, though personal and private, the mahant could not dispose of, as he was under an obligation to use their income, in case of deficiency, for the purposes of the temple, but as regards the surplus, he could dispose of it in any way he liked and was not liable to render an account thereof. Their Lordships find in the facts of this case no justification for such distinction, which may in certain cases be justified as the creature of the immemorial customs of the institution. In his defence, the appellant claimed the nij properties as absolutely belonging to him under the provisions of his predecessor's will, and the question must be decided on that footing, and cannot admit of the refinements urged by his Counsel. Their Lordships see no reason to differ from the concurrent findings of the lower Courts on this question.

With reference to this question, there are undoubtedly a few subsidiary points on which the High Court disagreed with the District Judge, but, in their Lordships' opinion, this difference of view in no way weakens the main finding of the High Court, which is clear. The learned Judges held that upon the views, circumstances and probabilities they had dealt with, they had come to the conclusion, about the correctness of which they entertained no doubt whatever, that the claim to the nij properties which the appellant had asserted was entirely unfounded. They added that the material documents properly read were unequivocal in their terms and left no vestige of doubt that Mohun Giri (the original acquirer) never treated the putni taluks as his personal property, nor intended that Raghuchandra Giri (his successor) should ever regard them as such. The learned Judges went on to observe that, in arriving at this conclusion, they were not unmindful of the fact that they had not been able to ascertain the exact sources from which Mohun Giri had acquired the five parent taluks; but notwithstanding it, they were firm in their conclusion that there was no foundation for the supposition that he acquired or left any properties as his personal properties, as distinguished from the properties of the deity.

It was argued that in arriving at this conclusion, the learned Judges contradicted their view, expressed in an earlier part of the judgment, that the onus was on the plaintiffs to prove that the said properties belonged to the temple. Their Lordships, however, on a proper appreciation of the High Court's judgment, can detect no such contradiction. The entire evidence was before the learned Judges, which they considered with great care and scrutiny and their Lordships cannot allow the question to be re-opened.

Likewise, on the question of the appellant's moral character and his consequent unfitness to occupy the office of mahant, there is a concurrent finding of fact which cannot be disturbed. It was argued that the appellant's moral character could not be considered in any suit under s. 92 of the Civil P. C. Their Lordships are unable to agree with this contention. The question of his character was not considered in vacuo, but as directly relevant to some of the issues which arose under s. 92, e. g. his fitness to remain in office and his liability to be removed therefrom.

It may be noted that the decree of the lower Courts directing the appellant's removal from office was not based entirely on his immorality, but partially upon the finding of a continuous course of misappropriation of trust properties on a most extensive scale, the breaches or trust which he had systematically committed in respect of such properties, the unfounded claim thereto which he persistently put forward and in pursuance of which he treated such properties as his personal properties.

The main point argued before their Lordships is the following:—

The mahant, it is said, acts in two distinct capacities: he is the spiritual head of the endowment, the shebait of the deity. He is also the trustee and manager of the properties and temporal affairs of the temple and the deity. It is, therefore, contended that a Civil Court has jurisdiction under s. 92 of the Civil P. C. over his latter capacity only; it has no power to pass any orders affecting his spiritual position or his control over the spiritual affairs of the deity or endowment, and that, under that section, the Court can deprive him only of the trusteeship and management of the temporal affairs of the endowment, but it cannot remove him from his spiritual duties. A contrary view, it is contended, will enable a Civil Court to assume ecclesiastical jurisdiction over the religious affairs of the endowment.

Before their Lordships examine the soundness of this contention, it is material to note that during the long and protracted hearing of this case in the lower Courts, no distinction was made between the two sets of duties, and the question now urged before the Board was not raised in the appellant's written statement, is not dealt with in the exhaustive judgments of the Courts below, nor mentioned in the elaborate grounds of appeal to His Majesty in Council.

On the question whether the two capacities are distinct as alleged by the appellant or interrelated, it is useful to turn to the pleadings to ascertain what the common view of the parties was.

Paragraph 4 of the plaint is as follows:—

"The management of that sheba (worship) and sadabrata at the said math or shrine, and also of the debottar properties thereto appertaining and belonging to the said Thakur (deity), was and has always been, according to the ancient customs and usage of the math, entrusted to a mahant, who, as the trustee thereof, discharges all the duties of a shebait in connection therewith. Save as aforesaid, as such shebait and trustee, the mahant of Tarakeswar has no personal or any other right to the said math and the properties thereto appertaining and belonging to the said Thakur (deity)."

This allegation was met by para. 20 of the appellant's written statement, which is as follows:—

"According to the long established custom and usage of the math, the mahant for the time being makes all arrangements for the sheba (worship of the said Thakur, etc., and manages the debottar properties as math shebait of the said Thakur and that whoever becomes the mahant of the math possesses the right to perform those acts by virtue of his office."

It is clear, therefore, that in the opinion of both the parties, the secular and the religious duties of the mahant, in the temple in question, are interdependent and inseparably blended; and such must be the case in any well-organised institution, if the obligations of the mahantship have to be effectively discharged.

The interconnection of the two aspects of the office was explained by Lord Shaw, who in delivering the judgment of the Board in Ram Parkash Das v. Anand Das (1) observed:—

"The mahant is the head of the institution. He sits upon the gadi; he initiates candidates into the mysteries of the cult; he superintends the worship of the idol and the accustomed spiritual rites; he manages the property of the institution; he administers its affairs; and the whole assets are vested in him as the owner thereof in trust for the institution itself. ...the succession to him in such property follows with the succession to the office."

The two capacities are thus closely intermingled and a proper and efficient discharge of the one depends on the control of the other. The mahant must have authority over the funds and income of the institution to be able to discharge his religious duties efficiently, in conformity with the customary and traditional obligations of the office and to the satisfaction of those who claim the benefit of the worship. He necessarily enjoys large patronage in the discharge of his religious functions. He cannot, in consequence, depend, for the due performance of such duties, on the mercy or caprice of another functionary, with separate or co-ordinate authority over the funds of the institution. Any division of the two capacities would lower his prestige, as also impair the efficiency of his religious functions. On the other hand, the funds of the institution have to be administered with a proper regard to the religious traditions of the institution and the sentiments of its worshippers, of which the mahant, for the time being, is the custodian and interpreter. He furnishes a salutary check upon the tendency, which experience proves is not at all infrequent to administer the funds of the endowment with sole regard to secular and utilitarian considerations. In other words, in all such religious endowments, where tradition and custom play a vital part in intermingling the two functions, their division is unthinkable.

As pointed out in the case of Striman Sadagopa v. Krishna (2), such offices may have, in reality, a secular character, although religious duties are attached to them, because the occupants are called upon to exercise business functions, either as trustees or managers of the properties and funds of the temple, or as overseers in the regulations of its affairs generally and have necessarily civil rights and consequent liabilities, which may properly be made the subject of civil litigation.

There may, however, be cases where the duties of an office are purely spiritual and moral, entirely unconnected with any particular temple or place. The office may be such that no pecuniary benefit is attached to it or its emoluments are purely voluntary contributions, or the duties attendant to it are the exercise of spiritual and moral supervision over the voluntary actions of the worshippers. In such cases, it may be futile for a Civil Court to interfere with the exercise of the duties of the office. No rights of property are connected with it and there is no machinery by which the Court can control the voluntary action of the worshipper or the mahant.

The office in the case is, however, of a different character. It is connected with an endowment which has valuable properties and is associated with the control of extensive funds. Even if the two capacities of the office can be separated, and the mahantship on its spiritual side regarded as purely an office or dignity, there is no doubt that the office is of such a nature that a suit relating to it must fall within the purview of the explanation to s. 9 of the Civil P. O., as being a suit of a civil nature lying within the competence of a Civil Court, notwithstanding that the functions of such office are associated with religious rites or ceremonies.

There are to be found in the reported rulings, both of this Board and of the Indian High Courts, numerous cases where shebaitis, mahants, and in Muslim endowments, mutuwallis and sajjadanashins have been removed by Civil Courts from the performance of their temporal as well as religious duties, where the Courts have come to the conclusion, from the evidence adduced that such removal was necessary in order to safeguard a faithful discharge of the obligations of the office. One such instance of removal is to be found in Syed Shah Muhammad Kazim v. Syed Ali Saghir (3), see also Sarabjit Bharti v. Gourinath Kakaji (4). Their Lordships agree with the observations of Khwaja Mohammad Noor, J. that :—

"Cases may be conceived in which a sajjadanashin or a spiritual head of a Hindu institution, say for instance, a mahant of a sangat, may so behave himself that his very connection with the institution may be repulsive to the general public and may amount to desecration of the sacred places; I see no reason why the Courts cannot interfere in such cases Syed Shah Muhammad Kazim v. Syed Ali Saghir (3)."

Their Lordships are aware that no general rule can be laid down befitting the different kinds of religious heads of varying sanctity and eminence. It must depend upon the facts of each case. It may be that mere mismanagement or incapacity is, in the case of certain high dignitaries, not ordinarily sufficient for their removal from the performance of their religious duties, as distinct from their duties as managers of the properties of the institution. It may also be that a Court, in certain cases, exercises a wise discretion in not directing their total exclusion from their religious office, where, e. g., the lapses are due to causes like a misconception of their position or obligations. The Court may sometimes not order their total removal, but may associate with them a committee of management. But these are all matters for the consideration of the Civil Court, which must necessarily enjoy a wide discretion to decide what form of punitive or ameliorative order will suit the requirements of the case. But the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts to decide such questions can no longer be doubted.

The true rule in such matters can be stated to be that if it be found by the Court that the functionary, in the exercise of his duties, has put himself in a position in which the Court thinks that the obligations of his office in connection with the endowment can no longer be faithfully discharged without danger to the endowment, that is a sufficient ground for his removal, if need be, from both his offices.

Their Lordships' attention was invited to certain rulings both of this Board and the High Courts in India, which enumerate and distinguish between the two sets of functions—secular and religious—performed by such religious heads. These rulings, in their Lordships' opinion, merely enumerate and classify such functions. None of them has proceeded so far as to lay down that in cases like the one before their Lordships, where both the functions are intermingled and interdependent and have always been held and performed throughout the long history of the endowment by the same individual, the Court in a fit case will not have the power to remove the individual from the performance of both the functions.

The appellant's Counsel conceded, at an early stage of his argument, that the temple in this suit was a trust for public purposes of a charitable or religious nature within the purview of s. 92 of the Civil P. O. If so, it cannot be doubted that the entire office of mahant, which according to the admission of the parties and the evidence in the case is and has always been indivisible and held by the same individual, falls within the operation of this section. No words are to be found either in s. 92 or elsewhere excluding the religious part of the mahant's duties from the operation of that section. The only limit to the Court's jurisdiction to entertain suits under that section is to be found in the provisions of s. 9 of the Civil P. O. but, for reasons already explained, the spiritual portion of the office in this case—assuming that it could be separated from the secular—is so intimately connected with the exercise of rights to property that a suit relating to it cannot be said to be outside the purview of s. 9.

Perhaps the most vital consideration which their Lordships are unable to ignore is the fact that s. 92 has been construed, by a long course of Indian decisions, as conferring, in fit cases, jurisdiction on Civil Courts to deal with the religious side of such offices. This interpretation has a sound basis; no reason has been shown against it and their Lordships are unwilling to take a narrower view of the section, which may make it inadequate to meet Indian conditions.

A grievance was made by the appellant's Counsel that the Courts in India were in error in not giving directions in the decree that the appointment of a successor to the appellant in the office of mahant was to be in conformity with the customs and usages of the endowment. The record of the appeal which is before the Board supplies no reason for imagining that the new mahant was appointed in violation of such usages. He is not a party to the appeal nor is the scheme, which embodies the rules regulating such appointment, before the Board. It is not, therefore, possible to deal with this question.

It now remains to deal with the plaintiffs respondents' cross-appeal. It relates to the accountability of the appellant for his dealings with the trust properties. It is contended that, on the concurrent findings of the Courts in India that the appellant has been systematically misappropriating the property of the endowment, an order for accounts on the basis of wilful default ought to have been passed by the High Court. Their Lordships are clearly of the view that the evidence leaves no doubt that the appellant has rendered himself accountable for the various acts of malversation and breaches of trust committed in the course of his management. But, as the learned Judges of the High Court have pointed out, there are difficulties in passing at this stage a decree for accounts against the appellant. A scheme for the management of the endowment has been framed which is not before their Lordships. A new mahant has been appointed and has taken over charge of the endowment. He is not represented here. Intricate questions of law requiring careful consideration will arise in the course of the determination of this issue and, in their Lordships' opinion, having regard to all these considerations, it is desirable to leave this question to be determined by the new mahant, who will have liberty to apply to the District Judge for the trial of this issue. In doing so, he may consult, if he so desires, those who are associated with him in the management of the institution, but it will be his exclusive responsibility to proceed with the matter or not. Instead of being driven to a separate suit, the new mahant will be permitted to have this question determined by an application in this suit, after he has had sufficient time to consider the question in the light of the Board's decision of this appeal. The respondents' Counsel has agreed to this course.

Their Lordships will, therefore, humbly advise His Majesty that the decree of the High Court be affirmed and the appeal dismissed. The appellant will pay the costs of the respondents who appeared of this appeal. The respondents' cross appeal will be dismissed, and they will bear a twenty-fifth share of the costs of the main appeal payable by the appellant.

Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), s. 7, Sch. I, Art. 1—Art. 1 imposes liability and is not merely auxiliary to s. 7—Cross-objection—Court-fees on.

Article 1 of Sch. I, Court Fees Act, is not merely auxiliary to s. 7 because, the Schedules to the Act, when read with ss. 4 and 6 of the Act, do impose a liability. Section 7 refers only to suits and, in certain cases specifically mentioned, memoranda of appeal. The fees chargeable in respect of all other documents are those laid down in the Schedules to the Act, liability being imposed by the Schedules read with s. 4 or s. 6 as the case may be. Nepal Rai v. Debi Prasad (1) and Reference under Court Fees Act, 1870 (2), referred to.

A cross-objection must be chargeable with a court-fee calculated ad valorem on the amount of "the subject-matter in dispute." "The subject-matter in dispute" means the subject-matter in dispute in the cross-objection. 85 Ind. Cas. 257 (3), relied on.

Mr. Rajagopal for the Advocate-General, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Clark and P. B. Sen, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—The question referred to me for decision, under the provisions of s. 5, Court Fees Act, arises out of a cross-objection which has been filed by the respondents in Civil First Appeal No. 144 of 1937. The suit out of which this appeal arises was a suit for the administration of the estate of a deceased person and accounts. By the preliminary decree the respondents (who were the defendants), have been ordered to pay to the appellants, (who were the plaintiffs) a sum of Rs. 2,380 as special costs in any event, the ordinary costs being ordered to abide the passing of the final decree. The cross-objection contains seven grounds. The first four grounds relate to the findings in the suit. The remaining three grounds relate to the order that the respondents shall in any event pay this amount of special costs to the appellants. The taxing master has held that the cross-objection so far as it relates to these special costs is chargeable with court-fees ad valorem on the amount of the costs, viz., Rs. 2,380, under Art. 1 of Sch. I, Court Fees Act; but at the request of the respondents he has made a reference under s. 5 of the Act.

The argument which had been advanced on behalf of the respondents is that Sch. I, Court Fees Act, does not impose any liability and that it must be read in relation to s. 7 by which the liability is imposed, that is that s. 7 is the charging section and Art. 1 of Sch. I is merely auxiliary to that section. I am unable to accede to this argument, because, in my opinion, it is clear that the Schedules to the Act, when read with ss. 4 and 6 of the Act, do impose a liability. Section 7 refers only to suits and, in certain cases specifically mentioned, memoranda of appeal. The fees chargeable in respect of all other documents are those laid down in the Schedules to the Act, liability being imposed by the Schedules read with s. 4 or s. 6 as the case may be. See on this point Nepal Rai v. Debi Prasad (1) at p. 449 and Reference under Court Fees Act, 1870 (2) at p. 369. Now, the only place in the Court Fees Act where cross-objections are mentioned is Art. 1 of Sch. I, Column 1 of this Article reads as follows:

"1. Plaint: written statement pleading a set-off or counter-claim, or memorandum of appeal (not otherwise provided for in this Act) or of cross-objection presented to any Civil or Revenue Court except those mentioned in s. 3:"

(1) 27 A 447 at p. 449; 2 A L J 105; A W N 1905; 40.

(2) 29 M 867 at p. 369; 16 M L J 287.

and Column 2 reads: "when the amount or value of the subject-matter in dispute . . ." Consequently, it is clear that a cross-objection must be chargeable with a court-fee calculated ad valorem on the amount of 'the subject-matter in dispute.' With the greatest respect, I agree with the observations of Robinson, C. J. in Ma Shin v. Maung Shwe Hnit (3) at page 640 where he says:

"In my opinion it is wrong to assume that the words 'amount or value of the subject-matter in dispute' mean, in reference to a cross-objection, 'the amount or value of the subject-matter in dispute in the suit'".

In my view 'the subject-matter in dispute' means the subject-matter in dispute in the cross-objection. The subject matter in dispute in this cross-objection is clearly whether the special costs awarded are to be payable by the respondents to the appellants in any event. The appellants expect to be paid these special costs irrespective of the final result of the suit. The respondents, on the other hand, hold that these special costs should abide by the final decree in the suit. Hence, so far as the grounds raised in the last three paragraphs of the cross-objection are concerned, a court-fee calculated ad valorem under Art. 1, Sch. I, is payable by the respondents on the amount of the special costs, viz. Rs. 2,380.

OHHOTELAL—DEFENDANT—APPELLANT

GOPALDAS—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT

Partnership Act (IX of 1932), s. 69—Suit by plaintiff in respect of money due to him from defendant on basis of transactions in unregistered partnership between them—Partnership claimed to be dissolved before suit—Sum specified—Suit, if maintainable.

The language of sub-ss. (1) and (2) of s. 69, Partnership Act, is wide enough to cover suits relating to a dissolved firm and sub-s (1) covers a suit by a plaintiff suing in respect of a right vested in him or acquired by him as a partner in a firm, and it is not essential that the firm should be actually in existence at the date when the suit was instituted. The words in sub s. (1) "suing as a partner in a firm" include a suit on a cause of action which is based on a right acquired solely as a partner in a firm, and where the firm was unregistered, no such suit can be brought.

The plaintiff sued the defendant in respect of money which he alleged was due to him on the basis of transactions in an unregistered partnership into which he and the defendant had entered. It was claimed that the partnership was dissolved and that on a calculation, as the venture had been unprofitable, the defendant owed the plaintiff a specified sum of money :

Held, that the suit was barred under s. 69, Partnership Act. 189 Ind. Cas. 424 (1), relied on.

S. A. from the appellate decree of the Court of the District Judge, Nimar, dated March 9, 1937.

Mr. V. V. Kelkar, for the Appellant.

Mr. K. B. Tare, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—The plaintiff sued the defendant in respect of money which he alleged was due to him on the basis of transactions in an unregistered partnership into which he and the defendant and one other had entered for the sale of cotton seed. Profit and loss were to be shared equally, and the capital was advanced by the plaintiff in the shape of calculation of the amount used with interest. No capital appears actually to have been provided since the business was to be done on the basis of a number of pallas of cotton and the capital was to be calculated on the cost of the cotton dealt with in this specified quantity. Profits were to be shared equally and so were losses. It is claimed that the partnership was dissolved and that on a calculation, as the venture had been unprofitable, the defendant owed the plaintiff a specified sum of money.

The defence was that the terms of s. 69 of the Partnership Act rendered the suit untenable as the partnership was unregistered. Both the Courts below have concurred, although for different reasons, in holding that s. 69 of the Indian Partnership Act afforded no bar and decreed the plaintiff's claim. This is a second appeal by the defendant.

The trial Court assumed that the suit was one for accounts of a dissolved firm and held that there was no bar as s. 69 (3) of the Indian Partnership Act provided that the provisions of sub-ss. (1) and (2) should not affect the enforcement of any right to sue for accounts of a dissolved firm (sub-s. (3) (a) of s. 69). The lower Appellate Court considered the reasoning of the trial Court wrong in that the suit was not for accounts of a dissolved firm. It held, however, that the section could have no application as sub-ss. (1) and (2) deal only with subsisting firms and sub-s. (3) with firms which had been dissolved before the institution of the suit. The firm now in question is such a firm, but the learned Judge has considered that as the sum due to the plaintiff was already ascertained after the dissolution of the partnership, the relations between the parties were those of creditor and debtor. The learned Judge interprets the first two sub-sections of s. 69 as relating in the present tense alone and considers it essential for these two sub-sections to operate that "firm" should be "existing firm."

Only one case has been cited before me in the course of arguments, and that has been cited by the learned Counsel for the appellant, and it is a case which appears to me to be entirely in point. It is Patel v. Husseinbhai Mohammad (1) where Beaumont, C. J. held that the language of sub-ss. (1) and (2) of s. 69 is wide enough to cover suits relating to a dissolved firm and that sub-s. (1) covers a suit by a plaintiff suing in respect of a right vested in him or acquired by him as a partner in a firm, and that it is not essential that the firm, should be actually in existence at the date when the suit was instituted. The facts are parallel to those in the case now before me, and I am in respectful agreement with the view there enunciated. I do not consider that the scheme of the Act, is, as the learned District Judge holds, that the first two sub-sections only apply where the firm is still in existence and the last to firms which are not in existence. The scheme rather appears to me to be this : It is impossible to legislate entirely against unregistered partnerships, but the intention of the Legislature was to discourage non-registration as far as possible; to prohibit the enforcement of any right to sue for the dissolution of a firm, even though unregistered, or for accounts in the case of an unregistered firm which had been dissolved, would not have been practicable since the moneys in possession of such a firm would not then be amenable to any realisation after the firm had in fact been dissolved, or the affairs of the firm were in such a state as to render dissolution in fact inevitable. It is for this reason that sub-s. 3 (a) has been enacted. But it does not follow that a claim in respect of an ascertained sum, a sum which could only be ascertained on the terms of the partnership, should come within this necessarily excepted catalogue of rights to sue, and I am of opinion that the words in sub-s. (1) "suing as a partner in a firm" include a suit on a cause of action which is based on a right acquired solely as a partner in a firm, and as the present firm was unregistered, no such suit can, in my judgment, be brought. The argument which has been addressed to me on behalf of the respondent relating to the fact that the case was sought to be brought in the Court of Small Causes, which in view of the entry in Art. 29 (c) of Sch. II of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act declined to try it and remitted the suit for trial by a regular Court is, in my opinion, irrelevant and not in any way germane to the question whether the suit is barred by s. 69 of the Indian Partnership Act or no. As I propose to reverse the decision in the Courts below, the question of the action taken under s. 35 (a) of the Civil P. O. will not need any discussion.

The appeal succeeds, the decree of the lower Appellate Court is reversed and the plaintiff's suit is dismissed. The plaintiff will pay the defendant-appellant's costs throughout.

Succession Act (XXXIX of 1925), s. 302—Application under, to recover annuity payable under will—Maintainability—Will—Absolute estate given by testator to his widow—Direction to widow to pay certain annuity—Validity of such bequest—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Arts. 123, 120—Application to recover annuity under will—Article applicable.

An application under s. 302, Succession Act to recover an annuity payable under a will is maintainable. 159 Ind. Cas. 329 (1), referred to.

Where a testator by his will gives an absolute estate to his widow and the will contains directions to the widow that it would be proper on her part to pay a certain amount annually to a certain institution out of the income of the property and that the said amount shall all along be continued to be paid every year by the widow, the condition does not cut down the estate and the bequest to the institution is not invalid.

Article 123, Lim. Act, applies to an application for recovering an annuity payable under a will and not Art. 120. 151 Ind. Cas. 283 (3), followed.

App. for annual payment to the Nalanda College of Rs. 700 which was provided by the will of Babu Jadunandan Prasad Singh deceased of village Murawra, P. S. Bihar, District Patna, to the trustees of the College.

Mr. C. P. Sinha, for the Petitioners.

Dr. D. N. Mitter and Mr. B. N. Mitter, for the Opposite Party.

Judgment—This is an application taken out under s. 302 of the Indian Succession Act with regard to annuity payable under a will dated February 19 1930. The testator died in the same year, indeed the next day, leaving an absolute estate to his widow subject to a payment to the petitioning College of a sum of Rs. 700 per annum. The relevant words in the will are :

"It shall be 'proper' on the part of the Musammat to continue to pay, after my demise, a sum of Rs. 700 (seven hundred rupees) out of the income of my properties to the Nalanda College at Bihar annually and make over every year a sum of Rs. 700 to the Trustees of the said college for expenses of the school department" and then follows "and this amount of rupees seven hundred shall all along be continued to be paid every year by the said Musammat."

The first point taken was the question of jurisdiction and it was contended that the application did not lie under s. 302 of the Indian Succession Act which contains provisions merely for the purpose of determining questions raised by the executor or trustees calling the assistance of the Court as regards the administration of the estate. At first I felt inclined to hold that that was the correct view to be taken of s. 302; but it seems to me perfectly clear that this point has been decided, if not directly, by inference, by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Secretary of State for India-in-Council v. Srimati Parijat Debi (1). One of the main questions which came to be decided in that case was whether it was necessary for the applicant, who was the mother of a beneficiary under the will, was bound to take out a succession certificate, as against a debtor under s. 214 of the Indian Succession Act. It was held by the Courts in India and by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee that the Administrator-General of Bengal, against whom the application was made was not a debtor within the meaning of that section.

I said that the matter of s. 302 was decided by inference if not expressly. The short answer to the case would have been that the application did not lie under the section. But their Lordships expressly mentioned the section and there was no argument suggesting that the application could not be maintained. It may be that I am not correctly stating the decision of their Lordships with regard to s. 302, as it would appear at p. 73* of the Report that this very question was at least mentioned. Their Lordships observed as follows:

"Their Lordships are of opinion that there is nothing in the order of Costello, J. dated March 17, 1931, which does not come within the material words of s. 302" and then quoting:

"in regard to the estate or in regard to the administration thereof."

Dr. Mitter, who appears on behalf of the person who is entitled to the absolute estate in this property, does not seriously contend that the decision to which I have referred is not an authority on this point. I overrule, therefore, the objection with regard to s. 302 of the Indian Succession Act.

The second contention is that the bequest contained in para. 5 of the will is invalid, or, in the alternative, merely a pious wish on the part of the testator, and therefore not binding on the widow. There was some suggestion that the translation is not correct. In Appeal from Original Decree No. 11 of 1934, where the matter of probate came before this Court, the will is translated in these words:

"It shall be 'incumbant &c.' Dr. Mitter would ask me to construe the clause in this way; it shall be 'proper' on the part of the Musammat." But even had it been open to me to do that, I would still have the clause which I have already read and which is in para. 5 of the will to this effect: "and this amount of rupees seven hundred shall all along be continued to be paid every year".

But it is not open to me to put the construction which Dr. Mitter suggests on the clause of the will. If there is any objection on the part of the respondent to the only translation of the will which is before me, there is a certain procedure to adopt to have the matter put right. That procedure has not been adopted, and I am unable to accept the suggestion made by Dr. Mitter in this behalf.

The question whether the estate is cut down by para. 5 does not seem to me to arise. It is a misconception to say that the absolute estate in all the properties given to the widow is cut down by such directions as are contained in para. 5 of the will. The absolute estate is still there, and, if I may use the expression (which is not strictly applicable to this country) the fee simple is in the widow, but subject to certain conditions which in this case is a payment of Rs. 700 per annum to the college which payment does not cut down the estate. Therefore, in my judgment, it could not be said that the bequest to the college is invalid. The question whether this is merely a pious wish on the part of the testator has already been dealt with by me with regard to the matter of translation. If the words in the will are "it shall be incumbent" and later "this amount shall all along be continued to be paid," there is no doubt that there is an obligation on the part of the widow to pay over to the college this annual sum of Rs. 700.

Some argument was addressed to me on s. 173 of the Indian Succession Act which provides:

"Where an annuity is created by a will, the legatee is entitled to receive it for his life only, unless a contrary intention appears by the will."

I must say with great respect to Dr. Mitter I fail to see what connection that has with the will before me. There is no question arising as to the validity of the gift being a gift to the college, and therefore, in my judgment, that part of the case necessarily fails.

A further argument was presented under s. 114 of the Act and it was contended that the bequest in cl. 5 of the will was invalid as it would vest beyond the period provided for by the section. Section 114 provides:

"No bequest is valid whereby the vesting of the thing bequeathed may be delayed beyond the lifetime of one or more persons living at the testator's death and the minority of some person who shall be in existence at the expiration of that period."

In other words, it is the rule against perpetuity. There is no question here that the bequest vests beyond the lifetime of one or more persons living but immediately upon the death of the testator. It is first contended that the annual sum of Rs. 700 is not chargeable upon the corpus of the estate but merely on its income. The argument as I understand it is that the widow has not at the present moment in her possession the arrears which were payable as from the date of the probate of the will. It is impossible for me to deal with the question because it does not arise. The petitioners here (who are trustees) are not asking for a charge on the corpus of the estate, but merely for a payment over of the annuity payable under the terms of the will. Whether it is a charge on the income of the property or not in these circumstances, as I have already stated, does not arise. The decision of the Court of Appeal in England in Re Collier's Deed Trusts: Collier v. Collier (2) was relied upon. At the moment in any event I need not trouble myself with the question, because as I have already stated, it does not arise.

The last point is the question of limitation. Shortly stated, Dr. Mitter's argument is that Art. 120 of the Lim. Act applies, as the word "annuity" does not occur in Art. 123 which reads:

"For legacy or for a share of a residue bequeathed by a testator, or for a distributive share of the property of an intestate."

It certainly was not the last, it might be the second and certainly not the first, because this is not a legacy but an annuity. I see the force of the argument addressed to me in this regard, but the matter has been finally disposed of by a case which, so far as I am concerned, is binding on me. I refer to the decision of Manohar Lall, J. in Srimati Hemangini Devi v. Anil Krishna Banerjee (3). That was a case of annuity and it was held by the Court that Art. 123 of the Lim. Act applied. Until that decision is reversed—a decision which, as I have already said, is binding on me, the point taken by Dr. Mitter cannot be entertained.

In the result, the petitioners, who are trustees of the Nalanda College in Bihar, are entitled to a direction against the Musammats (Mst. Dulhin Kishore Kuer, the widow and the executrix) for the payment over of the sum of Rs. 700 per annum from February 20, 1930, with interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum under s. 353.

The petitioners are entitled to costs: the hearing-fee is assessed at five gold mohurs.

Order accordingly.

Malabar Law—Tarwad—Right of member to sue for removal of karnavan—Other members, if should be joined—Petition by one for leave to sue in forma pauperis to remove karnavan—Fact that suit would result in other member functioning as karnavan—Petition, if not bona fide.

Every member of a tarwad has a right to see that the tarwad affairs are conducted by the karnavan properly, and if he finds that a karnavan has not been acting in the interests of the tarwad, he would have a right to sue for his removal. In such a suit other members need not be joined as plaintiffs. It is obvious, however, that when a member sues a karnavan for his removal, he is trying to enforce a right in which he is interested with the other members of the tarwad jointly, and he would apparently be doing so not only in his individual interest but in the interest of all the members of the tarwad as well or at all events he is taking a step which will not affect him alone but the other members of the tarwad also. It is, therefore, only proper that if he has not filed the suit in a representative capacity, he should implead them as parties to the action.

Where a member of a tarwad makes a petition for leave to sue in forma pauperis to remove the karnavan, the petition cannot be held to be not bona fide, merely because, as a result of the success of the suit, the other member would have to function as karnavan.

O. K. P. to revise order of the Sub-Judge, Tellicherry, in O. P. No. 15 of 1936.

Mr. D. A. Krishna Wariar, for the Petitioner.

Messrs. O. T. G. Nambiar and A. Achutha Menon, for the Respondents.

Order.—This is a petition for revision against the order passed by the Subordinate Judge of Tellicherry granting leave to the petitioner to sue as a junior member of a Malabar tarwad for the removal of a karnavan from his office and for certain other incidental reliefs in forma pauperis. It has not been contended before me that the petitioner, who is student in the Zamorin's College at Calcut, is in a position to pay the requisite court-fees. Learned Counsel for the petitioner has confined his attack mainly on the grounds that the petition discloses no cause of action, and even if it did, the petition should be held not to have been presented in good faith, the object of the petition is to ne-defendant No. 3 to become a karnavan and not for securing any benefit to the petitioner for himself. In other words, the petitioner is alleged to have been instigated by defendant No. 3 to fight his cause and it has been contended that it would be wholly against public policy to permit him so to do.

In order to substantiate his argument that the petition disclosed no cause of action, Mr. Krishna Wariar contended that a junior member of a tarwad had no right to maintain an action for the removal of a karnavan and he could do so only in conjunction with all the other members of the tarwad against whom no relief was sought in the suit. No satisfactory answer was given when a question was put to him as to what would happen if the other members of the tarwad happened to have either conspired with the karnavan or did not wish to array themselves as plaintiffs either because they took no interest in the affairs of the tarwad or were not inclined to exhibit any hostility to the karnavan openly. Reliance was placed in this connection by the Counsel for the petitioner on certain observations made by Mr. Sundara Ayyar in his work on Malabar Law (Ch. 7), where the learned author has referred to the members of the tarwad in plural wherever he has stated that they had a right to sue for the removal of a karnavan. I was not impressed by this argument. Every member of a tarwad has a right to see that the tarwad affairs are conducted by the karnavan properly, and if he finds that a karnavan has not been acting in the interests of the tarwad, he would have a right to sue for his removal. What the learned author was trying to convey to his readers was that the right to maintain an action for removal of a karnavan vested in the members of the tarwad; but there is no justification to construe those words to mean that they could only do so jointly. It is obvious, however, that when a member sues a karnavan for his removal, he is trying to enforce a right in which he is interested with the other members of the tarwad jointly, and he would apparently be doing so not only in his individual interest but in the interest of all the members of the tarwad as well or at all events he is taking a step which will not affect him alone but the other members of the tarwad also. It is therefore only proper that if he has not filed the suit in a representative capacity, he should implead them as parties to the action. It is not denied that all the other members of the tarwad are parties to the suit. I am therefore of opinion that the plaintiff has a locus standi to maintain the suit and it cannot be held that the plaint discloses no cause of action.

There is no merit in the other objection either. If the petitioner has a right to sue for the removal of the karnavan, what does it matter if as a result of his success, defendant No. 3 or anyone else would have to function as such? If a particular karnavan has failed to act in accordance with the well-recognized rules and custom and has behaved in a manner that justifies his removal and the next member — let me assume this for the sake of argument — is found not to be fit enough to act as a karnavan, the office will have to devolve on the next person in the order of precedence in the ordinary course. In the absence of any other reliable evidence, it is impossible to come to the conclusion, as the learned Counsel for the petitioner wants me to do, that this circumstance alone is sufficient for a finding that the petition for leave to bring the suit in forma pauperis is not bona fide. It was alleged on behalf of the contesting defendant that the petitioner had entered into an agreement in regard to the subject-matter of the proposed suit. After a full consideration of the evidence led on behalf of the parties, the lower Court came to the conclusion that the contention had not been made out. Had it been found that this petition was filed in consequence of an arrangement or agreement as alleged by defendant No. 1, one would be called upon to determine whether the agreement related to the subject-matter of the proposed suit. But in the absence of a finding of fact in favour of defendant No. 1, it is unnecessary for me to take that aspect of the case into consideration. In the circumstances, it must be held that the petition for leave to sue in forma pauperis has not been filed in bad faith. A number of authorities were cited on behalf of the petitioner before me but inasmuch as there is no valid reason to hold that the petition before the lower Court was not bona fide, they need not be referred to here.

The contentions that the petition for leave to file the suit in forma pauperis was not made bona fide or that it would be against public policy for the petitioner to be permitted to sue in that form are based on the assumptions that the petitioner is not alone entitled to maintain an action even in his own interest and for his own benefit, and secondly, that he is doing so to help defendant No. 3. There appears to be no reasonable basis for these assumptions and the petition for revision must, therefore, be rejected with costs.

Petition dismissed.

Criminal Reference No. 41 of 1939

THE MUZAFFERPUR MUNICIPALITY—
versus

TARA PRASAD AND OTHERS

Bihar and Orissa Municipal Act (VII of 1923), ss. 259 (1) (3), 264, 354—Resolutions by Municipality under power conferred by s. 259 (1) and (3) requiring licences and fixing its fee for working surkhi mill—Whether rules or bye-laws—If require confirmation under s. 354—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 438—Reference to be decided on basis of position on date of proceedings.

Resolutions passed by a Municipality under powers conferred by s. 259 (1) and (3), Bihar and Orissa Municipal Act fixing local limits and requiring licences to be taken out in respect of working a surkhi mill are not matters of the same nature as the matters to be provided for by bye-laws under s. 264, and can neither be regarded as bye-laws nor as rules, but are of the nature of an order applying a section of the Act. Hence these orders did not require under s. 354 of the Municipal Act to be confirmed by the Local Govt. as a condition precedent to their taking effect. [p. 631, col. 2.]

A reference made under s. 438, Criminal P. C., is to be decided on the basis of the position as it was on the date when the proceedings began. [p. 632, col. 1.]

Or. Ref. made by the District Magistrate of Muzafferpur, in his letter No. G-6412, dated September 18, 1939.

Mr. Baldeva Sahay, for the Reference.

Mr. Hareshwar Prasad Sinha, against the Reference.

Judgment.—This is a reference by the District Magistrate of Muzafferpur under s. 438 of the Criminal P. C. asking this Court to revise the judgment and order of a Magistrate of the Third Class in Muzafferpur whereby the accused Tara Prasad was acquitted of an offence, punishable under s. 263 read with s. 259 of the Bihar and Orissa Municipal Act, consisting in the keeping without a licence within the Muzafferpur Municipality of a place used for the trade or business of a surkhi mill.

It is not denied that the opposite party had been for some time past working a surkhi mill within the Municipality and was operating his surkhi mill in the month of March 1939, in which the present complaint was presented. There was formerly no prohibition under s. 259 of the keeping of a surkhi mill within the Municipality without a licence. It is not one of the trades or businesses referred to in s. 259, sub-s. (1), cls. (i) to (xiii), but the section can be made applicable to other manufactures, processes or businesses which are declared by the Local Govt. by notification to be dangerous or offensive under cl. (xiv). In pursuance of this clause the Local Govt. by Notification 1181 L. S. G. dated March 15, 1937, declared that the running of surkhi mills was offensive. The notification was duly published. As a result of this the provisions of s. 259, sub-s. (1) became operative, that is to say, it was now within the power of the Commissioners at a meeting to fix local limits within which no place might be used for the purpose mentioned without a licence. In that connection sub-s. (3) of s. 259 also became operative whereby the Commissioners at a meeting became empowered, subject to a maximum to be fixed by the Local Govt. to levy a fee. The Local Govt. fixed as maximum fee for such a licence the sum of Rs. 100 by Notification 1182 L. S. G., dated March 15, 1937. The Commissioners at a meeting held on July 29, 1938, resolved that within the whole area of the Municipality no place was to be used for a surkhi mill without a licence. They also resolved that the fee for a license for a surkhi mill should be Rs. 100. These proceedings of the Municipal Commissioners are said to have been published and it is certain that the opposite party, the present accused, had knowledge of them, for there are on the record two petitions by way of protest, one presented by this opposite party alone and one by himself and some other owners of surkhi mills, against the magnitude of the fee. The point raised in the trial Court which succeeded there was that the resolutions of the Municipality which require licences to be taken out for running surkhi mills and which fixed the fee to be levied are rules framed by the Municipal Commissioners to which s. 354 of the Municipal Act is applicable. In this Court for the respondent it has been contended that they are rules or bye-laws, and in either case subject to the provisions of s. 354. That section enacts in two subsections that the power of the Commissioners to make rules and to make bye-laws shall be subject to the condition of such rules not taking effect until they have been confirmed by the Local Govt. In the case of bye-laws, previous publication and Gazette publication are also conditions precedent to the taking effect of the bye-laws. But the fixing of local limits (s. 259, sub-s. (1)) is not the making of a rule. It is more of the nature of an order applying a section of the Act. The nature of a rule under the Act can in general be gathered from a reference to the various sections in which the rule-making power is conferred. Such sections occur in various parts of the Act which is thus arranged that power to make rules governing a particular subject is placed at the end of that part or chapter of the Act dealing with the particular subject. Thus we find the Local Govt. is given power to make rules regulating Municipal fund and accounts in s. 81 which is at the end of Chap. III, power to make rules in connection with assessment and collection of taxes under s. 163 which is at the end of Chap. IV, power to make rules regarding drainage schemes, water works, etc., under s. 325 which is at the end of Chap. IX; and so on. The Commissioners are given power to make rules in ss. 38, 42 and 52, and these rules deal with limited matters affecting the internal administration of the Municipality and its office. Thus s. 38 authorises rules for pensions and Provident Funds of Municipal servants, Section 42 authorises rules as to the duty, appointment, punishment and removal of municipal officers and servants, and s. 52 authorises rules governing the election of Chairman, Vice-Chairman and President of Municipal meetings and the conduct of business. So, the order making a licence necessary for owners of surkhi mills is not in any way analogous to any of the rules which either the Local Govt. or the Commissioners at a meeting are authorised by the Act to make, and I am quite clear that such an order is not a rule at all.

Now I turn to the alternative submissions put forward here that the order is to be regarded as a bye-law. The scheme of the Act in the matter of empowering the Commissioners to make bye-laws is somewhat similar to that in the matter of powers to make rules; that is to say, at a number of places in the Act power is given to make bye-laws dealing with a particular subject such as in s. 153 for the registration of dogs, in s. 195 to make bye laws for the regulation of buildings, in s. 234 to make bye-laws regulating the use of public water supply, and so on. The power to make bye-laws in connection with offensive and dangerous trades, occupations or processes is conferred by s. 264, and the bye-laws which may be made under this section may provide for inspection and regulation of the conduct of business in a place used for any of the purposes mentioned in s. 259 and also generally for the prevention of nuisance affecting the public health, safety or convenience. The order requiring licences to be taken out and the order fixing a fee in respect of the licences are not matters of the same nature as the matters to be provided for by bye-laws under s. 264, and in my view, these orders can no more be regarded as bye-laws than they can be regarded as rules. The resolutions were passed not under the powers conferred by s. 264 but under the powers conferred by s. 259, sub-s. (1) and s. 259, sub-s. (3). That being so, these orders did not require under s. 354 of the Municipal Act to be confirmed by the Local Govt. as a condition precedent to their taking effect. It follows from this that to use any place without a licence for the purposes of a surkhi mill within the Muzafferpur Municipality is an offence within s. 263, sub-s. (1) of the Bihar and Orissa Municipal Act. This may be sufficient to dispose of the point of law directly raised in the reference so far as the requirement of taking out a licence was concerned and the contention that this requirement had not become effective in law for want of confirmation by the Local Govt.

A further point has been argued with reference to a resolution taken at the same meeting of the Municipal Commissioners imposing certain conditions on the grant of a licence. It was resolved by the Municipal Commissioners that conditions be imposed on the grant of licences to the effect that no mill of the aforesaid nature shall be erected within the Municipal limit if it lies within a distance of 300 yards from the nearest habitation. Other conditions included provision for proper arrangements for effective removal of all offensive or unwholesome matter for inspection by Municipal Officers and for keeping raw materials safe from damp or rain. These are matters of the kind which s. 264 empowers the Commissioners to regulate by bye-laws; and had this been a prosecution for breach of those conditions, under s. 263 (2) the question might arise whether their confirmation by the Local Govt. was necessary to make them effective. But this being a prosecution under s. 263 (1) the question does not arise.

It is represented that the respondent, who in May 1939 in pursuance of an application by him for a licence remitted by money-order, the licence fee of Rs. 100 has been treated as ineligible for such a licence on the ground that the position of his mill is not beyond the distance of 300 yards from the nearest habitation, and I am asked to pronounce that the conditions laid down for the grant of licence are of the nature of rules or bye-laws, that they are ineffective unless and until confirmed by the Local Govt. and that this point is not unsubstantial because the Local Govt. itself in recommending the Municipalities to introduce licencing of oil, flour and surkhi mills had expressly cautioned Municipalities that the requirement of 300 yards clear distance from the nearest habitation ought to be enforced in the case of mills already existing. It is also suggested that to attach such a condition precedent to the grant of a licence is in contravention of sub-s. (2) of s. 259 which enacts that a licence for any of the purposes mentioned in sub-s. (1) is not to be withheld unless the Commissioners have reason to believe that the business which it is intended to establish or maintain would be offensive or dangerous to persons residing in or frequenting the immediate neighbourhood. The question of the propriety of a prosecution might arise if at the date of the institution of the proceedings before me the respondent's position had been that of a person who had applied and paid the fee for a licence which the Commissioners were not legally justified in withholding from him, on the ground that any restriction on the grant of licences in contravention of s. 259, sub-s. (2) would be ultra vires of the Commissioners. Had that been the position of the respondent, the argument might require serious consideration. But the respondent's application for a licence was not presented till after these proceedings against him had commenced and the present reference is to be decided on the basis of the position as it was on the date when the proceedings began. On that date if the respondent without having a licence and without having applied for a licence was carrying on the business of the surkhi mill, his legal liability under s. 263, sub-s. (1) cannot be negatived on the grounds given by the trial Magistrate.

It is further represented that though the respondent had not, before these proceedings started, applied for a licence, he had presented a petition for a reduction of the licence fee, and had not received orders on that petition. This fact does not alter the legal position, though it is open to him in the event of a conviction to put it forward as a matter to be considered in extenuation of the sentence to be passed.

The reference is accepted, the acquittal of the respondent is set aside, and the case remanded to the Sub-Deputy Magistrate, who will dispose of it according to law after giving the parties an opportunity of being heard and either party who may wish it, an opportunity of adducing further evidence.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 104—Private reference to arbitration—Subsequent application to Court under Para. 17 (1), Sch. II, Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), for filing agreement—Out of three arbitrators, two making one award and third making different award—Court finding majority award bad and refusing to make it decree—Appeal, if maintainable.

Certain persons after making a private reference to arbitration, made an application to the Court under para. 17 (1) of Sch. II of Civil P. C. that the agreement to refer to arbitration should be filed in Court. The Court dismissed the application, but on appeal under s. 104 (1) (d), Civil P. C., the High Court directed the application to be filed. There were three arbitrators. Two of them made one award and the third made another award. The Judge found that the award of the majority was bad. He accordingly refused to make that award a decree of the Court:

Held, that no appeal lay from the order of the Court. 34 Ind. Cas. 192 (1), dissented from. 28 Ind. Cas. 60 (2), referred to.

F. C. A. referred by Skemp, J., by his order, dated March 23, 1939.

Mr. Vishnu Datta, for the Appellants.

Mr. Jhanda Singh, for the Respondent.

Addison, J.—There was a private reference to arbitration made by the parties on May 1, 1937. On October 23, 1937, the appellants made an application to the Senior Subordinate Judge under para. 17 (1) of Sch. II, Civil P. C., that the agreement to refer should be filed in Court.

The application recited that the value of the subject-matter in dispute was Rs 5,110. On November 27, 1927, the Senior Subordinate Judge dismissed the application and there was an appeal to this Court under s. 104 (1) (d), Civil P. C. The Single Judge, who heard the appeal, directed the filing of the agreement in Court and the case went back to the Senior Subordinate Judge. There were three arbitrators. Two of them made one award and the third made another award. Objections were preferred and the Senior Subordinate Judge found that the award of the majority was bad. He accordingly refused to make that award a decree of the Court and then went on to say that he dismissed the petition under para. 17 of Sch. II, Civil P. C. Against this decision the appellants have preferred this appeal which has been referred to a Division Bench by a learned Judge of this Court. The part of the order of the Senior Subordinate Judge to the effect that he dismissed the application under para. 17 of Sch. II is obviously wrong. That had already been done by him at a previous stage but on appeal to this Court under s. 104 (1) (d) the agreement had been filed in Court and the Senior Subordinate Judge thereafter had directed the arbitrators to make their award. Now if after the agreement to refer to arbitration had been entered into, the arbitrators had made an award without the intervention of the Court and one of the parties had applied under para. 20 of Sch. II that the award should be filed in Court and the Senior Subordinate Judge had refused to do so, then undoubtedly an appeal would have lain under s. 104 (1) (f), which is to the effect that an order filing or refusing to file an award in an arbitration without the intervention of the Court is subject to appeal. Thus, if an agreement to refer is ordered to be filed or the Court refuses to file such an agreement put in under para. 17 of Sch. II, an appeal lies under s. 104 (d) while, if an award is put into Court under para. 20 and the Court either files it or refuses to file it, an appeal lies under s. 104 (f) as it was made without the intervention of the Court. The question, however, is whether an appeal lies in the present case where the award was made through proceedings taken in Court.

To answer this question, it is necessary to go to the provisions of Sch. II. Where an agreement to refer to arbitration is put into Court under para. 17 and the Court is asked to have it filed in Court, an appeal lies under s. 104 (1) (d), Civil P. C., if the award is filed or if the Court refuses to file it. That stage has passed in the present case. The next appropriate paragraph of Sch. II is para. 19, which enacts that the foregoing provisions (of Sch. II), so far as they are consistent with any agreement filed under para. 17, shall be applicable to all proceedings under the order of reference made by the Court under that paragraph, and to the award and to the decree following thereon. This paragraph therefore makes all the provisions prior to para. 19 of Sch. II applicable to proceedings in Court when an agreement is filed under para. 17. There is, of course, this difference; where there is a regular suit, it must either be decreed or dismissed; where there is a reference filed under para. 17, there can only be a decree if the award is held to be a good one. This did not happen in the present case as it was held that the award was bad. This takes us to para. 16 of Sch. II, which enacts that where a Court holds the award to be a good one, it shall proceed to pronounce judgment according to the award and upon the judgment so pronounced a decree shall follow, and no appeal shall lie from such decree, except in so far as the decree is in excess of, or not in accordance with the award. It follows from this that, if the trial Court had in the present case accepted the award as given and had pronounced judgment according thereto, no appeal would have lain on the merits. The only appeal that could have been made would have been that the decree was in excess of, or not in accordance with, the award. It would thus be anomalous that, where the award is held to be bad, an appeal should lie on the merits. The only other paragraph which need be referred to is para. 15 of Sch. II which provides for the grounds on which an award shall be set aside or become void and further enacts that where an award becomes void or is set aside under cl. (1), the Court shall make an order superseding the arbitration, and in such cases, shall proceed with the suit. This is all right for an ordinary suit and it is perfectly clear that in it no appeal would lie from the order superseding the arbitration. In the present case, as there is no regular suit, the order that the Court should have passed, should have been an order superseding the arbitration and stating that the proceedings had therefore become infructuous. No right of appeal is given under s. 104, Civil P. C. from such an order, and it is clear that no right of appeal was intended because it would be most improper not to allow an appeal except to the limited extent set out in para. 16 (2) of Sch. II when an award is held to be good and to allow an appeal when the award is held to be bad or void. In these circumstances it would seem to follow that no appeal lies.

The only difficulty is the decision given in Ram Jawaya Mal v. Devi Ditta Mal (1). There it was held that no appeal lay either under s. 104 (d) or (f), Civil P. C. but that an appeal lay from the order as that order amounted in law to a decree and was as such appealable. It seems to me with all respect that it is impossible to hold that the order superseding the arbitration under para. 15 (2) of Sch. II, which is the only order the Court could have passed, is a decree. It makes no difference that the Court has not used these words as under Para. 19, these are the words which the Court should have used in its order. Having superseded the arbitration, there was no suit to proceed with, so that the matter came to an end by the order superseding the arbitration, no appeal being allowed from that order. It is unnecessary to refer to other decisions on this matter except Seumal Nihal Chand v. Mulomal Rahumal, 28 Ind. Cas. 60 (2) where the matter is discussed at length. For the reasons given, I would dismiss this appeal as incompetent, making no order as to the costs of this Court.

Probate—Wide divergence in case put up in petition and case made in evidence—Strict scrutiny of will is required—Will—Attesting witness—Scribe, when can be attesting witness—Witness—Credibility—Old age, if guarantees truthfulness—Practice—Evidence—Question of appraising oral testimony of witness—Opinion of trial Court, value of.

Where the case of petitioners for grant of probate, carries certain elements of suspicion, the Court should, in such circumstances, insist on a very strict standard of proof, and ought not to make a grant unless it is satisfied that the suspicion has been removed. Where a wide divergence between the case put up and the case made in evidence is found, strictest scrutiny of will is required.

A scribe may no doubt be an attesting witness to a will but it must be shown that the signature of the scribe was put down for the purpose of attesting the document. 114 Ind. Cas. 84 (1), relied on. [p. 636, col. 1.]

The fact that a witness is an old man of 75, by itself carries no guarantee of truthfulness, if his evidence is otherwise unworthy of credence. [p. 636, col. 2.]

Where it is a question of appraising the oral testimony of a witness, the Court of Appeal will no doubt attach a great deal of importance to the opinion of trial Judge regarding the value of such testimony unless facts and circumstances render it unsafe to do so.

A. from the original decree of the District Judge, Rajshahi, dated May 27, 1936.

Messrs. Bireswar Bagchi and Binayak Nath Banerji, for the Appellants.

Mr. Mohendra Kumar Ghose, for the Respondents.

Mr. Suryya Kumar Aich, for the Deputy Registrar.

Biswas, J.—This is an appeal from a decision of the District Judge of Rajshahi granting letters of administration with copy of the will annexed. The substantial question in the appeal is whether the will is genuine or not. The will was propounded more than 33 years after the death of the testator. The testator was one Mayananda Goswami who died in or about the month of February 1903, and the will is said to have been executed five months before his death, namely on September 5, 1902. He left two widows, Shama Sundari and Khemankari, and three sons, one by the first wife, named Bipin, and the other two by his second wife, named Sures and Murari, who were both minors at the time. He also left two unmarried daughters. The will makes no provision for the marriage of these daughters and the whole object of it appears to be to ensure the due performance of the sheba of the family deity Sri Sri Iswar Lalji Deva Thakur and certain religious festivals. It recites that the properties of the testator shall remain in charge of his eldest son, and he is enjoined to perform the deb-sheba and the other religious services out of the income as also to maintain the minor sons, unmarried daughters and wives of the testator. It is then provided that after the minor sons came of age, all the three sons shall equally "inherit" the properties and carry on the deb-sheba, etc., out of the income. If the sons should fail or refuse to perform these religious duties, they shall not be entitled to enjoy the properties, and in that case, a near kinsman shall inherit the estate and carry on the deb-sheba. In the last clause it is laid down that none of his sons shall be entitled to sell, encumber or make a gift of any of the properties and that the properties shall not be liable to be sold in auction for their debts. The appellants suggest that the will made an absolute bequest in favour of the sons subject only to a charge for deb-sheba, etc., while the propounders contend that the properties were given away to the idol with only rights of management to the sons and rights of maintenance to the sons' daughters and wives. This is a question of construction of the will, and is pertinent in these proceedings only in so far as it may be supposed to throw any light on the question of its genuineness. As will be seen later, the respondents' own case in their application for letters of administration is that their object in propounding the will was to save the properties from the hands of creditors on the ground that the properties had been made debutter by the will. The will is attested by three witnesses, Pran Govinda Goswami, Gopal Chandra Sircar and Kedareshwar Chakrabarti, and the scribe is one Praneswar Chakrabarti, all residents of Bajurbhag, the village where the testator lived.

Of the sons of the testator, Sures and Murari both died before Bipin. They died unmarried and intestate, and left Bipin as their heir. Bipin died in 1931, leaving two sons, Birendra and Hirendra, who are the petitioners for the grant and respondents in this appeal. Birendra is a young lad of 19, and his brother Hirendra is much younger. In support of the execution of the will, the petitioners examined the scribe Praneswar, the attesting witnesses being all dead. It is mainly on the strength of the evidence of the scribe that the learned District Judge has made the grant. In a case where it is a question of appraising the oral testimony of a witness, the Court of Appeal will no doubt attach a great deal of importance to the opinion of trial Judge regarding the value of such testimony. All the same, there are certain facts and circumstances in this case which cannot be overlooked, and though the learned Judge relied on the evidence of Praneswar, we do not think it would be quite safe to act on that testimony. The petitioners' own case carries certain elements of suspicion, and it is hardly necessary to point out that the Court should, in such circumstances, insist on a very strict standard of proof, and ought not to make a grant unless it was satisfied that the suspicion had been removed.

In the first place, it is to be observed that there is a remarkable variance between pleading and proof. The application for letters of administration, again, is itself remarkable in this way that without attempting an explanation of the undoubted delay which had occurred in making it, it complacently stated that it had become necessary to put forward the will in order to defeat the claims of certain creditors. It is not the petitioners' case as set out in the application that they or their father had been unaware of the will until about the time when the application was made. On the other hand, the petition after reciting the fact of the execution of the will goes on to state in detail how Bipin, and after his death his sons, the petitioners themselves, had been acting as shebais and carrying on the worship and other services of the family deity in accordance with the directions of the will. Then at the end it is stated that one Jnanada Govinda Chaudhuri (the appellant before us) having recently obtained a mortgage decree in respect of a debt contracted by Bipin and put the mortgaged properties to sale in execution of such decree, it was necessary to try and protect the said properties on behalf of the debutter estate, and it was for this purpose that the will was being propounded. This case made in the petition is supported by an affidavit which was affirmed by the scribe Praneswar. In the affidavit also, it is categorically stated that Bipin and after him his sons were carrying on the deb-sheba, etc., as directed by the testator in his will. In the evidence which was led on behalf of the petitioners, however a new story was set up for the first time and it was to the effect that the will had been lying in a box unknown to the parties till quite by an accident it happened to come to light about the month of September 1935. We shall have occasion to refer to this later on; we are only concerned to point out at this stage why on the petitioners' own showing the case with which they come to Court demands the strictest scrutiny.

The learned Judge in our opinion allowed himself to be too easily satisfied about the reliability of the scribe. Praneswar is an old man of 80 or 81 years of age; he was deposing to events which had taken place more than 33 years ago, "might have been about 40 years back" according to his own statement. In his examination-in-chief he was very definite and stated that the testator had signed the will, then he signed it in his presence, and then it was signed by the attesting witnesses. In cross-examination, however his memory suddenly failed him, and he did not remember the details of the writing and entries of the will. He did not remember whether he had signed before or after the testator signed. In the will he describes himself as a scribe and his signature does not find a place among the signatures of the attesting witnesses. A scribe may no doubt be an attesting witness to a will as pointed out by Rankin, C. J. in Abinash Chandra v. Dasarath Malo (1), but it must be shown that the signature of the scribe was put down for the purpose of attesting the document. It is not clear from Praneswar's evidence that he had put his signature with any such object. In the affidavit he calls himself both a scribe and an attesting witness. This affidavit, we may point out, was admittedly signed and affirmed by him without knowing what it contained. On his attention being drawn to the last paragraph of the affidavit, he had to say that this part of the affidavit had not been brought to his notice before he signed it. Here was a man who on his own admission put his signature to an affidavit and swore to the truth of its contents without caring to find out what it was that he was swearing to. The learned Judge calls this "reprehensible" conduct, but did not think, it affected the credibility of the witness. We are afraid we cannot accept such an easy view. There is another important fact which was also admitted by him in his evidence and it is that he had lent some money to Sures and obtained a decree against him and then in execution of such decree, purchased Sures's one-third share in the dwelling house. This was clearly action on his part which, he should have known, was wholly contrary to the provisions of the will.

According to his reading of the will, the properties had been all bequeathed by the testator to the deity; how then could he, knowing that there was the will, have purchased the one-third share of the dwelling house as if it was the secular property of the testator's sons? On his own showing, therefore, he was a man who was prepared to say and do whatever it might suit his interest to say and do, and we should hesitate to accept the evidence of such a witness without the strictest scrutiny. The only reason which the learned Judge gives for believing Praneswar, is that he is an old man "on the brink of the grave." This is a fact which might excite sympathy for him, but we do not see how it can enhance his credibility in a Court of law. In cross-examination it was put to the witness that shortly after making the affidavit, he had taken a promissory note from Birendra, one of the petitioners, and one Kasi who was presumably the father-in-law of Birendra. This he did not deny, but he denied the suggestion that the promissory note was without monetary consideration. But it is difficult to dismiss the suggestion as altogether unfounded. According to his own statement he was himself a debtor to one Naren Pandit who had not yet been re-paid, and it was hardly likely in these circumstances that he should be advancing money to Birendra and Kasi for no particular reason. Taking all these facts into consideration, we are therefore unable to accept the evidence of Praneswar. If that evidence goes, there remains but little to support the case of the petitioners.

Another witness on which the learned Judge relies is P. W. No. 3, Sasi Kanta Chakrabarti. He, again, is an old man of 75, but that by itself carries no guarantee of truthfulness, if his evidence is otherwise unworthy of credence. It is remarkable that this witness was put forward to prove the signatures of any number of persons whose signatures required to be formally proved on behalf of the petitioners in the case. Thus, he proves the signatures of Mayananda, the testator, and of the three attesting witnesses, and also of two other persons, Bipin, the eldest son of the testator, and Madan Goswami. What opportunities he had of knowing the handwriting of all these persons he does not choose to explain. We have in fact nothing but his bare statement that he recognized these signatures. We find it difficult indeed to accept the testimony of such an omnibus witness. If this evidence is also discarded, it is not disputed the petitioners have nothing else to fall back upon to prove execution or attestation of the will.

Turning now to the case made in evidence regarding the discovery of the will, as already pointed out, there was not the faintest suggestion of such a case in the petition for letters of administration. In the petition it was stated with almost cynical frankness that they found it to their interest now to make out that the estate had been made debutier and that it was therefore necessary to set up the will. It was probably thought prudent later on to offer a more plausible explanation. The story, however, they put forward is on the face of it so utterly improbable and so inconsistent with their case as made in the petition that it would strain one's credulity to the utmost to accept it. The story is that Bipin, shortly after his mother's death which took place in 1915, sent away a wooden box belonging to the testator from his house to the house of a neighbour named Jogesh, witness No. 4 for the petitioners. A few months later, Bipin took away certain utensils from the box, but left it at Jogesh's house with the other articles which were in it. The box remained in Jogesh's house from that time until 1935. In or about the month of September that year, it is said, Jogesh happened to meet Birendra one day, when he suddenly remembered to tell Birendra about this box. Birendra then went to Jogesh's house to fetch it. But before Birendra was allowed to take away the box, Jogesh felt it necessary to have an elaborate ceremony to witness the transaction. A number of persons were accordingly called in, and in their presence the box is supposed to have been opened before it was removed. It was then for the first time that the will was unearthed from inside the box. One of these witnesses Bijoy has been examined (P. W. No. 5); he is the adopted son of one of the attesting witnesses Pran Govind Goswami.

The story is so improbable, as we have said, that we have no hesitation in rejecting it. It is not explained why the box should have been removed by Bipin to Jogesh's house in 1915 shortly after his mother's death. If Bipin knew about the will (as the petition suggests), and if he also knew that the will was contained in the box, it is not likely that he should part with the custody of it. On the other hand, if the box merely contained utensils and other articles, it is not understood why it could not have been left in the family dwelling house. It is no doubt stated by some of the witnesses that Bipin lived at his maternal grandfather's house at Bhabni, which is half a mile from Bajurbhag, the testator's village: still that would not explain why Bipin should wish to remove the box to the house of Jogesh, much less why he should do so in 1915. It is not again clear why Jogesh should not have spoken to anybody about the box for all these years. Even if he did not think it necessary to ask Birendra or anybody else to take away the box in Bipin's lifetime, why should he not have informed Bipin's sons about it after Bipin's death that they might take it back? The learned Judge himself was unable to find any explanation why Bipin should have left the box with Jogesh: all the same, he thought this story was sufficient to account for the delay in making the application for letters of administration. It is not, however, a mere question of explaining the delay, requiring explanation as it does, but what is more material, it is, as we have already remarked, one of wide divergence between the case made in the petition and the case made in evidence, and this undoubtedly throws a cloud of suspicion on the whole story of the will which certainly evidence of the kind led by the petitioners does not at all help to lift.

We have no doubt in our mind that the petitioners, one of whom is only 19 and the other still a minor, must have been put up to make this application by interested parties. According to the evidence, Birendra's father-in-law (he is probably the man referred to as Kasi by some of the witnesses) is the person who took a leading part in the whole affair. Birendra says he was present in Court on the date the petition was filed, but that it was filed by his father-in-law. It is also his evidence that his father-in-law was looking after the case and bearing all expenses. If Kasi is the name of the father-in-law, then he is also the person who passed the promissory note jointly with Birendra in favour of the scribe after the scribe had made the affidavit which accompanied the petition. According to the petition filed by the objector, Jnanada Govind Chowdhury, Birendra's father-in-law is a man of Natore and never lived at the village Bajurbhag, and if that is so and if, as there is reason to suspect, he is the person who inspired the present application, it is not shown how he could have any knowledge of the facts which are set out in the application or in the affidavit of Praneswar. In our opinion, all the facts and circumstances of the case point to the conclusion that the will set up in this case is a fabricated document.

The learned Judge in the Court below

persuaded himself that the heirs of Mayananda had adequate grounds for ignoring the will. This, of course, assumes that the existence of the will has known to them. At the same time, the learned Judge appeared to believe the story of the will having come to light for the first time out of the wooden box in Jogesh's house. It seems to us somewhat difficult to reconcile the two positions. It may be said that if the petitioners were putting up a forged will, they might easily have worded it differently, that is to say, in such a way as would have suited their purpose more effectively. In other words it might have used language making a clean dedication of the estate to the deity rather than leaving the matter in a state of uncertainty as to whether the properties were made debutter or were bequeathed to the sons with only a charge for deb-sheba. The argument is plausible, but the fact remained that the heirs of the testator dealt with the estate as their secular property all along, and it might have been considered necessary therefore to frame the will in terms which, on a particular construction, might afford some justification for such course of dealing.

It is not necessary to discuss the evidence any further. We are convinced, as already stated, that the will propounded in this case is a false document. In appearance it looks like an old document, but it is common experience in these Courts that an appearance of age may be easily given to a fabricated document. We consider it a serious matter that persons should come forward to set up forged wills in this way. There are not sufficient materials on the record to make it possible for us to say with certainty who was responsible for bringing the false will into existence in this case. But the matter ought not to be left in this unsatisfactory state. We desire to invite the special attention of the District Judge to it, and desire that he should make further investigations in order to track down the real culprit or culprits and bring them to justice, if possible. It is clear also that some of the evidence in the case is perjured evidence, and the District Judge should also consider if the persons who gave such evidence should not be dealt with according to law. With these observations, we accordingly allow the appeal, set aside the judgment and decree of the learned Judge, and dismiss the application for letters of administration. The appellants are entitled to their costs in all Courts, to be paid by respondent No. 1, Birendra

Nath Goswami. We assess the hearing-fee in this Court at ten gold mohurs.

Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 588 of 1938

Bengal Land Registration Act (VII of 1878), s. 78—No registration under Act—Effect—Right to sue for rent if taken away—Suit within limitation—Registration beyond limitation—Effect—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 100, O. XLI, r. 33—Powers of second Appellate Court—Suit dismissed under s. 78, Bengal Land Registration Act by Appellate Court—Plaintiff getting registered during pendency of second appeal—Decree, if can be passed in second appeal.

Under s. 78, Land Registration Act, the right to the rent of an estate being in the proprietor, although not registered, his right to sue for the rent is not taken away; but this section merely puts an impediment in the way of his realising the rent until he had complied with the law by obtaining registration of his name as proprietor. [p. 639, col. 2.]

Where therefore a mortgagee who is not registered under the Act institutes a suit for rent within period of limitation the mere fact that he gets registered beyond the period of limitation for the suit will not affect the position and the suit is within limitation. 110 Ind. Cas. 469 (1) and Alimuddin Khan v. Hira Lal Sen (2), relied on. 134 Ind. Cas. 824 (5), 172 Ind. Cas. 935 (4) and Satyid Ekram Hussain v. Satyid Ali Hussain (5), explained.

The provisions of O. XLI, r. 33, Civil P. C., are wide enough to enable the Court to take into consideration the entry in the land registration record made since the institution of the second appeal. In special circumstances the Court of second appeal can take notice of facts material to the decision of a case which have arisen subsequent to the decision of the suit. Section 100 must be read with O. XLI, r. 33. Order XLI, r. 33, applies not only to appeals from original decrees but also to appeals from appellate decrees. [p. 640, col. 2; p. 611, col. 1.]

Where, therefore, a suit for rent instituted by a mortgagee has been rightly dismissed by the trial as well as the first Appellate Court under s. 78, Ben. Land Reg. Act, and during the pendency of the second appeal the mortgagee has been registered under the Ben. Land Reg. Act, the Court of second appeal can pass a decree in his favour on the basis of the registration. 110 Ind. Cas. 469 (1), relied on; 50 Ind. Cas. 857 (6) and 152 Ind. Cas. 611 (7), referred to.

A. from the decision of the Subordinate Judge, Gaya, dated July 15, 1938.

Messrs. S. M. Mullick and P. Misra, for the Appellants.

Mr. Raj Kishore Prasad, for the Respondent.

Fazi Ali, J—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiff-appellants to recover bhaoli rent for the years 1343 and 1344 Fasli. As the claim for the year 1343 Fasli is not pressed, the only question to be determined in this appeal is whether the appellants are entitled to recover bhaoli rent from the defendant for the year 1344 Fasli.

The appellants base their claim upon a sadhaua-pataua deed executed in their favour by one Mst. Sona Dei on December 11, 1933, in respect of her proprietary share in the estate in which the respondent's holding is situated. Both the Courts below have held that this deed is a usufructuary mortgage and the appellants not having been registered in Register D are not entitled to recover rent from the respondent. The appellants, however, have tendered in evidence in this Court a copy of Register D which has been marked as Ex. A without objection. This document shows that the appellants were recorded as usufructuary mortgagees after the institution of the present appeal and on the basis of it they now claim a decree for the rent of the year 1344 Fasli.

Now the points which arise in this appeal are precisely those which arose in Umeshwardhari Singh v. Neman Singh (1). In that case there being a difference of opinion between Kulwant Sahay and Macpherson, JJ. the following questions were referred to Mullick, J.

(1) Whether a mortgagee, whose suit for rent had been rightly dismissed in appeal by reason of the provisions of s. 78 of the Land Registration Act, 1876, could secure a decree for rent sued for from the Court of second appeal, if he has during the pendency of the second appeal been registered under that Act, and (2) if he could do so, whether the rent was barred by limitation if his name was registered in the Collector's register after the expiry of the period of limitation for bringing a suit for rent, and (3) whether having regard to the provisions of s. 100, the Court of second appeal could reverse the decree passed by the Courts below on the ground that the plaintiff had after the institution of the appeal got himself registered. Mullick, J. agreeing with Kulwant Sahay, J. answered all these questions in favour of the plaintiff and it seems to me that in view of the decision in that case, there is hardly any room for argument in this appeal. It being suggested, however, that the decision of Mullick, J. has not been followed in its entirety in two subsequent cases, I wish to examine briefly the arguments advanced by the respondent on this point.

Dealing with the question of limitation, the first point to be considered is what is the effect of s. 78 of the Land Registration Act, 1876. That section runs as follows:—

"No person shall be bound to pay rent to any person claiming such rent as proprietor, or manager, of an estate or revenue free property in respect of which he is required by this Act to cause his name to be registered, or as mortgagee, unless the name of such claimant shall have been registered under this Act."

It is contended on behalf of the respondent that by reason of this section, the liability of the tenant to pay rent does not arise until the landlord claiming to be entitled to the rent is registered as such and consequently the appellants had no cause of action when they brought the suit. The argument is a plausible one, but it appears that the view which has been consistently taken in a number of cases which cannot now be dissented from is that under this section the right to the rent of an estate being in the proprietor, although not registered, his right to sue for the rent is not taken away; but this section merely puts an impediment in the way of his realising the rent until he had complied with the law by obtaining registration of his name as proprietor. This view was set out very clearly in the Full Bench decision of the Calcutta High Court in Alimuddin Khan v. Hira Lal Sen (2) and was accepted as the correct view by Kulwant Sahay, J. and Mullick, J. in Umeshwardhari Singh v. Neman Singh (1). It is suggested on behalf of the respondents that a contrary view has been expressed in at least three subsequent cases of this Court. The first case is that of Sharafat Karim v. Harangi Singh (3) which was decided by Jwala Prasad and Wort, JJ. It appears that both the learned Judges did not agree in that case with the view of Mullick, J. (which they characterised as obiter dictum) that even where the plaintiff landlord has not got his name registered in Register D, a conditional decree can be passed in his favour imposing a condition that he will be able to execute it upon his name being registered. The learned Judges, however, have nowhere suggested in their judgment that the case was not correctly decided on its own facts, which, it is conceded were quite similar to those of the present case. On the other hand, the distinction which they drew between that case and the case before them was that whereas in the first case the proprietor had been registered before the second appeal was heard, in the case before them no such registration had taken place. It was pointed out to us that one of the observations made by Wort, J. in his judgment was that where a proprietor was not registered under the Ben. Registration Act, such non-registration "would be a bar to the plaintiff's cause of action"; and, it was contended that this observation supports the view propounded on the respondent's behalf that the plaintiffs had no cause of action until their names were registered. Now, the actual observations made by Wort, J. are these:

(2) 23 C 87 (F B).

"Consequently no action by a person not registered under the Act can succeed; in other words, it is a bar to the plaintiff's cause of action."

If we bear in mind the first part of the observation, it is quite clear that what his Lordship really meant was that the plaintiffs could not sue successfully if their names were not registered under the Ben. Registration Act.

The next case which was relied on by the respondent was that of Sheikh Dildar Hussain v. Sheikh Saddiq (4). In that case also the name of the plaintiffs who sued as proprietors of a village for recovery of rent had not been recorded as such and Wort, J. observed at the end of his judgment—"I should have mentioned that they were precluded from suing by reason of s. 78 of the Land Registration Act". In my opinion if these remarks are construed in the light of the remarks made by Wort, J. in the previous case, the expression "suing" must be interpreted in the above sentence also to mean "suing successfully", this view being consistent with the view expressed in a number of cases of the Calcutta High Court which have never been dissented from by this Court. It must be observed that in none of the two cases referred to above the question as to whether the plaintiff had a cause of action at the time of the suit properly arose, because the plaintiff not being registered even at the time when the second appeal was heard, his suit had to be dismissed in any event; and in the first case Jwala Prasad, J. who was of the same opinion as Wort, J. made the following

"Neither s. 78 of the Land Registration Act nor s. 60 of the Ben. Ten. Act prohibits a suit being instituted for rent by a plaintiff without having his name registered under the Land Registration Act. These sections prohibit recovery of rent unless the plaintiff has his name registered. Therefore although the plaintiff is entitled to bring a suit without his name having been registered, he is not entitled to recover rent unless he gets his name registered".

The last case cited on behalf of the respondent was that of Saiyid Ekram Hussain v. Saiyid Ali Hussain (5) in which James, J. while dealing with the effect of s. 78 of the Bengal Registration Act incidentally observed that under that section no person whose name is not entered in the register can maintain a suit for recovery of rent. This section was referred to by the learned Judge only to show that the entry in the Register D was evidence of the fact that the person whose name appears in the register is the person who is in possession of the property and in the case before him the question as to whether s. 78 bars a suit or merely bars the right to recover rent was not raised at all. Thus the view expressed by this Court in Umeshwardhari Singh v. Neman Singh (1) still stands good and I am unable to hold that the appellant's suit is barred by limitation. This suit was instituted on September 22, 1937, within a year of the date when the plaintiffs' right to rent accrued and the mere fact that the plaintiff was registered more than a year after the accrual of that right will not affect the position. Section 78 does not bar the right to sue if the rent was due; its only effect is that the liability for rent cannot be enforced.

The second point raised on behalf of the respondent is also concluded by the decision of this Court in Umeshwardhari Singh's case (1) (supra). In that case the question as to whether the Court of second appeal was entitled to take into consideration the effect of the registration of the plaintiff's name during the pendency of the second appeal was expressly referred to Mullick, J. and he substantially agreed with the view taken by Kulwant Sahay, J. The point was not dealt with fully by Mullick, J. but as was pointed out by Kulwant Sahay, J. the provisions of O. XLI, r. 33, are wide enough to enable the Court to take into consideration the entry in the Land Registration record made since the institution of the second appeal. It has been held in a number of cases that in special circumstances the Court of second appeal can take notice of facts material to the decision of a case which have arisen subsequent to the decision of the suit: See Hill v. Setan Singh (6), Sawan Singh v. Haveli Shah Sardari Lal (?). It is true that it is stated in s. 100 of the Civil P. O. that an appeal shall lie to the High Court from a decree passed in appeal by any Court subordinate to it on certain specified grounds only and s. 101 provides that no second appeal shall lie except on grounds mentioned in s. 100. This section, however, must be read with O. XLI, r. 33, which provides that the Appellate Court shall have power to pass any decree and make any order which ought to have been passed or made and to pass or make such further or other decree or order as the case may require, and this power may be exercised by the Court notwithstanding that the appeal is as to part only of the decree and may be exercised in favour of all or any of the respondents or parties, although such respondents or parties may not have filed any appeal or objection. The only limitation which has been put upon the powers of the Court in this section is that

"the Appellate Court shall not make any order under s. 35-A in pursuance of any objection on which the Court from whose decree the appeal is preferred has omitted or refused to make such order".

This provision applies not only to appeals from original decrees but also to appeals from appellate decrees, and so, in my opinion, this Court is quite competent to pass a decree in favour of the plaintiffs on the basis of the entry in Register D which shows that the bar imposed by s. 78 has now been removed.

The only other point which was put forward before us on behalf of the appellant was that the document upon the basis of which the plaintiffs have instituted the suit is in essence not a usufructuary mortgage but a lease. In my opinion, it is unnecessary to discuss this question in view of the fact that the plaintiffs themselves have obtained an entry in Register D on the footing that they are the usufructuary mortgagees of the property.

I would, therefore, allow this appeal, set aside the decrees of the Courts below and direct that a decree be made in favour of the plaintiffs for the produce rent of the year 1344 Fasli in accordance with the decision of the Munsif as to the quantity of produce which is not challenged by either party. The produce of the holding is to be calculated at the rate of ten kachcha maunds of paddy per bigha and the price of the produce should be calculated on the basis of the rates published in the Gazette and if such rates are not available or are less than the rate admitted by the defendant, then at the rate of ten kachcha pasuris per rupee as admitted by the defendant in his written statement. The plaintiffs will not be entitled to any damage and the parties will bear their costs throughout.

Chatterji, J.—I agree.

Mr. Hay, for the Respondents.

Dunkley, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit in the Assistant District Court of Akyab, in which the plaintiffs-respondents sued the defendants-appellants for their ejection from certain areas of agricultural land and for mesne profits of that land for a period of three years prior to the suit. The suit has been decreed by the learned Assistant District Judge of Akyab and it is against his judgment and decree that the present appeal has been filed. In their plaint the respondents alleged that the areas of land in suit lay within the area of a larger grant, which had been made to them by the Government of Burma under the Arakan Waste Land Grant Rules, and that on this ground they were entitled to eject the appellants. Paragraph 1 of the plaint is as follows:

"1. That the plaintiffs are the registered grantees of Aungseikpyin Grant, situated in Maungdaw Township. The western boundary of the said grant is the course of Myothit Chaung as it was in 1906."

Paragraph 4 of the plaint reads:

"4. That the three plots marked on the exhibit map in red dotted lines as A, B and C fall within the boundary of the plaintiffs' grant."

These are the three areas of land from which the respondents seek to eject the appellants, and it is clear that their cause of action is based on the averment that the grant of land, which has been made to them by Govt. includes the lands in suit. Yet, strange though it may seem, the deed of grant, which obviously should have been filed with the plaint, has not been produced at all. The respondents have relied upon two orders of the Financial Commissioner of Burma, dated July 21, 1936, and July 26, 1937, certified copies of which have been produced and are filed as Exs. B and C. In the plaint reference has been made to these orders, and it is set out that by his order of July 26, 1937 (Ex. C) the Financial Commissioner decided that the western boundary of the respondents' grant was the Myothit Chaung as it existed in 1906. The defence of the appellants, so far as it is now of any importance, is that the areas of land in suit lie outside the respondents' grant. Consequently, the first issue which was framed in the suit was, "Do the suit plots A, B and C fall within the boundary of Aungseikpyin Grant?" The learned Assistant District Judge, in considering this issue, came to the conclusion that he was bound by the orders of the Financial Commissioner, to which I have already referred, and therefore held that the lands in suit fall within the respondents' grant. This was not the correct way to view the matter. The Financial Commissioner was deciding a dispute between the Revenue Authorities of the Akyab District and the respondents regarding the western boundary of the respondents' grant, and as a Revenue Court, he was not bound by the strict rules of the law of evidence; but it was his duty to come to that decision which, in his view, would be equitable in consideration of all the materials which were placed before him. He based his decision on the ground that if the boundaries stated in the respondents' deed of grant were strictly adhered to, the area of the land which the respondents would obtain would be much less than the area stated in the grant. The construction of a document is a matter of law, and it was the duty of the learned Assistant District Judge to construe the terms of the respondents' grant in accordance with law, and on his independent construction of its terms, to come to his own conclusion as to whether the lands in suit were included within the grant or not. He was in no way bound by the opinion of the Financial Commissioner, which was based upon considerations which were irrelevant in a Court of law.

The learned Assistant District Judge having failed to construe the terms of this grant, it now falls on us to do so and we are placed in an initial difficulty in that the deed of grant itself is not before us. At one stage, it seemed likely that we should have to remand the case for this document to be produced. However the only part of the document which, for the present purpose, is of importance is the description of the boundaries contained therein, and that description is fortunately set out in full in the order of the Financial Commissioner, dated July 21, 1936 (Ex. B). It is necessary to set out in detail the history of this grant, as this has already been done by the learned Assistant District Judge in his judgment. It appears that the respondents and their predecessors-in-title have obtained a series of grants from the Govt. of Burma of this land which is known as the Aungseikpyin Grant. The grants have in each case been made for a period of 20 years and at the end of each such period a new grant has been issued. It appears that in each successive grant the rent payable by the respondents or their predecessors, has been revised, but we have not been told whether the other terms have continued to be same in each grant. The last grant was made on March 31, 1936, the agreement apparently being signed some time in 1927. According to the Financial Commissioner's order (Ex. B), the boundaries of the grant land as stated in the deed of 1926 are as follows:

- "North: The right branch of the Padaga Chaung to Mayu Hills.
- South: The Gyt Ohaung from its mouth to its source in the Mayu Hills.
- East: The Mayu Hills.
- West: The Myothit Ohaung."

The order of the Financial Commissioner set out that all these boundaries are described in exactly the same words as were the boundaries in the deed of grant of 1906. But the evidence shows that between 1906 and 1926 the Myothit Ohaung changed its course towards the east, and when the 1936 agreement was signed, its course was considerably to the east of the course which it had taken in 1906. It is common ground that the lands now in suit were on the east bank of the Myothit Ohaung in 1906, but were on the west bank of that Ohaung in 1926. The plain meaning of the description of the western boundary contained in the agreement in 1926 is the course of the Myothit Ohaung as it existed at the date of the agreement. Where the agreement says merely, "west: the Myothit Ohaung," plainly that means that the western boundary is the Myothit Ohaung as it was on the date of the agreement, and these words can have no other meaning. The Financial Commissioner, in his orders, discussed what was the intention of the parties at the time when this agreement was signed, and he came to the conclusion that the intention both of the Govt. and of the respondents was that the western boundary under the 1926 agreement should be exactly the same as the western boundary under the 1906 agreement. That is a construction which was permissible to him but which is not permissible to a Court of law. When a description in a document is partly correct and partly incorrect and the former part is sufficient to identify the subject-matter intended while the latter does not apply to any subject, the erroneous part will be rejected in accordance with the maxim falsa demonstratio non nocet cum de corpore constat, and extrinsic evidence to show that the intention of the parties was not in accordance with the part of the description which is correct is inadmissible. So, where there is a description of land in a document setting forth the boundaries and then specifying the quantity as so many acres, etc., the description in regard to the acreage is considered to be mere false description if there is an error in the quantity, and the land within the boundaries passes by the document, whether it be less or more than the quantity specified. In Durga Prasad Singh v. Rajendra Narayan Bagchi (1) their Lordships of the Privy Council said:

"In their Lordships' opinion, the question as to what had been demised in 1894 turned upon the true construction of the kabuliyat, and that construction could not be varied by extraneous evidence as to the negotiations which led up to the contract which was, in fact, made, or by evidence showing that within the boundaries specified in the schedule to the kabuliyat, there was not 400 bighas of land....."

Consequently, it is plain that under the deed of grant of 1926 the western boundary of the respondents' grant is the course of the Myothit Ohaung as it existed on that date. It has been urged on behalf of the respondents that the orders of the Financial Commissioner amount to a rectification of this grant in consequence of a mutual mistake of the parties thereto. If that were so, then a new grant was necessary. Under direction 13 of the directions under the Lower Burma Land and Revenue Act, grants of land for cultivation must be made in a particular form and entered in a particular register. Nothing of the kind was done after the Financial Commissioner's orders were issued, and it is only necessary to read the second of these orders, Ex. C, to come to the conclusion that is far too vague in its terms to be the basis of a new contract between the parties. There has obviously been no new grant or rectification of the old grant by reason of, or in consequence of, the orders of the Financial Commissioner; but what the Financial Commissioner did was to construe, as between the Govt. and the respondents, the existing grant of 1926, and as I have already said, that construction is not a construction which can be accepted by a Court of law. It would seem that the Financial Commissioner recognized this, for in his order of July 26, 1937 (Ex. C) he said:

"In future therefore for that portion of the grant south of the defined common boundary between Aungseikpyin and the Ohaungbank grant the centre line of the Myothit Ohaung as it stood in 1906 ... will be adopted as the western boundary."

(1) 41 O 493; 21 Ind. Cas 750; 40 I A 223; 18 O W N 66; 19 O L J 95, (1914) M W N 1; 15 M L T 68; 26 M L J 25; 16 Bom. L R 42 (P O).

And it is common ground that by that the Financial Commissioner meant that when a new grant was issued, the description of the western boundary should be in these terms. It is further urged on behalf of the respondents that if the orders of the Financial Commissioner cannot be held to be a rectification of the grant, at any rate they amount to an order that the respondents are to be permitted to occupy the land lying between the old and new beds of the Myothit Ohaung. This land is undoubtedly at the disposal of Govt. as waste land, and of course, under the rules for the occupation of waste lands Govt. can permit any person to occupy it; and without doubt, the Financial Commissioner had authority to direct that the respondents alone should be permitted to occupy this area. In fact, the appellants admit that this view of the Financial Commissioner's orders may be the correct view. But a case based upon a permission to occupy waste lands is not the case which has been set up by the respondents in their plaint. They have seen fit to base their case entirely upon their grant and the averment that the lands in suit fall within the grant, and upon this averment they must stand or fall. Learned Counsel for the appellants has frankly admitted that the appellants are liable to eviction from the lands in suit, at the hands of the Revenue Authorities by appropriate action, but he urges that if and when they are served by the Revenue Courts with notice of eviction, they will then have an opportunity of presenting their case before those Courts, an opportunity which has so far been denied to them. The appellants claim that they cannot be evicted by a decree of a Civil Court passed in the present suit, and in my opinion, this argument is without doubt correct. The suit of the respondents based upon their grant was bound to fail and therefore this appeal is allowed, and the suit of the plaintiffs-respondents is dismissed with costs in both Courts.

Roberts, C. J.—I agree and have nothing to add.

Hindu Law — Widow — Adverse possession — Property acquired by widow by adverse possession, in her own right, becomes her absolute property — Alienation — Widow — Necessity — Consent of next reversioner though not conclusive proof, is prima facie evidence of legal necessity.

Property acquired by a Hindu widow or other qualified heir by adverse possession of which she takes and retains possession in her own right for 12 years or more becomes her absolute property and that she can dispose of it by means of transfer, inter vivos or will, but if the property is not claimed by her adversely it will become an accretion to her husband's estate. But the question has got to be determined in every case whether the widow entered into possession adversely to the reversioners, or as a widow representing her husband's estate. Lachhman Kunwar v. Manorath Ram (3), Sham Koer v. Dah Koer (4) and 55 Ind Cas. 486 (5), relied on. [p. 146, col. 1.]

When a document of transfer supported by consideration is executed by a Hindu widow and the document is consented to by the next reversioner that consent in itself affords prima facie evidence of legal necessity and it is not necessary for the transferee to adduce evidence of legal necessity beyond the evidence of the consent. The next reversioner is the person most interested in disputing the transaction and his consent will naturally afford presumptive proof of legal necessity, and if such proof is not rebutted by contrary proof, the consent, although it will not be conclusive proof of legal necessity, will be of great evidentiary value. 19 Ind. S. As. from the decision of the Additional Civil Judge, Gorakhpur, dated November 30, 1936.

Mr. E. V. David, for the Appellant.

Mr. Chaturbhuj Sahai, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—This is an appeal by Kaulashar Shukul, defendant, and is connected with Second Appeal No. 478 of 1937 which is an appeal by Ram Kishore Lal and others, plaintiffs. Both appeals arise out of a single suit which was brought by Ram Kishore Lal and others. As the suit was partly decreed and partly dismissed, there were two appeals before the lower Appellate Court and that is why there are two appeals before me. It appears that there were two brothers Ram Rekha and Bujhawan who were joint. Ram Rekha died first in 1905 and the name of Mst

Dula, his widow, was recorded over half the property and Bujhawan made no protest. Bujhawan died in 1908 and Mst. Dula's name was recorded over Bujhawan's share as well. There were certain reversioners, but they did not object. In the year 1934, on June 15, Mst. Dula executed a perpetual lease in favour of Kauleshar Shukul and his brother Bindeshri Shukul. A day after on June 16, 1934, she executed a deed of gift in favour of these two Shukuls. The present suit has been instituted by the reversioners for possession and in the alternative for a declaration by avoidance of the two documents, namely the perpetual lease and the deed of gift. Musammatt Dula is still alive and it is obvious that the reversioners cannot possibly obtain a decree for possession nor have they been given such a decree. They can, if at all, obtain a declaratory decree. The perpetual lease was attested by Gauri Shanker who, it is admitted, is the next reversioner. The plaintiffs have impleaded Gauri Shanker also in the present suit and have alleged that he is in collusion with the widow or has, in any event precluded himself from maintaining the present suit.

The Court of first instance dismissed the plaintiffs' suit so far as the deed of perpetual lease was concerned but decreed the plaintiffs' suit so far as the deed of gift was concerned and regarding that it gave the plaintiffs a declaratory decree declaring that the deed of gift would be ineffective against the rights of the plaintiffs after the death of Mst. Dula. The lower Appellate Court on appeals by the parties ordered that both the appeals be allowed and the judgment of the trial Court be set aside and that the plaintiffs' suit be decreed for a declaration that the deeds of gift and lease specified in the plaint will not be binding against the plaintiffs after the death of Mst. Dula only to the extent of half the property covered by them. The lower Appellate Court drew a distinction between property which Mst. Dula got from Ram Rekha and the property which Mst. Dula got from Bujhawan. It held that so far as Ram Rekha's share of the property was concerned, Mst. Dula's possession was that of a Hindu widow and the documents would be inoperative unless supported by legal necessity. As regards that share of the property which Mst. Dula got from Bujhawan, the lower Appellate Court was of the opinion that Mst. Dula's possession was adverse and she became the full owner having remained in possession from 1908 onwards. That explains the decree which was given by the lower Appellate Court.

Both parties have come up in appeal to this Court and like the lower Appellate Court, I propose to give a consolidated judgment. It has been contended by the lessees that the perpetual lease is attested by the next reversioner and that shows that he consented to the document. The plaint also suggests that the next reversioner consented to the perpetual lease. That being so, the submission is that the lease must be deemed to be for legal necessity and the burden is on the plaintiffs to show that it was not for legal necessity. When a document of transfer supported by consideration is executed by a Hindu widow and the document is consented to by the next reversioner that consent in itself affords prima facie evidence of legal necessity and it is not necessary for the transferee to adduce evidence of legal necessity beyond the evidence of the consent: see Debi Prosad v. Golap Bhagat (1) and Darbari Lal v. Gobind Saran (2). The next reversioner was the person most interested in disputing the transaction and his consent will naturally afford presumptive proof of legal necessity, and if such proof is not rebutted by contrary proof, the consent, although it will not be conclusive proof of legal necessity, will be of great evidentiary value. In the present case there is also the recital in the lease that the money was required for purposes of pilgrimage and there is the evidence of Kauleshar Shukul that the money was utilized for that purpose. The lady Mst. Dula was in the witness-box and the plaintiffs did not put any question to her as to why she took Rs. 200 and what became of them. The learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court did not approach the case from this point of view. He did not attach any importance whatsoever to the consent of the next reversioner and he thought that the defendants lessees ought to have enquired from Mst. Dula regarding the Rs. 200. He said that no witness had been examined to corroborate the version of the defendant Kauleshar. He did not say that Kauleshar's testimony was false. Without discussing anything further he finished by saying that the deed was not justified by legal necessity. In my judgment the finding of the lower Appellate Court is vitiated by the fact that it did not consider the case of the perpetual lease from the point of view that it was consented to by the next reversioner who was most interested in disputing it. I have, therefore, come to the conclusion that the plaintiffs have no right so far as the perpetual lease of June 15, 1934, is concerned.

(1) 40 O 721; 19 Ind. Cas. 273; 17 O L J 499; 17 O W N 701.

I now come to the deed of gift. It is in favour of two Shukuls. Beyond the assertion on behalf of the defendants that they were the purohits (family priests) of the lady, there is no other suggestion as to why the deed of gift had been executed. It is obvious that there could be no legal necessity for executing the deed of gift, but it is said that the deed of gift has to be considered from the point of view of spiritual benefit. The trial Court accepting the evidence of Mst. Dula—and that is the only evidence in the case—came to the conclusion that the Shukuls were not the family priests of Mst. Dula but there were certain misirs who were her family priests. That being so, the deed of gift cannot be supported and I agree with the view of the lower Appellate Court that there was no necessity for executing a deed of gift. The lower Court holds the view that when Mst. Dula came in possession of Bujhawan's half-share, she came into possession adversely and by the time of the execution of the deed of gift and the deed of lease she had become the full owner of that half-share. There is abundant authority for the proposition that property acquired by a Hindu widow or other qualified heir by adverse possession of which she takes and retains possession in her own right for 12 years or more becomes her absolute property and that she can dispose of it by means of transfer, inter vivos or will, but if the property is not claimed by her adversely, it will become an accretion to her husband's estate. To that effect are the cases in Lachhman Kunwar v. Manorath Ram (3), Sham Koer v. Dah Koer (4) and Satgur Prasad v. Raj Kishore Lal (5). But the question has got to be determined in every case whether the widow entered into possession adversely to the reversioner or as a widow representing her husband's estate. The evidence in this case is very meagre and we have to rely to a great extent upon what Mst. Dula herself says on this point. She says that when Ran Rekha Lal died she got possession over his property and Bujhawan did not make any interference and this was for her maintenance and when Bujhawan died then again she obtained possession and there was no pattidar of hers. She does not even suggest that she took possession of Bujhawan's estate adversely to anybody and I think the facts of this case are very similar to the facts of the case reported in Bindraban v. Ram Narain (6), where it was held that there being absolutely nothing before the deed of transfer to show that there was any assertion of any adverse title by the widow in herself, namely title adverse to her husband's estate and to the estate that would go to the reversioners her possession previous to the transfer must be held to be permissive and not adverse to the reversioners. In the present case also it appears that she obtained possession of the property held by her husband as well as by her husband's brother for parwari as she says in clear terms herself in her evidence.

The position, therefore, is that there is no justification for drawing any distinction between the property which she obtained from her husband and the property which she obtained from her husband's brother; but I have held above that the deed of lease cannot be challenged by the next reversioners. From what I have said above, it is clear that the plaintiffs are not entitled to any relief so far as the document of perpetual lease is concerned but they are entitled to relief so far as the dan patra or the deed of gift is concerned. I, therefore, allow this appeal, set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court and restore that of the Court of first instance. Parties will bear their own costs in all Courts. Leave to file an appeal by way of Letters Patent is allowed to both parties.

 is not entitled to order under s. 25 in his favour—Hindu father is not entitled to apply under s. 25 for being appointed guardian of his own minor child.*

Where a father delivers his infant daughter to the custody of another and for over 15 years takes no interest in her, but allows others to do what he as a father should do, he is not fitted to exercise the rights of a father. He is certainly not a person in whose favour the Court should pass an order under s. 25, Guardians and Wards Act.

A Hindu father is not entitled to apply under the Guardians and Wards Act, for an order appointing him guardian of the person or property of his minor child. Under Hindu Law, the father is the lawful guardian of his child and a declaration by the Court cannot increase his powers. 160 Ind. Cas 878 (1), followed.

A. from the judgment of Gentle, J., dated April 9, 1937.

Mr. A. Srirangachari, for the Appellant.

Mr. M. S. Venkatarama Iyer, for the Respondents.

Leach, C. J.—This appeal raises a question of the right of a Hindu father to the custody of his minor daughter, the allegation being that he had abandoned the minor. The appellant is the father of the minor who was born in 1922. Her mother suffered from tuberculosis and died a few months after the child was born. Before the mother's death, the appellant entrusted the minor to his sister Gnanambal who was married to one Subramania Mudaliar. Subramania died in August 1931 and Gnanambal in October 1932. After the death of Gnanambal, respondent No. 1 who is another sister of the appellant, took charge of the minor and has had charge of her ever since. In 1927 respondent No. 1 went to live with Gnanambal and her husband. Gnanambal owned the house in which she, her husband, respondent No. 1 and the minor were living and by her will left the house to respondent No. 1 and the minor jointly. She further provided that on the death of respondent No. 1 the minor should have the property absolutely. The appellant married a second time in 1923 and had a daughter by his second wife. It is said that up to 1934 he used to visit the minor, but it is common ground that he has not visited her since 1934. It is also common ground that she never returned to her father's house. In January, 1937, respondent No. 1 arranged to marry the minor to respondent No. 2. The appellant's case is that he was not consulted about this and as he disapproved of the marriage, he instituted the proceedings out of which this appeal arises. He applied under the Guardians and Wards Act for an order appointing him the guardian of the person and property of the minor. He also asked that respondent No. 1 should be directed to hand over the custody of the minor to him and that respondent No. 1 should be restrained by an injunction from giving away the minor in marriage to respondent No. 2. The application was heard by Gentle, J. who treated it as one falling within s. 25, Guardians and Wards Act, and on the ground that the appellant had abandoned the minor dismissed it. The appeal is from this order.

The appellant is not entitled to apply under the Guardians and Wards Act for an order appointing him guardian of the person or property of the minor. Under Hindu Law, the father is the lawful guardian of his child and a declaration by the Court cannot increase his powers. I had to consider this very question in Venkateswaran v. Saradambal (1) when sitting as a Judge of the Rangoon High Court and I see no reason to change the opinion I expressed there. In fact the learned Advocate for the appellant has not challenged the correctness of this decision.

The important question is whether the appellant is entitled to an order under s. 25, Guardians and Wards Act. I consider that the learned Judge was right in refusing to pass such an order. I have already referred to the fact that the minor was brought up by her aunts and that she has never been received again in her father's house. It is admitted that he has not contributed anything to her support since he delivered the child to Gnanambal and that he has taken no part in ceremonies which are so important to a Hindu girl, namely, the ear-boring ceremony and the ceremony which takes place when she reaches the age of puberty. The appellant has never even given her a present. The invitation to the ear-boring ceremony was issued by Gnan-ambal and her husband Subramania Mudaliar. The invitation referred to the minor as the daughter of Gnanambal and her husband and no objection was taken to this by the appellant. The minor has always referred to her father as "uncle" and to Gnanambal and her husband as "mother" and "father." If the fact that the minor referred to her father as "uncle" was all the Court had to consider; it might not be a point against the appellant but it can be taken into consideration in the circumstances of this case. While the appellant may have visited the house where the sisters were living, he has not visited the minor since 1934 and throughout the minor's life he has not taken the slightest notice of her. His character can be gauged from the fact that in the course of the evidence he alleged that dissolute persons were in the habit of frequenting the house where respondent No. 1 and the minor were living.

There is not the slightest foundation for this statement. The learned Judge was satisfied, as we are, that he made this unwarranted allegation thinking that if he attacked the character of the respondent, it would strengthen his case. The learned Judge also held and again we agree with him, that this application was filed because he had not been consulted about the marriage and he wished to annoy respondent No. 1. Where a father delivers his infant daughter to the custody of another and for over 15 years takes no interest in her, but allows others to do what he as a father should do it is evident that he is not fitted to exercise the rights of a father. He is certainly not a person in whose favour the Court should pass an order under s. 25, Guardians and Wards Act. It is abundantly clear in this case that the minor will be in far better custody if she remains with respondent No. 1. The learned Advocate for the appellant contends that even in these circumstances he should be granted an injunction restraining respondent No. 1 from marrying the minor to respondent No. 2. I fail to see how we can pass an injunction of this nature when the main part of the application has failed. The learned Advocate for the appellant has been unable to point to any section in the Guardians and Wards Act under which he can ask the Court to issue an injunction in these circumstances. If the appellant wishes to take other proceedings, he is at liberty to do so, but having failed in his application under s. 25, Guardians and Wards Act, he is not entitled to any order on the present application. The appeal will be dismissed with costs in favour of respondent No. 1.

Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), s. 7 (iv) (c)—Suit under—Power of Court to raise valuation—Such power, when can be exercised.

In a suit coming within s. 7, sub-s. (iv) (c), Court Fees Act, being a suit to obtain a declaratory decree where consequential relief is prayed for, the plaintiff is bound to pay ad valorem court-fee according to the amount at which the relief sought is valued in the plaint. The plaintiff has not an absolute right to value the relief at any sum he pleases but the Court may enquire into the matter and raise the valuation if it finds the relief claimed as under-valued. Until however reasonable standards for such valuation are laid down by appropriate rules framed under s. 9, Suits Valuation Act, it would not be possible for the Court to exercise this power except in certain defined cases. 149 Ind. Cas. 3 (1), relied on.

Messrs. Hiralal Chakravarty and Rabindra Nath Bhattacharjee, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Rama Prasad Mukherjee, the Assistant Govt. Pleader. Messrs. Gunada Charan Sen and Kali Kinkar Chakravarty, for the Opposite Party.

Henderson, J.—This is a Rule calling upon the opposite party to show cause why an order of the learned Subordinate Judge directing the petitioner to pay additional court-fees should not be set aside. There is no difficulty in discovering the nature of the suit. The basis of the plaintiff's case is that a compromise decree in a partition suit was obtained by fraud. He therefore desired to get rid of it, and to have the property partitioned by the Court. The plaint was drafted on these lines and the prayer is for a declaration and for partition. The suit accordingly comes within s. 7, sub s. (iv) (c), Court Fees Act, being a suit to obtain a declaratory decree where consequential relief is prayed for. Under that sub-section, the plaintiff is bound to pay ad valorem court-fee according to the amount at which the relief sought is valued in the plaint. The opposite parties raised an objection that the court-fee paid was not sufficient and this was tried as a preliminary issue. The opposite parties adduced no evidence whatever in support of their case that the relief was undervalued. The Subordinate Judge merely took the value of the relief to be the total value of the joint property as it merged in the original partition suit. The question whether the plaintiff has an absolute right to value the relief at any sum he pleases or whether the Court may enquire into the matter and raise the valuation was considered by a Full Bench of this Court in Narayangunj Central Co-operative Sale & Supply Society, Ltd. v. Mafijuddin Ahmed (1). The conclusion reached was that the Court has such power. Until however reasonable standards for such valuation are laid down by appropriate rules framed under s. 9, Suits Valuation Act, it would not be possible for the Court to exercise this power except in certain defined cases. It seems to be difficult to say that the value of the relief setting aside this decree can possibly be the total value of the joint property. There is really no objective standard of valuation at all, and it is almost impossible to say with any show of reason that the relief sought is worth any particular sum of money. As rules have not yet been made under s. 9, Suits Valuation Act, it is impossible to say that the relief has been undervalued by the plaintiff. We accordingly make the Rule absolute and set aside the order of the learned Subordinate Judge calling upon the plaintiff to pay additional court-fees. The opposite party will pay the costs of this Rule to the petitioner. We assess the hearing-fee at five gold mohurs.

Khundkar, J.—I agree.

If the absence of the legal representatives of a deceased party from the record will result in the possibility of two inconsistent and contradictory decrees or will make it impossible effectually to execute a decree that may be passed in an appeal, the appeal must fail.

Where a joint relief is sought for by the plaintiff against all the defendants, on whose joint act the cause of action for the suit is based, and during the pendency of an appeal from the dismissal of the suit one of the defendants dies and his legal representative is not brought on record, the appeal abates as a whole and must be dismissed as there would be two inconsistent decrees if the appeal were allowed.

Mr. Harnandan Prasad, for the Appellant.

Mr. A. M. Khwaja, for the Respondents.

Ganga Nath, J.—This is a plaintiff's appeal against the decision of a learned Single Judge of this Court. The appeal arises out of a suit brought by her against the defendants respondents and Mst. Zenab Bibi, since deceased, for an injunction to restrain them from allowing a grain market to be conducted on their plot No. 683 in mauza Dilawarpur and not to open any bazar in the said village or at any other place in Tahsil Madiahun, and to recover Rs. 50 for damages. The plaintiff's case was that under the terms of an award made in 1884 between Durga Prasad, predecessor-in-title of the plaintiff, and Mohamad Mehdi, predecessor-in-title of the defendants, the defendants were precluded from allowing any market to be conducted in these villages. The defendants contended inter alia that the award was invalid, that they were not bound by it and that they were entitled to hold the market on their land. Both the lower Courts decreed the suit. On appeal by the defendants to this Court, the learned Single Judge allowed the appeal and dismissed the suit. During the pendency of this appeal respondent No. 13, Mst. Zenab Bibi died. Her representatives were not brought on the record in her place. A preliminary objection is taken by the learned Counsel for the respondents that the appeal must be held to have abated and should be dismissed. If the absence of the legal representatives of a deceased party from the record will result in the possibility of two inconsistent and contradictory decrees or will make it impossible effectually to execute a decree that may be passed in an appeal, the appeal must fail. The decisions will naturally depend on the relief granted by the decree appealed against. In this case the plaintiff based her claim on an act alleged to have been jointly committed by all the defendants. A relief against the defendants jointly was claimed by the plaintiff in these terms:

"A perpetual injunction may be issued ordering the defendants to close the Gola Bazar, known as Qutubganj, which they have newly opened on abadi plot No. 683 in mosa Dilawarpur, Pargana Madiahun, district Jaunpur, and not to open any bazar as against the plaintiff's gola in the said village, or at any other place in Tahsil Madiahun, in future."

If this relief were granted to the plaintiff against the remaining respondents, it would not be within their power to comply with the decree and to close down the market, because the legal representatives of the deceased would still be entitled, under the decree of the learned Single Judge, to maintain the market on the land in dispute, and it would not be possible for the respondents to make them join with them in closing it down. It would not therefore be possible to execute the decree of this Court if the appeal were allowed. As already stated, the dispute was as to whether the award which was made in 1884 was binding on the heirs of Mohamad Mehdi. The respondents' contention was that the award was void and illegal and was not binding on them. On the other hand, the plaintiff's case was that the award was perfectly valid and binding on the heirs and successor-in-title of Mohamad Mehdi. The learned Single Judge has held that the award was void and illegal and was not binding on the successors-in-title of Mohamad Mehdi. This decree has become final so far as the legal representatives of the deceased respondent are concerned. If this appeal were allowed therefore there would be two inconsistent decrees in the same case. A joint relief is being sought for by the plaintiff against all the defendants, on whose joint act the cause of action for the suit is based. In the absence of the legal representatives of Mst. Zenab, it is not possible to grant this relief, because it involves the taking of action which cannot be completed without their joining in it. These difficulties are insurmountable. The appeal as it stands is imperfectly constituted and it is not possible to proceed with it. It is therefore ordered that it be dismissed with costs.

Lala RAMJI LAL—DECREE-HOLDER—

MANDAI—JUDGMENT-DEBTOR—RESPONDENT

Execution—Limitation—Implied adjudication of question of limitation—There was held no implied adjudication.

The answer to the question whether in a particular case there has been implied adjudication of the question of limitation depends upon the circumstances of each case. If the execution Court had passed any effective order for further execution to the detriment of the judgment-debtor, it might safely be inferred that there had been an implied adjudication of the question of limitation. Mere awarding costs of execution to the decree-holder and noting the balance due under the decree are mere formal matters and of a ministerial character and do not involve any adjudication of the question whether the application is capable of being proceeded with or not.

An application for execution was beyond limitation. Although the notice was served on the judgment-debtor he did not appear and the decree-holder having expressed a desire that his application should be consigned to record room, the Court passed an order to that effect awarding costs to the decree-holder and noting the balance due under the decree:

Held, that implied adjudication of question of limitation in favour of decree-holder could not be inferred from the order. 33 Ind. Cas. 663 (1) and 93 Ind. Cas. 833 (2), referred to.

Ex. D. A. against the order of the District Judge of Lucknow, dated July 9, 1937.

Mr. Ganesh Pershad, for the Appellant.

Mr. P. N. Asthana, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—This is a decree-holder's appeal arising out of an execution case. The facts are that the decree-holder obtained a decree for money on August 28, 1928, under O. XXXIV, r. 6 of the Civil P. C. There were several execution applications by the decree-holder. One of these applications was consigned to records on August 1, 1932. The next application for execution was made by the decree-holder on August 2, 1935, and it is apparent that it was beyond limitation by one day. Notice was issued to the judgment-debtor under O. XXI, r. 22 of Civil P. C. for August 22, 1935. On this date the judgment-debtor, although served with the notice, did not appear. The decree-holder expressed a desire that his application be consigned to records and thereupon the execution Court passed the following order:

"Let the case be consigned to records as desired by the decree-holder's agent. The decree-holder shall get costs of the application. Balance is Rs. 439-13-0."

The present application for execution was made on January 11, 1937. The Munsarim reported that the present application, although it was within three years of the order on the previous application was time-barred because the previous application itself had been filed beyond time.

The two Courts below have held that the present application is beyond limitation, and the decree-holder has come up in appeal to this Court.

The learned Counsel for the appellant has argued that as the Court in consigning his previous application for execution to records allowed him costs for execution and laid down in the order the balance due to him, therefore it must be held that the Court impliedly decided that his application was within time. That the judgment-debtor had been served with a notice to appear and to show cause why the decree should not be executed, and had failed to appear. Now he is debarred by the provisions of s. 11 from raising that question at the time of the present application.

The question that an ex parte order passed by an execution Court allowing the execution to proceed is as much binding upon the judgment-debtor as an order on contest, is not open to dispute.

The real question for decision is whether the order dated August 22, 1935, can be said to have impliedly decided against the judgment debtor that the application was within time and that the execution was to proceed. It is contended that the execution Court could not award costs to the decree-holder and strike the balance due on that date unless it had impliedly decided that the application for execution was within time. In my opinion the answer to the question whether in a particular case there has been implied adjudication of the question of limitation depends upon the circumstances of each case. If the execution Court had passed any effective order for further execution to the detriment of the judgment-debtor, it might safely be inferred that there had been an implied adjudication of the question of limitation. In my opinion awarding costs of execution to the decree-holder and noting the balance due under the decree are mere formal matters and of a ministerial character and do not involve any adjudication of the question whether the application is capable of being proceeded with or not.

The learned Counsel for the appellant has cited several cases in support of his contention, amongst which I may mention 1. Gauri Shankar v. Musammatt Lachhmin Kunwar (18 O. C. 374) (1) and 2. Raghubar Singh v. Gokaran (3 O. W. N. p. 241) (2).

These cases, in my opinion, support the view that I have expressed above. In the former case 18 O. C. 374 (1) Mr. Stuart (later Sir Louis Stuart, Chief Judge of this Court) laid down as follows :

"In order to enable a decree, to be executed in spite of the fact that execution is time-barred, it is necessary to establish that notice requiring the judgment-debtor to show cause why the decree should not be executed against him has been served on him, and that he has thus been in a position to raise the plea of limitation, that a Court has expressly or impliedly decided by a final order the question of limitation in favour of the decree-holder, and that there has been an effective order of adjudication."

In the present case it is established that the notice requiring the judgment-debtor to show cause why the decree should not be executed against him was served on him and he was in a position to raise the plea of limitation. There was no express adjudication of the question of limitation in favour of the decree-holder. It is not possible to infer any implied adjudication of that question, because at the request of the decree-holder himself, the application was consigned to records and no order for further execution was passed. This decision in my opinion does not help the contention of the learned Counsel for the appellant.

In Raghubar Singh v. Gokaran (3 O. W. N. p. 241) (2) a Bench of this Court took the same view that implied adjudication of the question of limitation can be inferred only in those cases where the Court executing the decree, orders the execution to proceed for the simple reason that an order to proceed with further execution, although made in the absence of the judgment-debtor, implies an adjudication of the fact that the application is within time. In the present case I have shown above that no such inference can be drawn from the order for costs or from the fact that the balance due to the decree-holder was noted in the order.

The result is that I agree with the view

(1) 18 O. C. 374; 33 Ind. Cas. 663; A I R 1916 Oudh 278.

KAJU RAM—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT

Malicious prosecution—Suit for damages—Mere acquittal of accused whether absolves plaintiff from proving that prosecution was malicious and without reasonable cause—Second appeal—Finding of fact—Available evidence not considered—Whether binding.

The mere acquittal of the accused in a criminal case does not absolve the plaintiff in a suit for compensation for malicious prosecution from his duty of proving independently of the acquittal that his prosecution was malicious and without reasonable and probable cause. 122 Ind. Cas. 760 (1), dissented from, 144 Ind. Cas. 387 (2), relied on. [p. 653, col. 2.]

Finding reached by lower Court without considering all available evidence is not binding on second appeal.

S. A. from the decree of the District Judge, Ambala, dated October 19, 1938.

Mr. Tek Chand, for the Appellant.

Mr. Ram Lal Anand, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—This second appeal has arisen from a suit for malicious prosecution which in its turn had its origin in the sale of a motor car. On November 3, 1935, at Kasauli, Kaju Ram bought a second hand Studebaker car from Gobind Ram for Rs. 1,003. He gave Gobind Ram a cheque for the price dated November 5, 1935, and also handed a letter dated the 5th stating that he had received the car and that if the cheque was not cashed, he would be responsible. The defendant gave a stamped receipt for the cheque. Although admittedly the transaction took place on November 3, all the documents, the cheque, the receipt and a certificate of transfer of ownership were dated the 5th. On November 6, 1935, Kaju Ram stopped payment of the cheque. On the 8th there was a telephone conversation between Gobind Ram in Kasauli and Kaju Ram in Simla. Gobind Ram asked why the cheque had not been paid and Kaju Ram replied that he had stopped payment because the permit for run the car on the Simla-Kalka Road had not been transferred to his name. Kaju Ram went on to say that if Gobind Ram could get the permit transferred, the cheque would be cashed or otherwise Gobind Ram could take back the car. This account of the matter is based on Kaju Ram's evidence at p. 367 of the record. On November 9, 1935, Gobind Ram sent a telegram to Kaju Ram to the effect that unless Kaju Ram settled he would take legal proceedings. On November 15, Gobind Ram gave a formal notice threatening Kaju Ram with legal proceedings which Kaju Ram states he received on the 19th and to which he made a reply dated the 20th. This reply states that a transfer of the permit was a condition of the contract and that without the permit he did not want the car and he suggested that Gobind Ram should take the car back.

On November 21, 1935, Gobind Ram lodged a complaint which had been drafted on the 19th and which after setting forth the facts said that the accused with intent to cheat had taken possession of the car and given the complainant a fictitious cheque; he would not have given possession of the car if he had known that the cheque would not be honoured. This complaint was tried out, a charge was framed, but Kaju Ram was acquitted by a Magistrate of the First Class on July 4, 1936. On November 24, 1936, Kaju Ram lodged the present suit for Rs. 2,500: Rs. 2,380 damages for malicious prosecution and Rs. 120 for motor garage hire. The learned Senior Subordinate Judge of Simla found that the car had been purchased by Gobind Ram for Rs. 800 two years (this is a slip for one year) previous to the transaction in suit, whereas the plaintiff Kaju Ram agreed to pay Rs. 1,003 and this supported the conclusion that the real object of the transfer was that the hill permit between Kalka and Simla should pass to the plaintiff. He also found that Kaju Ram had no intention to defraud because although on the 3rd his Bank balance was only Rs. 780 he made deposits on November 4 and 5, which brought it up to nearly Rs. 1,200. He referred to the telephone call of November 8, and found that the defendant's statement in cross-examination about this matter was evasive in the extreme and tantamount to an admission that the telephone call was made on that date. The learned Senior Subordinate Judge thought that the plaintiff's account of the matter was correct.

The defendant had denied receiving the plaintiff's reply dated November 20, but after considering the evidence of the plaintiff, the scribe of the notice, the postman and the documents which they produced, the Senior Subordinate Judge came to the conclusion that this reply had actually been delivered to the defendant. The Senior Subordinate Judge did not come to any definite conclusion as to the date on which the car was handed over. Gobind Ram's case is that the car was handed over on the 3rd; Kaju Ram's evidence supported by the driver of the car Kalu, is that it was only on the 5th. The Senior Subordinate Judge concluded that the plaintiff had proved his contention that the transfer of the bill permit between Kalka and Simla was a condition precedent to the sale of the car and that in consequence of this condition precedent not being fulfilled, the transaction fell through. Even if the defendant's contention that the transfer was completed on November 3, 1935, was accepted, the defendant had entirely failed to prove that the conduct of the plaintiff amounted to cheating and the Magistrate was quite right in acquitting Kaju Ram. As to damages, the claim was :

1. Lawyers' fee including munshiana ... Rs. 512
2. Journey and motor expenses ... " 428
3. Expenses of witnesses and other miscellaneous expenses, such as, various applications, copies, etc. ... " 135
4. Loss of 30 days' business at Rs. 20 a day ... " 600
5. General damages on account of injury to mind and reputation ... " 708

The Senior Subordinate Judge allowed (1) Rs. 507, (2) Rs. 300, (3) Rs. 105, (4) Rs. Nil, (5) Rs. Nil. On account of garage hire he only allowed Rs. 60, at Rs. 5 a month on the statement of one of the plaintiff's witnesses who gave the average rate of garage hire. He granted the plaintiff a decree for Rs. 972 with proportionate costs against the defendant. Both parties appealed to the learned District Judge who quoted Kishun Mal v. Sakul Raj Mal (1), to the following effect :

"The acquittal of the plaintiff of a charge made against him must be taken to mean that prima facie he was innocent. The burden would therefore shift on to the defendant to prove in the Civil Court that the charge disbelieved by the Criminal Court was true.... The Civil Court is called upon from a balance of the evidence and after taking into consideration the acquittal of the plaintiff by the Criminal Court to come to a definite finding whether the complaint instituted by the defendant was false or true."

The District Judge proceeded :

"In order to succeed in this appeal therefore it must be shown by the defendant that the evidence in this case leans towards the inference that the criminal case brought by him against the plaintiff was true."

The District Judge then found, relying on the documents executed on November 3, 1935—the transaction actually took place on that date—that there was no definite condition regarding the permit but that the plaintiff was not criminally liable as there was nothing to show that he had a dishonest intention at the moment when he bought the car. His subsequent conduct had not also been that of a cheat. He had not run away with the car but wished to give it back and have the transaction cancelled. The District Judge, therefore, dismissed the defendant's appeal. He also dismissed the plaintiff's appeal. Both parties have come here in second appeal: the defendant through Mr. Tek Chand, and the plaintiff through Mr. Ram Lal Anand. The defendant's main point is that the law is wrongly laid down in Kishun Mal v. Sakul Raj Mal (1), that the onus is on the plaintiff who must prove in the Civil Court (a) that the plaintiff was prosecuted by the defendant; (b) that the prosecution ended in his favour; (c) that the defendant had acted without reasonable and probable cause and (d) that the defendant was actuated by malice. This position is accepted by Mr. Ram Lal Anand and it is not necessary to labour the point. It is sufficient to say that Kishun Mal v. Sakul Raj Mal (1), has been dissented from in various rulings, e. g. Jivandas v. Hukumat Rai (2), where Jai Lal, J. laid down that the mere acquittal of the accused in a criminal case does not absolve the plaintiff in a suit for compensation for malicious prosecution from his duty of proving independently of the acquittal that his prosecution was malicious and without reasonable and probable cause.

Mr. Tek Chand argues that the District Judge's findings of fact are in his favour and binding on me and that the District Judge's view of the law is wrong. He therefore invites me to reverse the finding or at the worst after stating the law to remand the case for a new finding. Mr. Ram Lal Anand argues that the learned District Judge failed to consider all the evidence, probably because in his view of the law it was unnecessary. Be that as it may, the District Judge's finding that the transfer of the permit was not a definite condition is based merely on the face value of the documents executed on the 3rd and dated

(1) A. I. R. 1929 All. 878; 123 Ind. Cas. 760; Ind. Rul. (1930) All. 312.

November 5. The District Judge has not considered at all the evidence as to the telephone conversation of November 8, or the plaintiff's reply to the defendant's notice or a remarkable note Ex. D-16 from the file of the Licensing Officer which is proved by the Licensing Officer's Reader (D. W. No. 1) who wrote it. This note gives the history of the car which was first licensed in 1931 but was sold

"not less than half a dozen times and has been running on the Simla hill roads for the last four years. . . . The present owner appears to have purchased the same simply to secure the Simla hill roads endorsement by replacing the same in the near future."

The note recommended that the permit be not transferred on the ground that there was a waiting list of 50 people who sought passes to run cars for hire on the Kalka-Simla Road. From the evidence of the Licensing Officer's Reader (D. W. No. 1) it appears that Gobind Ram's application to transfer the permit was made on November 5, 1935; his note was dated the 7th; the application was refused by the Deputy Commissioner on the 15th; and this was officially communicated to Kaju Ram and Gobind Ram on the same date. According to Kaju Ram's evidence, which is supported by that of the driver Kalu, he ascertained on the 5th that the permit was not likely to be transferred and he at once stopped payment of the cheque. As already remarked, this evidence was not considered by the learned District Judge probably under a misapprehension of law. In these circumstances, his finding of fact is not binding on me. There is abundant authority on this point collected in Mr. Shamair Ohand's Punjab Courts Act at p. 41. It is sufficient to refer to Mansa Ram Gordhan Das v. Mangul Sain Duni Chand, 65 Ind. Cas. 497 (3) at p. 500:

"A finding of fact to be binding on a Court of second appeal must be a judicial decision reached on a consideration of the whole of the evidence, and where it appears that all the available evidence has not been considered, the High Court will interfere and should interfere in second appeal".

Considering the whole of the evidence, the telephone conversation, Kaju Ram's reply to Gobind Ram's notice and the facts set forth in the Reader's note of November 7, I have no doubt that the sale of this old car for Rs. 1,003, although it had changed hands previously for only Rs. 800, was made with the object of transferring the permit or getting the permit attached to it endorsed in favour of the purchaser. Mr. Tek Ohand refers to the uncorroborated (3) 65 Ind. Cas. 497 at p. 500; A I R 1922 Lah. 149.

statement of Gobind Ram that he had spent Rs. 500 or Rs. 600 in having the car overhauled as a reason for the increase in price after a year's work on the hill roads, but that leaves me quite unconvinced. Under s. 103, Civil P. O., I hold that the transfer of the permit was a condition precedent known to both the parties. The rest of the case is simple. It is clear that the prosecution was made without reasonable and probable cause and also that it was made maliciously. Here I adopt the well-known dictum of Bowen, L. J., in Abrath v. The North-Eastern Ry. Co. (4) at p. 455, that the proceedings were initiated in a malicious spirit, that is from an indirect and improper motive, and not in furtherance of justice. Here, no doubt Gobind Ram's object was not to get Kaju Ram sent to prison but to recover Rs. 1,003; and he acted on the criminal rather than on the civil side because he thought the criminal proceedings would be at once cheaper and more likely to exercise pressure on his opponent. There is, however, no doubt that the difference between the parties was purely a civil one and that if a case was instituted at all, it ought to have been in a Civil Court. In my opinion, Gobind Ram acted in a malicious spirit, not in furtherance of justice but from an indirect and improper motive. He knew that Kaju Ram had not committed the offence of cheating. I would, therefore, dismiss the defendant's appeal. As to the plaintiff's appeal, two Courts are already agreed about the damages. There is no evidence whatever to show that the plaintiff suffered any injury to mind or reputation and the amount he claimed for loss of business in particular is excessive. Mr. Ram Lal Anand contended that there must be an injury to mind and reputation and that there was also danger to his client's liberty, and that some damages should be allowed on this account. Beyond this no detailed criticisms of the amounts allowed by the lower Courts were made; and in particular there was no criticism of the amount allowed for garage hire. Mr. Ram Lal Anand did urge that owing to the impossibility of assessing damages accurately, costs on the full amount sought for should have been allowed and quoted some authorities to this effect, but I see no reason to interfere and dismiss the plaintiff's appeal also. Costs of both these second appeals are to be assessed in accordance with the result.

BOMBAY HIGH COURT

Second Appeal No. 635 of 1936

April 12, 1939

LOKUR, J.

BAI HAKIMBU AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—

versus

DAYABHAI RUGNATH—DEFENDANT—

RESPONDENT

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 64, O. XXXVIII, r. 7, O. XXI, r. 103—Attachment before judgment—Procedure—Proper procedure not followed—Transfer, if invalidated under s. 64—Suit under O. XXI, r. 103—Right to present possession established—Plaintiff's dispossession pending suit is not material—Order of removal of his obstruction must be set aside—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 53—Transfer by judgment-debtor to delay or defeat his creditor decree-holder—It is voidable at decree-holder's option even if he may subsequently become auction-purchaser—Suit against creditor by transferee—Creditor, if can plead s. 53 as personal defence—Whether must bring representative suit to avoid transfer—Transfer to one creditor in preference to other, when valid.

Unless all the processes of attachment which are required by law to effect a valid attachment have been served, there is no such attachment of the property as would invalidate its transfer under s. 64, Civil P. O. Under O. XXXVIII, r. 7, the attachment before judgment must be effected in the same manner as the attachment in execution of a decree. Under O. XXI, r. 54, the attachment of immovable property is to be made by an order prohibiting the defendant from transferring or charging the property in any way and all persons from taking any benefit from such transfer or charge. The order has to be proclaimed in the manner described in sub-r. (2) of r. 54. A mere order of attachment is not enough. 109 Ind. Cas. 626 (1), relied on. [p. 657, col. 2.]

In a suit under O. XXI, r. 103, Civil P. O. the plaintiff must prove not only that he was in possession when he obstructed the defendant in taking possession of the property in suit as its auction-purchaser, but must also "establish the right which he claims to the present possession of the property." If he succeeds in doing so, his dispossession during the pendency of the suit does not matter. If his right is proved, then the order of the removal of the plaintiff's obstruction must be set aside and the status quo, as at the date of that order, must be restored, that is to say, the plaintiff must be put back into possession. [p. 656, col. 2.]

Under s. 53, T. P. Act, only a defeated or delayed creditor or a subsequent transferee has the option to impeach the transfer. An auction-purchaser, who is not the decree-holder himself, is not a creditor of the judgment-debtor, and it cannot be said that the transfer was intended to delay or defeat him, since he stepped in after the transfer by operation of law. Nor is he a subsequent transferee within the meaning of sub-s. (2). If, however, a person can prove that he was the creditor and decree-holder of the judgment-debtor and the assignment of the property made by the judgment-debtor was intended to delay or defeat him, then the assignment is voidable at his option, though he may subsequently become an auction-purchaser. A decree-holder does not lose his right to the benefit of s. 53, by himself becoming an auction-purchaser. [p. 658, col. 2.]

It is true that if such a creditor institutes a suit to avoid a transfer, he must do so "on behalf of or for the benefit of all the creditors." The reason of the rule is that the debtor should not be harassed by a multiplicity of suits by each and every creditor. But this does not mean that the creditor, even when he is defendant, must defend the suit on behalf of the whole body of creditors. He may plead s. 53, T. P. Act, as a personal defence to the suit against him, and it is not necessary that he must file a representative suit to avoid the transfer. The addition of para. 4 to s. 53, sub-s. (1), by amendment of 1929 makes no difference, and it has no application to a creditor who has to defend a suit filed against him by a plaintiff claiming under a transfer voidable under s. 53. It is, therefore, open to the defendant to resist the plaintiff's claim on the ground that the assignment taken by him is voidable at his option. 59 Ind. Cas. 947 (4), relied on. [ibid.]

It is open to the debtor to convey his property to either of his creditors in preference to the other, although it is effected to avoid the execution of his decree by the latter. But in doing so he must not reserve any benefit for himself. The transfer of property to one creditor for a price far in excess of the debt due to him and the retention of the excess amount for his own benefit indicate an intent to defeat or delay the other creditors, especially when he has no other property left. 40 Ind. Cas. 242 (5), relied on. [p. 659, col. 1.]

Such an assignment should not be upheld even to the extent of the amount which was actually due to the creditor. 52 Ind. Cas. 682 (7), relied on. Rajani Kumar Dass v. Gaur Kishore Shah (6), explained.

S. A. from a decision of the First Class Sub-Judge, Broach, in Appeal No. 80 of 1933.

Mr. J. G. Mody, for the Appellants.

Messrs. G. N. Thakor and B. C. Thakor, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—The appellants' father, who was the plaintiff, died during the pendency of the suit, and the appellants were brought on record as his heirs and legal representatives. For the sake of facility, I shall refer to the deceased plaintiff as the plaintiff in this judgment. He and the defendant were the creditors of two brothers, Fidaali and Nuralli, who were the owners of the property in suit. They separated on September 29, 1927, when the property in suit was allotted to the share of Nuralli who undertook to pay off the joint debts, and also to pay Rs. 2,500 to Fidaali for his share. As Nuralli was unable to pay the amount in cash, he mortgaged the property in suit with possession to Fidaali for Rs. 2,500 on the same day. After they were thus separated, both the plaintiff and the defendant filed separate suits against them to recover their respective dues. The defendant filed suit No. 342 of 1928, on October 25, 1928, and pending the suit he got the property in suit attached before judgment, as if it belonged to both the brothers. In that suit the defendant got a decree for Rs. 800 on April 25, 1929, and the attachment before judgment was ordered to be continued. In the meantime, the plaintiff also had obtained a decree in his suit on January 20, 1929. The plaintiff presented darkhast No. 120 of 1929 on April 27, 1929, to execute his decree against Fidaali alone and to recover the decretal amount by the sale of Fidaali's interest as a mortgagee in the property in suit. Nuralli was not joined as a party to that darkhast. The defendant also filed darkhast No. 138 of 1929 against both Fidaali and Nuralli on June 13, 1929, to recover his decretal amount by the sale of the property which had been attached before judgment. When the defendant came to know that the plaintiff's darkhast was also pending, he made an application on August 12, 1929, that his darkhast should be kept along with the plaintiff's darkhast, and prayed for a rateable distribution of the amount realized by the sale of the property in the plaintiff's darkhast. Accordingly, an order was passed on September 10, 1929, stating that the defendant's darkhast for rateable distribution be kept along with the plaintiff's darkhast as prayed for.

Thereafter on September 28, 1929, the plaintiff privately purchased from Fidaali his mortgagee right in the property in suit for Rs. 1,999 by the sale deed Ex. 94. That consideration was made up of Rs. 1,230 payable under the decree, and Rs. 769 paid in cash in the presence of the Sub-Registrar. After obtaining this sale deed, the plaintiff dropped his darkhast and it was struck off on September 30, 1929. The defendant then amended the prayer in his darkhast on December 5, 1929, and asked for the attachment and sale of Fidaali's interest in the property in suit. Nuralli having become an insolvent in the meanwhile, Fidaali's share was then sold by auction and purchased by the defendant himself for Rs. 500 on October 9, 1930. The sale was confirmed on November 18, 1930, and the defendant applied for possession under O. XXI, r. 95, Civil P. O. The plaintiff objected, but his obstruction was removed on January 16, 1931, and the defendant was ordered to be given possession. The plaintiff then filed this suit under O. XXI, r. 103, Civil P. O., for a declaration of the property in his own right and was entitled to it, and for an injunction restraining the defendant from dispossessing him. The suit was filed on June 15, 1931, and on April 10, 1932, the defendant took possession of the property as the auction-purchaser. The plaintiff therefore amended his plaint on June 6, 1932, and prayed for the possession of the property.

The defendant contended that as the property had already been attached in his suit No. 342 of 1928, the plaintiff's subsequent purchase was void against him, under s. 64, Civil P. O.; and that his purchase was not bona fide but intended to defeat and delay the creditors of Fidaali and Nuralli, and was therefore voidable under s. 53, T. P. Act. On the other hand, it was contended on behalf of the plaintiff that the attachment before judgment in the defendant's suit No. 342 of 1928, did not affect Fidaali's mortgagee right in the property, and that the defendant's auction-purchase was vitiated by the want of proper attachment. The trial Court held that the attachment before judgment was not proper and that the defendant, as the auction-purchaser, had no right to challenge the validity of the plaintiff's purchase under s. 53, T. P. Act. It also held that the plaintiff's purchase was not intended to defeat or delay the creditors of Fidaali and Nuralli. The plaintiff's claim was, therefore, decreed; but that decree was set aside in appeal by the learned First Class Subordinate Judge, A. P., who held that although the defendant was an auction-purchaser, he was also a decree-holder, and in that capacity he was entitled to challenge the plaintiff's purchase under s. 53, T. P. Act, and that as the plaintiff had paid Rs. 769 to Fidaali for his benefit, the purchase was fraudulent and intended to defeat the creditors of Fidaali and Nuralli. On this ground it was held that the plaintiff had no title to the property in suit, and was not entitled to evict the defendant. All these contentions have been pressed in this Court by one side or the other.

This suit being filed under the provisions of O. XXI, r. 103, Civil P. O., the plaintiff must prove not only that he was in possession when he obstructed the defendant in taking possession of the property in suit as its auction-purchaser, but must also "establish the right which he claims to the present possession of the property". If he succeeds in doing so, his dispossession during the pendency of the suit does not matter. If his right is proved, then the order of the removal of the plaintiff iff's obstruction must be set aside and the status quo, as at the date of that order, must be restored, that is to say, the plaintiff must be put back into possession. The plaintiff does not claim to be the owner of the property in suit, but claims to be entitled to its present possession as the assignee of Fidaali's mortgagee rights. The assignment is attacked on two grounds: it is said to be void under s. 64, Civil P. O., and to be voidable under s. 53, T. P. Act. Section 64, Civil P. O., provides that where an attachment has been made, any private transfer or delivery of the property attached or of any interest therein shall be void as against all claims enforceable under the attachment. It is alleged that the property in suit was attached before judgment in the defendant's suit No. 342 of 1928, and it was continued by the decree.

It is urged on behalf of the plaintiff that the order of attachment was illegal, not being in accordance with the provisions of O. XXXVIII, rr. 5 and 6, Civil P. O. According to those rules, the defendant should first be directed to furnish security, or to produce the property or its value, or appear and show cause why he should not furnish security. A conditional attachment may also be simultaneously ordered. If the defendant does not show cause, nor furnish security, then the attachment of the property is to be ordered. But in suit No. 342 of 1928, as soon as the defendant made an application for the attachment of the property before judgment (Ex. 61), a prohibitory notice was issued to Fidaali and Nuralli directing them not to transfer the property in any way during the pendency of the suit. They were not given the option of furnishing security. Nor was the order confirmed after a hearing. But I do not think that the plaintiff can take advantage of this irregularity. In spite of the prohibitory notice, Fidaali and Nuralli raised no objection and did not object to that notice. They did not offer to furnish security, and ultimately they allowed a decree to be passed against them whereby the attachment was continued. But in that suit Fidaali's mortgagee rights were not sought to be attached. In his application the defendant prayed for the attachment of the property itself as belonging to both Fidaali and Nuralli. But Nuralli had already become the sole owner of the property and had mortgaged it to Fidaali for Rs. 2,500. It is argued that thereby the property was divided into Nuralli's equity of redemption and Fidaali's mortgagee rights, and both of them must be deemed to have been attached by the attachment of the property itself. Even if it were so, the property itself was never actually attached. Under O. XXXVIII, r. 7, the attachment before judgment must be effected in the same manner as the attachment in execution of a decree. Under O. XXI, r. 54, the attachment of immovable property is to be made by an order prohibiting the defendant from transferring or charging the property in any way and all persons from taking any benefit from such transfer or charge. The order has to be proclaimed in the manner described in sub-r. (2) of r. 54. Nothing of the kind was done in suit No. 342 of 1928. Only one prohibitory notice was served on Fidaali and Nuralli (Ex. 62) and the rozanama (Ex. 67) shows that no proclamation was issued nor were all persons prohibited from taking any benefit from any transfer or charge thereafter. A mere order of attachment is not enough. Muthiah Chetti v. Palaniappa Chetti (1), the Judicial Committee observed (p. 356):

"In view of these provisions the Board listened with some surprise to a protracted argument which culminated in the proposition that a property was in law attached whenever an order for attachment was made. The result, if this were so, would be that a person holding an order could dispense with attachment altogether as an operation or a fact. Their Lordships need not repeat in another form these propositions. The order is one thing, the attachment is another. No property can be declared to be attached unless first the order for attachment has been issued, and secondly in execution of that order, the other things prescribed by the rules in the Code have been done."

Unless all the processes of attachment which are required by law to effect a valid attachment have been served, there is no such attachment of the property as would invalidate its transfer under s. 64, Civil P. O. In Hira Lal v. Jagatpati Sahai (2), it was held that in the case of land paying revenue to Govt. an attachment was not effective to invalidate a subsequent transfer as a copy of the order of attachment had not been affixed in the office of the Collector of the District. Hence in this case there was no effective attachment of the property, much less of Fidaali's mortgagee rights in it. In this view it is unnecessary to consider whether Fidaali's rights were movable property to be attached under O. XXI, r. 46, or immovable property to be attached under O. XXI,

r. 54. They were not attached under either of these rules, and their assignment in favour of the plaintiff is not void under s. 64, Civil P. C. The next question is whether the assignment is voidable under s. 53, T. P. Act, at the option of the defendant. It is contended for the plaintiff that the defendant cannot get the benefit of that section since he is not a creditor of the assignor, but an auction-purchaser, and since he does not represent all the creditors. In support of the first contention reliance is placed on the ruling in Vasudeo Raghunath v. Janardhan Sadashiv (3), s. 53, sub-s. (1), provides:

"Every transfer of immovable property made with intent to defeat or delay the creditors of the transferor shall be voidable at the option of any creditor so defeated or delayed."

Sub-s. (2) of s. 53 provides:

"Every transfer of immovable property made without consideration with intent to defraud a subsequent transferee shall be voidable at the option of such transferee."

From the very wording of these sub-sections it follows that only a defeated or delayed creditor or a subsequent transferee has the option to impeach the transfer. An auction-purchaser, who is not the decree-holder himself, is not a creditor of the judgment-debtor, and it cannot be said that the transfer was intended to delay or defeat him, since he stepped in after the transfer by operation of law. Nor is he a subsequent transferee within the meaning of sub-s. (2). In Vasudeo Raghunath v. Janardhan Sadashiv (3), Shah, J. observed (p. 512*):

"But the defendant is an auction-purchaser at a Court sale, and not a transferee by any act of the original owner. Having regard to the preamble as well as s. 5 of the Act, it seems to be clear that a person, who steps in by operation of law and not by any act of the owner is not a subsequent transferee within the meaning of s. 53. He is clearly not a person having an interest in the property within the meaning of the section, which apparently refers to interest, which exists in fact at the time of the transfer objected to."

This was the interpretation of the section as it stood before 1929, but the view expressed above is in no way affected by the amendment of the section by the Amending Act of 1929. But in this case the defendant was a creditor of Fidaali and was holding a decree against him when he assigned his mortgagee rights to the plaintiff. If that assignment was intended to defeat or delay the defendant, he can challenge its validity, although he subsequently became an auction-purchaser of the same property. He cannot challenge it as a "subsequent transferee" under sub-s. (2) of s. 53, but can do so as a "creditor" under sub-s. (1), which says, in effect, that whenever a creditor (or decree-holder) is delayed or defeated by the transfer of the property of his debtor (or judgment-debtor), the transfer is voidable at the option of such creditor (or decree-holder). If the defendant can prove that he was a creditor of Fidaali and that the assignment taken by the plaintiff from Fidaali was intended to delay or defeat him, then the assignment is voidable at his option, though he may subsequently become an auction-purchaser. A decree-holder does not lose his right to the benefit of s. 53, T. P. Act, by himself becoming an auction purchaser, and if the property purchased by him at the auction had been transferred by the judgment-debtor with intent to delay or defeat him, the transfer is voidable at his option. It is true that if such a creditor institutes a suit to avoid such a transfer, he must do so "on behalf of or for the benefit of all the creditors." The reason of the rule is that the debtor should not be harassed by a multiplicity of suits by each and every creditor. But this does not mean that the creditor, even when he is defendant, must defend the suit on behalf of the whole body of creditors. He may plead s. 53 T. P. Act, as a personal defence to the suit against him, and it is not necessary that he must file a representative suit to avoid the transfer. It was so held by a Full Bench of the Madras High Court in Ramaswami Chettiar v. Mallappa Reddiar (4) before the section was amended by the Amending Act of 1929. I do not think that the addition of para. 4 to s. 53, sub-s. (1), makes any difference, as it has no application to a creditor who has to defend a suit filed against him by a plaintiff claiming under a transfer voidable under s. 53. It is therefore open to the defendant to resist the plaintiff's claim on the ground that the assignment taken by him is voidable at his option.

If the plaintiff was a transferee in good faith and for consideration, the transfer is not voidable even though it has resulted in the delaying or defeating the other creditors of the transferor. At the date of the transfer the darkhasts of both the plaintiff and the defendant were pending against Fidaali. Nuralli had become an insolvent

It was, however, open to Fidaali to convey his property to either of his creditors in preference to the other, although it was effected to avoid the execution of his decree by the latter. As observed by Sir Lawrence Jenkins in Mina Kumari Bibi v. Bijoy Singh Dudhuria (5) (p. 671):

"A debtor, for all that is contained in s. 53, T. P. Act, may pay his debts in any order he pleases, and prefer any creditor he chooses."

But in doing so he must not reserve any benefit for himself. The transfer of property to one creditor for a price far in excess of the debt due to him and the retention of the excess amount for his own benefit indicate an intent to defeat or delay the other creditors; especially when he has no other property left. The circumstances under which the plaintiff obtained the assignment from Fidaali are significant. The plaintiff filed his darkhast on April 27, 1929, and the defendant filed his darkhast on June 13, 1929. On August 12, 1929, the defendant made an application for the rateable distribution of the amount to be realized in the plaintiff's darkhast. That application was granted, and on September 10, 1929, the defendant's darkhast was kept pending, the realization of assets by the sale of Fidaali's mortgagee rights in the plaintiff's darkhast. The plaintiff must have come to know this: and he quietly got Fidaali's mortgagee rights assigned to him privately for Rs. 1,999, out of which Rs. 1,230 went towards the satisfaction of his decree and Rs. 769 were paid in cash to Fidaali. Had these tactics not been resorted to, Rs. 1,999 would have been rateably divided between the plaintiff and the defendant. By this fraudulent transfer, Fidaali got Rs. 769 for his own benefit, and the plaintiff got his decree fully satisfied. The plaintiff cannot therefore be regarded as a transferee in good faith. Had the only purpose of the plaintiff been to recover his debt and the property purchased by him was not worth substantially more than the amount of the debt, then the transaction could not be treated as fraudulent though he knew that the defendant's claim would thereby be defeated. But here the plaintiff knowingly paid Rs. 769 to the judgment-debtor in cash, which otherwise would have been available for the defendant's claim. This was not a case of a mere preference of one creditor to another, but a mischievous device to benefit one creditor and the debtor at the expense of the other creditors. The assignment is, therefore, voidable at the option of the defendant, and he is not bound by it. The plaintiff's claim based on such an assignment must fail.

Lastly, it is urged that the assignment should be upheld at least to the extent of Rs. 1,230, the amount which was actually due to the plaintiff. Under para. 1 of s. 53, sub-s. (1), the transfer is voidable in toto if its intent is to defeat or delay, the transferor's creditors; but para. 2, which is the same as para. 3 of the section as it stood before the amendment in 1929, provides:

"Nothing in this sub-section shall impair the rights of a transferee in good faith and for consideration."

As the plaintiff is held not to have taken the assignment in good faith, he cannot get the benefit of this paragraph. He relies upon the ruling in Rajani Kumar Dass v. Gaur Kishore Shaha (6) but it does not mean to lay down that a transferee under a fraudulent document intended to defeat or delay creditors should have any lien for the amount actually due to him before the transfer. Scott, O. J., after considering the effect of that case in Bhikabhai Muljibhai v. Panachand (7) held (p. 713*):

"The inferences deducible from the established facts show that both the transferor and the transferee had the intention of defeating or delaying the creditors of the transferor, and under those circumstances it appears to us that the document must, at the option of his person, defeated or delayed be treated as void in toto, and not merely as void in so far as there is no consideration."

Paragraphs 1 and 2 of s. 53, sub-s. (1) are not capable of any other interpretation. When the transferee is a party to the fraud, there can be no equity in his favour. It being held that the plaintiff is not a transferee in good faith, the transfer is wholly void since the defendant, the defeated creditor, has challenged its validity, and the plaintiff is not entitled to any relief in this suit. In view of this finding, it is not necessary to consider whether the defendant has acquired a valid title to the property by his auction-purchase, or whether the auction-purchase is vitiated by the want of a valid and subsisting attachment of the property when the auction was held. It is argued that this is not strictly a suit in ejectment, but a suit under O. XXI, r. 103, Civil P. O., and if the defendant's auction-purchase be not legal and valid, he had no right to dispossess the plaintiff. The reply to this is that the plaintiff, as the assignee of Fidaali's mortgagee rights, had no locus standi to obstruct the auction-purchaser, since the assignment is held to be void. The order of the executing Court removing his obstruction was, therefore, proper and cannot be set aside in this suit. The appeal is, therefore, dismissed with costs.

BHUDEO PRASAD—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANTversusSRI NATH AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—*RESPONDENTS

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, rr. 58, 62, 66—Order under r. 62, effect of—Third person attaching mortgaged property in execution of money decree—Application by mortgagee that his mortgage should be notified in sale proclamation—Court dismissing application holding that mortgage was discharged—Order, whether under r. 62—Part of mortgaged property put up for sale in execution of money decree, by third person—Mortgagee's objection dismissed under r. 62—Order relates only to part put up for sale.

If a mortgagee without possession chooses to prefer an objection under O. XXI, r. 58, on the strength of his alleged mortgage, and an adverse order is passed against him in the objection proceeding, such decision is conclusive against him unless he brings a declaratory suit within one year. 88 Ind. Cas. 332 (1), 102 Ind. Cas. 792 (2) and 120 Ind. Cas. 679 (3), relied on.

A decree-holder who had obtained a money decree against a mortgagor attached the mortgaged property in execution. The mortgagee applied to the executing Court stating that the attached property was mortgaged to him and praying that at the time of the auction sale notification of his mortgage should be made. Upon this application the mortgagor alone led evidence and the Court dismissed the application concluding that the mortgage had been discharged:

Held, that the order passed by the execution Court amounted merely to refusal to notify the mortgage in the proclamation for sale, and was not an order under O. XXI, r. 62, Civil P. C. and the mortgagee was not in any way debarred from contending in the subsequent case that the mortgage had not been paid up.

Where in execution of a money decree obtained against a mortgagor by a third person, a part of the mortgaged property is put up for sale and the mortgagee applies under O. XXI, r. 58, Civil P. C., but his objection is dismissed under r. 62 and the third person purchases the part of the mortgaged property, the order of the Court under r. 62 operates only in respect of that portion and the third person cannot take advantage of this order in respect of other part of the mortgaged property purchased by him privately subsequent to the passing of such orders.

S. A. from the decision of the Civil Judge, Muttra, dated January 7, 1937.

Mr. S. B. L. Gaur, for the Appellant.

Mr. N. P. Asthana, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—This is an appeal by Bhudeo Prasad, plaintiff. The facts may be stated in some detail. The suit by the plaintiff was for the recovery of a sum of money on the basis of a mortgage executed by one Babu Lal. The defendants to the suit were the brothers of Babu Lal and one Sri Nath who was a subsequent transferee of 2/3rds of the mortgaged property. The main contesting defendant was Sri Nath and I am concerned with his defence only. His defence was that by reason of an order passed by an executing Court on January 28, 1931, the mortgagee was not entitled to proceed against 2/3rds of the mortgaged property in possession of Sri Nath. It appears that 1/3rd of the mortgaged property was put up to sale in execution of a simple money decree and the property was attached by the Amin on April 13, 1930. On April 23, 1930, Bhudeo Prasad filed a certain petition in connection with which an order was passed by the executing Court on January 28, 1931, and it is said that this was an order passed by the executing Court under O. XXI, r. 62, Civil P. C., and as no suit was filed under O. XXI, r. 63, Civil P. C., the order was conclusive. Some time afterwards, the exact date is not known, Sri Nath purchased another 1/3rd portion of the mortgaged property, and his contention is that the order of the executing Court dated January 28, 1931, affects not only 1/3rd portion of the mortgaged property purchased by him at auction but affects the subsequent 1/3rd portion of the mortgaged property purchased by Sri Nath by private treaty. The trial Court held in favour of Sri Nath's defence so far as 1/3rd portion of the property purchased at auction was concerned but repelled his defence so far as 1/3rd of the property purchased by private treaty was concerned. The lower Appellate Court has upheld the defence of Sri Nath both as regards 1/3rd portion purchased at public auction and 1/3rd portion purchased by private sale, and hence there is this appeal by the plaintiff Bhudeo Prasad before me, and it is contended that the Courts below are wrong and neither the 1/3rd purchased at auction nor the 1/3rd purchased at private sale by Sri Nath can be saved from the operation of the mortgage. I have already hinted briefly in an earlier portion of my judgment all the circumstances under which the plaintiff filed an application on April 23, 1930, and the Court passed an order on January 28, 1931. When the 1/3rd portion of the mortgaged property was attached in execution of the simple money decree Bhudeo Prasad filed an application on April 23, 1930, which might be quoted ex inteso. The application is to the following effect :

"In the abovenamed suit the decree-holder has attached and put up for sale property mentioned below but that property is mortgaged with the petitioner by means of a mortgage without possession dated June 18, 1923, executed by Babu Lal for Rs 2,000 with interest at the rate of Rs. 1-8-0 per cent. per mensem. Therefore it is prayed that at the time of auction notification of the mortgage might be made."

The lower Appellate Court mentions the various steps that were taken by the executing Court in connection with the proclamation for sale. Separate notices were issued under O. XXI, r. 66, Civil P. C., to the judgment-debtor and to the decree-holder and separate notices were issued in connection with this application made by the mortgagee Bhudeo Prasad. Some evidence was taken presumably because it was pleaded by the judgment-debtor that the mortgage had been paid up. The evidence, as far as I can gather, was on behalf of the mortgagor alone and not on behalf of the mortgagee and the executing Court passed the following order on January 28, 1931 :

"The objector alleges that the property sought to be sold is subject to his mortgage. The house was purchased by Babu Lal, brother of judgment-debtor, for Rs. 1,400 on August 29, 1921. He borrowed Rs. 2,000 on the security of this house by mortgage deed dated June 18, 1923. He borrowed this money for the purpose of thekah business as it is clear from the mortgage deed itself. Babu Lal started thekah business. He took Shiam Lal as his partner. The partnership rokar book has entry of payment of Rs. 1,000 on August 29, 1923, and of Rs. 950 on January 9, 1929. The entries were made by the mumin at the instance of Babu Lal. The money being borrowed for thekah business, out of the thekah income, the debt was discharged. Babu Lal is dead. I see no reason to doubt the genuineness of the entries. Rupees 950 being paid within 7 months of the execution of the mortgage deed, the remaining Rs. 50 and interest must have (been) paid. The deed appears to be discharged and so I dismiss the application."

It is said that this was an order passed under O. XXI, r. 62, Civil P. C., and therefore Bhudeo Prasad, against whom the order was made, should have instituted a suit to establish the right which he claimed to the property in dispute, but as he did not file any such suit within a year of the order, the order was conclusive and it is not open to Bhudeo Prasad to say that the mortgage had not been discharged. As is clear, the order of the executing Court dated January 28, 1931, winds up by saying: "The deed appears to be discharged and so I dismiss the application".—When this case was before me on a former occasion, on December 22, 1938, I remitted an issue to the Court below. The issue was, 'Has the mortgage in suit been paid up,' and the finding returned by the Court below is that the evidence on the record falls short of proving that the mortgage in suit has been paid up. No objections have been taken to this finding by either of the parties and the finding of the lower Appellate Court must be accepted for what it is worth. The position therefore is that there is a finding of a competent Court obtained on the regular side to the effect that the mortgage deed in suit has not been paid up, and there is the contradictory finding of an execution Court in a summary proceeding that the mortgage in suit has been discharged, and I have in this second appeal either to reconcile these two findings, if such a thing is possible, or to give effect to that finding which predominates as a matter of law. It is contended by the plaintiff appellant that the earlier finding of the learned Munsif sitting as an execution Court on January 28, 1931, is of no avail inasmuch as that finding was arrived at in connection with the drawing up of the sale proclamation, whereas on behalf of the defendant-respondent Sri Nath it is said that the finding was given under O. XXI, r. 62, Civil P. C. The real question for determination in a matter like this is whether the petition of April 23, 1930, by Bhudeo Prasad was a petition of objection or claim under O. XXI, r. 58, Civil P. C., or a petition for the purposes of notification under O. XXI, r. 66, Civil P. C., so that the Court might specify fairly and accurately the incumbrances to which the property sought to be sold was liable. Reliance was placed by the learned Counsel for the parties on several authorities to which reference has been made in the judgment of the lower Appellate Court. I have considered every one of these cases save the Oudh cases, and I think that except the cases in Mohit Narain Jha v. Thakan Jha (1), Debi Das v. Rup Chand (2) and Nival Kishore v. Khiali Ram (3), the others have not a material bearing.

There can be no doubt that under O. XXI, r. 66, Civil P. C., the Court has got to draw a fair and accurate proclamation of sale and has got to specify the various particulars required to be so specified under that rule and in that connection has got to issue notices to the decree-holder and to the judgment-debtor and has also, for the purposes of ascertaining the matters to be specified in the proclamation, the power to summon any person whom it thinks necessary to summon and to examine him in respect to the matters to be entered in the sale proclamation and can also require such a stranger to produce any document in his possession or power. The notices are not necessarily limited to the judgment-debtor and to the decree-holder. It is the duty of the Court to obtain from all available sources a list of the existing encumbrances, and the petition of April 23, 1930, might well be regarded as one of such sources. At the same time there can be no doubt, as was held in the Lahore case, that "if a person chooses to take advantage of a summary procedure, he must suffer its disadvantage as well as enjoy its benefit, and therefore if a mortgagee without possession chooses to prefer an objection under O. XXI, r. 58, on the strength of his alleged mortgage, and an adverse order is passed against him in the objection proceeding, such decision is conclusive against him unless he brings a declaratory suit within one year," but as was held there, the real question is what is the nature of the petition filed by the mortgagee. In the Lahore case the mortgagee had said that the property was not liable to attachment and sale in execution of the decree in question unless the mortgage money due to the objector was preserved. A somewhat similar decision was obtained in Debi Das v. Rup Chand (2), but it is of some importance to note that the application by the mortgagee was not before the Court and their Lordships to a certain extent speculated about the nature of the application. I have not the slightest doubt that if a mortgagee files a petition of objection or claim, then an order adverse to the mortgagee given by the Court will be conclusive unless the mortgagee brings a suit within a year, but did the mortgagee in the present case file any claim or petition; did he ever say that he had an objection to the attachment and sale of the property and did he ever say that the property should be sold subject to the mortgage or charge of the petitioner. To my mind all that he did was to give an information to the Court about an encumbrance and prayed that the same be notified. As far as I can see, he did not adduce any evidence and it was only the judgment-debtor who contended that the mortgage was paid up and in that connection, it was he who produced some evidence and the Court ultimately dismissed the petition of the mortgagee, that is to say, refused to notify the mortgage in the proclamation for sale.

I have therefore come to the conclusion that the order that was passed by the execution Court on January 28, 1931, was not an order under O. XXI, r. 62, Civil P. C., and the mortgagee is not in any way debarred from contending in the present case that the mortgage has not been paid up. That being so, there is the finding of the lower Appellate Court, a finding of fact which has not been objected to by the parties, that the mortgage has not been discharged. The plaintiff therefore is entitled to have his claim decreed. I might further add that if I had been against the mortgagee as to the interpretation of the application dated April 23, 1930, and the order dated January 28, 1931, I would have held that the order operated only in respect to 1/3rd portion of the mortgaged property. Order XXI, r. 63, Civil P. C., speaks of the claim to the property in dispute and says to that extent the order shall be conclusive. There is no question of res judicata in a matter like this and the lower Appellate Court, to my mind, is in error when it says that to that Sri Nath purchased the property at private sale after he had obtained an order to the effect that the mortgage had been discharged. That order related only to 1/3rd portion of the property and that order could not be taken advantage of by Sri Nath in connection with the purchase of the property at a private sale. As I said before, we do not know even the date of the private sale and it may well be that that private sale was held before the expiry of a year from after the order of January 28, 1931. I however do not base my decision on any consideration as to the time when the property was purchased, but on the general ground that the order, if it had been of any avail, could be taken advantage of only in connection with 1/3rd portion of the mortgaged property. For the reasons give above I allow this appeal, set aside the decrees of the Courts below and decree the plaintiff's suit against all the defendants and against the entire property with costs in all Courts

The decree will be drawn up under O. XXXIV, r. 4, Civil P. O., giving six months' time to the defendants to pay up the mortgage money. Leave to file an appeal by way of Letters Patent is allowed.

AGA M. SHEERAZEE—RESPONDENT

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. IX, r. 13, O. V, r. 20 (3)—"Prevented by any sufficient cause from appearing" in O. IX, r. 13, meaning of—"Effectual" in O. V, r. 20 (3), meaning of—"Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 164—"Due service of summons" in Art. 164 and O. IX, r. 13, Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908) meaning of.

The words "prevented by any sufficient cause from appearing" in O. IX, r. 13, Civil P. O., clearly mean causes other than lack of knowledge of the proceedings. [p. 666, col. 1.]

The word "effectual" in O. V, r. 20, sub-r. (3) does not mean due service. The order for substituted service is made ex parte, and obviously it should be open to the defendant when he appears to show that the method employed was not calculated to effect the purpose which the Court had in view, namely informing the defendant of the institution of the suit. The rule that substituted service is to be taken as effectual as personal service only means that the Court hearing the case may proceed with the suit as if the summons had been personally served on the defendant. The basis of the order on which the Court orders substituted service to issue is either that the defendant is either deliberately keeping out of the way to avoid process or that it cannot be served in the ordinary way, perhaps through no fault of his own. In the latter case, the defendant may always show that the proceedings could not have come to his knowledge. In the former case the order of the Court is only relevant to the question whether the defendant was in a position to have knowledge of the proceedings, for obviously if a defendant keeps out of the way to avoid service of process on him either on account of the suit in question or of other suits that have been or may be filed against him, he cannot afterwards be heard to argue that he had no knowledge of the proceedings as he has deliberately put himself in a position where he can have no such knowledge. 136 Ind. Cas. 609 (1) and 134 Ind. Cas. 1203 (2), relied on. [p. 666, col. 2.]

In Art. 164, Lim. Act, and O. IX, r. 13, Civil P. O., "due service of summons" means not only that the summons was served in proper form according to the directions laid down in the Code but also that the summons was served under circumstances which enabled the Court to be satisfied that the defendant had knowledge of the decree against him, except of course in the case where the defendant had purposely put it out of his power to have such knowledge. [ibid.]

Mr. Kalyanwalla, for the Appellant.

Mr. Aiyangar, for the Respondent.

Mosely, J.—The appellant K. K. N. K. A. R. Chettyar Firm of Hlawga by its agent Kanappa Chettyar applied under O. IX, r. 13, Civil P. O., for setting aside an ex parte decree passed against it in Civil Regular Suit No. 29 of 1931 of the District Court of Insein. The learned District Judge dismissed the application holding that the applicants had been duly served once by a summons which was refused by their clerk and posted on their place of business, and secondly, by substituted service. In appeal it is now contended that these findings were wrong, and that the appellants were never properly served, and it is also argued that in any case they were unaware of the summonses and the proceedings in the suit. Their case in the trial Court was that the summonses and subsequent notices in the case were kept from their knowledge by fraud or, if not, by irregularities or carelessness in the service of them. The suit in question was one instituted by the present respondent Aga M. Sheerazee for an equitable mortgage decree. The property in that suit was very large and the property now in question is some 130 acres. There were nine defendants in that suit. The facts there were briefly that the lands in question originally belonged to one Ko Po Myo and his wife who mortgaged them in 1921 to the appellants, the K. K. N. K. A. R. Firm. In 1922 Po Mya sold the lands to O. A. P. O. T. Shanmugam Chettyar. In 1923 Shanmugam Chettyar mortgaged them by an equitable mortgage to Sheerazee. In 1924 the K. K. N. K. A. R. Firm obtained a mortgage decree against Po Mya and Shanmugam Chettyar and the Firm bought the lands in execution. Then in 1931 Sheerazee brought this mortgage suit against Shanmugam Chettyar and eight other defendants, one of whom was the appellant firm and another was the so-called K. K. N. K. A. P. Veerappa Chettyar. Veerappa Chettyar died in 1935 and the suit was continued against his son of the same name Veerappa alias Somasundaram Chettyar.

A decree was passed against all nine defendants, ex parte against Veerappa Chettyar and the appellant firm. There is evidence in the present case which has not been rebutted or even denied that there never was such a firm as the K. K. N. K. A. P. and Veerappa appears to have been impleaded by mistake merely because he was a previous agent of the appellant K. K. N. K. A. R. Firm. The appellant firm was sued in that suit as subsequent transferees of the property. It is said now, and it is not denied, that they never were such subsequent transferees of the property but merely prior encumbrancers. On referring to the case I find that there was no issue on the point whether they were subsequent transferees. That perhaps is natural as the case was decided ex parte against them; but there was no evidence on the subject and no reference to it, much less any finding on the point in the judgment. All that there is in the case is a pleading in the plaint that they were subsequent transferees and the decree was one against them as well as the other defendants. No attempt was evidently made to execute it as against them. It is perhaps doubtful whether anything is res judicata against the present appellants. Even had they been proved to have been subsequent transferees, there would have been no merger of their interest in the property as prior mortgagees: s. 101, T. P. Act, as altered in 1929. But they have chosen to file the present suit if only by way of greater caution, and the matter must now be decided.

The appellants also filed another application under O. XXI, r. 90, to have the sale of certain land set aside on the ground that they had no notice of the terms of the proclamation and that the proclamation itself did not disclose the previous encumbrance, which was a registered mortgage, of which Sheerazee must have had constructive notice. But this application which was rejected by the trial Court in another part of its order which is also appealed against need not now be considered in view of the orders which I propose to pass on the application to set aside the ex parte decree in that suit. The defendant-respondent sought to prove certain notices issued to the appellants in execution to rebut the allegation that they did not know of the sale; but these notices, it is now argued, are relevant here to show the appellants' knowledge of the proceedings. The trial Court in the shorter portion of its judgment which relates to the question of setting aside the ex parte decree merely found that two summonses were served: one, as has been said, refused by a clerk and posted and the other by substituted service. The first of these two summonses was not accepted as duly served by the learned Judge who was trying the suit in question. The present Judge merely remarked that the summons fulfilled all the details required by O. V, para 17. He did not say that he believed the oral evidence given to prove proper service. This was a summons of May 23, 1933, the endorsement on which was signed by the process-server Mya Myun on May 25. It reads as follows:

"I not knowing the defendant personally was accompanied by Maung Htiike (plaintiffs clerk) to Hlawga village. He pointed out (the house). Karuppan Chetty was not found. His agent Koorandan Chetty also was not found. The summons was tendered but the said clerk did not take it. So the summons was posted on the house."

It should be explained here that throughout the original suit the appellant firm was sued by its agent Karuppan Chettyar. It is in the evidence for the defendants and it has not been denied that Karuppan was the agent from 1926 to 1929. After that the principal took charge. Then in 1931 Kanappa became the agent. The summonses, however, in the suit and the subsequent notices after the decree were issued throughout to the appellant firm by its agent Koorandan Chettyar. It is said by the appellants, and not denied, that there never was such an agent of the firm as Koorandan Chettyar. So in the original suit in question we have one non-existent firm of K. K. N. K. A. P. sued and another the K. K. N. K. A. R. firm sued by its agent who had left long ago and then summonses issued throughout on a non-existent Koorandan Chettyar. These circumstances, which have been ignored by the trial Court are, in my opinion, extremely important to decide the question whether the appellant firm was ever properly served or ever had any knowledge of the proceedings. It may be added also that a decree was passed against the appellant firm as subsequent transferees of the property when there is no doubt that they were merely prior encumbrancers who had bought in the property prior to the suit. So we have a decree against the summonses issued to non-existent persons on pleas unfounded on any facts. Maung Mya Nyun (D. W. No. 2) was examined in May 1938 and could only speak to what happened from his report of 1933, five years before. There is a curious air of unreality in the proceedings, for the house or place of business of the Chettyar or its locality and surroundings are never described by either side. I do not know how many Chettyars there are in Hlawga, but the evidence discloses that Veerappa's place of business is next door but one to the K. K. N. K. A. R. firm. So there were at least two Chettys in Hlawga. There is no indication who the clerk in question was in the endorsement. He may not have been the appellants' clerk at all, and it is significant that the report says that Koorandan was not found. It would be thought that any enquiry would have revealed that there was no such person. Maung Htike (D. W. No. 1) in his evidence does not add anything to Mya Nyun's evidence on the point. I have no doubt that the previous Judge was justified in saying that the summons was not properly served.

The Judge also discussed the summons by way of substituted service and held that service was effected on the appellants. Application for issue of substituted service was made on an affidavit filed by Maung Htike, p. 101 of suit No. 29. (I note that the references to this and some other summonses in the judgment of the lower Court were wrong). This affidavit does not say the K. K. N. K. A. R. firm were avoiding service of summons, but merely that three summonses had been issued on the appellant firm and on the K. K. N. K. A. P. firm that the clerks had refused the summonses which were posted and that summonses could not be served in the ordinary way. So substituted service was allowed to be issued not merely on the K. K. N. K. A. R. firm but also on the K. K. N. K. A. P. non-existent firm. The summons to the K. K. N. K. A. P. Veerappa Chettyar, p. 79 of Part 1 of the process file to which Mya Nyun refers in his evidence bears an endorsement of May 2, to the effect that "Karuppan" Chettyar was not found. The summons to Veerappa Chettyar which was reported to have been refused by his clerk is the one referred to by Mya Nyun on p. 90 of the process file, part 1. As to the summons by substituted service, this is to be found on p. 102 (h) in the main proceeding of suit No. 29. The process-server here was Maung Pyant (D. W. No. 4). The report says:

On June 28, 1933 at about 3 p. m. I went to Hlawga. I do not know personally. The plaintiff did not accompany (me) to point out. I made enquiry and looked for and posted the summons by way of substituted service on the house where Koorandan Chettyar had lived before."

There was a pencil endorsement in the corner of the headman's name. This merely appears to mean that the headman vouched for the process-server having come to the village. It will be noticed that the house on which the summons was posted was one where the non-existent Chettyar Koorandan had lived before. Maung Pyant says in his evidence that he went to the headman's house and the headman's "people," (not the headman himself as is said in the judgment of the lower Court) told him to go and enquire at the place itself. The Judge thought this meant that he must have been informed where he was. I think the contrary,—that he could not get any information. All these summonses were issued in the name or initials of the K. K. N. K. A. R. firm, but it is admitted at the Bar that Burmans commonly know of Chettys by the agent's name only. This process-server professed first to remember from five years before that he did not see some servants on the premises, then he denied it and then he repeated it. He said that he asked where the agent had gone to and was told that he had gone to India. This looks as if he did not ask in the house itself and received some vague information about the former agent Karuppan having gone to India. The process-server did not make any effort to go back to see if he could serve the summons again. He says he was told that the clerk had gone to the jungle. The headman is not a witness.

The present application to set aside the ex parte decree was made on January 21, 1938, and the appellant says that he had notice of the proceedings against him only on January 8, 1938, when he found that his tenants were being asked by the respondent Sheerazee to pay the rent to him. Under Art. 164, Lim. Act, the limitation for an application by the defendant for an order to set aside a decree passed ex parte is 30 days from the date of the decree or, where the summons was not duly served, when the applicant has knowledge of the decree. The meaning of this Article was discussed in Ram Bharose v. Ganga Singh (1) by a Full Bench and in Gyanammal v. Abdul Hussein Sahib (2) by a Bench of Judges. The question before those Courts was whether summons by substituted service effected in proper form was necessarily due service for the purpose of Art. 164, Lim. Act. Order V,

r. 20, sub-rr. (1) and (2), read as follows:

"(1) Where the Court is satisfied that there is reason to believe that the defendant is keeping out of the way for purpose of avoiding service, or that for any other reason the summons cannot be served in the ordinary way, the Court shall order the summons to be served by affixing a copy thereof in some conspicuous place in the Court-house, and also upon some conspicuous part of the house (if any) in which the defendant is known to have last resided or carried on business or personally worked for gain, or in such other manner as the Court thinks fit.

(2) Service substituted by order of the Court shall be as effectual as if it had been made on the defendant personally."

Order IX, r. 13 says:

In any case in which a decree is passed ex parte against a defendant, he may apply to the Court by which the decree was passed for an order to set it aside; and if he satisfies the Court that the summons was not duly served, or that he was prevented by any sufficient cause from appearing when the suit was called on for hearing, the Court shall make an order setting aside the decree....."

The words "prevented by any sufficient cause from appearing" here clearly mean causes other than lack of knowledge of the proceedings, so that this rule is in the same terms as Art. 164. I would respectfully agree with the conclusions arrived at in those two rulings. The object of issuing a summons is to inform the party against whom a suit is being instituted of the fact that there is a suit against him and if he so chooses he may contest. The order for substituted service is made ex parte, and obviously it should be open to the defendant when he appears to show that the method employed was not calculated to effect the purpose which the Court had in view, namely informing the defendant of the institution of the suit. The rule that substituted service is to be taken as effectual as personal service only means that the Court hearing the case may proceed with the suit as if the summons had been personally served on the defendant. Where the summons has issued against the defendant personally and it has been reported that personal service has been effected, the defendant may always come forward to show that that has not been the case. Summons by way of substituted service is obviously the least satisfactory of all methods of service only to be used by the Court as a last resort when other means are unavailable, and the defendant should be given an opportunity of contesting that the summons has been served in a way which did not in effect bring the proceedings to his notice. The basis of the order on which the Court ordered substituted service to issue is either that the defendant is either deliberately keeping out of the way to avoid process or that it cannot be served in the ordinary way, perhaps through no fault of his own. In the latter case, the defendant may always show that the proceedings could not have come to his knowledge. In the former case the order of the Court is only relevant to the question whether the defendant was in a position to have knowledge of the proceedings, for obviously if a defendant keeps out of the way to avoid service of process on him either on account of the suit in question or of other suits that have been or may be filed against him, he cannot afterwards be heard to argue that he had no knowledge of the proceedings as he has deliberately put himself in a position where he can have no such knowledge. In Gyanammal v. Abdul Hussein Sahib (2) at p. 231* Reilly, J. draws attention to the judgment of Srinivasa Ayyangar, J. in Vitta Venkatachalam v. Sivapuram Subbiah (3). In the words of Reilly, J.:

"There Srinivasa Ayyangar, J. suggested with great force, I think, that the provision that, when the summons is not duly served, the period runs from the date when the applicant had knowledge of the decree implies that due service within the meaning of that Article is service which brings the claim to the knowledge of the defendant."

What Srinivasa Ayyangar, J. said was this:

"I do not for my part believe that the Legislature really intended in enacting col. 3 of Art. 164 to confine the scope of the section only to cases where the actual service directed by the Court is shown not to have been effected at all in that manner. We may also have regard to what is obviously the object of the Legislature in providing that in cases where the summons is not duly served, the time begins to run from the date on which the applicant has knowledge of the decree. The implication seems to be clear that in cases where [the summons is duly served, the presumption may well be that he has knowledge of the decree, or at any rate if he does not get knowledge of the decree, it was ascribable only to some fault on his part or on the part of those near about him who ought to have known better."

I would respectfully agree that the word "effectual" in O. V, r. 20, sub-r. (2) does not mean due service, and that it has the meaning given to it by the learned Judges in these rulings. I would also agree that in Art 164, Lim. Act, and O. IX, r. 13, "due service of summons" means not only that the summons was served in proper form according to the directions laid down in the Code but also that the summons was served under circumstances which enabled the Court to be satisfied that the defendant had knowledge of the decree against him; except of course in the case where the defendant had purposely put it out of his power to have such knowledge. On the evidence in this case, however, I do not think it could possibly be held that either of these summonses were served in due form, that is to say, that one was refused by the appellant firm's clerk and then posted, or that the other was posted on the appellant firm's house.

It remains to consider whether it can be satisfactorily inferred from the other summonses and notices proved in this application that the defendant had knowledge of the decree, and that therefore the present application is time-barred. Mr. Aiyangar for the respondent has invited the Court to refer also to still other summonses and notices filed in the proceedings. Not only are there no translations of these on the record but the originals even have not been put in evidence and I consider that for the purposes of this case that they could not be put in evidence by the oral testimony of the process-servers who made the reports and affidavits who could be subjected to cross-examination by the other side. A notice to contest an application for a final decree (p. 5 of the Process File, Part II) was issued to K. K. N. K. A. R. Chettyar on April 11, 1935. The report on this was made by Maung Pein (D. W. No. 3) and reads as follows: "On April 27, 1935, at 11 a. m. the within named Chetty's agent Mutu signed and took (the notice)." This bears at the bottom the English initials "K. K. N. K. A. R." followed by the Tamil equivalents of these initials. That is not an ordinary method of signature. The plaintiff had testified that his firm never had an agent or clerk called Mutu and this evidence is un rebutted. The notice so far from proving the respondent's case goes to throw extreme doubt on whether this notice was ever served at all.

The next notice is p. 116 of the Process File, Part II. It is also proved by Maung Pein. This is a notice to both K. K. N. K. A. P. Veerappa Chettyar and K. K. N. K. A. R. Karuppan Chettyar by his agent Koorandan re amendment of the preliminary decree. The endorsement does not state that any effort was made to tender service or that service was refused, but merely that copies were posted on the house of the defendants—and of course it must be admitted that the K. K. N. K. A. P. firm had no house and did not exist. The next notice is p. 151 of Part II of the Process File. This is a notice re sale of the mortgaged properties to the appellant firm, dated December 3, 1936. The endorsement of December 12, says:

"On December 6, 1936, at about 7 o'clock I without knowing the defendant personally and without being accompanied by the plaintiff to point out, went to tender (the notice)—the headman pointing out (the place). The within named Chetty was not found. His clerk was found, I tendered the notice. He refused to sign. So the notice was posted....."

This again is a summons to the appellants by their agent Koorandan and the headman has merely signed in the corner and has not given any evidence. The process-server Maung Sein said in cross-examination that there was no one at the address before he recollected himself and added that there was a clerk. Then he said that this clerk said that the Chettyar and his agent had gone to India; but there was nothing about that in the report. I do not think it can be held on this that the process-servers went to the right place or effected service. Then there is another notice in duplicate to K. K. N. K. A. P. and K. K. N. K. A. R. Chettyars, p. 179, Part II of the Process File, dated March 13, 1937, notice against sale of the mortgaged properties. The endorsement says:

"I not knowing the defendants personally was accompanied by the plaintiff's clerk Po Htika who pointed out the defendant. Veerappa died about a year ago. The notice was posted on the house where he had lived before. The remaining defendant Karuppan Chetty's clerk was found. The notice was tendered, refused and posted."

The attesting witness to this Po Kyaw, has not been called. Thus, Maung Pein says about Veerappa's successors, and Karuppan of course had gone to India long before while this notice was again issued to the agent Koorandan. For the applicant Kanappa Chettyar, two of his clerks, Elan Kannu (P. W. No. 2) and Katappan (P. W. No. 3) said that no notices or summonses had been received by them. Kanappa said that since 1931 he stayed sometimes at Hlawga and sometimes at Rangoon but afterwards left a clerk authorized to receive summonses. The clerks on the other hand said that the agent Kanappa never spent the night out of Hlawga. In the original suit it would seem that another address of the appellant firm was given as Mogul Street, but it is proved in this application that they had no such address or place of business. I do not think it was proved that any of these notices or summonses was tendered to or refused by the appellant firm or posted on their house or place of business. There is something suspicious about the serving of the summonses or notices. What is perhaps the most important feature in the case is this, that the appellant firm had no possible reason whatever to avoid service of summonses on them. They had a perfectly good answer to the suit and had merely to say that they were not subsequent transferees but prior mortgagees who had bought the property in execution of their mortgage decree. They had only to produce their mortgage or the record of the previous proceedings. I am bound to comment on one unsatisfactory feature in the present appeal and that is the failure to translate one or two of the documents relied on in the application and put them on the Bench copy and also what is more important, the failure to put any copies of the defence evidence at all on the Bench copy which has caused the Court considerable inconvenience. I consider that the appellant should be deprived of part of his costs for this. For the reasons that I have given, the decree of the trial Court will be reversed with costs throughout, the appellants to obtain two-thirds of what would otherwise have been awarded them as their Advocate's fee in this Court (for their failure to translate two documents and failure to put any copies of the defence evidence on the Bench copy; which caused the Court considerable inconvenience), Advocate's fee six gold mohurs, and it will be directed that the ex parte decree against the appellants in Civil Regular Suit No. 29 of 1931 of the District Court of Insein be set aside.

The right conferred by s. 227, Agra Tenancy Act, is not affected by the fact that the co-sharer who has collected has not acted as the agent of the co-sharer who is seeking to recover his share of the profits. Mr. Nanak Chand, for the Appellant.

Thom, C. J.—This is a defendants' appeal against the decision of a learned Single Judge of this Court. The appeal arises out of a suit under s. 227, Agra Ten. Act of 1926. The plaintiff's claim is in respect of his share of profits for the years 1337 to 1339 Fasli. The sum claimed is Rs. 570. The suit was contested by two defendants, namely, the present appellants who filed a joint written statement. It was denied in the written statement that they had made any collections of rents from tenants for the years in question and it was averred that the plaintiff himself had realized his share of rents from the tenants. The main question for consideration in this appeal is as to the extent of the liability of Man Singh who made certain collections during the years in question. It was contended for Man Singh that he was entitled to deduct from the collections which he had made his total share of the profits in the whole jamabandi. On the other hand, it was maintained for the plaintiff that Man Singh was only entitled to deduct a proportionate amount from his collections corresponding to his share in the rent due by each tenant. The question which is one of law was considered in Kanhaiya Lal v. R. H. Skinner (1). In that case Pullan and Mukerji, JJ. held that a collecting co-sharer was entitled to deduct the full amount of the rent due to him from his collections and not merely a proportionate share corresponding to his share in the khevat. This view was based upon the principle that a collecting co-sharer does not act as the agent of the other co-sharers. Niamatullah, J. held on the other hand that a collecting co-sharer was only entitled to deduct from his realizations a proportionate share corresponding to his share in the khevat. Under s. 227, Agra Ten. Act :

"A co-sharer may sue another co-sharer for a settlement of accounts and for his share of the profits of a mahal or any part thereof."

The right conferred by this section is not affected by the fact that the co-sharer who has collected has not acted as the agent of the co-sharer who is seeking to recover his share of the profits. The co-sharer who has collected is liable to account and the question is, what is the extent of his liability? The extent of his liability is not dependent upon whether he acted in his individual capacity or as agent in making collections. In our judgment the collecting co-sharer is entitled to retain out of what he has collected from a tenant only a share proportionate to his share in the khevat; to hold otherwise would be to permit a practice which would, in most cases, result in chaos and confusion. As Niamatullah, J. has observed in his judgment in Kanhaiya Lal v. R. H. Skinner (1), at p. 135* :

"To hold otherwise would be to open a door for endless scramble. An influential and resourceful co-sharer may, in disregard of the power of the lambardar, steal a march over him and other co-sharers by collecting from the best tenants to the extent of his share of the gross rental and leaving irrecoverable rents for the rest. This state of things, if permitted by law, would be intolerable and will lead to gross abuse in certain cases."

We find ourselves in agreement with Niamatullah, J. in his exposition of the law in the case above referred to and we hold that a collecting co-sharer is not entitled to deduct his entire share in the whole jama-bandi from collections which he has made from some of the tenants in the khevat. He is only entitled to appropriate from his realizations an amount proportionate to his share in the khevat. On this point therefore we uphold the decision of the learned Single Judge. There is a further point in issue. It was contended by the defendants that the collections which were made were made by Man Singh on behalf of himself and by him on behalf of Darya Singh, a minor. It was claimed that Darya Singh's share was collected by Man Singh as his guardian. As the learned Single Judge has remarked in the course of his order :

"The question whether Man Singh was entitled to deduct from the collections made by him, only the amount payable to him by the tenants on account of his share of the rent or also on account of the share of Darya Singh does not appear to have been debated or discussed in the trial Court. . . . If it be a fact that in the year 1337 Fasli Man Singh was the guardian of Darya Singh, no exception can be taken to the decision of the learned District Judge directing that the collections made by Man Singh be credited both towards the accounts of Man Singh and Darya Singh. But no finding has been recorded by the learned District Judge on the question whether or not Man Singh was the guardian of Darya Singh in the year 1337 Fasli. This matter will have to be inquired into and decided by the lower Appellate Court."

In the result the learned Single Judge remanded the case for the decision of the questions as to whether Man Singh was the guardian of Darya Singh in the years in suit; and further, whether Man Singh made collections in the year in suit only on his own behalf or also on behalf of Darya Singh. In the circumstances we consider this was an appropriate order to pass and we see no reason whatever to interfere with that order. In the result, the appeal is dismissed with costs.

If a decree is sought to be set aside on the ground of fraud, misrepresentation or mistake, then several complicated questions would arise and they have to be decided in a separate suit. If on the face of the record the compromise decree is proper, then the Court which passed the decree cannot set it aside in an application under s. 151, Civil P. C. [p 67], col. 1.]

Where a vakalatnama given to a Pleader does not give any specific authority to negotiate with the defendants and settle the terms of the compromise, but merely to sign the compromise application to be presented in Court and if the consent of the party to such an application being presented to the Court had not been obtained the compromise resulting in the decree is unauthorized. [ibid.]

O. R. App. from the order passed by the First Class Sub-Judge, Karwar, in Miscellaneous Application No. 82 of 1935.

Mr. S. V. Palekar, for the Applicant.

Mr. S. R. Parulekar, for Opponent No. 3.

Order.—This is an application in revision against the order passed by the First Class Subordinate Judge of Karwar refusing to set aside the consent decree in Suit No. 221 of 1932, on the ground that the compromise application had been presented by the petitioner's Pleader without any authority from him and without consulting him. The petitioner was the plaintiff in the suit. He sued for possession of certain property which had been purchased by him for Rs. 51. In the course of the suit a compromise application, Ex. 38, was put in, whereby it was agreed that the plaintiff should give up his claim on being paid Rs. 31 within three months. The application was signed by his Pleader Mr. Nadkarni, and just above his signature he made a note "duly authorized by plaintiff." A decree was then ordered to be drawn up in terms of the compromise on October 5, 1935. The plaintiff presented this application on November 21, 1936, stating that he had not authorized his Pleader, Mr. Nadkarni, to enter into a compromise with the defendants, or to present the compromise application, and requesting that the consent decree should be set aside and the suit should be re-heard.

The lower Court found from the vakalatnama given by the plaintiff to Mr. Nadkarni that the latter had been authorised "to sign a compromise petition." The lower Court interpreted this clause to mean that Mr. Nadkarni was authorized to effect a compromise, and present a compromise application in the suit, and, therefore, following the ruling in Yusuf Ismailbhai Abdullabhai Lalji v. Abdullabhai Lalji (1) the lower Court held that if any fraud had been practised by the Pleader on the plaintiff, the latter's remedy was by way of suit and not an application to have the consent decree set aside. The plaintiff contended in the application that the clause authorizing Mr. Nadkarni to sign a compromise application was not specifically brought to his notice, and that it was one of the many clauses in the vakalatnama which he signed without knowing what those clauses were. The lower Court, however, thought that these matters should be agitated in a suit, as the plaintiff virtually alleged fraud practised by his Pleader on him, and not any fraud practised on the Court.

The plaintiff relied on the ruling in Basangowda v. Churchigirigowda (2) which lays down that when a compromise application is filed by a Pleader, who is not specifically authorized to effect a compromise, and a decree is passed in terms of the compromise, the party who has not authorized it can apply to the Court to have the decree set aside and the suit re-heard. In that case the vakalatnama did not show that the Pleader had been authorized either to enter into a compromise or to present a compromise application in Court, and it was held that it was the inherent power of every Court to correct its own proceedings where it had been misled, and, as the compromise was not binding on the party who had not authorized the Pleader to sign it, the decree was void against him. It is therefore urged that the proper remedy in a case like this is an application to the Court to correct its own record in the exercise of its inherent powers under s. 151, Civil P. O. The lower Court, however, thought that the terms in the vakalatnama empowering the Pleader to put in a compromise application were sufficient to enable the Court to assume that the Pleader had been authorized also to negotiate and settle the terms of the compromise. Thus there was not fraud on the Court, but the fraud, if any, was committed by the Pleader on his client. This matter could not be gone into in an application under s. 151, Civil P. O., but must be fought out by a separate suit. That was the view expressed in Yusuf Ismailbhai Abdullabhai Lalji v. Abdullabhai Lalji (1), B. J. Wadia, J. observed (p. 233*):

"It is well settled that a consent decree is a mere creature of the agreement on which it is founded and may be set aside on any ground which will invalidate an agreement between the parties, such as misrepresentation, fraud or mistake. But unless all the parties agree, an application cannot be made to the Court of first instance in the original suit to set aside the consent decree; it must be done by a fresh suit brought for the purpose."

It was brought to my notice that this case was on the original side of the High Court, but I do not think that that makes any difference. If a decree is sought to be set aside on the ground of fraud, misrepresentation or mistake, then several complicated questions would arise and they have to be decided in a separate suit. If on the face of the record the compromise decree is proper, then the Court which passed the decree cannot set it aside in an application under s. 151, Civil P. O. In this case the lower Court has not recorded a finding that Mr. Nadkarni was authorized by the plaintiff to enter into a compromise. The vakalatnama given to him does not give any specific authority to negotiate with the defendants and settle the terms of the compromise, but merely to sign the compromise application to be presented in Court. As observed in Thenal Ammal v. Sakammal (3) at p. 235, "it is not the ordinary duty of an Advocate to negotiate terms, without reference to his client, with the opposite party," and in that case it was held that a vakalatnama containing a provision authorizing the Vakil "to present, if necessary, petitions for razinama, for withdrawal and for referring to arbitration, and to sign the razinama, etc, petitions," does not give authority to the Vakil to enter into a compromise without reference to his client. Mr. Nadkarni signed the compromise application, Ex. 38, in his capacity as plaintiff's Pleader, and expressly wrote out above his signature, that he had been duly authorized by the plaintiff. It is not clear whether he was authorized merely to sign the compromise application or authorized to negotiate the terms of the compromise. It is not clear also whether this particular application, Ex. 38, had ever been shown to the plaintiff, and his consent to its being presented in Court had been obtained. If no such consent was obtained, and if Mr. Nadkarni had not been specifically authorized by the plaintiff to negotiate the terms of the compromise with the defendants, then it follows on the principle laid down in Basangowda v. Churchigirigowda (2) that the compromise which resulted in the decree was unauthorized. But these questions have not been gone into, and no finding has been recorded, for the simple reason that the vakalatnama itself showed that Mr. Nadkarni had been authorized to sign the compromise application. The mere authority to sign the compromise application is not sufficient unless the compromise was arrived at by the plaintiff himself. It is, therefore, necessary to have these points decided before the plaintiff's application can be disposed of. The trial Court summarily dismissed the application merely on a reference to the contents of the vakalatnama, without ascertaining whether the compromise itself was duly authorized by the plaintiff.

The case must, therefore, be remanded for a fresh disposal after considering the issues whether the compromise contained in Ex. 38 was effected by the plaintiff, and, if not, whether he had authorized his Pleader Mr. Nadkarni to effect the compromise without reference to him. If these issues be found in favour of the defendants, the application will necessarily have to be thrown out, and if in that case the plaintiff wants to have the decree set aside on the ground of fraud or misrepresentation, he should be referred to a separate suit. On this ground the Rule is made absolute. The costs of this application will be costs in the cause.

There is nothing in s. 211, Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act to suggest that the non-registration will also defeat the claimant in the suit which he is authorised to bring under s. 211, cl. (2) (which corresponds to O. XXI, r. 63, Civil P. O.). There is also nothing in the section to show that the transferee's failure to get himself recorded in the landlord's Sherista shall in every case and as a matter of law amount to a representation to the landlord that in any suit which may be brought by him for recovery of rent he is to assume that the transferee is represented by the old tenants. [p. 675, col. 1.]

A sale therefore held in execution of a rent decree obtained by superior landlord in a suit to which all the tenure-holders were not made parties is not a sale under s. 208 and does not affect the share in the tenure, of persons not parties to such suit even if they have not got themselves recorded in landlord's Sherista. 142 Ind. missioner of Chota Nagpur, Ranchi, dated June 11, 1936.

Fazl Ali, J.—The facts so far as they are material to this appeal may be briefly stated as follows :—

It appears that in the District of Palamanu there is a tenure which was formerly held by defendants Nos. 9 to 11 and the father of defendant No. 8 under defendant No. 7, the superior landlord. In this tenure defendants Nos. 1 to 6 acquired 12 annas interest before 1927 and 1 anna interest after 1927 and the plaintiffs acquired the remaining 3 annas interest after 1928. In 1927 defendant No. 7 brought a suit for recovery of rent against defendant Nos. 9 to 11 and the father of defendant No. 8; and, in execution of the decree passed in that suit, the tenure was sold and purchased by a benamidar of the plaintiffs in 1928. Defendants Nos. 1 to 6 thereupon deposited the decretal amount and the sale was set aside. In 1930 defendant No. 7 brought another suit against defendants Nos. 9 to 11 and father of defendant No. 8 for the rent of the years 1924 to 1927 Sambat. The suit was decreed and in execution of the decree the tenure was sold again and this time it was purchased by defendant No. 1. The plaintiffs then brought the present suit to recover possession of their share, their case being that the decree obtained by defendant No. 7 was not a rent decree inasmuch as the suit had been brought without impleading the plaintiffs, defendants Nos. 1 to 6 and certain other persons who were necessary parties to the suit and accordingly the sale held in execution of the decree did not affect their share. The Courts below did not accept the plaintiffs' contention and dismissed the suit. They held amongst other things that inasmuch as neither the plaintiffs nor the defendants Nos. 1 to 6 were recorded as tenants in the landlord's Sherista, the latter was entitled to sue the persons who were so recorded and that these persons must be deemed in the eye of law to have represented the plaintiffs and other tenants in the suit. The plaintiffs have accordingly preferred this second appeal.

Before dealing with the points raised on behalf of the plaintiffs, I wish to dispose of a preliminary objection raised on behalf of the respondents. The objection is that the appeal has abated, because the plaintiffs failed to substitute within the time prescribed by law the heirs of defendant No. 7 who had died sometime after the appeal was filed but before it was heard. On a reference to the record it appears that the appeal was filed on September 21, 1936, and defendant No. 7 died on December 19, 1937, after notice of the appeal had been served on him. The Court was informed of the death of this defendant on October 31, 1938, and on November 16, 1938, the appellants filed an application in which after stating that they had come to know about his death for the first time on October 31, 1938, they prayed that the delay in making the application might be excused and his heirs be substituted in his place. On December 15, 1938, the appeal was put up for hearing before Agarwala, J. who after hearing the parties passed the following order :—

"Let the record be amended by substituting for the name of Kuar Jagatmohan Nath Sahi Deo, the names given in para. 8 of the petition for substitution."

Mr. De states that this will serve his purpose but the legal effect of this amendment will be considered at the time of the hearing."

On February 13, 1938, Agarwala, J. referred this case to a Division Bench.

It appears that at the time when defendant No. 7 died, his estate was being managed under the Chota Nagpur Encumbered Estates Act (VI of 1876) and he was represented in the appeal by a manager appointed under the Act. In Hukum Chand v. Ban Bahadur Singh (1), the Privy Council dealing with the status of a manager appointed under the Act has pointed out that he "is in the eye of the law fully and completely vested in the management of the estate, and the vesting in him continues during the tenure of his office."

The position in law therefore was that after the death of defendant No. 7, the management of the estate continued to vest in the manager who was already on the record and he was the only person who could under s. 21-B of the Chota Nagpur Encumbered Estates Act represent the heir or heirs of defendant No. 7—(the new holders in the appeal. Such being the case, it is argued on behalf of the appellant that no question of abatement arises in the appeal and all that was necessary for them to do was to ask for a formal amendment of the memorandum of appeal by introducing the names of the heirs of the deceased defendant.

In my judgment the answer to this argument is provided by s. 21-B of the Chota Nagpur Encumbered Estates Act which is the very section on which the appellants rely. That section runs as follows:—

"During the period of management

(1) every suit or appeal by the holder shall be instituted in his name by the manager;

(2) in every pending suit or appeal in which the holder is plaintiff or defendant, the Manager shall be named as the representative of the holder for the purpose of suit or appeal; and no application in any such suit or appeal shall be made to the Court on behalf of the holder except by the Manager;

(3) no person other than the Manager shall be ordered to sue or to be sued as next friend or guardian, or be named as guardian of the holder for a pending suit, and

(4) the Court, upon application by the Manager or by any party to a suit, may order that the plaint or memorandum of appeal be amended so as to conform with the requirements of cl. (1), or that the Manager be named as the representative of the holder as required by cl. (2) of this section."

It is to be noted that under this section the suit or appeal is to be instituted in the name of the holder and it is he who is to be described as plaintiff or defendant. No doubt the holder cannot be represented by any other person than the manager nor can he make any direct application so long as the management of the estates vested in the manager. The fact, however, remains that the manager can figure in the suit or appeal only as a representative of the holder and not as a principal. Thus at least technically the substitution of the heirs of defendant No. 7 was necessary and such substitution not having been made in time, the appeal abated as against defendant No. 7. The fact, however, remains that the heirs of defendant No. 7 could not be represented in the appeal otherwise than through the manager who was already on the record and for that reason and also because I fully believe the statement made by the plaintiffs in their affidavit dated November 16, 1938, I am of the opinion, that this is a proper case for setting aside the abatement assuming that it has not been set aside already by the order passed by Agarwala, J. on December 15, 1938.

In the application made by the appellants on November 16, 1938, which was in substance an application for setting aside the abatement, they have clearly stated that they came to know of the death of defendant No. 7 for the first time on October 31, 1938. This statement is supported by an affidavit which I have no reason to disbelieve. It is stated in a counter-affidavit filed on behalf of the respondent that a co-sharer of the plaintiff had attended the shradh ceremony of defendant No. 7 after his death and from this we are asked to infer that the plaintiffs must have known about the death of defendant No. 7 long before October 31, 1938. In my opinion, such an inference is wholly unwarranted. There is no statement in the counter-affidavit that the co-sharer of the plaintiffs actually informed them either of the death of defendant No. 7 or his having attended his shradh. I am also not prepared to believe that in spite of being aware of the death of defendant No. 7 the plaintiffs did not deliberately take any action to substitute his heirs. In my opinion, the plaintiffs have made out a strong case for excusing the delay in making their application for substitution and the abatement should be set aside.

The next point to be decided is the main question in the appeal, viz. whether the sale impugned by the plaintiffs affected their share in the tenure in dispute. It is common ground that at the time when the suit for rent was brought, the defendants of that suit had parted with their interest and the tenure was in possession of the plaintiffs and defendants Nos. 1 to 6. That being so, the present case in my judgment is governed by the decision of the Privy Council in Jagadishwar Dayal Singh v. Pathak Dwarka Singh (2). In that case a landlord had brought a suit for rent without impleading the widow of one Maheshanand, one of the tenants, who had died before the institution of the suit and it was found that this widow had neither been recorded in the landlord's Sherrista nor had she paid any rent to the landlord as a tenure-holder. Notwithstanding these facts the Privy Council held that the decree obtained in that suit was not a rent decree and the Revenue Court had no jurisdiction to order a sale of the property under s. 208 of the Chota Nag. Ten. Act. Their Lordships referred in their judgment to s. 11 of the Chota Nag. Ten. Act which runs as follows:—

"When any tenure or portion thereof is transferred by succession, inheritance, sale, gift or exchange, the transferee or his successor-in-title shall cause the transfer to be registered in the office of the landlord to whom the rent of the tenure or a portion is payable."

The argument which seems to have been put forward before the Privy Council was that the failure of the widow of Maheshahand to have her name entered in the landlord's Sherista as provided by s. 11, along with the fact that she had never paid rent to the landlord or been recognised by him as a tenure-holder entitled him to proceed with the sale of the tenure under s. 20³, without joining her as a defendant. Their Lordships overruled this contention and observed as follows:—

"Their Lordships agree with the High Court. No such sanction as forfeiture of right in the tenure in respect of failure to comply with the provision of s. 11, is provided by the Act; such failure only affects the transferee's power to recover rent from his under tenants as provided in sub-s. (4)."

It is contended by the learned Advocate for the respondent that this decision cannot govern the present case firstly, because in this case it has been found as a fact by the Courts below that the plaintiffs were represented in the rent suit by the persons who were sued as tenants and secondly, because the case before the Privy Council was one affecting a person claiming an interest in a tenure by succession and not as a transferee.

The first point admits of a simple answer: The finding of the Judicial Commissioner as to the representation of the plaintiffs in the rent suit is based on the following two grounds only: (1) that the purchase of the tenure by the plaintiffs in the sale held in 1928 in execution of the decree passed in rent suit of 1927 raised the inference that they had no objection to the suit having been brought against defendants Nos. 9 and 10 and father of defendant No. 8; and, (2) that their failure to get their names recorded in the landlord's Sherista raised the presumption that they were willing to be represented by the persons who stood recorded as tenure-holders in the landlord office.

In my opinion neither of these two grounds can be supported in law. The plaintiff's purchase at the sale of 1928 is wholly irrelevant, because at that time they had no interest in the tenure, and that being so, it is meaningless to say that either in the suit of 1927 or in the execution proceedings which followed the decree passed therein, they had allowed themselves to be represented by the old tenants. The second ground is equally untenable because if that is a good ground, the decision of the Privy Council should have been quite different in Jagadishwar Dayal Singh's case (2) (supra.)

The next point to be decided is whether the decision of the Privy Council in Jagadishwar Dayal Singh's case (2) (supra) applies to the case of a transferee. So far as this point is concerned, the learned Advocate for the respondent relies strongly on certain observations made by Couch, C. J. in Sham Chand Koondoo v. Brojonath Pal Chowdhury (3) a case decided under Act X of 1859. The observations were to the following effect:—

"It appears to me taking ss. 105 and 106 together with proviso, that it was intended that the zamindar should be at liberty to treat as the holder of the tenure, and the person whom he might sue for arrears of rent, the person who is registered in his book as the owner, unless any one could show that there had been a transfer and that there was sufficient cause for its non-registration."

The learned Advocate for the respondents contends that because s. 211 of the Chota Nag. Ten. Act corresponds exactly to ss. 105 and 106 of Act X of 1859, the rule laid down by Couch, C. J. applies fully to a case governed by the former Act and in support of his argument has referred us to the following observations made by Sir George Lowndes in delivering the judgment of the Judicial Committee in Jitendra Nath Ghose v. Monmohan Ghose (4):—

"Before the Act of 1885 (The Ben. Ten. Act) came into force, the duty was laid specifically upon the transferee of a tenure to see that his name was recorded in the landlord's Sherista, and it may well have been that, if he failed without reason to do this, he could not be heard to object to a decree passed against the recorded tenants, even though their interest in the tenure had in fact ceased. But the Act of 1885 made a radical change in this respect."

According to the learned Advocate for the respondent, these observations show that the rule laid down by Couch, C. J. has been approved by the Privy Council and he contends that this is an additional ground for applying it to the present case.

A reference to s. 211 will show that this provision corresponds more or less to O. XXI, r. 58 of the Civil P. O. Clause (1) of the section states that if before the date fixed before the sale of any tenure or holding in pursuance of s. 208 a third party appears before the Deputy Commissioner and alleges that he and not the person against whom the decree has been obtained was in lawful possession or had some interest in the tenure or holding when the decree was obtained, the Deputy Commissioner shall examine such party and if he sees sufficient reason for so doing and if such party deposits in Court or gives security for the amount of the decree, the Deputy Commissioner shall stay the sale and shall after taking evidence adjudicate upon the claim. Then follow two provisos to the section. The first proviso states that no such adjudication shall be made if the Deputy Commissioner considers that the claim was designedly or unnecessarily delayed; and the second proviso runs thus:—

"Provided also that no transfer of a tenure shall be recognised unless it has been registered in the office of the landlord or sufficient cause for non-registration is shown to the satisfaction of the Deputy Commissioner."

It appears to me that the effect of the two provisos is that in the summary enquiry which the Deputy Commissioner is required to hold under s. 211, the claimant can be put out of Court at once, if it appears either that his claim was designedly or unnecessarily delayed, or that he is not registered in the office of the landlord and there was no sufficient cause for non-registration. The effect of the second proviso is merely that the claim cannot succeed before the Deputy Commissioner, if the claimant is not registered in the office of the landlord, but there is nothing in the section to suggest that the non-registration will also defeat the claimant in the suit which he is authorised to bring under s. 211 cl. (2) which corresponds to O. XXI, r. 63). There is also nothing in the section to show that the transferee's failure to get himself recorded in the landlord's Sherista shall in every case and as a matter of law amount to a representation to the landlord that in any suit which may be brought by him for recovery of rent he is to assume that the transferee is represented by the old tenants. The view that s. 211 cannot bear the meaning attributed to it by the learned Advocate for the respondent is confirmed by the decision of the Privy Council in Jagdishwar Dayal Singh v. Pathak Dwarka Singh (2) wherein their Lordships considered both ss. 11 and 211 of the Chota Nag. Ten. Act. In dealing with s. 11, they expressly dealt with the case of a transferee and observed as follows:—

"No such sanction as forfeiture of rights in the tenure in respect of failure to comply with the provisions of s. 11 is provided by the Act; such failure only affects the transferee's power to recover rent from his under-tenants as provided in sub- (4)."

These observations show that their Lordships decided the case before them on a broad ground and did not intend to draw a distinction between a transferee and an heir. Further the rule laid down in that case has been applied by the Calcutta High Court as well as by this Court to protect transfers in a several cases—see Faridpur Loan Office, Limited v. Nirode Kishore Ray (5), Manki Kanak Ratan v. Sunder Munda (6) and Karunamai Pandey v. Pradhan Ram Sewak Lall decided by a Division Bench of this Court in Second Appeal No. 760 of 1931 on December 19, 1938.

In my opinion the sale impugned by the plaintiffs was not a sale under s. 208 of the Chota Nag. Ten. Act because all the tenure-holders were not represented in the suit. The sale therefore did not affect the plaintiffs' 3 annas share in the tenure and they are accordingly entitled to a decree for possession so far as that share is concerned.

I would, therefore, allow this appeal, reverse the decisions of the Courts below and direct that a decree be passed declaring that the plaintiffs' 3 annas share is not affected by the sale and that they are entitled to recover possession of that share. The plaintiffs will be entitled to costs in the Courts below as well as in this Court as against respondent No. 1 (the principal contesting defendant); but so far as respondents Nos. 7 (a) to 7 (g) are concerned, there will be no order for costs, because the plaintiffs have failed to establish that the sale brought about by defendant No. 7, the predecessor-in-interest of these defendants, was tainted with fraud.

Harries, C. J.—I agree and have nothing to add.

Muhammadan Law—Wakf—Mujavarship—Succession—Female, if barred.

Under Muhammadan Law, there is no legal prohibition against a woman holding a mutwalliship, when a trust by its nature involves no spiritual duties such as a woman could not properly discharge in person or by deputy, and it is always a question of fact whether the duties attached to a particular office are so spiritual that they cannot be discharged by a female.

Where the duties of a mujavar consist of sweeping and cleansing the place, reading the fatiha, offering prayers and incense, and looking after the general management of the shrine, and on evidence it is found that these duties can be performed by females, then succession of a female to such mujavarship is not barred. Shahoo Banoo v. Aga Mohamad Jaffar Binduneem (5), relied on, Mirzamalli v. Hidyathi (6), explained.

Mr. A. G. Desai, for the Appellants.

Messrs. M. G. Chitale and P. B. Gajendragadkar, for Respondents Nos. 1 and 2, respectively.

Judgment.—The suit out of which this second appeal arises was filed by the plaintiffs for a declaration that they are the lawful heirs of the deceased Dada Saheb Shaikh Mire to the property in dispute which is assigned for service as mujavars and for an injunction restraining the defendants from interfering with their possession and enjoyment of the said land. The only issue which arises in this appeal is whether a female is entitled to succeed to the mujavarki land. Both the lower Courts found in favour of the plaintiffs and decreed their claim. The duties of a mujavar are set out by Abdur Rahim, J. in Munnawaru Begam v. Mir Mahapalli (1), as follows (p. 1037)

"The word mujavar literally means a sweeper or the person who cleans the place, but it is conventionally used to denote a person who is looking after a shrine or tomb of a holy person generally called astana. Astana is a word which is often used to denote a place inspiring respect and reverence."

From the evidence recorded in this case the lower Appellate Court has held that the duties of the mujavar in this case consist of reading the Fathia, offering prayers and incense, and looking after the general management of the shrine. There are conflicting rulings of the Madras High Court as to whether a female can be a mujavar or can perform the duties of a spiritual nature. In mujavar Ibrambibi v. Mujavar Hussain Shersif (2) it is held that a woman is not competent to perform the duties of the mujavar of a durga which are not of a secular nature. That decision was based on the earlier decision in Husain Bibee v. Hussain Sharif (3). The same view was taken in Sundarambal Ammal v. Yogavanagurukkal (4). But all these cases were considered by Abdur Rahim, J. in Munnawaru Begam v. Mir Mahapalli (1). It is true that, as observed in the judgment of Seshagiri Ayyar, J. in that case at p. 1042*, no objection was taken in that case to the succession of the female to the head mujavarship on the ground that by reason of her sex she was not entitled to perform the duties of the head mujavarship. It is therefore argued that the observation of Abdur Rahim, J. with regard to the right of a female to succeed to the title of a mujavarship are obiter. But the observations, coming as they do from such an eminent Muhammadan Judge as Abdur Rahim, J. regarding the duties of a mujavar and the rights of succession to the mujavarship, certainly carry great weight. He expresses the definite view that a religious office can be held by a woman under the Muhammadan Law, unless there are duties of a religious nature attached to the office which she cannot perform in person or by deputy, and the burden of establishing that a woman is precluded from holding a particular office is on those who plead the exclusion. He has also remarked that, although there is no general rule of Muhammadan Law prohibiting a woman from holding a religious office, prohibition may arise by local usage or custom, and that in that particular case he held that a woman was competent to succeed to the office of head mujavar of the suit astana. The principle, as laid down by the Privy Council in Shahoo Banoo v. Aga Mohamad Jaffar Binduneem (5), is that by Muhammadan Law, there is no legal prohibition against a woman holding a mutwalliship, when a trust by its nature involves no spiritual duties such as a woman could not properly discharge in person or by deputy, and it is always a question of fact whether the duties attached to a particular office are so spiritual that they cannot be discharged by a female.

(1) 41 M 1033 at p. 1037; 51 Ind. Cas. 489; A I R 1919 Mad. 203.

(2) 3 M. 95.

On behalf of the appellants reliance is placed upon the ruling in Mirzamalli v. Hidyathi (6), where it was held that the performance of the services of imam— moujani and khitabat at a mosque could only be done by the male members of a family, and that it was not open to the female members to have them done by a proxy when there were already male members of the family in existence. The duties of the four offices are explained on p. 776*, and one of those duties, viz., the imamat, consisted of preaching by being a priest and the duties of moujani consisted in calling to prayer, while those of khitabat consisted of reading the Koran at the mosque. These duties were regarded as incapable of performance by females, and the decision ultimately turned on the wording of the sanad which granted the imam. The word Bafarjandan used in the sanad was interpreted as descendants in the male line only. It was also remarked that females were not competent to perform the duties which were of a spiritual nature. But in this case the duties of a mujavar are said to consist of sweeping and cleansing the place, reading the fatiha, offering prayers and incense, and looking after the general management of the shrine, and on the evidence the lower Appellate Court has held that these duties can be performed by females; and in the case of this very mujavarship, instances were cited to show that females did succeed and that the duties of the mujavar were performed by ladies. Defendant No. 1, who was herself a female, used to manage the present Pir Mahi Taj, and defendant No. 5 admitted that if any of them died without a male issue, his widow, daughters and sisters were entitled to get a share in the land of the Pir. It is not that this evidence is intended to prove a custom, but merely to show that the duties of a mujavar in this case are capable of being performed by a female. If that is so, then according to the ruling of the Privy Council in Shahoo Banoo v. Aga Mohamad Jaffar Binduneem (5), female succession is not barred. On these grounds I confirm the decree of the lower Appellate Court and dismiss the appeal with costs.

Hindu Law—Succession—Hindu domiciled out of British India—Succession, whether governed by Hindu Law or Succession Act (XXXIX of 1925)—Judgment—Foreign judgment—Judgment in rem—Foreign judgment declaring person as validly adopted son of another—Whether binding on Courts in British India in matters of succession to immovable property in British India.

The law of succession is to be determined according to the personal law of the individual whose succession is in question. [p. 681, col. 1.]

The Courts in India have always applied the personal law of a Hindu who has migrated from one part of India to another. The same principle applies to a case of a Hindu domiciled abroad. Hence in a case of a Hindu domiciled out of British India, Hindu Law applies in matters of succession and not the Succession Act. 73 Ind. Cas. 202 (1), applied, 57 Ind. Cas. 545 (2) and 114 Ind. Cas. 17 (4), referred to. [p. 680, col. 2.]

A declaration by a Court affecting the status of a person domiciled within its territory is treated by the comity of nations as being analogous to a judgment in rem, and governs succession to movable property. The same principle applies in a matter of succession to immovable property where the law requires the personal law to be followed. Hence, although the judgment of the foreign Court declaring a person to be a validly adopted son of another person, cannot be regarded as a judgment in rem within meaning of s. 41, Evi. Act, it is binding on the Courts in British India in matters relating to immovable property situated in British India 177 Ind. Cas. 836 (5), relied on, Ramakrishnayya v. Mahalakshamma Garu (6), applied.

O. S. A. against the judgment and decree of Wadsworth, J. in O. S. No. 596 of 1923, dated December 1, 1936.

Mr. P. R. Ramakrishna Ayyar, for the Appellants.

Messrs. K. Rajah Ayyar and V. Ramaswamy Ayyar, for the Respondent.

Leach, C. J.—In this appeal the Court is called upon to decide the question whether a foreign judgment declaring the respondent to be the adopted son of a Hindu widow is binding on the Court in a suit relating to immovable property. On April 26, 1891, one Calve Sadasiva Chetti, a French citizen, died in Pondicherry leaving a widow, but no issue. The deceased was a man of considerable wealth and had immovable properties in Pondicherry and in the Madras Presidency. By a will and a codicil dated July 25, 1889, and May 20, 1891, respectively, the deceased directed that the bulk of the estate should be devoted to charitable purposes and he appointed five executors and trustees. The will and the codicil were proved both in Pondicherry and in this Court by four of the trustees, but one of them, Calve Krishnaswami Chetti, refused to join in, and in 1892 instituted proceedings in Pondicherry for the removal of the trustees who had proved the will. As the result of this action, the trustees were removed in 1906 and fresh trustees were appointed. The final decision was given by the Court of Cession in Paris. There was also litigation in Pondicherry with regard to the validity of the will and this led in 1917 to a declaration by the French Courts that the will was invalid and that Vasavambal Ammal, the widow, took the Pondicherry assets as on an intestacy. On December 12, 1906, Vasavambal Ammal executed in Madras a deed by which she purported to adopt respondent No. 2. It is said by the appellants that this adoption was invalid as the widow had no authority to adopt. In fact they say that the will should be construed as embodying prohibition against adoption. They also say that the widow was induced to sign the adoption deed under pressure from the trustees who were removed by the decree passed in Pondicherry. The deed of adoption was registered in Pondicherry and the French Courts have held the respondent to be the adopted son of Calve Sadasiva Chetti and also of Vasavambal Ammal. I will return to the decisions of the French Courts later, but as there has been considerable litigation with regard to the estate in this Court, it will be convenient first to refer to the suits in Madras.

On February 19, 1908, the respondent who was then about four years of age instituted, through Vasavambal Ammal as his next friend, Suit No. 49 of 1908 of this Court for a declaration that he was the lawfully adopted son of Calve Sadasiva Chetti and that the will was in consequence invalid. On this basis he asked that he be given possession of the Madras properties. On November 24, 1908, this suit was withdrawn with liberty to bring a fresh suit on the same cause of action. In 1910, the persons who were appointed trustees as the result of the suit filed in Pondicherry by Calve Krishnaswami Chetti in 1892, filed Suit No. 312 of 1910 of this Court for a declaration that the respondent's adoption by Vasa-vambal Ammal was invalid and for possession of the properties situated in Madras. The defendants in this suit were three of the four trustees who had been removed, Krishnaveni Ammal (the respondent's natural mother), Vasavambal Ammal and the respondent. The fourth trustee had died in the meantime. This suit was tried by Sir John Wallis who was then a Puisne Judge of this Court. Sir John Wallis held that the adoption of the respondent by Vasavambal Ammal was invalid as it was contrary to the provisions of the will and also because the nearest sapinda had not been consulted. Accordingly, he directed that the properties in the Madras Presidency should be handed over to the plaintiffs; an appeal (O. S. A. No. 72 of 1913) was filed against this judgment and was heard by Abdur Rahim and Phillips, JJ. Abdur Rahim, J., held that the Pondicherry Court had no power to remove the trustees appointed by the Madras Court in respect of immovable properties situated in Madras, and in order to remove the old trustees, a suit under s. 92, Civil P. O. would be necessary. Phillips, J. held that this was not a suit for the removal of trustees. The old trustees had been removed and the plaintiffs had been appointed in their places. This was a suit based upon a foreign judgment which recognized the title of the plaintiffs to administer the trust and to recover the trust properties. He agreed that the adoption was invalid for the reasons stated by Sir John Wallis and also on the ground that the factum of adoption had not been proved. In view of this disagreement, a Letters Patent Appeal No. 229 of 1916, followed and was heard by Ayling, Seshagiri Ayyar and Bakewell, JJ. who dismissed the suit on the ground that there was a defect in the appointment of the plaintiffs as trustees and that they therefore had no locus standi. No opinion was expressed on the question of the validity of the adoption.

In 1920 Calve Subbaraya Chetti, son of Calve Krishnaswami Chetti and two others with the sanction of the Advocate-General instituted in this Court Suit No. 226 of that year for the removal of the three surviving trustees who had proved the will in Madras, for the appointment of new trustees and for the settlement of a scheme. The respondent, Krishnaveni Ammal and Vasavambal Ammal were also made defendants. This suit also resulted in a compromise. The compromise was sanctioned by Kumaraswami Sastri, J. who passed a decree in the terms agreed upon. The respondent gave up his claim to be the adopted son of Calve Sadasiva Chetti. To Krishnaveni Ammal was allotted one item of immovable property in Madras, subject to her paying a sum of Rs. 50,000 to the respondent, and to the widow was allotted the property which is the subject-matter of the suit, out of which this appeal arises. The other properties of Calve Sadasiva Chetti in Madras were to be regarded as constituting valid bequests to charities and a scheme for their management was settled. The respondent was still a minor, but the Court considered that it was in his interest that there should be a decree in the terms agreed upon.

Vasavambal Ammal died on January 25, 1922. Calve Subbaraya Chetti then claimed to be entitled to the property which was allotted to Vasavambal Ammal under the compromise decree passed in Suit No. 226 of 1920 on the ground that he was the reversioner to the estate of Calve Sadasiva Chetti, and purported to transfer it to the Madras trustees for the benefit of the charities mentioned in the will of Calve Sadasiva Chetti who was his great uncle. Sankara Chetti, one of the trustees, who had been removed by the order of the French Court, set up a claim to the property as the nearest reversioner of the widow and purported to transfer it to the appellants who claimed to be illegitimate sons of Calve Sadasiva Chetti. In 1924 the Madras trustees filed Suit No. 53 of 1924 to recover possession of the property and also of a rest house which had been managed by Vasavambal Ammal. In addition to the appellants, Sankara Chetti, Chockanathan Chetti (who was also one of the original trustees) the then tenant of the property, the respondent, and the person in possession of the rest house were made defendants. In spite of the compromise decree passed in Suit No. 26 of 1920, the respondent advanced the claim to be the adopted son of Calve Sadasiva Chetti as well as the adopted son of the widow. This suit was dismissed on August 24, 1928, by Kumaraswami Sastri, J. on the ground that Sankara Chetti and not Calve Subbaraya Chetti was the nearest reversioner of Calve Sadasiva Chetti. Suit No. 696 of 1924 was tried with this suit. Suit No. 696 of 1924 had been filed by the respondent to recover the rest house from the caretaker. The respondent claimed the right to possession of the rest house as the adopted son of the widow, but without prejudice to his claim that he was also the adopted son of Calve Sadasiva Chetti. This suit was decreed by Kumaraswami Sastri, J. on September 5, 1928, on the ground that the respondent had been validly adopted to Vasavambal Ammal according to French law by which she was governed. The learned Judge left upon the question of the respondent's adoption to the testator. In Suit No. 591 of 1928 of this Court Sankara Chetti sought to recover from Krishnaveni Ammal possession of the property which had been allotted to her under the decree in Suit No. 226 of 1920. Sankara Chetti claimed to be entitled to the property as the nearest reversioner of Calve Sadasiva Chetti. He also claimed the right to manage the rest house. The suit came before Krishnan Pandarai, J. who dismissed it on the ground that the respondent was the validly adopted son of Vasavambal Ammal. The Court also held that Sankara Chetti could not challenge the adoption to Calve Sadasiva Chetti as Sankara Chetti had been instrumental in bringing it about. In 1930 the respondent instituted in this Court Suit No. 257 of 1930 to set aside the compromise decree passed in Suit No. 226 of 1920. The defendants were the Madras trustees. The respondent again claimed that he had been validly adopted both to the husband and the wife and that he was entitled to their estates. This suit was also compromised. The decree passed in Suit No. 226 of 1920 was confirmed subject to the payment to the respondent of Rs. 1,000 plus a like sum for costs and the payment by the trustees of Rs. 35 per mensem for his maintenance.

I will now return to the litigation in Pondicherry. I have already mentioned that in 1906 the trustees who had proved the will were removed and this led to the appointment of new trustees under the provisions of the will. In 1917 it was held by the Court of Appeal at Pondicherry that the bequests to charities were invalid because the sanction of the administration had not been obtained before the will was executed, and it was further held that in the absence of any other heir the widow took the French estate subject to certain non-charitable legacies. In 1920 Calve Subbaraya Chetti filed a suit in Pondicherry for a declaration that he was the reversioner to the estate of Calve Sadasiva Chetti. The defendants in this suit were the widow and the respondent. The adoption was challenged but the Court of first instance held that the respondent had been validly adopted both to the testator and to Vasavambal Ammal and ordered that all those who were in possession of the properties left by the testator should deliver them up to the respondent. The judgment, of course, did not apply to properties which were made the subject of non-charitable legacies. The judgment was upheld on appeal by the Court of Appeal in Pondicherry and also by the Court of Cession on second appeal. Therefore, so far as the French Law is concerned, the respondent is the heir both of Calve Sadasiva Chetti and of his widow and the French Courts have given him a declaration of his status.

The suit out of which this appeal arises was filed on November 5, 1928, to recover the property which was allotted to Vasavambal Ammal under the compromise decree in Suit No. 226 of 1920. The respondent claimed title to the property both as the adopted son of Calve Sadasiva Chetti and of Vasavambal Ammal. The suit was tried by Wadsworth, J. who held that it was no longer open to the respondent to set up his adoption to Calve Sadasiva Chetti, this claim having been abandoned in Suit No. 226 of 1920 and Suit No. 257 of 1930, but it was open to him to claim to be the adopted son of Vasavambal Ammal. The learned Judge held that the adoption by the widow had been proved, and as she was governed by French Law the adoption was valid. Accordingly he granted the respondent a decree for possession. In holding that the adoption of the respondent was valid, the learned Judge relied on the documentary evidence (the deed of adoption and a deed of gift executed by Vasavambal Ammal in which reference is made to the adoption) and on the judicial recognition of the respondent's status. The appellants have conceded in this Court that under French Law a Hindu widow can adopt a son to herself and that if she does, her adopted son succeeds to her estate, but they say that the documentary evidence does not prove that there was a giving and a taking and that the requisite ceremony was performed and therefore it is not sufficient to prove that there was a valid adoption. They contend that this Court cannot have regard to the declaration of status given to the respondent by the French Courts or to the decisions of Kumaraswami Sastri and Krishnan Pandalai, JJ. For reasons which I shall state, I consider that this Court must accept the declaration of the French Courts that the respondent is the adopted son of Vasavambal Ammal and therefore it is not necessary to inquire further into the matter.

Before stating the reasons for holding that the Court must accept the declaration of status by the French Courts, I will deal with an argument advanced by the learned Advocate for the appellant that succession to the estate of Vasavambal Ammal is governed by the Succession Act which does not recognize adoption. It is said that in declaring in s. 4 that Part II of the Act shall not apply if the deceased is a Hindu, Muhammadan, Buddhist, Sikh or Jain and in s. 29 that Part V shall not apply to an intestacy or to the property of any such person, the legislature could have only in its contemplation Hindus, Muhammadans, Buddhists, Sikhs and Jains who are domiciled in British India because a country can only legislate for its own citizens, and therefore when a Hindu domiciled abroad dies leaving property in British India, the Act applies because the estate is not within the exception. The Courts of this country have always applied the personal law of a Hindu who has migrated from one part of India to another and in Khatubai v. Mohammad Haji Abu (1), the Privy Council applied the personal law of a Halai Memon domiciled outside British India in the matter of succession to immovable property within British India. The deceased was domiciled in Porebunder in Kathiawar which is a Native State. He had carried on business for many years in Bombay and died leaving immovable property there. In matters of inheritance and succession, the Halai Memons of Porebunder follow the Hindu and not the Muhammadan Law and in that respect differ from the Halai Memons of Bombay who have adopted the Muhammadan Law. The question was whether the deceased's son took the whole of his estate to the exclusion of his daughter as under Hindu Law. The Judicial Committee held that the succession was governed by the personal law of the deceased which was the law of the Halai Memons of Porebunder and not by the personal law of the Halai Memons of Bombay. In Balwant Rao v. Baji Rao (2), the Privy Council stated that it was established that the law of succession was in any given case to be determined according to the personal law of the individual whose succession was in question. This case, however, related to a Maharashtra Brahmin domiciled in the Bombay Presidency leaving immovable property in the Central Provinces and is therefore not so much in point as Khatubai v. Mahomed Haji Abu (1). The latter case is directly in point and decides the question.

The argument of the learned Advocate for the appellant would appear to be based on observations by Wallis, C. J. in Kessara Venkattappayya v. Nayani Venkata Ranga Rao (3), where he said that the limits of legislative authority are territorial and the Indian Legislature in particular has authority to legislate only for British India and British subjects in Native States. Prima facie therefore, its enactments are not to be construed to apply to acts done outside British India even by British subjects. In that case the Court held that the Registration Act did not apply to authorities to adopt, executed in Native States by domiciled subjects of those States and such documents being valid and admissible in British India a person adopted in pursuance of an authority executed in the Nizam's Dominions was entitled to inherit the separate properties of his adopted mother's father situated in British India. The case was carried to the Privy Council, Kinara Venkattappayya v. Nayani Venkata Ranga Rao (4). Their Lordships held that the document in question had been duly registered, and did not consider it necessary to discuss "the important but somewhat abstruse question, whether the respondent being at that time resident in and a subject of the State of the Nizam, could rely upon the unquestioned fact that his status as an adopted child was accepted by the Courts in the Nizam's Dominions, as a binding decision on the question of his status precluding all dispute as to the fact and lawfulness of his adoption."

Consequently, the Privy Council left open the specific question whether the declaration of a foreign Court on the question of adoption is binding on Courts in British India, but its decision in Khatubai v. Mahomed Haji Abu (1) negatives the argument that the Succession Act must be deemed to apply to the estates of Hindus who are domiciled abroad. Coming now to the main question, it must be accepted that the judgments of the French Courts declaring that the respondent is the validly adopted son of Vasavambal Ammal cannot be regarded as judgments in rem within the meaning of s. 41, Evi. Act, but a declaration by a Court affecting the status of a person domiciled within its territory is treated by the comity of nations as being analogous to a judgment in rem, as was pointed out by the Bombay High Court in the recent case in Menahem Mesha Menahem Messa v. Moses Bunin Menahem Messa (5) and governs succession to movable property. Immovable property stands on a different basis and international law does not recognize any power in a Court to adjudicate upon the title or the right to the possession of immovable property situate outside the country of the Court. Chattels can be taken away but land cannot. But in recognizing only the personal law of Hindus, Muhammadans, Buddhists, Sikhs and Jains in matters of succession, British India has added an exception to the general principle that the lex situs must be applied in questions relating to immovable property and this is pointed out in "Mayne on Hindu Law and Usage" (Edn. 10, p. 96). The lex situs is the Succession Act and the Succession Act does not apply to a Hindu, Muhammadan, Buddhist, Sikh or Jain even when he is domiciled outside British India. So far as such persons are concerned, the governing factor is the personal law.

Inasmuch as the Courts of British India recognize the validity of a declaration of status by a foreign Court in a matter of succession to movable property in British India because the personal law applies, it seems to me that they must do the same in a matter of succession to immovable property where the law requires the personal law to be followed. No reason exists for making any distinction. Treating the personal law as part of the lex situs, the Courts of the country of domicile are best able to decide questions of status. In Ramakrishnayya v. Mahalakshamma Garu (6). Phillips and Reilly, JJ. held that British Indian Courts had no jurisdiction to entertain a suit for a declaration that an adoption which was made in French territory was not valid according to French Law, and the fact that there was in British India immovable property belonging to the estate would not invest the Court with jurisdiction to entertain the suit. It appeared from the evidence in the case that the French Law as to adoption and as to a Hindu widow's rights in property was on all fours with the law as administered in British India. The Court considered that the contesting defendants being French subjects were entitled to have the question of status determined according to the law prevailing in the country in which they were domiciled and for a foreign Court to usurp jurisdiction in such a matter was highly undesirable. The Court added that it might be necessary (it did not say that it would be necessary) in litigation with regard to property situated in British India to decide such questions, but it refused to entertain a mere declaratory suit. The decision is not in conflict with the opinion I have expressed but rather lends support. For the reasons indicated I hold that this Court must accept the declaration of the French Courts that the respondent was lawfully adopted by Vasavambal Ammal and that as the property in suit belongs to her estate the respondent is entitled to possession of it. My learned brother shares this view and the appeal will therefore be dismissed with costs. We certify for two Counsel.

Criminal Reference No. 474 of 1939

July 7, 1939

MULLA, J.

BANSIDHAR AND OTHERS—APPELLANTS*versusEMPEROR—RESPONDENT.Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 424, 367—Duty of Appellate Court.*

It would be well for District Magistrates who hear appeals in criminal cases to bear in mind that they are also subordinate to higher Courts and it is their duty to satisfy the higher Courts by their judgments that they have applied their minds to the case before them and in recording a finding of conviction upon the evidence produced before them, have arrived at a correct conclusion. In order to discharge this duty, it is necessary for them to see that their judgments fulfil the requirements laid down by the law. Merely saying that all the points arising in the case have been considered by the Court below and have been rightly decided, does not show that the Appellate Court has applied its mind to the points arising in the case and has arrived at its own independent judgment in respect of them as it is required by the law to do.

Or. Ref. made by the Sessions Judge of Jhansi, dated May 30, 1939.

The Assistant Govt. Advocate, for the Crown.

Order.—This is a reference by the learned Sessions Judge of Jhansi drawing the attention of this Court to a judgment recorded by the learned District Magistrate of Jalaun in an appeal made before him by seven persons who were convicted by a Magistrate of the Second Class of offences under ss. 147 and 355, I. P. C. The learned Sessions Judge has suggested without making a specific recommendation to that effect that the judgment of the learned District Magistrate should be set aside and that he should be directed to re-hear the appeal and to record a proper judgment. The judgment of the learned District Magistrate to which objection has been taken by the learned Sessions Judge runs as follows :

"This is an appeal against an order of a Special Magistrate of the Second Class, Orai, in a case under ss. 355 and 137, I. P. C. Seven persons were convicted and all of them appeal. I have given a patient hearing to the learned Counsel for the appellants. Not a single new thing has been said in this Court. Almost all the points advanced by the learned Counsel for the appellants have been discussed in the judgment of the Court below. In my opinion, the Court below has not erred in its findings. If anything, the learned Magistrate was lenient to the accused persons. I dismiss the appeal and further order that all the appellants be bound down under s. 106, Criminal P. C., for one year (after the release of the accused persons sentenced to imprisonment) and each accused person will have to furnish a surety for Rs. 100 to keep the peace."

The objection taken by the learned Sessions Judge is that this judgment does not fulfil the provisions of s. 424 read with s. 367, Criminal P. C. Having considered the judgment of the trying Magistrate as well as of the learned District Magistrate, I have not the least hesitation in agreeing with the view taken by the learned Sessions Judge. The judgment written by the learned District Magistrate obviously fails to fulfil the conditions of s. 424 read with s. 367, Criminal P. C. The latter section which is relevant for the purposes of the argument provides that a judgment of a Criminal Court "shall contain the point or points for determination, the decision thereon and the reasons for the decision." This provision is made applicable to the judgments of the Appellate Courts by s. 424, Criminal P. C. It would be well for District Magistrates who hear appeals in criminal cases to bear in mind that they are also subordinate to higher Courts and it is their duty to satisfy the higher Courts by their judgments that they have applied their minds to the case before them and in recording a finding of conviction upon the evidence produced before them have arrived at a correct conclusion. In order to discharge this duty, it is necessary for them to see that their judgments fulfil the requirements laid down by the law. It is always easy for the Appellate Court to say that all the points arising in the case have been considered by the Court below and have been rightly decided. This does not, however, show that the Appellate Court has applied its mind to the points arising in the case and has arrived at its own independent judgment in respect of them as it is required by the law to do. In the present case I have carefully perused the judgment of the trying Magistrate which covers seven typed pages and I find that the prosecution story is by no means a simple and straightforward story and the evidence produced by the prosecution is by no means overwhelming or of such a character as to leave no room for doubt.

It is quite evident that several points arise for consideration relating to the inherent merit of the prosecution story and the credibility of the evidence by which it is sought to be supported. Some of these points have been considered by the trying Magistrate and it is not for me to say whether the findings arrived at by him are right or wrong. The fact remains that the case demanded some consideration on the part of the Appellate Court, but the judgment of the learned District Magistrate does not show that he gave the case the consideration which it deserved. Under the law it was clearly his duty to state the various points urged before him and to record his decisions thereon with his reasons for those decisions. He has entirely failed to discharge that duty and I am therefore of the opinion that his judgment must be set aside. I therefore accept this reference and direct that the case shall be sent back to the learned District Magistrate of Jalaun for re-hearing the appeal and for recording a proper judgment as required by the law.

SIND JUDICIAL COMMISSIONER'S COURT

Reference No. 17 of 1937

May 22, 1939

DAVIS, J. C. AND LCB, J.

COMMISSIONER OF INCOME-TAX,
BOMBAY PRESIDENCY, SIND AND ADEN
—APPLICANT

versus

CENTRAL POPULAR ASSURANCE Co.,

LTD.—ASSESSEE—OPPONENT

Income Tax Act (XI of 1922), s. 66 (2)—Fee of Rs. 100, is part of reference by assessee and part of cost of reference by Commissioner and falls within terms of "costs" as used in sub-s. (6)—Assessee unsuccessful in reference—His contentions shown to be wrong—Taxed costs—Setting off against fees of Rs. 100 paid under sub-s. (2).

"Fee" in sub-s. (2) of s. 66, Income Tax Act, does not mean a deposit or security. It is the price paid by the assessee for the reference and it is not unreasonable to assume that the word is used in its ordinary meaning, that is to say, it is a fee for payment for work done in connection with the reference by the Commissioner. It is part of the costs of reference by him and likewise the cost or part of the costs of the reference by the Income-tax Commissioner. Therefore, as such, it falls within the term 'costs' as used in sub-s. 6 and it is in the discretion of the Court to pass such orders in relation to it as may, in its judicial discretion, seem proper. When the assessee is successful, when it is clear that he is right in his contention, there is no reason why he should not have paid back to him as part of the costs incurred, this Rs. 100 plus any taxed costs incurred by the proceedings in Court. But on the other hand, there is no reason, if he should fail and his contentions be shown to be wrong, why he should not lose this Rs. 100 and pay as well the taxed costs incurred by proceedings in Court on the general principle that costs should follow the event. The taxed costs will not be set-off against the fee of Rs. 100 paid under sub-s. (2) of s. 66, Income Tax Act, which the Commissioner will retain as a fee. [p. 684, col. 2.]

Ref. made by the Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay Presidency, Sind and Aden.

Mr. Partabrai D. Punwani, Advocate-General, for the Applicant.

Mr. Suganlal Hassanand, for the Opponents.

Davis J.C.—We have before us the question of the costs and the method of calculating the costs to be awarded to the Commissioner of Income-tax in a reference made by him under s. 66 (2), Income Tax Act, in which the assessee was unsuccessful. There appeared to be two extreme views taken by the learned Advocate who appeared in this case on behalf of the unsuccessful assessee and the learned Advocate-General for the Income-tax Commissioner. Mr. Suganlal, for the unsuccessful assessee, takes the view that Rs. 100 which is payable under s. 66 (2), Income Tax Act is, what he describes as a deposit or security for costs to be incurred in Court, and that if these taxed costs should be less than Rs. 100, as would be the case here, the unsuccessful assessee is entitled to refund of the balance. The learned Advocate-General takes the view that this Rs. 100 does not fall within the discretion of this Court under sub-s. 6 of s. 66, Income Tax Act, at all. He says that the Court cannot even when the assessee is successful direct that he should be re-paid this Rs. 100 which is the price of the reference; that the Legislature did not intend this Rs. 100 to be the subject of the order of the Court at all, and he relies principally upon the fact that the proviso to sub s. 2 of s. 66 expressly provides the circumstances under which this fee may be refunded and these circumstances relate to something which happens before the reference reaches the Court and not after. We think, however, that the better view lies between these two extremes. We do not think that in view of the fact the word 'fee' is used by the Legislature in sub-s. 2, it can mean, as Mr. Suganlal argues, a deposit or security; the word 'fee' in this case appears clearly to be the price paid by the assessee for the reference and it is not unreasonable to assume that the word is used in its ordinary meaning, that is to say, it is a fee for payment for work done in connection with the reference by the Commissioner.

One of the objects, of course, of fixing this fee at Rs. 100 may have been to discourage a frivolous reference and the Revenue Authorities have statutory powers to reduce this fee; but be that as it may, we think, that there is no reason why the word 'fee' in sub-s. 2 of s. 66, Income Tax Act, should not be given its own ordinary meaning. We see, however, nothing incompatible between the view that Rs. 100 is a fee and the view that this Rs. 100 is nevertheless part of the costs of the reference and therefore within the discretion of the Court under sub-s. 6. Part of the costs of reference by the assessee is undoubtedly payment of this fee of Rs. 100. It is part of the costs of reference by him and likewise the cost or part of the costs of the reference by the Income-tax Commissioner. Therefore we think, as such, it falls within the term 'costs' as used in sub-s. 6 and that it is in the discretion of the Court to pass such orders in relation to it as may, in its judicial discretion, seem proper.

Our attention has been drawn to a Rangoon case in Commissioner of Income-tax, Burma v. J. I. Milne (1) the part of the judgment dealing with the question of this fee of Rs. 100 is at pp. 460 and 461*. But in this Rangoon case as in the Bombay case in Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay v. Gopal Vajinath (2) the assessee was successful and we have no difficulty in holding that when the assessee is successful, when it is clear that he is right in his contention, there is no reason why he should not have paid back to him as part of the costs incurred this Rs. 100 plus any taxed costs incurred by the proceedings in Court. But on the other hand, we see no reason, if he should fail and his contentions be shown to be wrong, why he should not lose this Rs. 100 and pay as well the taxed costs incurred by proceedings in Court on the general principle that costs should follow the event. In the Bombay case the learned Chief Justice was dealing with a case where the assessee was successful and he said:

"The Advocate-General says that in some of the decisions of the other High Courts, the fee has not been treated as part of the costs, but the Court has made an order that it be refunded. In my view the Court has no jurisdiction to order the fee as such to be refunded; it can only deal with the matter in relation to costs. In my opinion, the fee is part of the assessee's costs of the reference, and consequently our order directing the Commissioner to pay the costs covers the return of the fee as being part of the out of pockets of the assessee. In cases in which the assessee is ordered to pay costs, the Court can, if it considers that credit should be given to the assessee for the fee, give the Commissioner his costs less Rs. 100."

So that the learned Chief Justice was not dealing with the case of the unsuccessful assessee but merely said what, with respect, we think necessarily follows from his finding, that the fee is part of the costs. It is a matter to be dealt with by the Court in its discretion under sub-s. (6), and there is nothing in any relevant section in that Act which deals with this fee of Rs. 100 separately as such and gives the Court power to order its refund as a fee. If it is not part of costs within the meaning of sub-s. (6), the Court has no power to deal with it at all. But we think clearly that the Court has power to deal with it because so far the assessee is concerned, it is clear that he pays Rs. 100 as the price of the reference to be made by the Commissioner, it is part of the costs of the reference with which sub-s. (6) deals and if the assessee is successful ordinarily, he should be entitled to his costs which include this fee.

Our attention has been drawn to a case of this Court Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay Presidency and Aden v. K. H. Katrak (3) and the remarks at p 437* which deal with the refund of the balance of this Rs. 100 after taxed costs had been deducted because according to the scales of fees in force in this Court it must happen in many cases that the taxed costs would be less than Rs. 100, so that the unsuccessful assessee would often be entitled to a refund if we hold that this Rs. 100 was, as it were, a deposit or security against which the taxed costs incurred by him had to be set-off, and balance being re-paid to him. But in this case the learned Judges did not consider this question at any length, nor indeed do we think they gave a decision which binds this Court. The learned Judge who gave the judgment went no further, we think, in that case than to express a pious hope. He said:

"The assessee has already deposited Rs. 100 with the Income-tax Commissioner to meet the costs of this reference as we order that the Income-tax Commissioner should have his costs as taxed by this Court provided such sum does not exceed Rs. 100. If the costs taxed are less, the assessee will no doubt get a refund from the Income-tax Commissioner of the balance."

But even if the learned Judges had there decided that the balance should be refunded, even so under sub-s. (6) it would appear they had discretion. But we think that in this case before us there is no reason that we should follow any other principle than that costs follow the event. The assessee in this case was unsuccessful. No circumstance has been shown which invites special sympathy on his behalf. It does not appear that the Commissioner of Income-tax did anything which was unnecessary or which would invite our disapproval or discrimination against him. It was said that in one case, for instance, the Commissioner of Income-tax refused to make a reference when called upon by this Court to do so. In such a case it would be within this Court's discretion to order the fee of Rs. 100, as part of the costs, to be returned to even an unsuccessful assessee. But in this case there is no circumstance of this kind and we see no reason why, as the assessee has failed, he should be entitled to a credit of this Rs. 100 or the return of the balance merely because he had to pay it in advance as a fee to the Commissioner and as the price of the reference. It was enacted that a fee of Rs. 100 should be paid because presumably the Legislature thought this sum was a fair return for the work involved by the reference; and it being shown, as in this case, that the assessee was wrong and the Income-tax Commissioner was right on the questions raised in the case stated, we see no reason why this fee of Rs. 100 should be returned to the unsuccessful assessee, by way of cash or credit, in part or in whole. The order as to costs then will be that the unsuccessful assessee is to pay the taxed costs and these taxed costs will not be set-off against the fee of Rs. 100 paid under sub-s. (2) of s. 66, Income Tax Act, which the Commissioner will retain as a fee.

Abatement—Partial—Appeal—Partition suit decreed—Appeal by all defendants—Decree and grounds of appeal proceeding on grounds common to all—Death of one appellant—Others can continue appeal under O. XLI, r. 4, Civil Procedure Code (Act V. of 1908)—Evidence—Judgment in previous suit—Probative value of.

In a partition suit no effective decree can be made unless all the co-shareis are before the Court. It does not, however, follow that a suit for partition cannot be dismissed against an absent defendant. In an appeal from a decree which proceeds on grounds common to all the appellants if there is partial abatement owing to the death of some of them, the surviving appellants may continue the whole appeal. Where the decree appealed from is of such a nature that the hearing of the appeal after partial abatement may result in the passing of two inconsistent decrees, the whole appeal must fail. [p. 688, col. 1.]

Where a decree in a partition suit is challenged in appeal by all the defendants and the decree proceeds on grounds common to them all and so also are their grounds of appeal, on the death of one of the appellants, the survivors are entitled to the benefit of O. XLI, r. 4, Civil P. C., and can continue the appeal without the legal representative of the deceased being substituted.

[Case-law referred to.]

The question as to the probative value of a finding in a previous suit depends on the nature of the finding and of the issues involved in the two different suits. [p. 689, col. 1]

A. from the decision of the District Judge, Manbhum, dated September 27, 1937.

Messrs. S. M. Mullick and S. C. Mazumdar, for the Appellant.

Messrs. B. C. De, N. N. Ray and Sambhu Brameshwar Prasad, for the Minor, for the Respondents.

Chatterji, J.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff who brought a suit for partition of a rent-free tenure consisting of village Mirdih in the District of Manbhum. The village has been recorded in the Record of Rights published in 1920 as comprised of twenty-four Khewats, namely, Khewats Nos. 2-1 to 2-24. The tenure formerly belonged to a family of three brothers Buchu, Dakshin and Gandhu. In course of time the shares of all these brothers passed into the hands of outsiders. On September 23, 1935, the plaintiff, who is the landlord of the village, purchased the 2-3rds interest of the first two brothers in execution of three decrees for arrears of cess obtained against the recorded tenure-holders. The defendants on the other hand originally obtained a mokarrari lease of Gandhu's 1-3rd share but subsequently purchased that share at an execution sale on August 30, 1880. The position therefore is that the plaintiff is now the holder of the 2-3rds share of Buchu and Dakshin and the defendants of the 1-3rd share of Gandhu. The suit was defended mainly on the grounds; (1) that there was a previous partition between the three brothers Buchu, Dakshin and Gandhu long ago; (2) that the plaintiff's purchase of the 2-3rds share of Buchu and Dakshin was not valid as the decrees for cess were "without jurisdiction and null and void"; and (3) that the defendants acquired partly by settlement and partly by purchase some lands from the branches of Buchu and Dakshin and have been in possession of those lands adversely for a long time.

The learned Subordinate Judge tried the suit, overruling all these defences, passed a preliminary decree for partition. On appeal by the defendants the learned District Judge has reversed the decree except with regard to the lands recorded in ijmal Khewat No. 2-24, area 21.99 acres. Hence this second appeal by the plaintiff.

The first point raised by Mr. S. M. Mullick

on behalf of the appellant is that the appeal before the District Judge was not competent. It appears that during the pendency of that appeal one of the appellants, Rakhal Mahto, who was defendant No. 5 died on July 18, 1937, and without his heirs being brought on the record, the appeal was decided on September 27, 1937, that is to say, within the period allowed for substitution. Mr. Mullick's contention is that after the death of Rakhal the appeal could not proceed in the absence of his heirs because in a partition suit all the co-sharers are necessary parties. He relies on the cases of Churaman Mahto v. Bhatu Mahto (1), Mahammad Abjal v. Hafizannessa Khatun, 91 Ind. Cas. 567 (2) and Naimuddin Biswas v. Maniraddin Laskar (3).

In the Patna case a suit for partition having been dismissed, the plaintiffs appealed and during the pendency of the appeal one of the respondents died and no substitution of his heirs having been made within the prescribed period, the appeal stood abated against him. The question then arose whether the appeal could proceed against the remaining respondents. It was held that it could not, because no decree for partition could be passed in the absence of any co-sharer.

In Mahammad Abjal v. Hafizannessa Khatun (2) it was laid down that an appeal in a partition suit is incompetent unless all persons interested are made parties to the appeal either as appellants or respondents. There a suit for partition having been decreed, some of the defendants preferred an appeal without impleading the plaintiffs as parties as the contest was limited to the question of shares as between the defendants inter se. The appeal was held to be incompetent for want of necessary parties. Though the plaintiffs' share might not have been disputed, the object of the appeal was to obtain a decree for partition after determining the shares of the defendants inter se. This case, therefore, is only an illustration of the principle that no effective decree for partition can be passed unless all the co-sharers are before the Court.

In Naimuddin Biswas v. Maniraddin Laskar (3) the suit was one under s. 106 of the Ben. Ten. Act for correction of the Record of Rights on the allegation that the rent was really Rs. 7 and not Rs. 10 as entered in the record. The suit was dismissed by the trial Court and on appeal it was decreed. The landlord-defendants then appealed to the High Court. During the pendency of the appeal in the High Court one of the appellants died and his heirs not having been substituted, the appeal abated so far as he was concerned. The respondents then contended that the whole appeal must fail. This contention was accepted on the ground that if the appeal were allowed to proceed as regards the surviving appellants and ultimately it succeeded, the result would be that there would be two contradictory decrees, one which stood against the deceased appellant declaring that the rent was Rs. 7 and the other which would be passed in favour of the surviving appellants to the effect that the rent was Rs. 10. Malik, J., one of the Judges who decided the case, observed that the true test for determining whether the appeal is competent after partial abatement is whether, having regard to the nature of the suit and the decree made, the appeal can be heard in the absence of the heirs of the deceased appellant.

The position in the present case is different. The trial Court passed a decree for partition and that decree was challenged in appeal by all the defendants. The decree proceeded on grounds common to them all and so also were their grounds of appeal. They were therefore entitled to the benefit of O. XLI, r. 4 of the Civil P. O. which runs as follows:—

"Where there are more plaintiffs or more defendants than one in a suit, and the decree appealed from proceeds on any ground common to all the plaintiffs or to all the defendants, any one of the plaintiffs or of the defendants may appeal from the whole decree, and thereupon the Appellate Court may reverse or vary the decree in favour of all the plaintiffs or defendants, as the case may be".

It is no doubt true that in a suit for partition no decree can be made in the absence of any co-sharer. But it does not follow that a suit for partition cannot be dismissed against an absent defendant. Here the purpose of the appeal was to obtain a reversal of the decree for partition and dismissal of the suit. This purpose could be gained by the surviving appellants continuing the appeal after Rakhai's death. Indeed the heirs of Rakhai could complain, had the result of the appeal been to their detriment, that the Court should not have heard the appeal without waiting for the prescribed time for substitution. The plaintiff, however, cannot make any grievance out of this. In this connection reference may be made to the cases of Chintaman Nilkant v. Gangabai (4), Ram Sewak v. Lambar Pande (5), Somasundaram Chettiar v. Vaithilinga Mudaliar (6) and Satulal Bhattacharjee v. Asiruddi Shaikh (7).

The facts in the Bombay case were that a suit for partition having been decreed, two of the defendants filed a joint appeal and pending its hearing, one of them died without her representative being brought on the record. The surviving appellant proceeded with the appeal which was ultimately allowed and the suit was dismissed. On second appeal by the plaintiffs it was contended that the lower Appellate Court ought not to have heard the appeal as it had abated. This contention was overruled and it was held that as the two defendants had appealed on grounds common to them both, the Court had power to hear the appeal and deal with the whole suit.

The suit in Ram Sewak v. Lambar Pande (5) was also a suit for partition. The suit was decreed by the trial Court and on appeal by the defendants one of them died pending its hearing and her heir not being substituted within time, the appeal, so far as she was concerned, abated. The contention was raised that the whole appeal abated. This contention was given effect to; but on second appeal the High Court overruled it.

The case in Somasundaram Chettiar v. Vaithilinga Mudaliar (6) related to a suit by Hindu reversioners for recovery of possession of properties said to have been improperly alienated during the lifetime of the limited owner. The suit having been decreed, some of the defendants appealed. Two of the appellants died and their representatives were not brought on the record. It was contended that the appeal, having abated so far as those two were concerned, could not proceed as regards the surviving appellants. This contention was overruled and their Lordships said

"The grounds of appeal in which the appellants have succeeded are common to all the appellants and we think the terms of O. XLI, r. 4 of the Civil P. O. are wide enough to cover this case and enable this Court to set aside the decree as regards the whole of the plaintiffs' claim and not merely in respect of the interest of these appellants whose appeals have not abated".

Shaikh (7) which related to a suit for ejectment, the question arose whether an appeal which was preferred by the defendants could proceed after partial abatement due to the death of some of them. Their Lordships, applying the provisions of O. XLI, r. 4 of the Civil P. C. held that the appeal could proceed at the instance of the surviving appellants. They however accepted as correct the statement of law made by Mallik, J. in Naimuddin Biswas v. Maniraddin Laskar (3) that the true test is whether the appeal can be heard in the absence of the appellant who is dead.

The principles deducible from all these decisions including those cited by Mr. Mullick may be thus stated:—

(1) In a partition suit no effective decree can be made unless all the co-sharers are before the Court.

(2) In an appeal from a decree which proceeds on grounds common to all the appellants if there is partial abatement owing to the death of some of them, the surviving appellants may continue the whole appeal.

(3) Where the decree appealed from is of such a nature that the hearing of the appeal after partial abatement may result in the passing of two inconsistent decrees, the whole appeal must fail.

In the present case there was no abatement of the appeal on the death of Rakhal, because before the time for abatement came, the appeal was heard and decided. The whole appeal was still pending and the question is whether the Court could hear it in the absence of Rakhal's heirs. The answer to this is to be found in the second of the above-stated principles which may very well be applied here, though it is not a case of any abatement. The contention that the appeal was incompetent must, therefore, be overruled.

Coming to the merits of the appeal, it is necessary to mention certain facts. Out of the twenty-four Khewats, Nos. 2-1, 2-13 and 2-22 appear to have been recorded separately in the names of the plaintiff's predecessors-in-interest and No. 2-24 is recorded ijmal. Almost all the remaining twenty covering a total area of 24.10 acres were recorded in the names of the representatives of the third branch. The plaintiff in execution of his decrees for arrears of cess purchased Khewats Nos. 2-1, 2-13, 2-22 and 2-3rds share in the ijmal Khewat No. 2-24. According to the defendants they acquired by settlement or purchase some of the lands from the branches of Buchu and Dakshin. These lands, it is said, form part of 234.10 acres included in the remaining twenty Khewats. The plaintiff claims that he purchased the undivided 2-3rds share of Buchu and Dakshin in the entire village and is therefore entitled to partition of the lands comprised in all the twenty-four Khewats. The learned District Judge has dismissed his claim for partition except with regard to the lands of Khewat No. 2-24 on the finding that there was a previous partition.

Apparently this is a finding of fact, but Mr. Mullick wants to assail it on the ground that in coming to this finding the learned District Judge has committed error of law. He argues in the first place that the learned Judge has merely relied on the entries in the Records of Rights, but those are not conclusive proof of partition. The learned District Judge's judgment, however, shows that in dealing with the question of previous partition, he considered the various documents in detail and after having done so came to the following conclusion:

"Broadly speaking the documentary evidence shows that for the last 90 years or so there has been separate possession of lands, and each branch of the family dealt exclusively with the lands in their own possession."

He therefore held that at least as regards the lands recorded separately, there could be no re-partition. There is no error of law in this finding.

It is next contended that the learned District Judge did not take a correct view of the effect of a judgment in previous suit inter partes. That suit was brought in 1845 by the predecessors-in-interest of some of the present defendants for a declaration of their exclusive title to a tank on the ground that it was included in their share which was allotted to them by partition which took place long ago, this partition being the same as that alleged in the present suit. On a reference to the appellate judgment Ex. 7, it appears that the Appellate Court dismissed the suit mainly on the ground that the plaintiffs failed to discharge the burden of proving that they had title to the disputed tank. In the present suit the trial Court took the view that the decision in the said suit of 1845 operates as res judicata. The learned District Judge has dissented from that view but it is said that the reasons given by him are not supportable in law. This may be so, but it is clear that the previous decision cannot operate as res judicata for the simple reason that the previous suit was decided by a Munsif's Court which had no jurisdiction to try the present suit.

Mr. Mullick then contends that although the previous decision may not operate as res judicata, it is a very strong piece of evidence. In support of this contention, he relies on the Privy Council decision in Midnapur Zamindari Co., Ltd. v. Naresh Narayan Roy (8) and refers to the following passage:

"Their Lordships do not consider that this will found an actual plea of res judicata, for the defendants, having succeeded on the other plea, had no occasion to go further as to the finding against them; but it is the finding of a Court which was dealing with facts nearer to their ken than the facts are to the Board now, and it certainly creates a paramount duty on the appellants to displace the finding, a duty which they have not been able to perform".

This decision must be read with reference to the facts of that case. The question as to the probative value of a finding in a previous suit depends on the nature of the finding and of the issues involved in the two different suits. In the present case the judgment of the trial Court in the suit of 1895 has not been produced and we do not know what were the issues framed there. Looking to the Appellate Court's judgment Ex. 7 it appears that the real question for consideration in the present suit was not at all in issue in the earlier suit. As I have already pointed out, the Appellate Court dismissed the suit on the finding that the plaintiffs failed to discharge the burden of proving their title. The broad question as to whether there was a partition of the entire village does not appear to have been considered or decided. The previous decision, therefore, is hardly of any assistance in the present suit. This is the view which the learned District Judge has apparently taken and there is nothing wrong in it.

Mr. Mullick next attacks that part of the judgment of the District Judge where he says that even if it were held that there had been no partition, this suit cannot succeed in its present form. In dealing with this aspect of the case, it is said, the District Judge lost sight of the distinction between the landlord's interest and the tenancy right with respect to those lands of which the defendants took settlement from the two branches of Buchu and Dakshin. Mr. Mullick's argument is that in those lands the defendants have only tenancy right while the plaintiff has the superior interest, and the claim for partition being in respect of the superior interest, there is no reason for refusing partition of those lands. Indeed the learned District Judge's observations in this connection may be open to some criticism; but the question does not arise in view of his finding that there was a previous partition. What he really means is that if the plaintiff has any superior right in respect of the lands which are in the possession of the defendants in tenancy right, the plaintiff may seek his remedy otherwise but not in a simple suit for partition.

A further question was raised as to what was the effect of the sales in execution of the decrees for cess. On the one hand it was contended that they had the effect of rent sales under the provisions of s. 208 of the Chota Nag. Ten. Act; on the other hand that they were sales in execution of money decrees. This question is of no consequence because the suit must fail on the ground that there was a previous partition.

The appeal must, therefore, be dismissed with costs.

Rowland, J.—I agree, and on the merits of the appeal have nothing to add.

But on the preliminary point that it was not competent to the District Judge to decide the appeal in the absence of the legal representatives of defendant No. 5, Rakhal, I may indicate my view, as the point is of some importance. Mr. Mullick for the appellants sought to bring the matter within the rule that a decree against a dead man is void; and relied on O. XXII, r. 3 and the decisions under that rule. He argued that in a partition suit as in a mortgage suit all the persons having an interest in the property are not only proper but necessary parties; and that in the absence of any one of such parties, no new decree could be passed in appeal changing the title or status of the absentee, as declared by the Court below. Where the absentee is a respondent, there is abundant and uniform authority for saying that the decree cannot be changed to his disadvantage without his having an opportunity of being heard; and in cases where an appeal has become defective through the death of a respondent, (he being a necessary party to the suit) it has always been held that such an appeal cannot proceed in the absence of his heirs. The appeal having abated against the deceased is no longer properly constituted and the whole appeal must fail. This was, for example, the position in

(8) 48 O 460; 64 Ind. Cas. 231; 14 L W 265; 30 M C T 279; AIR 1922 PC 211; 48 IA 49 (PC).

Kalidyal Bhattacharjee v. Nagendra Nath Pakrosi (9), a decision the correctness of which I have no wish to question. Following this decision, in Naimuddin Biswas v. Maniruddin Laskar (3); the same rule was applied to the case where the deceased had been an appellant. It was said that the appeal of the deceased having abated, the appeal in his absence was incompetent and could not proceed: it was said that the appeal of one appellant being dismissed that of the remainder could not be allowed for the result would be that there would be contradictory judgments on the same point.

But the position where the constitution of a suit or appeal has become defective through the death of a defendant or a respondent against whom relief being claimed, has in other decisions been distinguished from the case where the consequences of the death of an appellant are to be considered. In the latter case, it has been held the surviving appellants can invoke the aid of O. XLI, r. 4 of the Code, if the decree appealed from proceeds on a ground common to all the plaintiffs or to all the defendants. The condition was fulfilled here.

The decision in Naimuddin Biswas v. Maniruddin Laskar (3) was considered in a later case of the same High Court in Satulal Bhattacharjee v. Asiruddin Shaikh (7), where it was held that the appeal did not abate as a whole and that, the appeal succeeding, the appellate decree enured for the benefit of all the appellants including the deceased.

The judgment approves the decision in the Madras High Court in Sundaram Chettiar v. Vaithilinga Mudaliar (6), which followed earlier decisions in Ram Sewak v. Lambar Pande (5), and Chintaman Nilkant v. Gangabai (4). The same principle has been applied to an appeal in a mortgage redemption suit in Maung Byaung v. Maung Shawe Baw (10).

I am of opinion that we ought to follow those decisions, that O. XLI, r. 4 gives a discretionary power to an Appellate Court to save the rights of parties from being defeated by a purely technical objection, and that this was a case within both the letter and the intention of the rule.

In the case before us it is to be noted that the appeal to the District Judge can in no sense be held to have abated because it was disposed of before the expiry of the time prescribed for making an application to substitute the heirs of the deceased. No objection as to defect of parties taken at the hearing before the District Judge; if it had been taken, there was time to remedy it. In the memorandum of appeal to this Court, no mention is made of the alleged defect in the constitution of the appeal before the lower Appellate Court and I think it relevant to refer to O. I, r. 13 and O. I, r. 13. Order I, r. 9 lays down the principle that "No suit shall be defeated by reason of the joinder or non-joinder of parties, and the Court in every suit, deal with the matter in controversy so far as regards the rights and interests of parties actually before it".

The principle is subject to necessary exceptions; but it seems to be the declared policy of the legislature to limit rather than to enlarge these. And O. I, r. 13, says that

"All objections on the ground of non-joinder or misjoinder of parties shall be taken at the earliest possible opportunity.... and any such objection so taken shall be deemed to have been waived".

P. O. A. for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council.

Mr. K. B. L. Agarwal, for the Appellant.
Messrs. P. L. Banerji and Govind Lal, for the Respondents.

Order.—This is an application for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council. The District Court allowed the appeal and there did not affirm the decree of the District Court below. The application is under s. 110, Civil P. O. It is necessary for the applicant to show that it comes within the provisions of that section in regard to valuation. The applicant was the plaintiff and the valuation in his plaint for the purpose jurisdiction was Rs. 9,000 and for the purpose of court-fee Rs. 5,081-4-0, the latter being based on the revenue of three villages and fifteen times certain annual profits from muafi. The application now alleges that the real value of the subject-matter is above Rs. 10,000 in the Court of first instance and in the appeal to this Court. To indicate this valuation, the learned Counsel takes the figures for revenue in three villages in the plaint and multiplies them by 20 and also multiplies the net profits by 20 instead of by 15. The result attained is Rs. 12,431. No ground is shown for this method of calculation and we are not satisfied that there is any evidence in the affidavit of any value that this is the correct method of valuation. As a matter of fact, from the time of the plaint in 1936 till the present year 1939, there has been a decline in the value of samidari property in Gorakhpur district from which this appeal comes, and in other districts in the Province. We are also not satisfied that an applicant before this Court has got any right to come to this Court in the present manner and allege that the valuation for jurisdiction which he put on his plaint in the trial Court was too low and that he should now be allowed to enhance the valuation for the purpose of s. 110, Civil P. O. No ruling has been cited by the applicant. For these reasons we dismiss this application for leave to appeal, with costs.

S. Application dismissed.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), ss. 65 (e), 74 (1) (iii), 35—Powers-of-attorney—True copy in register of powers-of-attorney—Admissibility in proof of original entry—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 47, O. XXI, r. 2, (1)—Parties executing solenama, after decree—Effect of—Such solenama, if can be dealt with by executing Court under s. 47—Pardanashin lady—Deed of adjustment after passing of decree—Held on facts, the transaction embodied therein was binding on lady.

Every entry in the register of powers-of-attorney is "a public document" within the meaning of s. 74 (1) (iii), Evi. Act, being "a document forming the act or record of the act" of an executive public officer in the discharge of a statutory duty imposed upon him. It follows that a true copy of the entry [which by virtue of s. 76, Evi. Act, is a certified copy within the meaning of s. 63 (1)] is admissible as proof of the original entry by virtue of s. 65 (e), Evi. Act. The weight to be attached to the entry depends upon the accuracy of the abstract of the power. But the Court is entitled to presume the correctness of the abstract in accordance with the usual presumption that official acts are regularly performed and hence the original entry itself is good evidence of the contents of the power-of-attorney and is relevant under s. 35, Evi. Act [p. 699, col. 2.]

Where subsequent to the decree the parties enter into a solenama, it has the effect of extinguishing in part the plaintiff's claim under the original decree and to that extent it is an "adjustment" of the decree within the meaning of O. XXI, r. 2 (1), Civil P. O. But even otherwise and as such, it is a matter to be dealt with by the executing Court under s. 47. 180 Ind. Cas. 378 (2), relied on. [p. 700, col. 1.]

There was a dispute between a pardanashin lady and her adopted son. It was referred to arbitrators. Their award was made a decree of the Court. Subsequently in the executing Court a solenama was filed, embodying the terms of settlement between them. The solenama showed that the provisions thereof were the natural results of the circumstances and the relations between the parties. There was nothing to indicate fraud. It was in evidence that before the execution of the solenama there were direct negotiations between the lady herself and her son and that she caused the terms which were agreed between them to be reduced to writing in the form of a note or draft and that the solenama was prepared in accordance with it.

Held, that the transaction embodied in the solenama was the free and intelligent act of the lady and was binding on her. 89 Ind. Cas. 649 (1), applied.

Messrs. A. N. Bose, P. N. Mitter and Bhuban Mohan Saha (Jr.), for Appellant (in No. 82) and Respondent (in Nos. 50 and 141.)

Dr. S. C. Basak, Messrs. Panchanan Ghose and Paresah Nath Mukherji, for Respondent (in No. 82) and Appellant (in Nos. 50 and 141.)

Judgment.—(Appeal No. 82 of 1938)—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiff-appellant, Pattu Kumari Bibi, against her adopted son, Nirmal Kumar Singh Nawlakha, in the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Murshidabad, for a declaration that a certain adjustment made on compromise on February 24, 1931, in respect of a decree of January 21, 1924 in Suit No. 17 of 1924 between the same parties was fraudulent, illegal, ultra vires, inoperative and invalid and therefore not binding on the plaintiff-appellant.

Nine issues were framed in the suit, of which the first four were decided in her favour. The other five were decided against her, with the result that the suit was dismissed with costs. Hence this appeal. Before dealing with the points raised in the appeal, it will be necessary to set out in some detail the nature of the decree of January 21, 1924, and of the adjustment of February 24, 1934. The plaintiff-appellant is the widow of a rich merchant and zamindar, Rai Dhanpat Singh Nawlakha of Azimganj. On the death of her sons, after her husband's death, she took the defendant-respondent as an adopted son in 1918. Subsequently, disputes arose between the mother and the adopted son which in January 1924, they referred to arbitration. The arbitrators made an award and on January 21, 1924, in Suit No. 17 of that year, the Subordinate Judge of Murshidabad made a decree in terms of the award. Those terms, so far as they are relevant for the purposes of this case, were that the management of certain scheduled lands were to remain with the son, but out of the income thereof he was to pay the mother a sum of Rs. 13,000 a year in four instalments, namely Rs. 3,000 in Ashar, 3,000 in Aswin, 3,000 in Pous 4,000 in Chaitra. It was further provided that as regards certain cash moneys which were in deposit in his kuti or firm in the mother's name, he was to pay her interest which, as to a sum of Rs. 34,000, would be calculated at 6 per cent. per year and, as to the balance, was fixed at the round figure of Rs. 1,000 per month. Thus, under the head of interest she was to get in all a sum of Rs. 14,040 per year, or Rs. 1,170 per month.

Some of the dues under the above decree having fallen into arrears, the plaintiff-appellant started Execution Case No. 73 of 1933 for realization of a sum of Rs. 48,334 from the defendant-respondent. This was in May 1933. On February 24, 1934, a joint petition was filed in Suit No. 17 of 1924 on behalf of both the parties stating that they had arrived at a compromise on certain terms (set out in the petition) and asking that the decree in the suit (of January 21, 1924) be adjusted accordingly and that the petition be treated as part of the decree and the award. On March 5, 1934, the Subordinate Judge passed an order allowing the petition. The terms set out in the petition were briefly these: (a) The arrears of Rs. 48,334 mentioned in the execution case plus certain additional arrears of Rs. 22,336 that had accrued since, making a total of Rs. 70,700 were dealt with thus: (i) Nirmal Kumar paid down in cash Rs. 10,000; (ii) He was to pay a further sum of Rs. 15,000 spread over three years from Chaitra 1340 B. S. to Magh 1343 B. S. both inclusive, in 4 quarterly instalments, Chaitra Rs. 2,500, Ashar 800, Aswin 800, Magh 900—Rs. 5,000; (iii) For the balance of Rs. 45,700 he was to transfer certain scheduled lands to his mother with full rights of alienation and she was simultaneously to lease them back to him permanently but without any power of alienation and on a nominal annual rent of Re. 1. A detailed procedure for the execution and exchange of the necessary transfer deeds were also laid down. As soon as the conveyance to the mother was ready for execution and registration, Nirmal Kumar was to give her seven days' notice of the date appointed by him for the execution and registration of the lease and both deeds would be registered together. If he failed to execute the conveyance as stipulated, the entire compromise was to be treated as null and void and the original decree was to be liable to be executed in full; if on the other hand the mother defaulted, the son was to be under no obligation to convey the property to her, and the rest of the compromise would stand. On this last point there is a slight error of translation in the document, Ex. I, printed at pp. 12-13 of Part II of the paper-book in Appeal No. 82 of 1935. In para. 3 of the document in lines 28, 29 relating to what is to happen in the event of the mother's default, the words "nor shall this adjustment or compromise being considered null and void stand" should be "nor shall this solenama be considered null and void."

The right of the mother to get Rs. 13,000 annually as provided in the original decree was maintained but in slightly accelerated instalments. It will be remembered that under the original decree this sum was payable in four instalments, namely Rs. 3,000 in each of the months of Ashar, Aswin, and Pous and Rs. 4,000 in Chaitra. Under the compromise the entire sum of Rs. 13,000 became payable in 12 monthly instalments of Rs. 1,000 each, except for the Magh and Phalgun instalments which were fixed at Rs. 1,500 each. It was further provided in the terms that if Nirmal Kumar made default in payment of four consecutive instalments, the mother would be entitled to appoint a Receiver of the immovable proerties mentioned in the schedule to the original award. The mother relinquished her claim to the entire interest of Rs. 1,170 per month due under the original decree, with a proviso that the claim would revive from the date of the auction sale, if the immovable properties mentioned in the Schedule to the original award were sold for arrears of revenue or rent. On the same day on which the aforesaid joint petition was filed in the parent suit, namely February 24, 1934, Nirmal Kumar also filed a petition in the execution case mentioning the aforesaid compromise and praying for disposal of the case according to O. XXI, r. 2, Civil P. O. The Pleader for the other side, Gouri Prasad Roy, endorsed on this petition the words "No objection" and signed it; and on that very day the execution case was disposed of "no full satisfaction" according to the petition. The suit out of which this appeal has arisen was, as already mentioned, for a declaration that "the adjustment on compromise made on February 24, 1934, in Suit No. 17 of 1924" was fraudulent, illegal, ultra vires, etc. The language of the plaint on this point is slightly ambiguous. The use of the words "illegal" and ultra vires would appear to indicate that the declaration sought was of the invalidity of the Court's order on the petition of compromise rather than of the compromise itself. On the other hand, the use of the word "fraudulent" and the particular date mentioned (February 24, 1934) suggest that the prayer was directed, not against the Court's order (which as regards Suit No. 17 of 1924 was passed on March 5, 1934), but against the petition of compromise itself. We shall assume for the purposes of this appeal that the plaintiff meant to attack both, the petition of compromise as "fraudulent" and the Court's orders thereon as "illegal" and ultra vires.

The plaintiff's case is set out in paras. 3 and 4 of plaint (there are two paragraphs in the plaint each of which is No. 4; both are relevant). In para. 3 she states that she was not aware of the defendant's prayer for final disposal of Execution Case No. 73 of 1933 on the basis of the compromise and that she did not instruct any Pleader, nor authorize anybody to instruct any Pleader, to consent to that prayer. She further states that her tadbirkarak or agent, Soubhagya Chand, was dishonestly induced by the defendant to mislead her Pleader and thereby procure the endorsement of "No objection" on the defendant's petition for final disposal. As regards Suit No. 17 of 1924, she states in the first para. 4 of the plaint that the adjustment petition was filed without her knowledge or consent. She is a pardanashin lady and the defendant, it is said, fraudulently caused an adjustment petition to be filed by her agent, Soubhagya Chand. In the second para. 4 of the plaint she goes on to say that by this unauthorized act of Soubhagya Chand she has been deprived of a large sum of money due to her as interest. In fact, she continues, Soubhagya Chand had no real power-of-attorney to act for her. "The defendant fraudulently got the said am-muktearnama also executed in favour of the said Soubhagya Chand." The terms of the power were not read over to her; she received no independent instructions about its execution, it is not binding upon her, and Soubhagya Chand had no right to enter into any adjustment or compromise on her behalf. The adjustment of the decree for compromise is also attacked as illegal and ultra vires, inasmuch as it has substituted a new decree in place of the original decree. She first came to know of the fraud on January 30, 1937. These allegations of the plaintiff are traversed in para. 9 of the written statement of the defendant. Briefly, the defence position is that the plaintiff was fully aware of the compromise and that the petition of compromise was filed in Court with her knowledge and on proper instructions given by her to her Pleaders and her am-muktear Soubhagya Chand. The defendant further points out that in a subsequent proceeding, namely Execution Case No. 230 of 1936, the fact of the adjustment made in Execution Case No. 73 of 1933 was admitted by the plaintiff. On these Pleadings three main issues have been framed, namely Nos. 6, 7 and 8, mentioned in the Subordinate Judge's judgment. These issues are in the following terms:

"Issue No. 6: Was the petition of adjustment in Suit No. 17 of 1924 O. C. filed without the knowledge of the plaintiff and fraudulently? Issue No. 7: Was it signed and filed by the plaintiff's Pleader without any authority? Was the Pleader induced to sign and file it by fraud or misrepresentation? Issue No. 8: Was the adjustment improperly recorded? Is the order of recording the adjustment ultra vires and invalid?"

We shall deal first with Issues Nos. 6 and 7. They turn largely on questions of fact. On the side of the plaintiff there have been examined the plaintiff herself, P. W. No. 2, Lokendra Nath Roy (her latest Pleader in the suit), P. W. No. 3, Kharag Sing Kuthari

(a son-in-law of the plaintiff), and P. W. No. 4 Dharam Chand Boyed (brother of the plaintiff). For the defence there have been examined besides the defendant himself, D. W. No. 1 Pramatha Nath Roy (defendant's secretary), D. W. No. 2 Keshri Singh Boyed (defendant's cashier), D. W. No. 3 Pratap Singh Boyed (nephew of the plaintiff), D. W. No. 4 Gouri Prasad Roy (at one time a Pleader for the plaintiff) and D. W. No. 5 Jitendra Nath Banerjee (another Pleader for the plaintiff). The defendant's account of the circumstances that led up to the compromise in Execution Case No. 73 of 1933 is briefly this: when the execution proceedings had gone on for eight or nine months (they had been started in May 1933) Dhannu Lal, who was one of the arbitrators in the original award of 1924 sent word to him asking why he was quarrelling. Defendant replied that owing to the condition of his business it was not possible for him to pay the amounts mentioned in the award and that it would be much better if the matter could be compromised. This appears to have been communicated in due course to plaintiff, and on January 22, 1934, defendant received a letter, Ex. E (8), from Soubhagya Chand, who besides being the plaintiff's agent was also one of her sons-in-law. The whole of this letter is very important and its terms may be set out here in full:

"This letter is written by Soubhagya Chand Sett from Calcutta who sends greetings to Babu Saheb Nirmal Kumar Singhji Nowlakha of Azimganj. Received your kind letter. The day before yesterday Johar Mullji came and paid the sum of Rs. 2,000 (rupees two thousand). Now kindly come here immediately and see your mother and settle the matter. The 27th is the date fixed for the suit in respect of which I have already written to you. And now under any circumstances further adjournment cannot be taken. Please come here before the 25th with money, otherwise I shall start from here on the night of the 25th for the purpose of conducting the case and thereafter you cannot blame me. Accept blessings from the respected mother-in-law and also the blessings of your sister and accept obeisance of the children. Inform of your welfare and convey my blessings to the children.

Sd./- Soubhagya Chand Sett."

The defendant states that on receipt of this letter he went to Calcutta and there met Soubhagya Chand at his mother's place. The terms were discussed with his mother for three or four days and she got a draft of the terms prepared. This was in Calcutta. The draft was then brought by Soubhagya Chand to Berhampur where the execution proceedings were pending. Then Soubhagya Chand and Dharam Chand brought a solenama or petition of compromise to the defendant at Azimganj for his signature. Defendant compared the solenama with the draft brought from Calcutta; they were in the same terms. Defendant then signed the solenama and paid Soubhagya Chand Rs. 10,000. Soubhagya Chand also signed the solenama which was then filed in Court. At the time when the terms were discussed with the plaintiff in Calcutta, there were present, on some days, Dhannu Lal and on some days, Keshri Singh; Jalim Singh also used to be present sometimes and once or twice Soubhagya Chand also. At the time when the terms were finally settled, there were present, besides the plaintiff and the defendant, Keshri Singh and Jalim Singh. Of the persons mentioned above, Dhannu Lal and Jalim Singh are dead and Soubhagya Chand has for obvious reasons not been examined by either side. Keshri Singh, who is the defendant's cashier, has been examined on behalf of the defence. He is D. W. No. 2. He states that he brought the defendant to Calcutta for a settlement of his differences with the plaintiff. Defendant, witness and Dhannu Lal saw the plaintiff together in Calcutta and upon defendant's request backed by Dhannu Lal, the plaintiff agreed to give up her claim of Rs. 14,040 as interest for ever and wanted Rs. 25,000 to be paid in cash. She further desired to have a conveyance of certain properties for the balance, agreeing to settle them again with the defendant on an annual rent of Re. 1. Defendant said he was unable to pay Rs. 25,000 immediately in cash and offered to pay Rs. 10,000 down and the balance of Rs. 15,000 in instalments. The plaintiff agreed to this. It was also agreed between the parties that the annual payment of Rs. 13,000 to the plaintiff should be made in monthly instalments. The plaintiff also wanted that in the event of the defendant's zamindari being sold away, the sum of Rs. 14,040 remitted by her would have to be paid. This in brief is D. W. No. 2's evidence.

It will be seen that it substantially bears out the defendant's own account, the terms described by the witness being substantially those that have been embodied in the solenama. One slight discrepancy needs notice, as it has been commented upon by the learned Advocate appearing for the plaintiff. Keshri Singh goes on to state in his cross-examination that during the discussions between the defendant and the plaintiff in Calcutta nothing was mentioned as to what would happen if the conveyance was not executed. In the solenama filed in Court, however, there is provision for this contingency; if the conveyance was not executed by the defendant as stipulated in the deed, the entire compromise was to stand annulled. From this, it has been sought to be argued that whatever may have been discussed between the parties, the actual terms of the solenama, which was subsequently filed in Court, were not discussed and the plaintiff, therefore, cannot be said to have understood all that was in the solenama. We think that the foundation is much too slight for any such inference. Witness Keshri Singh in his evidence is speaking of negotiations which took place nearly four years before and it is quite possible that he may have forgotten a detail here or there of what was discussed during many days. The fact that there were prolonged negotiations for three or four days with the plaintiff herself is proved by this witness and he also states most of the terms agreed upon. The fact that Soubhagya Chand brought with him from Calcutta a written record of the terms arranged is proved not only by the defendant himself but also by witness Pramoth Nath Roy, D. W. No. 1 and Gouri Prasad Roy, D. W. No. 4. They both state that Soubhagya Chand brought with him a note of the terms, that the plaintiff's Advocate Babu Kali Krishna Banerji drafted the solenama with reference to that note and that defendant's Pleader Shyama Pada Roy prepared a fair copy of the draft for filing in Court. There is no ground whatever for disbelieving these witnesses and they confirm defendant's statement that the solenama put into Court merely embodied the terms already contained in the draft or note brought by Soubhagya Chand. The defendant has further stated that the draft was actually shown to him by his mother before he left Calcutta on the conclusion of the discussion between him and her. The plaintiff of course denies all knowledge of the negotiations which, according to the defence, preceded the filing of the solenama. She says in her evidence that she first learnt of the solenama in the preceding Magh (January/February 1937) from her Pleader Loken Babu, who is P. W. No. 2. She says that she enquired about the execution case from him in the latter part of January, 1937, and that when he told her of the solenama she was surprised and said she knew nothing about it or its terms. Ultimately, therefore, we have only plaintiff's own denial to set against the evidence of the defendant and the other defence witnesses that we have mentioned. We have no hesitation in preferring the latter to the former, for the following reasons:

The fact that the defendant visited Calcutta in order to have matters settled is rendered probable by Soubhagya Chand's letter of January 22, 1934, Ex. E (8), written to the defendant from Calcutta in which Soubhagya Chand says, amongst other things, "Now kindly come here and see your mother and settle the matter." We have already quoted the whole of this letter; there is nothing in it which suggests that the writer was colluding with the defendant against the plaintiff. Indeed, the warning to the defendant that unless he came before the 25th, the writer would have to prosecute the suit and "thereafter you cannot blame me" points against any such collusion. We must, in this connection, mention another important piece of evidence. On November 12, 1937, in the course of her examination on commission, plaintiff was asked on what terms Soubhagya Chand and Nirmal Kumar were and she replied: "Now they are on good terms. They have been on good terms since a short time—say one year." As they could not possibly collude against the plaintiff before they were on good terms with each other it follows from this statement that the letter of January 22, 1934, must have been written long before there could be any collusion. Some comment has been made by the learned Advocate for the plaintiff-appellant as regards the payment of Rs. 2,000 mentioned in the letter and the suggestion has been thrown out that the money was probably a bribe to Soubhagya Chand. There is no basis at all for this suggestion. When the plaintiff was specifically questioned whether she had received Rs. 2,000 from Nirmal Kumar in Pous or Magh 1340 B. S. (January 1931) through Johar Mullji she could only say "I do not remember." It is incredible that she did not keep accounts of the large sums of money which she was receiving from time to time from Nirmal Kumar and was not in a position to answer the question more definitely than by saying that she did not remember. We are not satisfied that she did not receive the aforesaid sum of Rs. 2,000 or that the defendant-respondent, Nirmal Kumar, intended the sum as a bribe to Soubhagya Chand. It is significant that the payments of Rs. 2,500 and Rs. 1,000 set out in Ex. F and Ex. F (1) whose receipt the plaintiff had to admit, were also made through Johar Mullji. In all the circumstances of the case we see no reason for refusing to accept the letter of January 22, 1934, at its face value. It is clear from its terms that it contained an urgent invitation to the defendant to go and settle matters with his mother and it therefore supports his version that he actually went to Calcutta and negotiated with her. There is further support for this version in Ex. O. This is a certified copy of the petition filed in the Subordinate Judge's Court on January 27, 1934, signed on behalf of the plaintiff by her Advocate, Kali Krishna Banerji and on behalf of the defendant by his Pleader Shyama Pada Roy. The petition was filed in connection with Execution Case No. 73 of 1933 and the objection preferred therein. In this joint petition the parties stated that negotiations for settlement by compromise were going on between them and had advanced a long way. They accordingly prayed that the case be adjourned for two weeks for a compromise. Ex. 5 (b) which has been printed in Part II of the connected Appeal No. 50 of 1937 shows that upon this joint petition the Court adjourned the case to February 10, 1934. It is therefore clear that negotiations were in progress at about this time as stated in the defendant's version.

Babu Gouri Prasad Roy, who was at one time a Pleader for the plaintiff, has given evidence in this case for the defence. He is D. W. No. 4. He states that in the beginning of the year 1934 he was the plaintiff's Pleader in an income tax case. He filed a petition on her behalf that as she had no income in 1339 B. S. (1932-33) she could not be assessed to tax. In support of that petition he filed on her behalf a certified copy of the solenama of which she now denies all knowledge. The witness further states that the vakalatnama which he filed in the Income tax Office bore the plaintiff's signature in Hindi and was delivered to him by Dharam Ohand, who is her brother. As the result of the petition in the income-tax case, the plaintiff was not assessed to income-tax. Ex. O. shows that on March 9, 1934, Upendra Nath Banerji, who is Pleader Gouri Prasad Roy's clerk, applied for a certified copy of the solenama. It thus bears out the Pleader's statement that a certified copy of the document was filed in the income-tax case. We see no reason for disbelieving the Pleader in question. The circumstances in which, and the precise purpose for which, the solenama was filed in that case might have been elucidated by production of the relevant documents from the Income-tax Office. As these documents are confidential and the defendant could not obtain copies himself, he offered to pay the plaintiff all necessary costs if she would take out the copies. The offer was not accepted, with the result that we have to rely on the Pleader's evidence for the purpose of ascertaining what took place in the course of the income-tax proceedings. As we have already said, we see no reason for disbelieving him. An attempt was made on behalf of the appellant, on the strength of the letter Ex. E (5) which is a letter written on May 27, 1934, by the plaintiff to the defendant, to suggest that she left him to conduct the income-tax proceedings for her, but judging from the date of the letter (May 27, 1934) we doubt very much whether this particular letter had any reference to the assessment for 1932-33 in respect of which the Pleader Gouri Prasad Roy appeared for the plaintiff. As already remarked, the plaintiff had it in her power to obtain certified copies of the relevant papers from the Income-tax Office to prove exactly what took place; not having produced those papers, even after the defendant had offered to pay for copies, she cannot ask us to disbelieve the Pleader. There is thus evidence to show that she was not only aware of the solenama but actually used it for the purpose of obtaining a remission of income-tax.

It will be remembered that one of the terms of the solenama was that the defendant was to execute a conveyance of certain lands to the plaintiff, who was simultaneously to lease them back to the defendant. By way of prescribing the procedure for the exchange of these documents, the solenama provided that the defendant should serve a notice on the plaintiff as soon as the conveyance was ready, mentioning a date for the stipulated exchange. It seems to us that these particular provisions by their very nature point against any fraud. Had there been any intention to defraud the plaintiff, those who were perpetrating the fraud would not have provided for a procedure which was bound to bring the fraud to the notice of the plaintiff almost at once. We say "almost at once," because the solenama was executed on February 24, 1934, and the stipulated notice had to be served upon the plaintiff before the end of the following Chaitra, i. e. before the middle of April 1934. That a notice of this kind was actually served on the plaintiff admits of no doubt. Ex. D is a certified copy of the notice bearing the signature of the defendant's Pleader, Shyama Pada Roy. The notice was dated March 29, 1934, and a copy of it was filed in the Subordinate Judge's Court on the same day. It was addressed to the plaintiff at her Lake Road residence in Calcutta. It mentioned April 10, 1934, as the date appointed for the simultaneous registration of the conveyance and the lease and it warned the plaintiff that if she defaulted in the execution and registration of the lease, the defendant would not be bound to execute and register the conveyance. The plaintiff has admitted having signed the postal acknowledgment receipt for the registered letter by which the notice was sent to her. She has further admitted that she had the letter with her for two or three days, but she makes the amazing statement that she had no curiosity at all to know where the letter came from or what it contained. She says she handed over the letter to Soubhagya Chand and said to him "some letter has come, take it with you." We do not believe this statement. She must have informed herself of the contents of the notice. The postal acknowledgment receipt bears the date March 31, 1934. Thus, this part of the evidence in the case shows that the solenama or compromise was a bona fide transaction and was actually acted upon in respect of one of its important terms, namely the service of a notice appointing a date for the exchange of the stipulated document.

We now come to certain payments which also indicate that the solenama was acted upon by the parties. Exs. F and F (1) are two receipts granted by the plaintiff. They both bear her signature. The first of them is dated April 15, 1934, and is for a sum of Rs. 2,500 received from Nirmal Kumar "in respect of the kist of the month of Chaitra." The second is dated April 23, 1934, and is for a sum of Rs. 1,000 received from Nirmal Kumar "in respect of the kist of the month of Baisakh." The significance of these payments is that they can only be related to the solenama. Under the original award of January, 1924, the Chaitra kist was Rs. 4,000. It was only under the solenama that there was a Chaitra kist of Rs. 2,500. The learned Advocate for the plaintiff has sought to get over this difficulty by suggesting that possibly the payment referred to in Ex. F was towards the Chaitra kist of Rs. 4,000 mentioned in the original award.

That is to say, that it was a part payment of that kist; but this is not the natural meaning of the words in the receipt. Moreover, if the sum was intended as a part payment, there would have remained Rs. 1,500 still to be paid in respect of the Chaitra kist; but we find that only eight days later, another sum of Rs. 1,000 whose receipt is acknowledged in Ex. F (1), was credited, not against any balance of the Chaitra kist but against the Baisakh kist. It is therefore clear that Ex. F cannot be explained away as relating to a part payment of the Chaitra kist of the original arbitration award. It can only be related to the Chaitra kist of Rs. 2,500 mentioned in the solenama. Similarly, under the original award, there was no specific Baisakh kist of Rs. 1,000. We only find such a specific kist in para. 6 of the solenama, which relates to the sum of Rs. 13,000 annually payable to the plaintiff and prescribes the monthly instalments in which it is to be paid, the Baisakh instalment being fixed at Rs. 1,000. Here again, an ingenious attempt has been made on behalf of the plaintiff-appellant to connect the payment with para. 6, not of the solenama, but of the original award, under which a sum of Rs. 1,000 was payable to her as monthly interest on a portion of the cash deposit standing in her name. There is, however, the same difficulty as before: if we hold that these two payments of Rs. 2,500 and Rs. 1,000 were made under the original award, they should both have been towards the Chaitra kist of Rs. 4,000 mentioned in para. 5 of the award. It is nobody's case that she received any further payments in the eight days' interval between these two. There is a further difficulty in that the total monthly instalment on account of interest under para. 6 of the original award was not Rs. 1,000 but Rs. 1,170 (see, for example, para. 7 of the plaintiff's execution petition, Ex. A, in Execution Case No. 230 of 1936). In our opinion, the payment can only be explained on the footing that they were made under the solenama; they thus furnish additional evidence that the solenama was being acted upon by both parties at this time.

Another important piece of evidence which goes to show that the plaintiff-appellant was aware of the solenama is the petition that was filed on her behalf in Execution Case No. 230 of 1936. This petition, Ex. A, was filed in the Subordinate Judge's Court on September 19, 1936, and purported to be for the execution of the decree of January 21, 1934. Paragraph 11 of the petition sets out the mode in which the assistance of the Court was sought:

"The judgment-debtor having failed to execute the sale deed and do other acts in accordance with the terms of settlement arrived at in the former execution case, the said settlement has stood cancelled and there has been cause for execution of decree."

It is clear, therefore, that if this petition was filed with the knowledge of the plaintiff, it completely disproves the case which she now seeks to make out that she was not aware of the solenama until some time in January 1937. That the petition was filed with her knowledge has been established by the evidence produced. Dharam Chand, brother of the plaintiff and a witness on her side (P. W. No. 4), has admitted that it was according to her instructions that he asked her Advocate Kali Krishna Banerji to file the execution case. The contents of the petition were verified by Dharam Chand himself, who, by an affidavit, filed in Court on the same date, (September 19, 1936), stated that he is a brother of the plaintiff lady and, having knowledge of and being fully conversant with the facts, was a fit person to verify the execution petition. The petition bears the signature of the plaintiff's admitted Advocate, Kali Krishna Banerji, who accepted the vakalatnama from Dharam Chand, Ex. K (1). These facts prove that both the plaintiff and her brother, Dharam Chand, were fully aware of the solenama. The execution petition of September 19, 1936, proceeded on the basis that the sale deed stipulated in the solenama not having been executed, the original decree of January 1924 became liable to be executed in full. In answer to this, on December 18, 1936, the defendant's Pleader served a notice upon the plaintiff's Pleader drawing his attention to certain documents. Amongst these documents were the notice sent to the plaintiff by registered post on March 29, 1934, and her acknowledgment of the notice dated March 31, 1934. As the result, on February 3, 1937, the petitioner withdrew the Execution Case (No. 230 of 1930) alleging that the entries in the "prayer" column thereof had not been according to her instructions and were due to her Pleader's inadvertence. The circumstances in which the execution petition was filed have already been detailed and we have no doubt whatever that there was inadvertence at all.

Against this mass of evidence in favour of the defendant-respondent's version there is only one circumstance of any importance that needs consideration. It has been contended that the terms of the solenama are so one-sided and unfavourable to the plaintiff-appellant that she cannot possibly have consented to them. Now, it is perfectly true that by the solenama she relinquished a good deal that was due to her under the original award: not only did she give up her claim to a good portion of the arrears but she also gave up her claim to the recurring monthly interest of Rs. 1,170 due to her under para 6 of the award. But we have to consider the circumstances under which the relinquishment took place. Admittedly, payments under the original award were greatly in arrear. Clearly, therefore, the defendant was finding it difficult to make these payments. His business was deteriorating. The parties were related as mother and son. Even after the relinquishment, she would still be entitled to get Rs. 13,000 per year, which is sufficient for a widow to live in comfort. In these circumstances it does not seem to us at all unnatural that upon the son's importunity she agreed to give up her claim to the recurring interest and also to a portion of the past arrears. The rather peculiar transaction by which, in return for the wiping out of the past arrears, the defendant was to execute a conveyance in favour of the plaintiff in respect of the family dwelling house and certain adjoining lands which she was to lease back to him simultaneously, has also been explained by the defendant in his evidence. It was really a device to prevent prospective creditors seizing the properties: had he remained their owner, creditors could have had them attached and sold in execution, but if he became a mere lessee with no powers of alienation and with no power to his creditors to put them to sale in execution, they might be saved. The double transfer provided for in the solenama had, therefore, the merit not only of giving the plaintiff something, however nominal, for her relinquishment of certain arrear payments, but also of serving at the same time to protect the dwelling house and lands in question from being sold in execution of the prospective debts of a dwindling business, to the ultimate detriment of the defendant's children. We must also remember that the solenama specifically provided for the appointment of a Receiver in the event of the defendant defaulting in the payment of the new instalments: this was clearly a term to the advantage of the plaintiff and a term which did not occur in the original award.

Considering the solenama as a whole, we find nothing in its provisions which cannot be explained as the natural result of the circumstances of the time and the relationship between the parties; there is nothing in them to indicate fraud. We find on the evidence that the execution of the document was preceded by direct negotiations between the plaintiff herself and the defendant, that the plaintiff caused the terms which were agreed between them to be reduced to writing in the form of a note or draft, and that the solenama was prepared with reference to and in accordance with the terms of this note or draft. It follows that in our view the transaction embodied in the solenama was "the free and intelligent act" of the plaintiff, so as to satisfy the criterion laid down by the Privy Council in Farid-un-nisa v. Mukhtar Ahmad (1). It is, therefore, binding upon her although doubtless at the instance of certain interested parties, she is now seeking to repudiate it. We have no hesitation in finding in favour of the defendant-respondent on Issues Nos. 6 and 7. Before turning to Issue No. 8, we ought to say a few words about the power-of-attorney, dated April 26, 1933, purporting to have been executed by the plaintiff in favour of Soubhagya Chand. In view of our findings on Issues Nos. 6 and 7 and particularly of the finding that the solenama embodied the result of direct negotiations between the plaintiff herself and the defendant, it is strictly speaking immaterial whether power-of-attorney by which Soubhagya Chand signed the solenama on her behalf was good or bad. Nevertheless, since the issue has been raised, we think it necessary to record our decision on the point. The learned Subordinate Judge has, after considering the evidence very fully, come to the conclusion that the plaintiff executed the power-of-attorney in favour of Soubhagya Chand with full knowledge and understanding of the terms and that there was no deception upon her in that connection. This finding, so far as it negatives fraud, has not been challenged before us during the hearing of the appeal. Indeed, as we have already pointed out, according to the plaintiff herself, "the good terms" between Soubhagya Chand and the defendant began only about a year before 1937, so that the power-of-attorney of April 1933, could not have been the result of any collusion between them. It is not necessary to repeat the grounds upon which the Subordinate Judge has arrived at his finding on this part of the case; we think it is sufficient to state that we accept that finding.

It was, however, contended before us on behalf of the plaintiff-appellant that the Subordinate Judge was wrong in admitting, as evidence of the contents of the power-of-attorney in question, Ex. G which purports to be a true copy of an entry in the register of powers-of-attorney kept in the Registration Office. We consider that the copy was properly admitted. The register of powers-of-attorney is maintained by the Registering Officer under certain rules made by the Inspector-General of Registration under s. 69, Registration Act, 1908. Every entry in that register is therefore "a public document" within the meaning of s. 74 (1) (iii), Evi. Act. being "a document forming the act or record of the act" of an executive public officer in the discharge of a statutory duty imposed upon him. It follows that a true copy of the entry (which by virtue of s. 76, Evi. Act, is a certified copy within the meaning of s. 63 (1)) is admissible as proof of the original entry by virtue of s. 65 (e), Evi. Act. How far the original entry itself is good evidence of the contents of the power-of-attorney is a slightly different question. It is undoubtedly relevant under s. 35, Evi. Act. The weight to be attached to the entry depends upon the accuracy of the abstract of the power which appears to be the sixth column of the entry. According to this abstract the power was a general power-of-attorney authorizing the agent, inter alia

"to adjust, compromise and submit any account, debts, claims, demands and disputes touching any matters which now subsist or may arise between the principal and Nirmal Kumar Singh Nawalakha;"

also

"to abandon or compromise any suit, action or proceedings if the attorney thinks, necessary; to appoint advocates, attorneys, vakils, solicitors pleaders, muktears revenue agents" and so forth. This abstract is as already mentioned made by the Sub-Registrar in the discharge of his official duty and we think that the Court is entitled to presume its correctness in accordance with the usual presumption that official acts are regularly performed. We have therefore no doubt that Ex. G was properly admitted and properly given full weight. The original power, it may be remarked, was called for by the defendant from the plaintiff, but was not produced, presumably because it was not with her: even so, secondary evidence is admissible under s. 65 (e), Evi. Act. It follows that even if we had not found (as in fact we have) that the terms of the solenama were discussed and agreed with the plaintiff direct, the execution of the solenama by Soubhagya Chand on the strength of his power-of-attorney would have been sufficient to make its terms binding upon his principal. We have already had occasion to point out that there is no basis for the suggestion that Soubhagya Chand had been bribed by the defendant;

We now turn to Issue No 8: "Was the adjustment improperly recorded? Is the order of recording the adjustment ultra vires and invalid?" To decide this question we must revert for a moment to the terms of the solenama. On the date on which the solenama was filed in Court (February 24, 1934) the plaintiff-appellant had a claim under the original decree of January, 1934, to the following sums immediate or prospective: (a) Past arrears up to Chaitra 1340 B. S., Rs. 70,700; (b) Future payments: (i) Rs. 13,000 per year in four instalments out of the income of certain landed properties, (ii) Rs. 1,170 per month as interest on certain deposits. By virtue of the solenama, (a) was discharged by on immediate payment of Rs. 10,000, a prospective payment of another Rs. 15,000 in certain instalments during the next three years and subject to certain conditions the conveyance of certain lands to the plaintiff; (b) (i) was left intact except that the instalments were made monthly and provision was made for the appointment of a Receiver in the event of continuous default; (b) (ii) was remitted until the happening of a specified but uncertain event, viz., an auction sale for arrears of revenue or rent. It is clear therefore that the solenama had the effect of extinguishing in part the plaintiff's claim under the original decree and to that extent it was in our opinion an "adjustment" of the decree within the meaning of O. XXI, r. 2 (1). But even otherwise the matter appears to us to be covered by the decision of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in the recent case in Oudh Commercial Bank, Ltd.

v. Thakurain Bind Basni Kuer (2). In that case their Lordships pointed out (p. 510*, loc cit) that the Civil P. O.

"contains no general restriction of the parties' liberty of contract with reference to their rights and obligations under the decree and that if they do contract upon terms which have reference to and affect the execution, discharge, or satisfaction of the decree, the provisions of s. 47 involve that questions relating to such terms may fall to be determined by the executing Court"

They further observed (p. 511* loc cit), that if an agreement is "intended to govern the liability of the debtor under the decree and to have effect upon the time or manner of its enforcement, it is a matter to be dealt with under s. 47."

The result is that even if the solenama in the present case is held not to have been an "adjustment" within O. XXI, r. 2 (1), nevertheless, being an agreement "intended to govern the liability of the debtor under the decree and to have effect upon the time and manner of its enforcement," it was a matter to be dealt with under s. 47. Therefore, the learned Subordinate Judge was justified in placing it on the record of the original decree and in disposing of Execution Case No. 73 of 1933 on the basis of its provisions. We accordingly decide this issue against the plaintiff-appellant. In the result this appeal is dismissed with costs.

Appeal No. 50 of 1937 (F. M. A.) and Appeal No. 141 of 1937 (F. M. A.)—These appeals which are connected with Appeal No. 82 of 1938 are not pressed. They are accordingly dismissed with costs.

Criminal Appeal No. 619 of 1939

AKBAR HUSAIN KHAN—APPELLANT

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 476-B, 195 (3)—Special Judge making complaint under s. 476 for offence committed in case under U. P. Encumbered Estates Act—Appeal from such order—Forum.

Where a person commits perjury in the Court of a Special Judge in a case under the U. P. Encumbered Estates Act and the Judge makes a complaint against him under s. 476, Criminal P. O., the Special Judge acts only as a Civil Court [irrespective of the fact that the Court is further invested with special powers under the Encumbered Estates Act. The Special Judge is primarily Civil Judge and if he takes any action under s. 476, Criminal P. O., in an ordinary civil case, whatever its valuation, his order would be appealable to the District Judge and not to the High Court.

Or. A. from the order of the Special Judge, Mirzapur, dated July 8, 1939.

Mr. M. A. Aziz, for the Appellant.

Judgment.—This is an appeal under s. 476-B, Criminal P. O. It appears that the appellant, Akbar Husain, gave evidence in the Court of the Special Judge, First Grade, Mirzapur, in a case under the Encumbered Estates Act. The learned Special Judge came to the conclusion that the appellant had committed perjury and has accordingly made a complaint against him under s. 476, Criminal P. O. It is obvious to my mind that in taking action under s. 476, Criminal P. O., the learned Special Judge has acted only as a Civil Court irrespective of the fact that the Court is further invested with special powers under the Encumbered Estates Act. The learned Special Judge is primarily Civil Judge of Mirzapur and if he takes any action under s. 476, Criminal P. O., in an ordinary civil case, whatever its valuation, his order would be appealable to the District Judge and not to this Court. Section 476-B clearly provides that a person against whom a complaint has been made

"may appeal to the Court to which such former Court is subordinate within the meaning of s. 195, sub-s. (3)."

Section 195, sub-s. (3) provides that

"where appeals lie to more than one Court, the Appellate Court of inferior jurisdiction shall be the Court to which such Court shall be deemed to be subordinate."

From these provisions of law it is clear in my judgment, that any order passed by the Civil Judge of Mirzapur under s. 476, Criminal P. O., making a complaint for an offence against any person would be appealable to the District Judge and not to this Court. The question therefore is whether the fact that the order appealed from in the present case has been made in connection with a case under the Encumbered Estates Act takes it out of the purview of the above provisions of law. In my view the answer is in the negative. The learned Special Judge in making a complaint under s. 476, Criminal P. O., has not passed an order under the Encumbered Estates Act which would be appealable to this Court under s. 45 of that Act. It is merely an order under s. 476, Criminal P. O., by a Civil Court and the question of the forum of appeal from that order has to be decided in the light of the provisions of s. 476-B read with s. 195, Criminal P. O. In accordance with those provisions the appeal would lie, as stated above, in the Court of the District Judge and not in this Court. I therefore hold that this appeal does not lie in this Court and accordingly order that it should be returned for presentation to the proper Court.

B.

Hindu Law—Suit by karta on pro-note—Plea of repayment urged by executors, not proved—Form of decree.

In a suit on a pro-note by the karta of a joint Hindu family when the alleged partition or separation between him and other members and the plea of repayment urged by the executors of the pro-note are not proved, all that is necessary is to declare that a decree is given to the plaintiff as karta of the joint family. It is wrong to add that as the other members had pleaded that the executors of the pro-note, had repaid the money, therefore they were not entitled to any share in the amount due on the pro-note because there is no share in the amount arising or anything else.

C. R. for the revision of the decree of the Senior Sub-Judge, Amritsar, dated November 8, 1938.

Mr. Hans Raj Mehta, for the Petitioners.

Mr. Shamair Chand, for the Respondents.

Order.—The plaintiff in this case alleging that he alone was joint with his father and his nephews had been separated by the plaintiff's father from the joint family, brought his suit against the defendants on a pro-note. The nephews who were made parties to the suit denied the alleged separation. The obligees under the pro-note pleaded payment and raised other pleas which do not concern us now. The trial Court held that the alleged partition was not proved and to an oral request that the plaintiff was anyhow entitled to a decree as karta of the joint Hindu family if his alleged separation was not proved, the trial Court held that it would be dangerous to grant this decree which was no part of the plaintiff's original case. It therefore dismissed the plaintiff's suit. On appeal, the learned Appellate Court held that the alleged partition or separation was not proved but as the plaintiff was the karta of the joint Hindu family which in the absence of proof of separation must be presumed to exist, it granted the plaintiff a decree holding that the plea of re-payment urged by the executants of the pro-note was not proved. It added, however, a sentence that as defendants Nos. 3 and 4, namely the nephews of the plaintiff, had pleaded that the defendants, the executants of the pro-note, had re-paid the money, therefore they were not entitled to any share in the amount due on the pro-note. This sentence is of course incorrect on the findings of the lower Appellate Court. There is no share in the amount arising or anything else. All that is necessary is to declare that a decree is given to the plaintiff as a karta of the joint Hindu family. The decree therefore is varied to this extent only, otherwise the petition for revision is dismissed. No order as to costs.

Decree varied.

KISHNOMAL JESSOMAL—RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 11, Expt. V, O. II, r. 2—Partition suit—Failure to ask for mesne profits from date of suit until delivery of possession—Another suit for recovery of mesne profits, if barred.

Order, II, r. 2, must be read with Expt. V to s. 11, Civil P. O., and the relief claimed under Expt. V to s. 11 is a relief arising from the same cause of action; and the fact that under O. II, r. 4, mesne profits may be claimed in the suit for recovery of immovable property emphasizes the fact that the suit for recovery of immovable property and the suit for mesne profits may arise from two separate causes of action. But the fact that a plaintiff may under O. II, r. 4, join in one suit two causes of action, does not mean that he must necessarily do so, or fall under the bar imposed by O. II, r. 2 and s. 11, Expt. V. Plaintiff may, of course, anticipate in the suit for partition that certain property will fall to his share; he may anticipate that after the final decree, he will not be given delivery of possession and he may in his suit for partition ask for mesne profits from the date of suit until delivery of possession. But if he does not do so, another suit for recovery of mesne profits is not barred.

(Case-law reviewed.)

Misc. A. against the order of the First Class Sub-Judge, Sukkur, dated January 5, 1937.

Mr. Fatehchand Asudamal, for the Appellants.

Mr. Dipchand Chandumal, for the Respondents.

Davis, J. C.—This is an appeal from the judgment of the First Class Subordinate Judge, Sukkur, in which he allowed an appeal from a judgment of the Joint Subordinate Judge at Sukkur, who dismissed the plaintiff's suit for mesne profits, on the ground that he should have asked for mesne profits in the partition suit to which he was a party. The learned trial Judge relied principally on the two cases, one reported in Atmaram Bhaskar v. Parashram Ballal, (1) and the other in Gordhan Lalji v. Bishambar Nath (2) to the effect that in a suit for partition mesne profits could and should be asked for in that same suit; and that if they are not asked for, a second suit will not lie to get them. But both the Bombay case and the Allahabad case have since been overruled by Full Benches of the respective High Courts. In Gangadhar Gopalrao v. Shripad Annarao (3) a Full Bench of the Bombay High Court held that:

"Where in a suit for partition and for possession of lands together with mesne profits, past and future, the decree fails to award the claim to future mesne profits, a second suit to recover mesne profits from the institution of the first suit or the date of the decree till delivery of possession is not barred under s. 11, Expt. 5, Civil P. O. of 1908."

In that judgment the learned Judges, while considering at length the previous Bombay case in Atmaram Bhaskar v. Parashram Ballal (1) held themselves bound in the interpretation of s. 11, Expt. V, Civil P. O., by the preponderance of judicial authority in the interpretation of Expt. III to s. 13, Civil P. O. of 1882, which is in the same terms as Expt. V to s. 11 of the present Civil P. O. Therefore the relief referred to in Expt. III to s. 13, as in Expt. V to s. 11, is the relief arising out of a cause of action accrued at the date of institution of the suit, and such relief would not, for instance, cover future mesne profits in respect of which the cause of action accrued subsequently to the suit. This is the opinion of the Calcutta High Court in Mon Mohan Sirkar v. Secretary of State (4) of the Madras High Court in Ponnammal v. Ramamirida Aiyar (5) and Doraiswami Ayyar v. Subramania Ayyar (6). In Ram Karan Singh v. Nakhhed Ahir (7) the learned Judges differed from a ruling of a Division Bench of their Court in Gordhan Lalji v. Bishambar Nath (2) on which, in this case, the learned trial Judge relied; and they point out that the rule under O. XX, r. 12, Civil P. O., whereby a Court may pass a decree directing an inquiry into future mesne profits is only directory and not mandatory.

It is true, there is a judgment of the Patna High Court which is to the effect that in a suit for partition, the question of mesne profits should also be raised and decided. That case is Nand Kishore Prasad Singh v. Parmeshwar Prasad Singh (8) but the decisions of other High Courts are not in that judgment discussed at any length. In the case before us the plaintiff was not in fact a plaintiff in the partition suit at all but a defendant and did not ask either for mesne profits from the date of suit until the final decree or from the final decree till delivery of possession and the present suit is limited to mesne profits for three years prior to its institution and subsequent to the final decree in the partition suit and this present suit is with regard to the rent of two shops occupied by some of the co-parceners after these had been awarded in the final decree to the plaintiff in the present suit, the present respondent. We do not see how it can be fairly said that he is debarred from bringing this suit. At the date of the institution of the suit, the two shops were not his, nor did he know whether they would be allotted to him, nor did he know that if allotted to him, the defendants would not give vacant possession soon after the date of the final decree. Moreover, the plaintiff in the present suit was not even a plaintiff in the partition suit, though we do not think that this would affect the case or make any difference to the application of the general principle on which the preponderance of judicial authority had decided this question.

The only argument of substance advanced by the learned Advocate for the appellants is that under O. II, r. 2, the plaintiff should have asked in the partition suit for mesne profits and as he did not ask for mesne profits he must be deemed to have relinquished his claim in respect of them; but O. II, r. 2 must be read with Expl. V to s. 11, Civil P. O., and the relief arising under Expl. V to s. 11 is a relief claimed from the same cause of action; and the fact that under O. II, r. 4, mesne profits may be claimed in the suit for recovery of immovable property merely seems to emphasize the fact that the suit for recovery of immovable property and the suit for mesne profits may arise from two separate causes of action. But the fact that a plaintiff may under O. II, r. 4, join in one suit two causes of action, does not, we think, mean that he must necessarily do so, or fall under the bar imposed by O. II, r. 2 and s. 11, Expl. V. Plaintiff may, of course, anticipate in the suit for partition that certain property will fall to his share; he may anticipate that after the final decree he will not be given delivery of possession and he may in his suit for partition ask for mesne profits from the date of suit until delivery of possession. But if he does not do so, we do not think another suit for recovery of mesne profits is barred. We are not here even concerned with a case where mesne profits were claimed in the suit but the decree was silent about them, nor are we even concerned with the case of a plaintiff in a partition suit, though in a partition suit, the defendants are as plaintiffs.

We think, therefore, that the plaintiff is clearly entitled to bring this suit for mesne profits of the two shops allotted to him in partition, though no mesne profits are claimed by him when he was party to the partition suit. We think, therefore, that the judgment of the lower Appellate Court was right and this appeal must be dismissed with costs. Order accordingly.

JAMINI KUMAR DEY—DEFENDANT No. 1,
AND OTHERS—RESPONDENTS*Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), ss. 26-F, 48-H—Pre-emption proceeding against minor, if void—Registration of under-lease without payment of landlord's fees, effect of*

The effect of a decree passed against a minor in a suit in which he is not properly represented is a nullity so far as he is concerned. But to say that the decree is absolutely void and a mere waste piece of paper is to go a good deal further than this. A minor is certainly not bound to treat it as a nullity if he does not desire to do so, and third persons cannot be heard to say that it is void. 72 Ind. Cas. 475 (1) and 18 Ind. Cas. 859 (2), referred to.

There is no real analogy between a decree of a Civil Court and an order passed in the proceedings under s. 26-F, Ben. Ten. Act. The order for pre-emption in no way corresponds to a decree and the section really does nothing more than provide a convenient machinery for giving effect to the claim to pre-empt.

Where the minor purchaser forms a raiyat describes himself in the kobala as a major and the pre-emption proceedings are taken against him by the landlord under s. 26-F, an order obtained thereon is not void.

Under the terms of s. 48-H payment of the landlord's fee is a condition precedent to registration of an under-lease and the defect cannot be cured by a subsequent payment.

A. from the appellate decree of the Sub-Judge, Second Court, Chittagong, dated July 9, 1937.

Mr. Chandra Sekhar Sen, for the Appellants.

Mr. Nripendra Chandra Das, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—This appeal is by the plaintiffs. They instituted the suit in order to recover possession of certain land. Their tenant, one Nishi, the predecessor of defendants Nos. 3 to 6, had a raiyati holding. He sold it to one Chittaranjan De. The plaintiffs thereupon applied for pre-emption under the provisions of s. 26-F, Ben. Ten. Act. The application was allowed and they took delivery of possession through the Court. They were unable, however, to obtain actual possession through the obstruction of defendant No. 1. They accordingly instituted the present suit. Defendant No. 1 contends that he has an under-raiyati which was created previous to the pre-emption. The Munsif gave the plaintiffs a decree, but this decree was reversed by the Subordinate Judge in appeal. Two points arise for decision (1) whether the proceedings by which the plaintiffs exercised their right of pre-emption under s. 26-F, Ben. Ten. Act, were void, (2) whether defendant No. 1 was entitled to resist the plaintiffs' claim for khas possession on the strength of his under-raiyati interest. The defence contention that the pre-emption proceedings were void was based upon the fact that the purchaser Chittaranjan was a minor. He is not a party to the present proceedings. It is therefore impossible for the respondents to succeed on this point unless they can show that the proceedings were void. The argument which found favour with the learned Subordinate Judge was to the effect that proceedings under s. 26-F, Ben. Ten. Act, are analogous to a suit and that an order made by the Court is similar to a decree. From this point of view it was argued that the order of the Court was void just as much as a decree against a minor who is not represented is void. It is to be noted that, if the contention of the defendants succeeds, the minor will certainly have imposed upon him the burden of paying rent and he will be left with property which quite possibly he may not want. Again, supposing there was a sudden slump in land values, it will be open to the plaintiffs to withdraw the money which they paid into Court along with their application for pre-emption. Certainly, it would be rather startling, if the position of the minor could be affected in this way.

The effect of a decree passed against a minor in a suit in which he is not properly represented has been discussed in several cases. In particular, I may refer to the cases in Umapati Samanta v. Sheikh Masitulla (1) and Purna Chandra v. Bejoy Chand (2) to which my attention was particularly drawn during the hearing of the appeal. There can be no doubt that in such a case a minor is not affected by any decree that may be passed against him and that it is a nullity so far as he is concerned. But to say that the decree was absolutely void and a mere waste piece of paper is to go a good deal further than this. A minor is certainly not bound to treat it as a nullity if he does not desire to do so, and third persons cannot be heard to say that it is void. Then in the second place there is no real analogy between a decree of a Civil Court and an order passed in these proceedings.

ings under s. 26-F, Ben. Ten. Act. The order for pre-emption in no way corresponds to a decree and the section really does nothing more than provide a convenient machinery for giving effect to the claim to pre-empt. Under s. 26-C, Ben. Ten. Act, a purchaser is bound to give notice to the registering officer and the notice is then served upon the landlord. The landlord has the right to apply to the Court for the transfer of the holding to him within a certain time of the receipt of the notice. The Court gives notice to the purchaser merely to enable him to claim reimbursement for any payment which he may have made subsequent to his purchase. The landlord is not responsible in any way for the service of any notice. Thus, it will appear (1) that the right to pre-emption does not depend upon any decision by the Court. It flows automatically from the transfer itself; and (2) no duty is cast upon the landlord to give any notice to the purchaser. In the present case the purchaser described himself in the kubala as a major and the Court could only serve the notice in accordance with its terms. I must accordingly respectfully dissent from the view taken by the learned Subordinate Judge that these proceedings were void.

There remains the second question whether defendant No. 1 is entitled to resist the plaintiffs' claim for khas possession on account of his under-rayati lease. As the learned Judge pointed out that lease infringes the terms of s. 48-H, Ben. Ten. Act. On behalf of the respondents, Mr. Das referred to the decisions explaining the meaning of the old section (s. 50) which has now been repealed. Those decisions cannot afford any assistance in the present case. Here there was nothing illegal in the terms of the lease itself. The mistake made was that the landlord's fee was not deposited. The lease therefore ought not to have been registered. Two other points were, however, raised in support of the respondents' claim to retain possession. The lease has actually been registered. Mr. Das expressed his willingness to pay the landlord's fee into Court. The registration was actually affected owing to a misdescription of the lessor's status in the document. As it was made in contravention of the provisions of the law, it has no effect. Under the terms of the section payment of the landlord's fee is a condition precedent to registration and the defect cannot be cured by a subsequent payment. The second point relates to the fact that the plaintiffs have now succeeded to the interest of the respondents' original lessor. It was therefore contended that they cannot be allowed to repudiate the lease without refunding the premium which was paid at the time. Mr. Sen on behalf of the plaintiffs did not contest this. The decree of the lower Appellate Court is accordingly set aside. If within a month from the arrival of the record in the lower Court the plaintiffs pay Rs. 200 into Court, the decree of the Munsif will be restored. Defendant No. 1 will be at liberty to withdraw the money. If such payment is not made, the plaintiffs will get a declaration of their title and a further declaration that they are entitled to receive rent from defendant No. 1. Defendant No. 1 will pay the costs of the plaintiffs in all Courts.

Order accordingly.

A. V. AND SON—RESPONDENTS

Contract—Concluded contract—Burden of proof—Only certain terms settled, while others left open—Whether concluded contract—Option for renewal of contract on terms to be mutually agreed upon—Whether implies that terms of prior contract should be incorporated in new one.

In an action on an alleged contract, the burden of proof is of course, upon the plaintiffs to show that a firm contract has been entered into between the parties and that something more than mere negotiations had taken place. The negotiations and correspondence must be looked at as a whole to see whether the parties to them have concluded a binding contract or not. There is no concluded contract, where only certain terms of the contract were settled and the other terms were left open. Winn v. Bull (1) and Ridgway v. Wharton (2), relied on. [p. 706, cols. 1 & 2.]

Moreover, the fact that a party to the contract has given the other party to it, an option for renewal of the contract on terms which would be mutually agreed upon, does not imply that the terms of the prior contract, or any of them should be incorporated in the new one. The party does not bind itself in any way to renew the contract upon the old terms.

F. A. against the decree of the District Court, Amherst, dated January 30, 1939.

Mr. Clark, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Hay and K. C. Sanyal, for the Respondents.

Roberts, C. J.—The appellants in this case, who were defendants in the Court below, are the agents and distributors of the Indo-Burma Petroleum Co. for the sale of petrol in the district of Moulmein; and the respondents are general merchants carrying on business in petrol and commodities incidental to the motor trade. In 1930, the respondents were appointed sole distributors of the Indo-Burma Petroleum Co.'s petrol in Moulmein by the appellants, and on June 15, 1934, the contract was renewed as from May 1, 1934, for a period of three years, which expired on April 30, 1937. The terms of the contract contained provisions for the payment for petrol supplied, or what is known as "overriding commission," and rent for the petrol godown, and various other stipulations. Paragraphs 6 and 7 of the contract are as follows:

"6. You will remain the sole distributor of I.B. P. petrol in Moulmein and district for a period of three years from May 1, 1934, subject to our holding the I.B. P. Sub-Agency, with the option of renewal of this distributorship for a further period of two years on terms which shall be mutually agreed upon."

7. Should any dispute arise between us, the subject-matter of such dispute shall be referred to the I.B. P. Co., Ltd., Rangoon, whose decision shall be final."

On April 5, 1937, shortly before the expiry of this contract, the appellants wrote a letter to the respondents, in which they state:

"We shall be glad to know as to what arrangement you intend to make for renewal of it (the contract) for another two years for which you have been given option conditionally on certain terms to be mutually agreed upon."

We therefore beg to propose fresh terms by imposing our overriding commission at Rs. 25-15-0 per wagon load of 830 tins of petrol.

An early reply will be much appreciated."

Owing to the absence of the respondents' manager in India, an extension of time up to May 31, 1937, was mutually agreed upon between the parties and on that date the contract came to an end. The plaintiff's action was brought upon an alleged contract of June 1, 1937, whereby they were to be appointed for a further two years on the same terms and conditions as were contained in the old contract and it is said that it was further agreed that a formal agreement to that effect should be executed between the parties as early as possible. The plaintiffs say that without any reasonable cause or excuse, the defendants refused to execute the written agreement and they brought an action for specific performance, or alternatively for damages. The burden of proof was, of course, upon the plaintiffs that a firm contract had been entered into between the parties and that something more than mere negotiations had taken place. The negotiations and correspondence must be looked at as a whole to see whether the parties to them have concluded a binding contract or not. As was said by Jessel, M. R. in Winn v. Bull (1), at p. 30:

"If in the case of a proposed sale or lease of an estate two persons agree to all the terms and say, 'we will have the terms put into form' then all the terms being put into writing and agreed to there is a contract."

If two persons agree in writing that up to a certain point the terms shall be the terms of the contract, but that the minor terms shall be submitted to a solicitor, and shall be such as are approved of by him, then there is no contract, because all the terms have not been settled."

And again it was remarked in Ridgway v. Wharton (2) that the act of sending a paper to a solicitor to have a matter reduced into form affords generally cogent reasons that the parties do not intend to bind themselves till it is reduced to form. And it is quite clear to my mind that the phrase "option for renewal of this distributorship on terms which shall be mutually agreed upon" does not in any way imply that the terms of the prior contract, or any of them, should be incorporated in the new one. The appellants could not, having made such an agreement, have entered into a new contract with third parties for the distributorship, but must first approach the respondents. But they did not bind themselves in any way to renew the distributorship to the respondents upon the old terms. It is quite plain that the respondents were eager to secure a renewal of the contract upon the old terms; and their case is that the moment Valliappa Chettyar, their manager, returned from India, he proceeded at once to Moulmein and there interviewed the appellants, and after some discussion, the contract was renewed for two years. In support of this it is urged that one waggon of petrol was received by the respondents on June 8, and another waggon of petrol on the 12th. I cannot myself find this conclusive of any more than that there was a mutual desire to achieve some continuity and that whilst negotiations were in progress petrol was supplied on an implied promise to be bound by reasonable terms: and it is clear that it was to everyone's interest that Moulmein should not be without supplies of petrol, and the gap during which negotiations took place was bridged by the offer and acceptance of these two consignments.

The appellants' case is that the respondents' manager, Valliappa Chettyar, arrived on June 4, at their office saying that he had been indisposed during the early days of the month: there was a question about the reduction of the overriding commission, and matters were left open till June 8, and, as they were in abeyance on the 8th, the petrol to which I have referred was applied, and, on June 10, the terms of the contract which the appellants proposed to grant were handed to the respondents. These terms contained provisos that there should be no further option for extension at the end of the new term to be granted and that the godown and licence for storing petroleum should be taken and kept in the name of the appellants. The appellants say that Valliappa Chettyar explained that he was insufficiently familiar with English to accept the terms of this offer without further investigation and that he would come back in the evening—if it was all right—to sign the contract. He did not do so but returned on the 15th with a refusal to accept the terms of it. On June 17, the appellants' legal adviser wrote to the respondents stating that up to then they had not come to any terms and that they had by their conduct ceased to be representatives of the appellants and must forthwith furnish accounts of empty tins, tins and cans and make over the godown and licence for the same to the appellants within three days. The respondents did not see fit to answer that letter direct. They were representing their case to the Indo-Burma Petroleum Co. and when they received this letter, they forwarded it to that firm. Their letter to the Indo-Burma Petroleum Co. is also dated June 17. It says that Mr. Jadwet, for the appellants, agreed to renew the agreement for a further term of two years on the same terms as previously, but sets out the documents which they were asked to sign on June 10, and which constitute what the appellants describe as their offer. The respondents, in that letter, asked the Indo-Burma Petroleum Co. to be so good as to try and effect a compromise. The respondents are able to send the Indo-Burma Petroleum Co. copies of Ex. B, which was the offer of June 10, and of Ex. M, which was a memorandum in writing of the terms of the contract which they say they entered into on June 1: Ex. M is dated June 10.

To my mind, insufficient reasons have been given for the respondents being in possession of Ex. B at all, unless it is true that Valliappa Chettyar took it away with him on June 10. His own story is that he never took it away, but saw it in the appellants' office and declined to agree to its terms. He also says that Ex. M was left with the appellants. In order to explain his ability to forward copies to the Indo-Burma Petroleum Co., he says that they were copied in the appellants' office by his own clerk, Xavier. Xavier is not a witness whose story can be accepted without caution as he has twice been in prison for criminal breach of trust. And the account which the respondents give of the interview on June 10, is, to my mind, inconsistent with their story of a firm contract having been arrived at on June 1. It is quite plain from the evidence given on both sides that it was contemplated that a final agreement should be signed at an interview between the parties. If the respondents' story is true, there would be no need for a meeting between them on June 10 at all. No final agreement was ever signed; and I am obliged to hold that the negotiations which were being continued up to and beyond the interview of June 10, were broken off by the refusal of the respondents to accept the new terms under which they were offered the distributorship. When the plaintiff came to give evidence in the box and was cross-examined with regard to Ex. M, he described it as a draft and said that "Jadwet was at liberty to add anything to it except in the matter of the godown lease and the petrol license." On his own showing therefore, it appears to me, that even at that stage the respondents cannot suggest that a firm contract had been arrived at. The version of Mr. Highet, whose evidence was taken on commission, is to the following effect. About June 24, after some discussion, Valliappa Chettyar agreed to renew the agreement on the terms set out by the appellants in the draft dated June 10. The witness told Valliappa Chettyar that the final decision as to renewal rested with Mr. Ebrahim, the manager of the appellants. At that time he says, in evidence, "the dispute had not been left to my company to decide."

The case for the respondents is supported not only by Mr. Xavier but also by Mr. Venkatesan, who was at one time their manager and alleges that he was present on June 1, when an oral agreement was come to. But I am satisfied, upon the evidence given on behalf of the respondents and from the letter in which fresh terms are mentioned and a reference is made to the fact that the option was to be exercised on terms to be mutually agreed upon, that all that happened at the oral interview, whether it took place on June 1 or 4, was that some further meeting would be necessary at which the final terms should be agreed upon. Mr. Hay says that the respondents are justified in raising objection to Ex. B, because it proposed something which had never been arranged before. This depends, to my mind, on the fallacy of going back to the old contract and assuming that, though it had been discharged by efflux of time, some, many, or most, of its terms must necessarily be the terms to be arrived at when a renewal of the distributorship was being arranged. So it is quite clear from the evidence that the negotiations broke down and I cannot accept the view that there was a firm contract on June 1, since it appears to me that the appellants' conduct has been consistent throughout and they explain their position fully in their letter of June 17, to the respondents. They were never anxious to grant a renewal upon precisely the old terms, but the respondents were always anxious to persuade them to do so: having failed, they then turned round and endeavoured to get the best terms they could and to force the appellants to re-open negotiations after their offer of June 10 had been refused.

Something has been said about arbitration in this connection. In my view, the arbitration clause in Ex. A only refers to the submission of disputes between the parties to the contract whilst it lasted. It expired at midnight on May 31. There is no submission to arbitration as to the terms of a new contract to be arranged, although in fact it was the appellants who in these proceedings suggested arbitration; and the respondents, in their written objections, said:

"Plaintiffs beg to submit that the Indo-Burma Petroleum Co., Ltd., being a company, cannot act as arbitrators. Even if it be held that its directors or shareholders should act as arbitrators, it would never be feasible for such directors or shareholders to act as arbitrators."

They themselves brought this suit and in it they rely on the alleged contract of June 1. The learned trial Judge has found upon a consideration of the evidence, that an agreement was reached on June 1, to renew the contract for a further term of two years. But he observes that the plaintiff in his own evidence said that Ex. M was meant to be very brief but that the defendant was at liberty to add to it. It is quite inconsistent with the respondents' case that there should be in existence, nine days after the alleged contract, a document embodying its terms which one of the parties was permitted to alter. For the reasons I have given, I am satisfied that we ought to hold that this was a case which never proceeded further than negotiations. The respondents' grievance has arisen from the fact that they have assumed that the so-called option for renewal given in the earlier contract conferred upon them a right to extend the operation of that contract upon the same terms for the further period: nothing could be further from the truth. This appeal must therefore be allowed, and the suit of the plaintiffs-respondents dismissed with costs in both Courts.

Dunkley, J.—I am in entire agreement with my Lord the Chief Justice and I have very little to add to his reasons for this decision. In my opinion, it is of importance to notice that the option given to the respondents by the letter of June 15, 1934 (Ex. A), was not an option to renew the agreement but an option of renewal of the distributorship. If para. (6) of this letter conferred any right at all on the respondents, it meant at most, as my Lord has said, that at the expiry of the agreed term of three years, before giving the business of distributor to any other person, the appellants must offer it to the respondents and give the respondents an opportunity of coming to terms with them. The appellants carried out their obligation by their letter of April 5, 1937 (Ex. C), in which they made a proposal to the respondents. This proposal was not accepted by the respondents' manager, who entered into negotiations with the appellants, with the result that the appellants modified their proposal as set out in the respondents' manager's letter of April 25 (Ex. D).

Time was asked for on behalf of the respondents to consider this modified proposal and time was granted until May 31 (Ex. E). The proposal was not accepted within the time given. It therefore lapsed. Also, at the same time, the agreement contained in the letter of June 15, 1934, ceased to have any force or effect by efflux of time, and every term of that agreement ceased to be binding on either party. Hence it is idle for the respondents to lay stress as they have done, on para. (7) of this letter and to say that, in view of the letter of June 25, from the Indo-Burma Petroleum Co. to the appellants, the appellants were bound to accept the offer made by the respondents on June 26, to continu-the business of the distributorship on the terms proposed by the appellants on June 10, and contained in the document J. B. The respondents had been given ample time to accept these terms, and the correspondence shows that they had definitely rejected them, at any rate on June 17, if not earlier. Consequently, it was not open to the respondents to accept them on June 26. Moreover, this case, which has been strenuously urged before us, is not the case which is set up in the plaint, which is based on a binding agreement between the parties concluded on June 1. I agree with my Lord that the supplies of petrol made on June 8 and 12, cannot be held to have been made in pursuance of any such agreement, or that they raise any inference as to the existence of any new agreement, and that the true inference is that they were made by the appellants in their own interests for the preservation of the business while negotiations were going on.

To my mind, it is a matter of indifference whether, as the respondents state, negotiations were begun on June 1, or whether, as the appellants state, they were begun on June 4. Negotiations were opened at the beginning of June, and they were entirely fresh negotiations for an entirely new agreement. It may be, as is now urged on behalf of the respondents, that the appellants did not think of the terms which subsequently became the bone of contention between the parties until after these negotiations had opened; but of what importance is that? The appellants were not bound by anything that had been done previously, and it was open to them to suggest new terms. It is plain that at the first interview only the rate of commission was settled and the other terms of the agreement were left open; that is, no concluded contract was made. This is clear from the respondents' letters of June 17 and June 27, to the Indo-Burma Petroleum Co. (Exs. 3 and 6), and their Pleader's letter to the appellant's Pleader of July 2, (Ex. 8) and the evidence of the respondent's managing partner. Referring to the note of the terms acceptable to him (Ex. M), which he alleges that he left with the appellants on June 10, he said in cross-examination: "Jadwet was at liberty to add anything to it, except in the matter of the godown lease and the petrol licence." This disposes of his claim based on a concluded contract of June 1, and therefore his suit was bound to fail.

ALLAHABAD HIGH COURT
Criminal Revision No. 590 of 1939
September 25, 1939

MOHAMMAD ISMAIL, J.

HANS HOTZ AND ANOTHER—APPLICANTS
versus

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY

Electricity Rules (1937), rr. 48 (1), 123—Wires originally fixed on surface subsequently buried in walls—There is alteration in system and breach of r. 48 (1)—Person actually carrying out installation, if guilty under r. 123.

It is not in every case that the prosecution is called upon to prove that a re-wiring has altered the capacity or character of old installation. It is only when there is replacement of lamps, fans, fuses, switches and other component parts of the installation that the alteration in capacity and character have to be examined. This exception, however, will not apply to electrical installation work including additions, alterations, repairs and adjustments of existing installations. Where the wires originally fixed on the surface are subsequently buried in the walls, there is certainly an alteration in the system and not a case of replacement and a breach of r. 48 (1) is committed. Replacement means changing of old wires for new ones.

The person who actually carries out the installation is not guilty of any offence under r. 123, Electricity Rules: it is only the person under whose immediate supervision the work is carried out who is liable to punishment.

Or. R. from the order of the Sessions Judge, Agra, dated July 10, 1939.

Messrs. S. N. Sen, B. S. Darbari and Bishan Sarup Darbari, for the Applicant.

The Deputy Govt. Advocate and Mr. Gopal Behari, for the Crown.

Order.—This is an application in revision directed against an order of the learned Sessions Judge of Agra affirming an order of a Magistrate of the First Class of that district. On November 14, 1938, the Electrical Inspector to Govt. U. P. made a complaint in the Court of the District Magistrate against the applicants Hans Hotz and Kishan Prasad on the ground that the applicants had committed a breach of r. 48 (1), Electricity Rules of 1937. According to the complaint accused No. 1, Mr. Hotz, was of Hotz's family and was seen instructing accused No. 2, Kishan Prasad, in respect of re-wiring of electric installation which Kishan Prasad was seen carrying out in Laurie Hotel. The District Magistrate initiated proceedings against the applicants and made over the case to a

Magistrate subordinate to himself who upon a consideration of the evidence found the offence proved and convicted and sentenced the applicants to a fine of Re. 1 each. The applicants denied the charge and pleaded not guilty. Several questions of law and facts were urged on their behalf in the Courts below but were repelled. In revision, I must accept the finding of the Court below as final. The learned Magistrate in a well-reasoned judgment came to the conclusion that it was certain that Mr. Hotz actually supervised Kishan Mistri when he did the re-wiring in some portion of Laurie Hotel. Upon this finding I have to consider whether the applicants were rightly convicted. The first question urged by learned Counsel for the applicants is that in the present case there is no evidence that the re-wiring had the effect of altering the capacity or the character of the electrical installation. According to the learned Counsel it is not permissible to convict an accused person for breach of r. 48 (1) unless it is affirmatively established that the new installation has had the aforesaid effect. In my opinion, it is not in every case that the prosecution is called upon to prove that a re-wiring has altered the capacity or character of old installation. It is only when there is replacement of lamps, fans, fuses, switches and other component parts of the installation that the alteration in capacity and character have to be examined. This exception, however, will not apply to electrical installation work including additions, alterations, repairs and adjustments of existing installations. It appears from the evidence which has not been controverted that the old system of wiring has been changed. The wires originally were fixed on the surface and now they are buried in the walls. This is certainly an alteration in the system and not a case of replacement. By replacement I would understand that the old wires were changed for new ones. In my opinion the Courts below have come to a correct conclusion that the applicants have committed a breach of r. 48 (1). The next question to be determined is whether the applicants are guilty under r. 123 for breach of r. 48. The above rule provides that "where any electrical installation work specified in r. 48 has been carried out otherwise than . . . the consumer or owner, the contractor, (if any) through whom the work was carried out and the person under whose immediate supervision it was carried out shall each be punishable . . ."

The question is whether the applicant committed the breach of the above rule. Mr. Hans Hotz is merely a beneficiary while the trustees of Hotz's trust are different individuals who are not before me. Under these circumstances it would be difficult to describe Mr. Hans Hotz as a owner or consumer. The learned Magistrate has found that the re-wiring was done under the instructions of Mr. Hotz. The evidence produced on behalf of the prosecution proves that Mr. Hotz gave instructions to Kishan Prasad who carried out the re-wiring. In view of this finding it must be held that the installation was carried out under the immediate supervision of Mr. Hotz and therefore he will be guilty under r. 123 Electricity Rules. With regard to Kishan Mistri it has been held that he is an employee of the hotel and he carried out the re-wiring under the instruction and supervision of Mr. Hotz. The action attributed to Kishan Prasad, namely the re-wiring does not appear to me to be punishable under s. 123. The person who actually carried out the installation is not guilty of an offence under r. 123, Electricity Rules; it is only the person under whose immediate supervision the work is carried out that is liable to punishment. On the finding arrived at by the learned Magistrate and according to my reading of the rules I consider Kishan Prasad to be entitled to an acquittal. The learned Magistrate very properly has taken a very lenient view of the offence. Mr. Hotz is not a licensed contractor but is a qualified engineer and is in every way capable of supervising installation work, but under the rule unless a person is licensed he is not entitled to carry on installation work either as supervisor or as a contractor. Mr. Hotz has been sentenced to a fine of only Re. 1. It seems to me unnecessary to inflict any fine under the circumstances of the case. In my opinion the case can be adequately dealt with under s. 3, United Province First Offenders Probation Act. It appears that Mr. Hotz was trained as an engineer in England. It is not suggested that the wiring carried on under his supervision was in any way defective. Having regard to the nature of the offence and the character and antecedents of the offender while upholding the conviction, I set aside the sentence imposed upon Mr. Hans Hotz and release him on admonition. I hope that he will in future comply with the rules framed for the guidance of persons who are engaged in the supply of electrical energy and in the allied trades. I set aside the conviction and sentence passed upon Kishan Prasad and direct that the fines, if paid, be refunded.

s. Order accordingly.

A pro-note had a clause that payment should be made in Delhi. The plaintiff sued for the amount due on the pro-note at Delhi. The defendant resided in U. P. The Judge returned the plaint because s. 7, U. P. Agriculturists' Relief Act (U. P. Act XXVII of 1934), said that every suit for recovering an unsecured loan in which the defendant was an agriculturist should be instituted and tried in a Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the agriculturist defendant resided:

Held, that according to s. 107 (1) of the Govt. of India Act, if any provision of a Provincial Law is repugnant to any provision of a Federal Law which the Federal Legislature is competent to enact, or to any provision of an existing Indian Law, then the Federal Law or the existing Indian Law, shall prevail and the Provincial Law shall, to the extent of the repugnancy, be void. In Delhi the Courts are governed by s. 20 (c), Civil P. O., and the local law of the U. P. was void to the extent of the repugnancy. 121 Ind. Cas. 403 (1), relied on.

Held, also that the bringing of such a suit in Delhi contrary to the provisions of the U. P. Act was not illegal within the meaning of s. 23, Contract Act.

O. R. for revision of the order of the Additional Judge, Small Cause Court, Delhi, dated December 14, 1938.

Mr. Bishan Narain, for the Petitioner.

Order.—This is a petition for revision of an order of the Additional Judge, Small Cause Court, Delhi, returning the plaint. The plaintiff, who belongs to Delhi, is engaged in the business, inter alia, of letting out agricultural implements and machinery on hire. The plaint sets forth that he let out to the defendant Seth Ram Lal Baldeo Parshad of Lakhimpur District Kheri (United Provinces), a Persian wheel and a sugar-press on hire. The defendant did not pay the hire and on November 18, 1936, executed a pro-note for the amount due together with interest. The pro-note had a clause that payment should be made in Delhi. The plaintiff sued for Rs. 73-1-9 due on the basis of the agreement and the pro-note. The Additional Judge returned the plaint because s. 7, U. P. Agriculturists' Relief Act (U. P. Act XXVII of 1934), lays down that every suit for recovering an unsecured loan in which the defendant is an agriculturist shall be instituted and tried in a Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the agriculturist defendant resides. The learned Additional Judge also held that the provision about the payment of the pro-note in Delhi was unlawful as, contrary to the same section. The plaintiff has come here in revision through Mr. Bishan Narain. The defendant, although served by notice on the open door, is not present or represented, and the hearing of this revision is ex parte.

Mr. Bishan Narain's point is that the United Provinces Legislature has no jurisdiction and its Act has no force beyond the limits of these Provinces. But for the Act the Delhi Court would have jurisdiction under s. 20 (c), Civil P. O., and Mr. Bishan Narain urges that under s. 80-A, Govt. of India Act, 1919, which was in force when the U. P. Act in question was passed, or under s. 107 (1), Govt. of India Act, 1935, now in force, the local Legislature of a province has power to legislate only within the limits of that province. Section 80-A of the Act of 1919 simply empowers the local Legislature of any province to make laws for the territories constituting that province. Section 107 (1) of the present Act lays down that if any provision of a Provincial Law is repugnant to any provision of a Federal Law which the Federal Legislature is competent to enact, or to any provision of an existing Indian Law, then the Federal Law or the existing Indian Law, shall prevail and the Provincial Law shall, to the extent of the repugnancy, be void. In Delhi the Courts are governed by s. 20 (c) Civil P. O., and the local law of the United Provinces is void to the extent of the repugnancy Chhatoo Lal Misser & Co. v. Narain Das Baijnath Prasad (1), is a ruling of the Calcutta High Court of the year 1928 which laid down in reference to the U. P. Court of Wards Act

"the local Legislature has no jurisdiction to legislate save for its own provinces and the Act does not purport to extend beyond those provinces.... In my opinion, this Act, like the Acts of many other local Legislatures, dealing with the local Courts of Wards, can have no effect beyond the jurisdiction of its own Legislature."

(1) 56 O 704; 121 Ind. Cas 403; A I R 1930 Cal. 53; Ind. Rul. (1930) Cal. 115.

As to s. 23, Contract Act, the only illegal object is to bring a suit in Delhi contrary to the provisions of U. P. Act. This is not illegal and the point therefore fails. I therefore accept this revision and direct that the Court of Small Causes, Delhi, accept this plaint and proceed therewith in accordance with law. The costs of this revision are to be borne by the respondent.

—RESPONDENT

Companies Act (VII of 1913), s. 30—In order to give rise to liability to pay up value of shares, express allotment of shares to subscriber is necessary.

Although in the case of a person who subscribes to the memorandum of association, no separate application for shares is necessary, yet an express allotment of shares to subscriber is necessary, in order to give rise to a liability to pay up the value of the shares. The liability to pay up the value of the shares does not arise where there has been no valid allotment of shares to the subscriber.

O. R. P. to revise the decree of the Sub-Judge, Tinnevely, dated December 1, 1937.

Messrs. V. T. Rangaswamy Ayyangar and K. Venkateswaran, for the Petitioner.

Messrs. R. S. Srinivasacharya and K. V. Rajagopalan, for the Respondent.

Order.—In my opinion the dismissal of the suit by the learned Subordinate Judge was correct. The defendant subscribed for 20 shares in the memorandum of association and therefore by s. 30, sub-s. (1), Companies Act, he must be deemed to have agreed to become a member of the company and on registration of the company, his name must be entered as a member in the register of members. The fatal defect, in my opinion, in the plaintiff's case is that the 20 shares for which the defendant subscribed were not validly allotted to him. It is no doubt true, as Mr. Rangaswami Ayyangar for the petitioner contends, that in the case of a person who subscribes to the memorandum of association, no separate application for shares is necessary, but I find nowhere any authority for the view that no express allotment of shares is necessary, in order to give rise to a liability to pay up the value of the shares. The learned Advocate for the petitioner refers me to Resolution No. 9 passed on December 21, 1936. That runs as follows:

"This meeting allots hereby the 517 shares subscribed for by the signatories and the names of the signatories may be entered in the register of members."

Mr. Rangaswami Ayyangar also refers to the prospectus which was published later in which there is a statement on p. 1 that 517 shares to the value of Rs. 12,925 have already been subscribed for by the signatories to the memorandum and allotted, and on pp. 6 and 7 of the prospectus, the number of shares taken by each of the signatories to the memorandum is set out. These, however, are not sufficient to show that on December 21, 1936, there was any "allotment" of shares to the defendant. It is provided in s. 28, sub-s. (2), Companies Act, that each share in a company having a share capital shall be distinguished by its appropriate number and by s. 31, sub-s. (1), every company is required to keep a register of members in which the following particulars are to be entered:

"(1) The names and addresses and the occupations, if any, of the members, in the case of a company having a share capital, a statement of the shares held by each member, distinguishing each by its number, and of the amount paid or agreed to be considered as paid on the shares of each member."

Now, it appears from the notice sent to the defendant by the plaintiff on March 8, 1937, informing him that his shares had been forfeited, that the shares of which he was registered as owner were shares numbered from 121 to 140. But the learned Counsel for the petitioner is not able to show me any resolution in the Minutes Book of the Board of Directors allotting shares numbered 121 to 140 to the defendant. I have looked through the book and there is no record of any such resolution. It is not necessary, in my opinion, to go so far as the learned Subordinate Judge has gone and to say that the defendant's liability to pay for the shares cannot arise till liquidation proceedings are started. But, it is, in my opinion, clear that his liability has not yet arisen, because the shares have not been validly allotted to him, and consequently no valid notice of allotment has been given to him. It is not necessary to consider the allegation that the defendant's shares have been forfeited. I do not understand the plaintiff as having contended that the defendant's liability to pay the value of the shares arises on forfeiture. The dismissal of the suit was, in my opinion, correct and therefore this petition is dismissed with costs.

MUNICIPAL COMMITTEE, AMRITSAR—

DECREE-HOLDER—RESPONDENT

Contract Act (IX of 1872), ss. 19, 20—Suit for possession by Municipality decreed with costs—Judgment-debtor's offer not to file appeal and also to deliver possession, if Municipality gave up costs, accepted—Judgment-debtor found not to have right of appeal—Agreement held either void under s. 20 or voidable under s. 19.

Municipal Committee instituted a suit for possession of certain property which was alleged to have been encroached upon by one R. The suit was decreed with costs. The judgment-debtor R thereafter applied to the Municipal Committee to the effect that if the Committee gave up the costs, he would not file any appeal from the decree and also deliver possession of the property. The Committee accepted this offer. The Committee on re-examination of the matter found that as a matter of fact R had no right to appeal at the time when he made the offer:

Held, that even if the judgment-debtor made the offer honestly believing that he had a right of appeal, it would amount to saying that both the parties were under a mistake of fact essential to the agreement when they were alleged to have entered into the agreement in question; because the Committee would never have agreed to give up their costs if they knew that R's right of appeal had already become time-barred. If, on the other hand, R had made a dishonest misrepresentation, the agreement would be voidable at the instance of the Committee on that account. In either aspect of the case, the agreement would be voidable or void under s. 19 or s. 20, Contract Act.

S.A. from an order of the Senior Sub-judge, Amritsar, dated November 10, 1938.

Mr. Yashpal Gandhi, for the Appellant.

Mr. Shamair Chand, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—The facts giving rise to this second appeal may be briefly stated as follows:—The Municipal Committee of Amritsar instituted a suit for possession of certain property which was alleged to have been encroached upon by one Ram Rattan. The suit was decreed with costs, which amounted to Rs. 230. The judgment-debtor Ram Rattan thereafter applied to the Municipal Committee to the effect that if the Committee gave up the costs, he would not file any appeal from the decree and also deliver possession of the property. The Committee accepted this offer but it appears that possession was not delivered voluntarily and the Committee had to take out execution in order to obtain possession of the property. Subsequently it was also discovered that the Committee had no right to accept the offer of Ram Rattan inasmuch as it involved remission of a sum exceeding Rs. 100 by the Municipal Committee and therefore required sanction of the Commissioner. The Committee then re-examined the matter and found that as a matter of fact Ram Rattan had no right to appeal at the time when he made the offer to the Municipal Committee. They, therefore, cancelled their previous resolution on the ground that it had been passed under a misrepresentation of facts and also because the judgment-debtor had not carried out his part of the Contract, namely delivery of possession. The Committee then proceeded to take out execution as regards costs when Ram Rattan pleaded the agreement to give up costs as a bar to the execution proceedings. The Courts below, however, held that the Committee was entitled to take out execution. From this decision this second appeal has been preferred. One of the issues in the case was:

"Whether the judgment-debtor delivered possession of the property to the decree-holder in accordance with the compromise, if not, what is its effect?"

The learned Senior Subordinate Judge has found that the appellant Ram Rattan had failed to deliver possession of the property to the decree-holder in accordance with the terms of the compromise and on this finding of fact alone it seems to me that the Committee would have a right to execute the decree in respect of the costs. The learned Counsel for the appellant has argued that as a matter of fact Ram Rattan had always been willing to deliver possession and that he made several applications to the Committee but no such application has been proved on the record. It seems to me unlikely that if any such application had been made the Municipal Committee would have taken the trouble to take out execution. The appeal is thus concluded by a finding of fact.

There is, moreover, another aspect of the matter. The Courts below have held that Ram Rattan's right to appeal had become barred at the time when he made his application to the Municipal Committee offering to give up possession and not to file an appeal if the Committee gave up costs. The fact that the right of appeal had become barred on the date of the application is not disputed before me. The only point that the learned Counsel for the appellant urged was that there is nothing to show that Ram Rattan made any misrepresentation in this respect and that possibly, he being a layman was not acquainted with the law and honestly believed that he still had the right to appeal. But even if this position is accepted, it would amount to saying that both the parties were under a mistake of fact essential to the agreement when they are alleged to have entered into the agreement in question; because it seems clear enough that the Committee would never have agreed to give up their costs if they knew that Ram Rattan's right of appeal had already become time-barred. If on the other hand, Ram Rattan had made a dishonest misrepresentation, the agreement would be voidable at the instance of the Committee on that account. In either aspect of the case, the agreement would be voidable or void under s. 19 or s. 20, Contract Act. On the above finding it is unnecessary to discuss any other point. I dismiss the appeal with costs.

Landlord and tenant—Ejectment—Held on facts that the plaintiffs were entitled to declaration of title and confirmation of possession through tenants who could not be ejected—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Arts. 142, 144—Applicability of Art. 142—Terms "discontinued" and "dispossessed"—Held, on facts that no question of discontinuance of possession arose and that the suit was governed by Art. 144—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 42—Decree granting additional rent owing to increase of land by re-formation whether evidence against persons not parties to suit, regarding time when re-formed land became fit for possession—Alluvion and diluvion—Re-formation—Rent assessed—Evidentiary value—Survey—Survey line over big river—Presumption—Survey of small area—Star observations, necessity of—Landlord and tenant—Non-occupancy ryot holding under person bona fide claiming title—Rightful owner establishing title, whether can eject ryot—Words and phrases—"Jote," meaning of.

Article 142, Lim. Act, applies if the plaintiff has sued on the footing that while in possession he was dispossessed by the defendant, or if the fact he established that while in possession he was dispossessed by the defendant. The word "discontinued" in Art. 142 connotes three elements, two physical and one mental. There must be (1) actual withdrawal, (2) with an intention to abandon, and (3) that another should step in, begin to occupy after the withdrawal. Dispossession signifies expulsion, an adverse act which has the effect of putting out. It presupposes physical contact, a collision, either with another person or with his physical acts. The physical presence on the property of the person affected is not necessary but the adverse act of the other party must have the quality of destruction. Acts of possession of the former must be effaced by the latter. [p. 722, col. 2.]

Where a person is not in physical possession either himself or through some one else holding under him at any time after the re-formation of the land and he does not exercise any acts of possession but through a fiction of law he is in possession of the lands, till the lands are actually fit for possession and he is not turned out either physically or by adverse acts of another, no question of discontinuance arises and a suit by such person for establishing his title to and for recovery of possession of such re-formed land would come within Art. 144, and not Art. 142 and the opposite party must prove adverse possession for 12 years or over before suit.

The right obtained by adverse possession for more than 12 years would be co-extensive with the assertion of the claimant. [p. 723, cols. 1.]

Government claimed certain lands which were re-formed in 1916 and since then were in possession of the Govt.'s tenants. In 1923 Govt. acknowledged the title of the plaintiffs to these lands on condition that the tenants, would remain on land till 1930. A document for consideration in plaintiffs' favour was executed but it was not stamped as conveyance. It conveyed to the plaintiffs whatever rights the Govt. had in the land. In 1925 the Plaintiffs instituted a suit against the tenants for establishing their title to and for recovery of possession of the re-formed lands:

Held, that the acknowledgment by Govt. could not deprive tenants of their rights acquired under limitation, the tenants could not, therefore, be turned out. But the tenants could not get a declaration that the plaintiffs' title was not subsisting on the date of the suit. The plaintiffs were entitled to a declaration of title to the lands through the tenants who were regarded as their tenants on the date of the suit. Hemendra Nath Mukherjee v. Kumar Nath Roy (2), referred to.

The recitals and findings in judgment passed in a suit for additional rent on the ground that land in the holding has increased by accretion, are no evidence against persons who are not parties to that suit. But the fact that such decrees were passed by which additional rent was imposed is evidence as regards the time from which such re-formed land became fit for possession. [p. 718, col. 2.]

The fact that rent was assessed on re-formed land would be very strong, almost conclusive evidence, to support the case that the land had become fit for possession when it was so assessed.

It is a fundamental principle that a survey line cannot be taken over a big river without taking offsets with theodolite from points on the river bank. That in such cases such method is used is to be presumed. [p. 717, col. 2.]

When the place to be surveyed is comparatively small in area, star observations are not necessary.

If a non-occupancy ryot bona fide holds under a person who bona fide claims to be entitled to the land, he cannot be ejected by the rightful owner who had established his rights against the person bona fide claiming title. Bindalal Pakrashi v. Kale Pramanik (1), and 31 Ind. Cas. 789 (9), relied on. [p 725, col. 1.]

The word 'jote' by itself is an ambiguous word, which may mean a tenure or a holding.

A. from the original decree of the Sub-Judge, Third Court, Comilla, dated December 1, 1934.

Messrs. Gunada Charan Sen, Upendra Kumar Roy and Ajit Kumar Dutta, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Ramaprosad Mukherjee, Abdul Quasem and Nani Gopal Das, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—This appeal is on behalf of defendants Nos. 2 and 7 to 10 in a suit for establishment of title and recovery of possession. The plaintiffs are 32 in number. Plaintiffs Nos. 1 to 31 claim title on the basis of a patni taluk granted to their predecessor-in-interest, Bibi Manjura Banoo by the 13 annas proprietors of Touzi No. 22 of the Tippera Collectorate in the year 1880. The patni kabuliati is Ex. 28, an extract from which is printed at II-181. It included village Sovarampore, alias Jitram-pore. Plaintiff No. 32 is the proprietor of the remaining 3 annas share of the said estate. The plaintiffs' case is that the lands in suit which are described in three schedules, A, B and C, annexed to the plaint are re-formations in situ of their village Sovarampore, on the other side, namely the eastern side, of the river Meghna, which at the time of the thac and revenue survey, formed the eastern boundary of their village, but which since then has shifted its course far to the west. According to them the lands in suit began to rise above water from 10 or 12 years before the suit which was filed on September 15, 1925, and the lands of Schs. A, B and C became fit for possession at different times. In the plaint they do not state precisely when the lands of Sch. A became so fit, but in respect of the lands of Schs. B and C the statement is that they "formed and became fit for cultivation 7 or 8 years before the suit." The contesting defendants claim the lands in suit as re-formations in situ of or accretions to the Govt. Khas Mehal Estate Char Maricha Kandi, Touzi No. 2717 of the Tippera Collectorate. Nos. 7-10 claim under a taluka settlement from the Govt.

that is, they set up the claim to hold them as permanent tenure-holders under the Govt. under Ex. 21 (II-158). Defendant No. 2 claims that Schs. A and C and a good part of the lands of Sch. B falls within his occupancy holding held under defendants Nos. 7 to 10. The other defendants do not appear. The contesting defendants set up an alternative case (para. 38 of the written statement of defendants Nos. 7 to 10), that if the lands in suit or any portion thereof do not form a part of Govt. Estate Char Maricha Kandi, they were in the bed of the navigable river Meghna at the time of the thac and revenue survey and they are accordingly the Crown lands of the Govt. In that case they say the plaintiffs are to be defeated on the plea of jus tertii.

In the written statement there is no assertion that no part of Sovarampore was included in Bibi Manjura Banoo's patni, but the statement is that plaintiffs Nos. 1-31 did not purchase the patni, at least they got no title to the said village by their purchase. They say that the lands of Sch. A had formed and had become fit for possession before 1900 and were being possessed by their predecessors since then through their tenants, and that the lands of Schs. B and C had formed and had become fit for possession long before 1910 and were being similarly possessed since they became so fit. They accordingly say that the plaintiffs' suit is barred by time; at any rate their title, if any, has been extinguished by their adverse possession. There is a special defence of defendant No. 2 contained in para. 15 of his written statement. It is that as he has been bona fide holding the lands in ryoti right he cannot in any case be ejected. This defence is founded on the principle laid down in Bindalal Pakrashi v. Kale Pramanik (1).

For the purpose of determining whether the lands in suit form part of Mouza Sovarampore, a Civil Court Commissioner was appointed to relay the relevant maps. He relayed them and reported that all the lands in suit fell within the plaintiffs' village Sovarampore. His map is map No. 1 in part II of the map volumes. In his map he has shown the position of the river Meghna as it was at the time of the thac and revenue survey. It is just to the east of the lands in suit. The Subordinate Judge accepted the Commissioner's finding and found that the plaintiffs have title to all the lands. He further found that 326 bighas (1) 20,0 708 (F B).

15 cottas forming the western part of Sch. B had re-formed after 1916. He gave the plaintiffs khas possession of this area. He further held that the lands of Schs. A and C and the remaining portion of Sch. B had become fit for cultivation within 12 years of the suit and the whole of A and C and a good portion of B was included in the ryot jote of defendant No. 2, possibly of defendants Nos. 2 and 3, on the footing that defendant No. 3 was a co-sharer of defendant No. 2. In respect of these portions his decree is that defendants Nos. 7 to 10 are not entitled to retain them but that defendant No. 2 cannot be turned out. He accordingly gave the plaintiffs possession of those lands through defendant No. 2. With regard to the remaining portion of Sch. B, i.e. the southern portion to the south of Dag No. 192 which he held was not within the jote of defendant No. 2, he also gave the plaintiffs a decree for khas possession.

Defendants Nos. 2 and 7 to 10 have preferred this appeal. The plaintiffs have filed a memorandum of cross-objections in which they attack that portion of the decree passed by the Subordinate Judge by which they have been given possession through defendant No. 2. They also raise questions about costs. The points urged in the appeal are : (i) that the putni of 1880 only covered so much of the lands of Sovarampore as was then above water, (ii) that plaintiffs Nos. 1 to 31 did not purchase Sovarampore as the Court auction held in 1898, (iii) that the disputed lands are not re-formations in situ of Sovarampore, (iv) that the lands in suit had formed and had become fit for possession beyond 12 years of the suit and were being possessed by the defendants since they became so fit, (v) that Art. 142, Lim. Act, is applicable and the plaintiffs' suit is barred by time. If, however, Art. 144 be held to be the Article applicable, the defendants have acquired title by adverse possession, (vi) that in any case the plaintiffs cannot evict defendants Nos. 7 to 10 but can only get fair rent from them in a properly constituted suit. The points raised on the cross-objections are: (i) that defendant No. 2 is not a ryot but a tenure-holder and the plaintiffs are entitled to turn him out also, (ii) that the plaintiffs ought to get full costs of the Court below against defendants Nos. 7-10, and (iii) at any rate the costs of hiring the theodolite ought to be paid to the plaintiffs.

We will first deal with the points raised in the appeal. The first two points affect only plaintiffs Nos. 1 to 31 but not No. 32.

We do not see any substance in them. An extract from the patni kabuliati which is the counter part of the patni potta (Ex. 23 not printed) has been printed at p. 121, Part II. From it, it appears that the whole village Sovarampore was included in the patni granted to Bibi Manjura Banoo. The grantors did not retain, or reserve their right to retain, in khas any portion of the said mouza above or under water. In execution of a decree obtained by one Srish Chandra Das for his share of the patni mulikana against Bibi Manjura Banoo his patni interest was sold and purchased by Nawab Asanulla Bahadur, the predecessor-in-interest of plaintiffs Nos. 1 to 31. The sale certificate (Ex. 8, II. 133) shows clearly that the patni taluk which the judgment debtor held under the 13 annas proprietors was sold. In mentioning the villages included in the patni taluk village Sovarampore was omitted but that does not in any way advance the defendants' contention. The patni taluk was sold and purchased by the said Nawab and he got whatever was included in the patni taluk by the patni grant of 1880. We accordingly overrule both these points on the afore-said reasons and on the other reasons given by the Subordinate Judge which it is not necessary to repeat and with which we fully concur.

The third point relates to the relaying work of the Commissioner. It is admitted before us by both the parties that the plaintiffs' claim must succeed or fail according as the lands in suit are covered or not by the revenue survey map of Sovarampore (exhibited but not printed) prepared in the year 1861-62. There was some argument on behalf of the defendants in the lower Court that the state of things shown at the time of revenue survey cannot be presumed to be what was at the time of the permanent settlement, that is to say, that Sovarampore as depicted in the revenue survey map cannot be taken to be included in Estate No. 22 at the time of the permanent settlement. But that argument is not repeated before us by the appellants' Advocate, who does not challenge the conclusions of the Subordinate Judge on this part of the case. This map was relaid on the locality by the Commissioner who found that the whole of the disputed lands fell within the boundaries of Sovarampore as depicted in the revenue survey map. The Commissioner in his report says that he used a theodolite in making the survey. The appellants' Advocate asks us to reject the Commissioner's work as faulty on the following three grounds: (i) that the plotting was unreliable as the Commissioner in his report admits that the theodolite supplied to him was defective, (ii) that as he could not with the instrument take any star observation, his work is unreliable, (iii) that at any rate the revenue survey line was plotted correctly up to the western bank of the present river, i. e. up to the letter "n" but no offsets were taken and the theodolite was not used for the purpose of fixing a station on the other bank of the river. This argument comes to this: that station "c" was not correctly placed by the Commissioner. Hence from the station "c" onwards the work is unreliable and accordingly the eastern boundary of Sovarampore as shown in the revenue survey map has not been correctly relaid on the locale. We cannot give effect to any of these contentions.

It appears from his report as also from the evidence of the Commissioner that owing to a defect in the instrument (a defect in the vernier screw on the vertical disc of the instrument) the vertical readings, i. e. the readings on the vertical disc of the theodolite could not be taken. The result was that the theodolite could not be used for observing the pole star. But the vernier for the reading on the horizontal disc of the theodolite was all right, with the result that the angular measurements on the horizontal plane could be and were taken by that theodolite. This was quite sufficient for the survey in hand after the Commissioner had checked his work with the small bends of the small chaks at the south western part of Sovarampore which had not undergone any change with time. The place to be surveyed was comparatively small in area, and in the survey of such an area, star observations are not necessary. At p. 225 of Thuilier and Smith's Manual of Surveying (Edition 3) it is pointed out that astronomical observations are not absolutely necessary. We do not, therefore, see any substance in the first two contentions.

With regard to the third, the position stands thus. To Mohim Ohandra Das, the plaintiffs' inspector of survey, who attended the field work of the Commissioner, the defendants put some questions in cross-examination for obtaining information as to how the Commissioner did his work in the field. One of such questions was whether in going over from the western to the eastern bank of the Meghna river the Commissioner took offsets with the theodolite from points on the western bank. He gave an affirmative answer. When the Commissioner was later on examined, the defendants dropped the matter. It is a fundamental principle that a survey line cannot be taken over a big river without taking offsets and we do not see why the Commissioner should have omitted to proceed accordingly. No suggestion is made to the Commissioner and there are no materials on which we can say that the point "c" had been wrongly located and the revenue survey boundary of Sovarampore from that point had been incorrectly relaid. In 1916 the Settlement Officers relaid the eastern revenue survey boundary of the said village (called the demarcation line in the Commissioner index to the map-index No. 6). The eastern boundary of that village is only material to the suit and it is pertinent to observe that the Commissioner's relay of the eastern boundary line of the revenue survey map has followed very closely that demarcation line. We accordingly hold that there are no grounds for rejecting the Commissioner's work and the lands in suit fall within Sovarampore as has been found by the Court below. There is no force in the suggestion made by the appellants' Advocate that a part of the lands in suit may be covered by a village Baishazari. No such plan was taken in the written statement. There are, no doubt, indications in old papers that there was another village Baishazari near Sovarampore. Whether it was immediately to the east of Sovarampore, the evidence is not certain. If it was, then it was in the bed of the river Meghna at the time of the revenue survey, for the revenue survey maps of Sovarampore and Ohar Maricha Kandi show that only the river was in between. The revenue survey river as has been shown in the case map is beyond and to the east of the suit lands. In fact one of the documents on which Mr. Sen relied for supporting his argument on this point would indicate that Baishazari was a part of Ohar Jaikalipore (Exs. 24, II. 99) which is shown in the case map far to the east of the disputed land.

The question of fact raised in the fourth point is a very important one in the case and on this point there is a mass of conflicting oral evidence on which, we consider, it would not be safe to proceed. There are, however, important documentary evidences from which reasonable inferences can be made. This part of the case, as also the questions of law which are indicated in the remaining points, have been argued with fullness and with remarkable ability both by the acting senior Govt. Pleader and by Mr. Sen, the leading Advocate for the appellants and we acknowledge the great help rendered to us by them. Before we enter into details, it is necessary for us to notice the respective cases of the parties relating to the three different Schs. A, B and C. For convenience of reference we would divide Sch. B into two parts, call the western portion of it with an area of 326 bighas 15 cottas, for which the Subordinate Judge has given the plaintiffs khas possession, as B (1) and the rest of Sch. B, i. e. the eastern part, as B (2). Likewise we would call the south-western part of Sch. C covered by settlement Dags Nos. 1 to 15 as C (2) and the rest of it as C (1). In the plaint the plaintiffs state that Sch. A re-formed on the east of river ten or twelve years before suit. They do not state when it became fit for possession. There is a negative statement that in 1900 it was not so fit and that rent on the sale was falsely assessed in 1900 when the Govt. granted an ijara for 30 years of Char Maricha Kandi to the defendants' predecessors, Rahim Bux, Jaha Bux and Apseruddi. Regarding Schs. B and C their case in the plaint is that they re-formed on the east of the river and became fit for possession 7 or 8 years before suit. The case of the contesting defendants is that the Sch. A lands were re-formed in about 1897, and became fit for possession before 1900. In 1900 the Govt. assessed it with rent and settled it with other lands as lands of Char Maricha Kandi in taluki right with their aforesaid predecessors. With regard to Schs. B and C, their case is that they re-formed and became fit for possession and were being possessed by their predecessors from about 1903.

Regarding Sch. A land and what we have called B (1) and C (1) there is not much difficulty. It is admitted in the plaint that in 1900 Govt. took the assets of Sch. A land into consideration in arriving at the ijara rent which was to be paid to it by Jaha Bux, Rahim Bux and Apseruddi under the kabuliat Ex. 21 (II-158) and that Rs. 51-1-3 represented the amount of rent payable to the Govt. for it (plaint para. 10). This fact is also borne out by documentary evidence, one of the documents being a document on which the plaintiffs rely in support of another part of their case (Ex. 1-A, II-198). The fact that rent was assessed on it in 1900 would be very strong, almost conclusive evidence to support the case that the land had become fit for possession and was being possessed by Jaha Bux and others from 1900. To counteract that inference the plaintiffs state in paras. 4 and 5 of their plaint that in 1900 the said lands were under shallow water and at that time the predecessors of defendants Nos. 1 to 14 in collusion with their tenants in expectation of future gain and for showing their possession of the same as part and parcel of Char Maricha Kandi caused the same to be measured and included within the said Govt. Khas Mehal Estate. In one of the recitals in Ex. 1-A which the Govt. executed in favour of the plaintiffs on September 27, 1923, a similar statement is made. This explanation of the plaintiffs appears to us to be unsubstantial and the recitals in Ex. 1-A not to be in accord with facts. It is the case of both parties that before the demarcation proceedings of 1916, neither the plaintiffs nor the defendants' predecessors knew for certain, and in 1900 none of them had reason to believe, that Sch. A was a part of Sovarampore. It is a narrow and long strip of land only about 60 bighas in area being the extreme eastern portion of the lands in suit, bordering on the Govt. estate. We do not see why in this state of facts Jaha Bux and his co-sharers would in 1900 by their own act take upon themselves the burden of paying to Govt. every year an additional sum of Rs. 51 odd as rent with no immediate prospect or any prospect, if the plaintiffs' case about the time of re-formation of the land be true, within a reasonable time of getting any profit out of it. The plaintiffs' statement in the plaint that these lands re-formed only between 1913 to 1915 is palpably an untrue one, seeing that in the notice which they served on the Govt. under s. 80, Civil P. O. in 1918, which was in respect of the whole of Sch. A and at least of a good part of Schs. B and C they stated that the re-formation was in 1909 and lands were fit for possession before January 1910 (Ex. A, II-188). In para. 2 of Ex. 39 (II-184) a letter from the Director of Land Records to the Collector of Tippera dated February 23, 1916, there is a statement that these lands had formed and were in the possession of the Govt., obviously through their ijara-dars, the defendants' predecessors, since 1897 when the survey on the basis of which Ex. 21 (II-158) was executed commenced,

The lands mentioned in that paragraph refer obviously to Sch. A lands. We have no hesitation in holding that the lands of Sch. A had re-formed on the east of the river Meghna about the year 1897 and had become fit for possession and were being possessed by the defendants' predecessors at least from 1800.

The evidence is equally clear that B (1) had come above water after 1914. In the year 1913 Jaha Bux and others brought two suits against their tenants for increase of rent for increase in area of their holdings by reason of lands being added thereto by accretion. An Amin, Gouri Kamal Bhattacharyya, was appointed for local investigation. He prepared a map [Ex. Z (1) Map No. 10] and submitted a report in 1914 [Ex. Z-1 (1) II-54]. He has been examined as a witness and has proved his report and map. In his map he showed three strips of land within the rectangle A B C D as the accreted lands in those two suits. In the map and also in his report he showed that the river Meghna was to the immediate west of the line A. B. This line A B has been relaid on the case map and its elongation is practically the eastern boundary of what we have called B (1). The proceedings in those suits have an important bearing on the question of the time of the re-formation of B (2) which we will discuss hereafter. In 1916 the District Settlement and Survey under Ch. X, Ben. Ten. Act, which had commenced in 1913 was made final. The District Settlement map has also been relaid on the case map and the settlement Dags. over B (2) but not B (1). The learned subordinate Judge has found that B (1) re-formed after 1916 and I see no ground for disturbing that finding. The whole of Sch. O land had come above water at the time of the said District Settlement and Survey but in the Record of Rights which was finally published in 1916 Dags Nos. 10 to 18, i. e., O (1) is recorded as Sandy Char. Ex. Z (D) II. 80 at 81-82. We hold that B (1) and O (1) had not become fit for possession before 1916.

We will now take up the question as to when B (2) and O (2) became fit for possession. That they became so fit in 1916 and were being possessed by the contesting defendants from that year admits of no doubt. In the finally published Record of Rights, in which a statutory presumption of correctness attaches under s. 103 (B), Ben. Ten. Act, these are shown as naal lands, cultivated lands, in the possession of the tenants of the defendants' predecessors, Rahim Bux and others. The Settlement Khatians are printed in Part II from pp. 71 to 90. The one-sided evidence is that the survey of the fields began in the early part of 1913, the Kistwar and the Khanapuri were finished in April-May 1913 (Bysack 1320 B. S.) and the Bujharat in November 1913 (Agrahayan 1320) D. W. No. 1, p. 174, l. 23 to 25 and p. 176, l. 25. The attestation takes place after the Bujharat. In the report of the Assistant Superintendent of Survey [Ex. 39 (A) II 182] it is stated that at the Khanapuri and attestation "present possession was followed." From this it is evident that what are stated in the different entries in the finally published Record of Rights (II, 71 to 90) were based on what the Settlement Officers found on the spot at the Khanapuri in April-May 1913. It would accordingly be a sound inference of fact to hold that B (2) and O (2) had become fit for possession and were being possessed by the tenants of Rahim Bux and his co-sharers at least from April-May 1913 (Bysack 1320) and the case of the plaintiffs that they were formed and had become fit for possession seven or eight years before suit is a false one.

The documentary evidence and the probabilities of the case would further indicate that they had re-formed and had become fit for possession at least at the end of the year 1909. The notice of suit (II, 18c) that was served on the Govt. in 1918 describes the lands in two Schedules. The western boundary of Sch. (1) is the river Meghna as it was in 1918. The evidence is that the river is gradually receding to the west. The lands which had been found to exist at the District Settlement, if not some more lands which had accreted to the west since 1916, were accordingly the subject of the notice. Paragraphs 6 and 11 of the said notice contain unequivocal admissions of the plaintiffs that the lands of Schs. 1 and 2 of that notice had become fit for possession in 1909. A portion of para. 6 has not been correctly translated. We have looked into the original and both the learned Advocates are agreed that the passage at para. 6, l. 3 of p. 192 ought to run thus: "As a matter of fact the said lands having re-formed in the eastern part of disputed land No. . . ."

During the District Survey and Settlement proceedings which we have stated commenced in the early part of 1913 the plaintiffs' agents came on the disputed lands and attempted to foment trouble. They succeeded for a time in setting up the tenants of the Govt. ijaradars Jaha Bux and others against the latter. This led to criminal proceedings under s. 107, Criminal P. C. The Kanango's report and the Police report are exhibits in the case [Ex. X and Ex. X (2) only extracts have been printed at II. 179 and II. 180 but the whole was typed for us]. From the said reports it is quite evident that the plaintiffs' agents were moving and inciting the actual occupiers against the Govt. ijaradars in the interest of their principals. Their object was to win over the occupants to the side of their principals and with their help and concurrence to have them recorded in the settlement proceedings as tenants of their principals. They, however, ultimately failed, for the occupants made up with the said ijaradars and the finally published Record of Rights recorded the occupants as tenants of those ijaradars. These proceedings lead to the inference that the lands had for some time past been cultivated and possessed by those occupants and the plaintiffs' agents attempted, though unsuccessfully, to consolidate their principals' position in the settlement proceedings by having the actual occupants recorded as their tenants. We have already noticed that in the year 1913 the ijaradars instituted two suits against their tenants for increase of rent on the ground that the area of their holdings had increased by reason of accretions, and in those suits Gouri Kamal Bhattacharyya was appointed Amin for local investigation. Map No. 10 is his map. The accreted portions are there shown as three long coloured strips. In his report, Ex. Z 1 (1)—(II, 54) he gives details about the condition of the different portions of the said three strips which have been marked by separate alphabets and states that the whole had become fit for possession in 1910. The judgment passed in those suits is Ex. Z B. 4—II. 59 and decrees are also exhibits in the case. One of them has been printed. It is Ex. Z C (30)—II. (62). They show that a very substantial additional rent was imposed with effect from 1910. In one case rent was increased from Rs. 14 to Rs. 59, an enhancement of Rs. 45. These suits being not inter partes, the recitals and findings in the judgment are not evidence against the plaintiffs but the fact that such decrees were passed by which additional rent was imposed from 1910 is evidence. The report of Gouri Kamal is also evidence, he having been examined as a witness. It is, therefore, proved that the lands of the two holdings shown in Gouri Kamal's map which fall within B (2) became fit for possession in 1910 and were from that time being possessed by the ijaradar's tenants. There is evidence that the formation of the whole of B (2) was at about the same time and the condition of the whole of the said portion of the Char at a particular period of time was practically the same. Having regard to this evidence and the other evidence which we have already noticed, we think it would be a sound inference to hold that the said land, B (2), had become fit for possession towards the end of 1899 or the beginning of 1910 and was being possessed from that time by the Govt. ijaradars through their tenants. The same remarks apply to O (2) for similar reasons.

Mr. Sen wants to go further. He contends that B (2) and O (2) had become fit for possession and were in the possession of the ijaradars' tenants at least from 1906 or so. To support this contention he has relied upon some counterfoil receipts produced by his clients (II. 165, etc.), some rent decrees (II. 51) and some registered kabuliats (II. 115, etc.). No attempt was made by his clients to relay the kabuliat lands in the locality and there is no reliable evidence to connect the said kabuliats, counterfoil receipts and decrees with the suit lands B (2) or O (2). They may as well relate to the Sch. A lands or lands further east which are undoubtedly the lands of Char Maricha Kandi. Reviewing the evidence as a whole we have come to the following conclusions: (1) The lands of Sch. A had re-formed in 1899 and had become fit for possession from at least 1900. They were in the possession from that year of the predecessors-in-interest of the contesting defendants Nos. 7 to 10 through their tenants, (2) the lands (B) (1) had re-formed after 1914 and had not become fit for possession before 1916, (3) the lands of O (1) had re-formed before 1913 but had not become fit for possession before 1916, (4) the lands of B (2) and O (2) had re-formed and had become fit for possession towards the end of the year 1909 or the beginning of the year 1910 and were from that time being possessed by the contesting defendants Nos. 7 to 10's predecessors through their tenants.

On these findings the contesting defendants Nos. 7 to 10 cannot resist the plaintiffs' claim for possession to B (1) and O (1), as the suit was filed in September 1925. No portion of B (1) falls within the tenancy of defendant No. 2. The plaintiffs are accordingly entitled to khas possession thereof. We accordingly confirm the Subordinate Judge's decree giving the plaintiffs khas possession to 326 bighas 15 cottas of land as defined in his decree. The finding that O (1) is included in defendant No. 2's tenancy has not been challenged before us, but the finding about the nature of his tenancy has been challenged in the memorandum of cross-objections. We will accordingly deal with the nature of the relief to which the plaintiffs are entitled in respect of the same O (1) when we would be dealing with those cross-objections. The facts bearing on the last two points urged before us in the appeal have now to be stated. During the course of the district Settlement proceedings which began in the year 1913 the lands of Schs. A and O and what we have called B (2) were recorded in the draft record as in the possession of the ijaradars of the Govt. khas mohal estate, Ohar Maricha Kandi. The plaintiffs thereupon took up the position that a good portion of the said lands was their land and prayed for demarcation of the lands of their estate. On their application a demarcation case was started. The Assistant Settlement Officer caused the revenue survey map of Sovarampore to be relaid. As a result of the relay, he found that the lands of Schs. A and O and B (2) to be within the plaintiffs' estate. He accordingly made an order in favour of the plaintiffs on February 22, 1916 (Ex. 39 (A)—II. 182) and caused the demarcation line between the plaintiffs' Estate No. 22 and Govt. estate Maricha Kandi to be depicted on his map. This line has been relaid by the Commissioner in the present case map and it forms the eastern boundary of Sch. A.

Thereafter, there was correspondence between the Director of Land Records and the Collector of Tipperah, the latter representing Govt. interest. A letter of the former dated February 23, 1916, which was in reply to the Collector's letters, is Ex. 39 (printed at p. 184 of Part II). It appears from para. 2 of that letter that the Collector challenged the accuracy of the demarcation line and also set up the claim of the Govt. based on adverse possession. Up to this Govt. denied the plaintiffs' title and this position was maintained by the Govt. for some years. After the plaintiffs had served on the Govt. notice of a suit (Ex. A—II. 188) in 1918, a different attitude, however, was taken by the Govt. In a letter from the Secretary, Board of Revenue, addressed to the Commissioner of the Ohittagong Division dated March 1, 1920, (Ex. 17 (a), II. 195) we find a reference to a previous letter of the Board of Revenue dated June 2, 1919, and the terms of that letter are set out. There the Govt. agreed to acknowledge the title of the plaintiffs to the lands which had been found in the demarcation proceedings of 1916 to belong to Estate No. 22 and to release the same to them with a condition that its ijaradars were to remain in possession till March 1930. It was then desired by the Board of Revenue that the Govt. ijaradars should also join in the compromise. It further appears that thereafter the said ijaradars made a representation to the Board of Revenue to the effect that the plaintiffs should accept them as permanent tenure-holders. This representation was rejected by the Board as would appear from paras. 4 and 5 of Ex. 17 (a) (not printed). The ijaradars ultimately refused to join and on September 27, 1923, the Govt. executed a document in favour of the plaintiffs (Ex. 1-A—II. 195). This document was, however, stamped not as a conveyance. One of the recitals runs as follows:

"And whereas thereafter (e. g. after the notice of suit, Ex. A) the Hon'ble Board of Revenue on behalf of the first party (the Secretary of State for India in Council) sanctioned the release of entire aforesaid land re-formed in situ of Mausā Sovarampore marked as aforesaid A, B and O respectively on the said plan amicably in favour of the second and third parties (the plaintiffs) on condition that the aforesaid lease on March 3, 1903 (the ijara lease in favour of Rahim Bux and others defendants Nos 7 to 10's predecessors-in-interest) shall be considered as comprising the said lands marked A and as good and valid in respect thereof according to its legal effect and purport and so accepted by the second and third parties."

This document proceeded on the footing that the Govt. had proceeded on a mistake, which it acknowledged, in including "A" within the ijara lease given to Rahim Bux and others executed on March 3, 1903, and by its terms the sum of Rs. 51-1-3 was assessed as the proportionate ijara rent in respect thereof. This the plaintiffs agreed to take from the ijaradars till March 31, 1930. The document was supported by consideration, because the plaintiffs gave up their claim to mesne profits against the Govt. Though the document was not stamped as a conveyance by its operative part, it conveyed to the plaintiffs whatever rights the Govt. then had in the lands marked A, B and O in the plan attached thereto. This would pass to the plaintiffs such title as the Govt. then had on the principle formulated in Hemendra Nath Mukherjee v. Kumar Nath Roy (2). If the Govt. had then acquired title by adverse possession, the plaintiffs would, by this transfer, acquire the same, but then they would be bound by the terms of lease given to Rahim Bux and others in 1903, if the Govt. was bound by the said lease. We will consider the legal effect of this document Ex. I-A hereafter. The appellants' contentions are of a two-fold nature. They say that, firstly Art. 142, Lim. Act, applies and the plaintiffs' suit must be dismissed with regard to the lands of Sch. A and what we have called B (2) and C (2), on our finding that the defendants had remained in possession thereof for more than 12 years before the suit. The second contention is, that in any event, the plaintiffs are not entitled to khas possession as against defendants Nos. 7 to 10, who must be considered as their tenants. They further say that what are exactly their rights qua-tenants need not be determined in this suit but must be left over for determination if the plaintiffs later on sue in ejectment on the footing that their rights as tenants have determined.

The first question therefore is whether Art. 142 or Art. 144 applies. It is well settled that Art. 142 applies if the plaintiff has sued on the footing that while in possession he was dispossessed by the defendant, or if the fact be established that while in possession he was dispossessed by the defendant. In the plaint there is no admission which would bring the case within the first category. The plaintiffs were not in physical possession, either themselves or through persons holding under them at any time after their lands had re-formed on the other side of the river. They never exercised acts of possession and they were not turned out, neither physically expelled nor by reason of adverse acts on the part of the defendants, their acts of possession were interfered with and effaced. Through a fiction of law they, the plaintiffs, were in possession till the lands became fit for possession. It may be taken that they were by reason of this fiction in possession right up to the time when the lands became fit for possession but the question is whether they were "dispossessed" or whether they "discontinued" their possession within the meaning of Art. 142 after the lands had re-formed and had become fit for possession e. g. had become cultivable. There cannot be any question of discontinuance of possession on their part. That term connotes three elements, two physical and one mental. There must be (1) actual withdrawal, (2) with an intention to abandon, and (3) that another should step in, begin to occupy after the withdrawal. Dispossession signifies expulsion, an adverse act which has the effect of putting out. It pre-supposes physical contact, a collision, either with another person or with his physical acts. The physical presence on the property of the person affected is not necessary but the adverse act of the other party must have the quality of destruction. Acts of possession of the former must be effaced by the latter. On these concepts it would be difficult to say that the rightful owner, who is only presumed to be in possession, till a Char becomes fit for enjoyment is dispossessed simply because he does not take possession as soon as it becomes so fit, but another person occupies it and begins to till. Such a case would, in our judgment, come within Art. 144 and not Art. 142 and the defendant must prove adverse possession for 12 years or over before suit. This is our reading of the judgment of Lord Sumner in Basanta Kumar Roy v. Secretary of State (3). Art. 144 was applied there not on the ground of seasonal floodings.

The view we are taking finds support in the observation of N. R. Chatterjea and Panton, JJ. in Rakhal Chandra v. Durga Das Samanta (4), at p. 733. In Bhupendra Narayan v. Rajeswar Prasad (5), the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council held that Art. 144 and not Art. 142 was the Article applicable to the case when the defendant took physical possession of minerals by opening and working a mine, a case where the rightful owner was in possession but only on a construction of law right up to the time when the mine was opened and worked. The case in Sures Chandra v. Shiti Kanta (6), cited by the appellants' Advocate, does not touch this point. There was a difference of opinion between Woodroffe, J. and Cuming, J. whose judgments are reported in Sures Chandra v. Shiti Kanta (6). Woodroffe, J. made it clear in the earlier part of his judgment that both parties conceded before the Division Bench that Art. 142 applied. Before the Letters Patent Bench it does not appear that any question was raised as to whether Art. 142 or Art. 144 was the proper Article to apply. The case proceeded throughout in the High Court on the footing that Art. 142 applied. The main question was on whom the burden of proof lay, and if it lay on the plaintiff could he discharge the burden of proving possession within 12 years from the suit by a recourse to the principle grounded on the anxiety of the Courts to come in aid of right and to disfavour wrong which imputes possession to the owner as long as the subject is incapable of enjoyment. Woodroffe, J. answered this in the affirmative after holding that the onus lay on the plaintiff and his view was affirmed by the Letters Patent Bench. That case accordingly does not support the learned Advocate for the appellants, nor does the case in Punchanan Sarkar v. Basanta Kumari (7), on which he placed reliance, a case in which Ouming, J. fell in line with the final decision in Sures Chandra v. Shiti Kanta (8). We hold accordingly that Art. 144, Lim. Act, and not Art. 142 applies in this case.

The right obtained by adverse possession for more than 12 years would be co-extensive with the assertion of the claimant. Defendants Nos. 7 to 10 did not claim in themselves proprietary rights. They claimed only a subordinate right, that of tenants. If the Govt. had not acknowledged, as it did in 1923, the plaintiffs' title the benefit of the possession of defendants No. 7 to 10 would have accrued in favour of the Govt., but after the deed Ex. 1-A of 1923 the Govt. cannot be allowed to turn round and say that the plaintiffs title has been completely extinguished by reason of its tenants remaining in possession for more than 12 years before the suit. The effect of the possession of defendants Nos. 7 to 10 for more than the statutory period was to make the lands so possessed a part of their tenancy. As the statutory period had run out before the Govt. executed Ex. 1-A in favour of the plaintiffs, the lands of Sch. A and portions of Schs. B and C which we have called B-2 and C-2, had become a part of the tenancy of the said defendants, and consequently the subsequent act of the Govt. by executing Ex. 1-A in favour of the plaintiffs cannot deprive the said defendants Nos. 7 to 10 of the benefit which they had already acquired under the statute of limitation. If the Govt. had not acknowledged the plaintiffs' title and if it had not executed in their favour Ex. 1-A, the plaintiffs' title would have been completely extinguished and the Govt. and the defendants Nos. 7 to 10 would between them have become the owners in fee of the said lands. It is the act of the Govt. which has kept alive a portion of the plaintiffs' rights and they, the plaintiffs, accordingly cannot turn out the said defendants whom the Govt. could not turn out at the date of the suit and obtain khas possession of Sch. A and those portions of Schs. B and C indicated above. On the other hand defendants Nos. 7 to 10 cannot take up the position that the plaintiffs cannot even get a declaration of title on the ground that their title was not subsisting at the date of the suit, for the Govt. as their landlord after its relinquishment in favour of the plaintiffs in 1923 was not entitled in law to the benefit of its tenants' encroachment on a neighbour's land.

The correct position in respect of the said lands, accordingly, seems to us to be that the plaintiffs are entitled to get a declaration of their title and to have their possession confirmed in the same through defendants Nos. 7 to 10, the latter being regarded at the date of the suit as their tenants. In the view we have thus taken above, it is not necessary for us to determine the question as to whether the landlord acquires or not title by adverse possession to the encroachments made by his tenant on a neighbour's land as soon as his tenant completes his possession for twelve years. One view may be that he does, and on that view the good title which the Govt. had already acquired before 1923 was conveyed to the plaintiffs, the former owners whose title had been extinguished before 1923, and Ex. 1-A would then be operative to confer a new root of title so far as the plaintiffs were concerned. In this view of the matter they, the plaintiffs, became the representatives-in-interest of the Govt. and so could not take khas possession from defendants Nos. 7 to 10 as long as the latter's tenancy under the Govt. subsisted, and it was certainly subsisting in September, 1925. The other view which has been expressed in Surendra Kumar v. Ahmad Nawab (8), is that the landlord acquires no such right or title during the subsistence of the tenancy but can get the benefit of his tenant's encroachment on another's land only after the determination of the tenancy. We have already said it is not necessary, for the reasons on which we rest our judgment as stated above, to determine this question, but we desire to make it clear that we must not be taken to be in agreement with all that has been said in Surendra Kumar v. Ahmad Nawab (8). The facts of that case were different from the facts we have before us.

The result of our findings is that the plaintiffs are entitled to khas possession of 326 bighas 15 cottas, being the western part of Sch. B, which is the decree of the learned Subordinate Judge. They, the plaintiffs Nos. 1 to 31 and 32, are, however, entitled to have only a declaration of their title as patnidars and zamindars respectively of Estate No. 22 in respect of the lands of Sch. A and also in respect of the rest of Sch. B and in respect of that portion of the lands of Sch. C as is covered by Dags Nos. 1 to 15 of the settlement map. They cannot get a decree for khas possession in the same but are only entitled to be confirmed in possession through defendants Nos. 7 to 10 on the basis that defendants Nos. 7 to 10 were their tenants at the date of the suit. Mr. Mukherjee appearing on behalf of the plaintiffs-respondents has contended before us that the rights of defendants Nos. 7 to 10 to hold the suit lands as tenants under the Govt. had come to an end on March 31, 1930, for the Govt. had granted a new settlement to them for another term of years excluding the lands of Schs. A, B and C. He further says that although the lease Ex. 21 (II. 158) which was for a term of 16 years gave by its terms a right of renewal to the tenants, the said lease was not binding on the Govt. as it was not sanctioned by the Board of Revenue, which was according to him the sanctioning authority in the case. The learned Subordinate Judge has found that the Board of Revenue was the sanctioning authority and no sanction having been given by the latter, the said lease was not binding on the Govt. On this finding he asks us to depart from the usual rule that a suit must be decided in all its stages on the cause of action at its institution and as laid in the plaint, and to give his clients a decree for khas possession on the ground that though the defendants may have occupied the position of tenants at the date of the suit and for about five years more, they have ceased to be so since March 31, 1930. He urges that the renewal clause in Ex. 21 was not binding on the Govt. and so not binding on his clients regarded by reason of Ex. 1-A as the assignee of the Govt.'s rights so far as the lands in suit are concerned. Exhibit 21, had, however, the sanction of the Commissioner of the Division (Ex. Q, II. 97).

In the settlement report, on the basis of which the lease to Jaha Bux and others was given by Ex. 21, the Settlement Officer stated that the Commissioner of the Division was the sanctioning authority [Ex. Z (1) II, 43 at 49]. The rule on the subject then in force is r. 5, Ch. XVI of Part 3 at p. 118 of the Survey and Settlement Manual of 1900. The Board of Revenue is the confirming authority in the case of a permanent settlement and in the case of a regular temporary settlement at an annual revenue of Rs. 25,000 or over. In the case of a temporary regular settlement where the Govt. demand is below the said figure, the Commissioner of the Division is the confirming authority except in some cases where it is the Collector. It is doubtful if Ex. 21 evidences a permanent settlement. It is for a term of years with a right of renewal. It is not necessary to pursue the point further, for we have come to the conclusion that the questions as to whether defendants Nos. 7 to 10 had ceased to be tenants on March 31, 1930, what were and are their precise rights as tenants and what were their precise status ought not to be allowed to be agitated at the appellate stage, and must be left open between the parties in this suit. The finding of the learned Subordinate Judge that Ex. 21 required the sanction of the Board of Revenue and all findings consequent thereon are set aside, the matter being left open. The plaintiffs' suit for khas possession in respect of these portions of the lands in suits [Schs. A and B (2) and C (2)] is dismissed on the footing that at the date of the suit defendants Nos. 7 to 10 had become their tenants. As the plaintiffs cannot in this suit turn on defendants Nos. 7 to 10 from the said lands, the possession of defendant No. 2 who holds the lands of Sch. A, the northern portion of the eastern part of Sch. B and Dags Nos. 1 to 15 of Sch. C as a tenant under defendants Nos. 7 to 10 cannot also be disturbed.

We have already found that neither defendant No. 2, nor defendants Nos. 7 to 10 through the former had been in possession of the rest of Sch. C lands, i. e. of C (1) for 12 years before suit. These lands therefore stand on the same footing as the western 326 bighas 15 cottas of Sch. B, i. e. B (1). But there is this difference that whereas B (1) is not within the tenancy of defendant No. 2, C (1) is. If defendant No. 2 is a ryot and not a tenure-holder, he cannot be ejected by the plaintiffs, for it has been held by the Full Bench in Bindalal Pakrashi v. Kale Pramanik (1), that if a non-occupancy ryot bona fide holds under a trespasser, he cannot be ejected by the rightful owner who had established his rights against the trespasser. In Krishna Nath v. Mohammad Wafiz (9), it has been pointed out that there must be bona fides both on the part of the de facto lessor and the ryot to attract the principle of Bindalal's case (1), which is an encroachment on the general principles of law. Here there cannot be any doubt that there were bona fides on the part of the ijaradars of the Govt. and defendant No. 2 when he went into occupation. The learned Subordinate Judge has held that defendant No. 2 is a ryot and that finding has been challenged in the memorandum of cross-objections. The Record of Rights records him as a tenure-holder [Ex. Z (D)—II, 79] and the area of his tenancy is more than 100 bighas; the presumption is that he is a tenure-holder. The original letting to his predecessors-in-interest was in the year 1846. The area then let out was 80 bighas only. (Exhibit F, II, 22.) He and his predecessors extended their possession as the river receded and these gradual additions must be taken to have been held in the same right under which the original 80 bighas was held. On the construction of Ex. F (II, 22) we hold that a ryoti settlement was concluded and the presumption of the Record of Rights as also the one founded on s. 5, sub-s. (5), Ben. Ten. Act, have been rebutted. The fact that his predecessors had been described as jotedars is not of much help, for the word 'jote' by itself is an ambiguous word, which may mean a tenure or a holding. We accordingly hold that defendant No. 2 is a ryot, and so he cannot be ejected. Two further points have been taken in support of the cross-objections. They are (1) that full costs ought to have been awarded by the Court below to the plaintiffs against defendants Nos. 7 to 10. As we are modifying the decree of the Subordinate Judge, we think that the Subordinate Judge's order giving the plaintiffs half costs against those defendants ought to stand. The other point is a trivial one. The plaintiffs paid the costs of hire of the theodolite. The sum, which is Rs. 114, has not been included in their schedule of costs. The plaintiffs ought to have the same.

The result is that this appeal is allowed in part and the decree of the Subordinate Judge is modified. A self-contained decree will be drawn up in this Court in the following manner, namely, that it is declared that the lands in suit are the lands of village Sovarampore appertaining to Touzi No. 22 of the Tipperah Collectorate and that plaintiffs Nos. 1 to 31 have 13 annas patni interest and plaintiff No. 32 three annas zemindary interest in the same. That the plaintiffs would recover khas possession of 326 bighas 15 cottas out of the lands of Sch. B which lie to the west of the western District Settlement line as depicted in the Commissioner's map by evicting the defendants. That the plaintiffs' possession is confirmed in the lands of Sch. A, the rest of Sch. B and in Dags Nos. 1 to 15 of Sch. C through defendants Nos. 7 to 10 on the footing that they were at the date of the suit the plaintiffs' tenants. That the plaintiffs do recover possession through defendant No. 2 of the rest of the lands of Sch. C by evicting the other defendants. That defendants Nos. 1 to 14 do pay to the plaintiffs half the costs of the Court below, i. e. of half of the costs as appearing at Part I, p. 278 of the paper-book plus the full sum of Rs. 114 with interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum from the lower Court's decree. That the other defendants do bear their respective costs of the Court below. That the plaintiffs will be entitled to get mesne profits from defendants Nos. 7 to 10 in respect of the aforesaid 326 bighas 15 cottas in which the plaintiffs get khas possession, such mesne profits to be assessed in a subsequent proceeding. As the appeal has succeeded substantially but not in full, we direct that the plaintiffs do pay to the defendants-appellants half the costs of this Court. No costs in the cross-objections. Hearing fee assessed at Rs. 300.

U. P. Encumbered Estates Act (XXV of 1934), s. 7 (1) (a) and (b)—Cl. (b), if applies to suits or proceedings remanded by Appellate Court—Cls. (a) and (b) do not apply to suits instituted by landlord.

Clause (b) of s. 7 (1), U. P. Encumbered Estates Act, applies to a suit or other proceeding filed by a party after the passing of an order under s. 6 and does not contemplate suits or proceedings remanded by a Court of Appeal for trial de novo.

Moreover, both the clauses of s. 7 (1) contemplate suits or proceedings against landlords for enforcement of debts due by them and not to suits or proceedings that the landlord themselves are entitled to institute under any law, e. g., suit under s. 33, U. P. Agri Rel. Act. 177 Ind. Cas. 215 (1), relied on.

O. R. App. of the order of the Munsif, Haveli, Lucknow, dated June 3, 1937.

Mr. Ganesh Prasad, for the Applicant.

Mr. M. H. Kidwai, for Opposite Party No 1.

Order.—This is an application under s. 115, Civil P. C. against an order of the learned Munsif Haveli, Lucknow, disallowing the applicant's objection to continuance of a suit in his Court.

On September 14, 1935, Maqbulunnissa, opposite party, and her four sons executed a deed of mortgage in respect of a share in a village in favour of the present applicant and another. On September 28, 1935, she filed a suit in the Court of the Civil Judge under s. 33 of the Agriculturists' Relief Act against the present applicant and the other mortgagee. The valuation of the suit was Rs. 500 only and in view of a notification of this Court amending para. 268 of the Oudh Civil Rules, the plaint was returned by the Civil Judge on February 17, 1936, to be presented to the proper Court. On the next day, that is, February 18, 1936, the suit was filed in the Court of the Munsif, Haveli. It was decreed by the Munsif on August 25, 1936. An appeal against the decree of the learned Munsif was filed by the present applicant on October 15, 1936, and on February 12, 1937, the Appellate Court remanded the case to the trial Court for re-trial after making Maqbulunnissa's sons parties. In the meantime on October 27, 1936, Maqbulunnissa applied under s. 4 of the Encumbered Estates Act, and when the suit was resumed by the learned Munsif, the present applicant contended firstly that s. 33 of the Agriculturists' Relief Act did not apply to mortgage debts, and secondly, that the suit should be stayed under s. 7 of the Encumbered Estates Act. Both these objections were overruled by the learned Munsif. An appeal was filed by the applicant in the Court of the District Judge but the learned Judge held that no appeal lay to his Court. Hence the present application for revision of the learned Munsif's order.

So far as the first contention of the applicant, namely, that s. 33 of the Agriculturists' Relief Act does not apply to mortgage debts is concerned, it is conceded by the learned Counsel for the applicant that this contention cannot prevail in view of the decisions of this Court. The only question, therefore, that is before me is whether or not the learned Munsif was right in holding that the opposite parties' suit under s. 33 of the Agriculturists' Relief Act cannot be stayed on account of the provisions of s. 7 of the Encumbered Estates Act.

I have gone through the order of the learned Munsif and considered the arguments of the learned Counsel for the applicant but am of opinion that the learned Munsif's order is perfectly right. While cl. (a) of s. 7 (1) of the Encumbered Estates Act deals with proceedings pending in any Civil or Revenue Court at the date of the order of the Collector under s. 6, and provides that such proceeding shall be stayed, cl. (b) prohibits the filing of a fresh suit or other proceeding in respect of any debt after the Collector has passed his order under s. 6. In the present case the Collector passed his order under s. 6 on October 27, 1936, but at that time the opposite parties' suit under s. 33 of the Agriculturists' Relief Act was not pending, but had been decided by the learned Munsif and was in appeal before the District Judge but under cl. (a) there is no bar to an appeal being pending in any Court on the date of the Collector's order. Therefore neither cl. (a) nor cl. (b) of s. 7 applies to the present case.

It is argued that as the case had been remanded by the Appellate Court for trial de novo on February 12, 1937, the suit should be deemed to have been filed afresh on that date and should be dealt with under cl. (b). I am unable to accept this argument. Clause (b) of s. 7 (1) appears on the face of it to apply to a suit or other proceeding filed by a party after the passing of an order under s. 6 and does not contemplate in my opinion suits or proceedings remanded by a Court of Appeal.

Moreover, both the clauses of s. 7 (1) appear to me to contemplate suits or proceedings against landlords for enforcement of debts due by them and not to suits or proceedings that the landlords themselves are entitled to institute under any law. I am supported in this view by the case of Chaudhuri Sheo Baran Singh v. Ranbir Prasad, (A. I. R. 1938 All. 477) (1) in which it was held that the proceedings, attachments, processes and suits mentioned in cls. (a) and (b) of s. 7 are proceedings, attachments, processes and suits against the landlord in respect of debts and that the landlord himself is not necessarily under any disability for taking proceedings which he may be entitled to take under the law for the protection of his interest.

The result is that the application fails and is dismissed with costs.

S. Application dismissed.

GRILLE, J.

BARIK AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS NOS. 1 TO 4

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O XXI, rr. 63, 62—Attachment of property in execution of simple money decree—Objection by third person that property was subject to his mortgage—Objection allowed and property sold subject to encumbrance—Fact that property is subsequently released from attachment whether relieves decree-holder of his duty to bring suit within one year—Auction-purchaser knowing fictitious nature of mortgage but keeping silent to get property cheaper—Whether can challenge validity of mortgage in suit by mortgagee—Sale as result of order under r. 63, effect—Distinction between where property is sold subject to mortgage and where notice of alleged mortgage is given in sale proclamation.

The order in objection proceedings that property attached is subject to the mortgage of the objector is conclusive as against the decree-holder unless he brings a suit which would terminate in his favour, within the period of one year. The fact that the property was released from attachment afterwards in no way annuls the duty that lies on him if he wishes to bring the property to sale unencumbered. [p. 729, col. 2.]

When upon attachment of property in execution of a simple money decree, a mortgagee objects to the attachment on the ground that the property was subject to his mortgage and the objection is supported by the judgment-debtor and the property is sold subject to the mortgage, and the auction-purchaser knowing that the mortgage was fictitious keeps silent in the hope of purchasing the property cheaper, he cannot, in a suit brought by the mortgagee, challenge the validity of the mortgage. No equitable considerations can be brought into play in his favour.

The phrase "subject to such mortgage" must mean that what is sold is the equity of redemption and that a distinction is made between an express order directing the property to be sold subject to a mortgage and cases where notice of an alleged mortgage is given in the sale proclamation. In the former case a prospective purchaser is told exactly what he is buying; in the latter he takes a chance that the mortgage which is alleged to exist may prove unenforceable either from inherent defects or possibly because it may have been satisfied by the time of the sale, and the price which the property would fetch would vary considerably according whether the property is definitely stated to be sold subject to an ascertained encumbrance or merely subject to the risk of encumbrances existing. Shib Kunwar Singh v. Sheo Prasad Singh (2), 55 Ind. Cas. 189 (3) and 153 Ind. Cas. 57 (5), relied on. [p. 730, col. 1.]

S. C. A. from the appellate decree of the Court of the Second Additional District Judge, Hoshangabad, dated November 12, 1936.

Mr. V. V. Kelkar, for the Appellant.

Mr. R. S. Dabir, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—The plaintiff-appellant Mishrilal brought a suit for foreclosure on the basis of a mortgage of which he was the transferee. The transfer was made by the mortgagee Tukaram, son of Tanu in the year 1934, and the mortgage was executed in his favour by Barik and his son Tukaram in 1929. In order to avoid confusion, Tukaram, son of Barik, whose interests were identical with those of his father, will not be referred to again. The defendant No. 4 was Umrao who was impleaded as an auction-purchaser of part of the mortgaged property at an auction-sale in execution proceedings as the result of a simple money decree which had been obtained by one Bhabichand against Barik. In those execution proceedings the property was ordered to be sold subject to Tukaram's mortgage; the actual sale took place in 1933. Barik and Tukaram did not resist the plaintiff's claim, but the auction-purchaser Umrao contended that the mortgage in question was bogus, fraudulent and without consideration and made with the intention to defeat the claims of Shabi chand, Barik's creditor, and that all these persons had entered into a conspiracy in order to defeat Bhabichand's claim against Barik.

The principal questions at the trial were whether the mortgage and the subsequent assignment of it to the plaintiff were bogus and fraudulent and whether the auction-purchaser had any right at all (the plaintiff denied that he had such a right) to challenge the mortgage inasmuch as he had in execution proceedings purchased the land subject to the mortgage existing and whether the decision that there was a mortgage was conclusive against him. Both the Courts below have agreed that the mortgage and the assignment were fictitious and they also concur, although for somewhat different reasons, in finding that the auction-purchaser was entitled to challenge the validity of the mortgage. The trial Court dismissed the plaintiff's suit entirely, holding that no suit can be based upon a deed of mortgage which is not genuine and which is fictitious and wholly without consideration. The lower Appellate Court, however, modified this decision by decreeing the plaintiff's claim as against Barik and Tukaram, holding that the transaction was not void but only voidable and that, since Barik and Tukaram had admitted the mortgage, there was no reason why a decree should not be passed against them. The plaintiff's claim, however, was rejected so far as that portion of the mortgaged property which had passed to the auction-purchaser Umrao in Bhabichand's execution proceedings, was concerned, and a date for redemption by them was fixed. In this second appeal by the plaintiff no appearance has been entered on behalf of Barik and Tukaram, and the only contesting respondent is Umrao. I would also note that there has been no cross-appeal against the lower Appellate Court's decision by Barik and Tukaram.

For the proposition that the auction-purchaser Umrao was entitled to challenge the validity of the mortgage in a suit brought by the mortgagee or his representative, the auction-purchaser not being the decree-holder himself, reliance was placed by the trial Court on Dhoka v. R. B. Beharilal (1). This view was not accepted by the lower Appellate Court in the following words:

"It is held by the learned Subordinate Judge that the respondent No. 4 is entitled to challenge the validity of the mortgage on the ground that he is stranger and not a decree-holder himself. This view seems incorrect and I believe the case of Dhoka v. R. B. Beharilal (1) relied upon by the lower Court does not lay down that proposition."

The learned Counsel for the appellant states that he is in agreement with that view and that proposition is not challenged by the learned Counsel for the respondent. The trial Court, considering that it was bound to follow what it considered to be the ruling in Dhoka v. R. B. Beharilal (1), felt itself unable to follow the contentions which had been advanced on behalf of the plaintiff, supported by Shib Kunwar Singh v. Sheo Prasad Singh (2) and Kalidas Chaudhuri v. Prasanna Kumar Das (3) that a purchaser who is not the decree-holder is conclusively bound by an order under O. XXI, r. 62, as the result of which the auction-purchaser is bound by an entry in the sale proclamation declaring that the sale is definitely subject to a mortgage, as opposed to an auction-purchaser's right subsequently to challenge an entry in a sale proclamation under O. XXI, r. 66, which is merely a statement that an encumbrance may exist the correctness of which has not been determined by the executing Court. The trial Court found some support for its view that the proposition just stated was incorrect in the observations made in Kesho Ram v. Chunni Singh (4) where Shib Kunwar Singh v. Sheo Prasad Singh (2) was distinguished. The lower Appellate Court, however, accepted the proposition of law that there was a clear distinction between an order passed under r. 62 of O. XXI, and a mere notification of an encumbrance in a sale proclamation under r. 66 of O. XXI, and that when the Court had held an inquiry and found that a mortgage subsisted and the property was put up to sale subject to a mortgage, the auction-purchaser could not challenge the validity of the mortgage, whether he was a stranger or the decree-holder himself. The lower Appellate Court referred to the ruling in Gailu v. Lekha Singh (5) where the judgment in Shib Kunwar Singh v. Sheo Prasad Singh (2) was quoted with approval and that in Kesho Ram v. Chunni Singh (4) was distinguished. Nevertheless, although holding that the auction-purchaser would ordinarily be bound by a specific declaration in a sale proclamation that the property was to be sold subject to the mortgage, the Court considered that there were cases in which an auction-purchaser would be entitled to challenge the validity of the mortgage subject to which he had purchased the property; and its justification for holding so in the present case was stated to be that there was nothing to show that in the objection proceedings the judgment-debtor Barik was a party, and that he did not become a party by the mere fact that he was a judgment-debtor. The lower Appellate Court cites as its authority for this view a comment of the author in Mulla's Civil P. C. under the heading "Parties to suits under this rule" in the comments on O. XXI. r. 63. Apart from the fact that the learned Judge has not connected the auction-purchaser with the judgment-debtor as having a common interest, the point of the argument which appears to be drawn from the Full Bench decision in Krishnasami Naidu v. Sundaram Chettiar (6) is that the judgment-debtor who was not a party to the proceedings would not be precluded from instituting a suit on the ground that the order was not binding on him, more than one year after the date of the order, so long as he was within the period of limitation otherwise prescribed. Now, in the case before me it is quite clear that Barik had at no time any intention of filing any suit, and inasmuch as he admittedly appeared on behalf of the objector Tukaram in the execution proceedings in order to support Tukaram's claim that his property was subject to Tukaram's mortgage, it is difficult to sustain the position that Barik was not a party to the proceedings. Bhabichand attempted to execute his decree and attached the fields. Tukaram intervened as an objector and pleaded his mortgage. The judgment-debtor, who would normally be expected to resist a claim that the property had been mortgaged, as in a sale on a simple money decree he would hope to receive a balance if the property was unencumbered, agreed that his property was encumbered and that the claim was justified. Thereupon the executing Court came to the conclusion that there was a subsisting mortgage and disposed of the objection in the applicant's favour on March 21, 1931. The decree-holder was not present on that date, and on March 27, as the decree-holder was absent, the case was struck off and the property was ordered to be released. It may here be pointed out that the other ground on which the lower Appellate Court considered that the auction-purchaser was entitled to question the validity of the mortgage was that as the result of the order of March 27, the order of six days before was a nullity and that the very foundation of the order which would have become conclusive under r. 63 of O. XXI was gone. In this I am of opinion that the Court is wrong. The order which was passed on March 21, 1931, was conclusive as against the decree-holder unless he brought a suit which would terminate in his favour, within the period of one year. The fact that the property was released from attachment afterwards in no way annulled the duty that lay on him if he wished to bring the property to sale unencumbered; and indeed when he attached the property again more than a year later and Tukaram renewed his objection, the decree-holder at once conceded that he was unable to resist the application inasmuch as he had failed to bring a suit and he consequently agreed that the property should be sold in execution of his decree subject to the mortgage which had been held two years before to be subsisting.

The orders of the Court and the proclamation leave it in no doubt that the Court had found that there was a subsisting mortgage and that the property could only be sold subject to it. The order of the Subordinate Judge, dated January 7, 1933, runs:

"As the decree-holder did not file any declaratory suit to get the order, dated March 21, 1931, set aside it is conclusive against the decree-holder and the attached property will be sold subject to the objector's mortgage, dated October 18, 1929. The attached property will, therefore, be sold subject to the objector's mortgage, dated October 18, 1929, and the Collector will be informed accordingly."

In Collector's proceedings the following order was passed:

"Decree-holder in person. Judgment-debtor absent. The attached land be sold subject to objector's mortgage as directed by the Civil Court after proclamation at Multai. Sale on April 30, 1933."

The sale proclamation against the schedule of property and under the heading "Details of any encumbrances to which the property is liable" the following entry is made:

"This property will be sold subject to the mortgage of Tukaram."

Now in this Court the plaintiff-appellant relies on the cases which have already been cited for the proposition that even when the purchaser is the decree-holder, there can be no doubt that he can have no right to challenge (vide Govind v. Dhekle (7), that is to say, Kalidas Chaudhuri v. Prasanna Kumar Das (3); Shib Kunwar Singh v. Sheo Prasad Singh (2) and Gailu v. Lekha Singh (5). These decisions the learned Counsel for the respondent challenges as incorrect law. The learned Counsel for the appellant states that Kesho Ram v. Chunni Singh (4) is distinguishable, and I am of opinion that his contention is correct. There the learned Judges were considering a case of a decree-holder auction-purchaser, and the ratio decidendi on which it was held that he was allowed to challenge the validity of the mortgage was that he had in fact brought a suit within one year of the order of the executing Court allowing the mortgagee's claim; and in that case Shib Kunwar Singh v. Sheo Prasad Singh (2) was queried mainly as the ruling did not consider the case of a decree-holder auction-purchaser who desired to bring a suit contesting the validity of the order in the execution department. I am, with great respect, unable to follow the comment that Shib Kunwar Singh v. Sheo Prasad Singh (2) is incorrect in holding that all that is sold as the result of an order under O. XXI, r. 62, is the equity of redemption and that what is actually sold is the property itself subject to the mortgage and not merely the right of redemption. I am in respectful agreement with the Bench of the Oudh Chief Court in holding that the phrase "subject to such mortgage" must mean that what is sold is the equity of redemption and that a distinction is made between an express order directing the property to be sold subject to a mortgage and cases where notice of an alleged mortgage is given in the sale proclamation. In the former case a prospective purchaser is told exactly what he is buying; in the latter he takes a chance that the mortgage which is alleged to exist may prove unenforceable either from inherent defects or possibly because it may have been satisfied by the time of the sale, and the price which the property would fetch would vary considerably according whether the property is definitely stated to be sold subject to an ascertained encumbrance or merely subject to the risk of encumbrances existing. This judgment on the material points repeats the judgment in Shib Kunwar Singh v. Sheo Prasad Singh (2) almost verbatim. Again the distinction has been noted in Kalidas Chaudhuri v. Prasanna Kumar Das (3) where

"If a person purchases an estate subject to a mortgage, whether under a voluntary conveyance or under a sale in invitum or undertakes to discharge it, he cannot be heard to deny the validity of the mortgage subject to which he made his purchase. Where, however, the purchaser merely buys an estate which is under mortgage, but does not take it subject to the encumbrance or undertakes to discharge it, he is not precluded from impeaching the validity of the mortgage. The distinction between the two classes of cases depends upon the question, whether the property has been sold subject to the mortgage or whether mere notice of the alleged mortgage has been given in the proclamation of sale. The former contingency is provided for by O. XXI, r. 62, the latter is contemplated by O. XXI, r. 66."

As will be shown later, Umrao was well aware what he was purchasing, and it must be held that he has no right to challenge the mortgage.

On this finding it is not really necessary to advert to the contention that the respondent Umrao has not been able to prove that the mortgage was fictitious and that the burden has been wrongly cast. It appears that both the Courts below have been influenced in their consideration of law by the fact that they have held that the transaction was fictitious from beginning to end and was made for the purpose of defeating the claims of Bhabichand, who, as the result of the order under O. XXI, r. 62, which he did not challenge, has been able to satisfy his claim only in part, and that Umrao is an innocent purchaser who was unable to challenge the finding in execution proceedings, as naturally he did not appear on the scene until after the sale had been concluded. But Umrao from his own deposition as a witness is deserving of no such sympathy which would justify the Court in seeking equitable considerations on his behalf. He has stated in the witness-box that he had ascertained before hand that the transaction embodied in the mortgage was a fraudulent and fictitious one and that he also obtained an assurance from Tukaram that, if he purchased the property, he would not be called on to pay any part of the mortgage money as in fact there was nothing owing to Tukaram. He was aware that the objection had been made by Tukaram and that the objection had been found valid and that the Court had come to the conclusion that there was a mortgage and declared that the sale was to be held subject to the mortgage. He has also admitted that as the result of this order he was able to obtain the property much cheaper than he would have done otherwise, that it was a good stroke of business to keep silence about his knowledge that the mortgage was fictitious, and that in fact he had saved a considerable sum of money thereby. Equitable considerations cannot be called into play on behalf of such a person. It may be unfortunate from his point of view, assuming that his statements are true, that the executing Court was persuaded into coming to a definite decision that there was a subsisting mortgage and directing the property to be sold subject to that mortgage. That declaration having once been made is final, and an auction-purchaser can in no circumstances be allowed to challenge that finding because of his knowledge that the finding is incorrect and his hopes of obtaining a surreptitious profit by utilizing that knowledge. He may have a cause of action against Tukaram, but he cannot be entitled to resist Mishrilal's claim based on the mortgage.

The appeal accordingly succeeds. The respondents Barik and Tukaram have apparently failed to redeem the mortgage as directed in the Courts below. A decree will be passed for the full claim with costs against all the respondents with interest at the rate given in the Court below. I fix the date of redemption at three months from the date of the delivery of this judgment, failing which the whole property will be foreclosed.

U. P. Encumbered Estates Act (XXV of 1934), s. 14, cl. (4) (a), (b), (6)—Cl. 6, whether makes distinction between a case where prior debt of date earlier than December 31, 1916, is renewed by successor-in-interest of original debtor and case where that liability is undertaken by person other than such legal representative.

Clause (6) of s. 14, U. P. Encumbered Estates Act, makes no distinction between a case where the prior debt (principal plus interest), of a date earlier than December 31, 1916, is renewed by the successor-in-interest of the original debtor, and a case where that liability is undertaken by a person other than such legal representative.

A mortgaged certain property to B for Rs. 20,000 on April 26, 1915. He then mortgaged the same property together with other property to C for one lakh rupees on May 28, 1921, leaving out of the consideration a sum of Rs. 20,000 for payment to A. C did not pay this amount. C then executed a mortgage on July 28, 1923, in favour of A for Rs. 30,000. The principal amount of Rs. 20,000 and interest thereon up to that date amounting to Rs. 1,884-14-9 was set off towards the mortgage consideration and a sum of Rs. 8,115-1-3 was received in cash. The estate of C went under the management of Court of Wards and the manager applied under s. 4, U. P. Encumbered Estates Act. A claimed Rs. 63,958 on the basis of his mortgage:

Held, that the principal amount for the purposes of s. 14 consisted of Rs. 20,000 originally advanced by A on April 26, 1915, and Rs. 8,115-1-3 further advanced in cash on July 28, 1923, both of which were still due at the date of the application. Under s. 14 (4) (a) the claimant was not entitled to more than that amount as interest. Thus he would get only Rs. 56,230-2-6 and no more.

Mr. H. S. Gupta, for the Appellant.

Mr. Ali Hasan for Mr. M. Wasim, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—The facts giving rise to these appeals are that Messrs. L. D. W. Hearsey and G. E. O. Hearsey executed a mortgage deed on April 26, 1915, for a principal sum of Rs. 20,000, carrying interest of annas 10 per cent. per mensem in respect of three villages in favour of the respondent (vide Ex. A-3 in appeal No. 83 of 1937). The same two persons on May 26, 1921, mortgaged 16 villages, including the three villages mortgaged under the mortgage deed dated April 26, 1915, for a sum of Rs. 1,00,000, in favour of Rani Rajeshwari Devi, the senior Rani of Thakur Jai Indra Bahadur Singh, the taluqdar of Mahewa, leaving out of the consideration a sum of Rs. 20,000 for payment to the respondent (vide Ex. A-4 in appeal No. 83 of 1937). The amount of Rs. 20,000, made dehandid and due on the mortgage of April 26, 1915, was not paid by Rani Rajeshwari Devi.

The said Rani together with her husband Thakur Jai Indra Bahadur Singh executed on July 28, 1923, a deed of mortgage for a sum of Rs. 30,000 in favour of the respondent. The principal amount of Rs. 20,000, and interest thereon up to that date amounting to Rs. 1,884-14-9, was set off towards the mortgage consideration and a sum of Rs. 8,115-1-3 was received in cash, (vide Ex. 1). The estates of Rani Rajeshwari Devi and Thakur Jai Indra Bahadur Singh are now under the superintendence of the Court of Wards.

The Deputy Commissioner of Kheri, Manager of the Court of Wards, representing the estates of Thakur Jai Indra Bahadur Singh and Rani Rajeshwari Devi, made two separate applications on behalf of each of them under s. 4 of the U. P. Encumbered Estates Act praying that the provisions of that Act be applied to them. The applications were forwarded to the Special Judge, First Grade, Kheri, and necessary notices under s. 9 of the Act were published in the Gazette.

Thereupon the respondent to the two appeals, who held the mortgage in his favour dated July 28, 1923, filed a written statement of his claim under s. 9 (1) of the U. P. Encumbered Estates Act in each case claiming a total amount of Rs. 63,958 on the basis of the said mortgage.

The claims in the two cases were decided together. The debtors in their written statements contested the claim of the ground that the principal amount for the purposes of s. 14 of the U. P. Encumbered Estates Act could not exceed Rs. 28,115-1-3. They further alleged that the claimant had agreed to accept Rs. 56,230-2-6 in full satisfaction of his claim, and no more than that amount could be allowed to him.

The learned Special Judge decreed the claim for Rs. 60,000, i. e. double of Rs. 30,000, the amount for which Ex. 1 was executed with proportionate costs and interest at $3\frac{1}{4}$ per cent. per annum from the date of the application till the date of the payment. The learned Special Judge incorporated in the decree a condition to the effect that the claim will be enforced either against Thakur Jai Indra Bahadur Singh or against Rani Rajeshwari Devi or against both, but in all to the extent of the amount decreed only.

The debtors have filed the two appeals mentioned above one from the decree in one case and the other from the decree in the other case. These appeals have been heard together.

The points that have been urged in these appeals are that the principal amount for the purposes of s. 14 of the U. P. Encumbered Estates Act should have been taken as Rs. 28,115-1-3, i. e. Rs. 20,000 actually advanced as principal by the deed dated July 28, 1915, and Rs. 8,115-1-3 representing the cash advanced at the time of the execution of Ex. 1, and that in the circumstances of the case no costs should have been allowed to the claimant.

The learned Special Judge has treated the entire consideration of the mortgage deed (Ex. 1) as principal money for the purposes of s. 14 of the U. P. Encumbered Estates Act on the ground that the applicants are not the representatives of the mortgagors of the deed dated April 26, 1915, executed by Messrs. L. D. W. Hearsey and G. E. O. Hearsey, and, therefore, as regards them the amount of principal is Rs. 30,000 and not Rs. 20,000. The second ground in support of his finding is that it could not be said that the mortgage deed in suit was in the course of the original transaction.

Having regard to the provisions of s. 14 (4) (a) of the U. P. Encumbered Estates Act, we are of opinion that the principal, which was at the date of the application still due to the claimant, must be the amount of Rs. 20,000 plus Rs. 8,115-1-3, which was advanced on July 28, 1923, in cash. The ordinary meaning of the word "principal" is "the capital sum lent as distinguished from interest". It may be that the total liability, barring the cash advance, undertaken by the debtors when executing Ex. 1 on July 28, 1923, was fixed at Rs. 28,115-1-3 but this amount consisted of the capital amount by which the claimant was out of pocket plus interest thereon from May 26, 1921, to July 28, 1923. By cl. (5) and (6) of the section, a rule has been laid down by the U. P. Encumbered Estates Act for the purpose of ascertaining the principal under cl. (a) and they lay down that any amount of interest accruing or accumulating after December 31, 1916, cannot be treated as part of principal. In the present case it is to be noted that if we add Rs. 1,884-14-9 to Rs. 20,000 and treat the total as principal as agreed in Ex. 1, then we shall be transgressing the provisions of cl. (6) mentioned above. This clause abrogates all contracts between the parties by which interest accumulating after December 31, 1916, is converted into principal. Further, it is to be noticed that cl. (6) makes no distinction between a case where the prior debt, (principal plus interest), of a date earlier than December 31, 1916, is renewed by the successor-in-interest of the original debtor and a case where that liability is undertaken by a person other than such legal representative. We are of opinion that the question whether Thakur Jai Indra Bahadur Singh and Rani Rajeshwari Devi were the successors-in-interest of Messrs. L. D. W. Hearsey and G. E. O. Hearsey or not is entirely immaterial to the question under consideration. They are applicants under s. 4 of the Act and that is enough.

The contention raised by the learned Counsel for the respondent that the statement of (?) settlement of accounts and the contract subsequent to December 31, 1916, contemplated by cl. (6) of s. 14 of the U. P. Encumbered Estates Act must be between the parties to the original transaction, or their legal representatives, seems to have no force in view of the clear language of the clause.

The other ground upon which the learned Special Judge decided against the debtors is that the mortgage deed (Ex. 1), was not executed in the course of the original transaction. In our opinion this argument is the same as the first argument but only in another form.

In our opinion the principal amount for the purposes of s. 14 of the U. P. Encumbered Estates Act consists of Rs. 20,000 originally advanced by the respondent on April 26, 1915, and Rs. 8,115-1-3 further advanced in cash on July 28, 1923, both of which were still due at the date of the application. Under s. 14 (1) (a) of the U. P. Encumbered Estates Act the claimant was not entitled to more than that amount as interest. The claimant had claimed a sum of Rs. 63,958. He will be allowed Rs. 56,230-2-6 and no more.

As regards costs in the Court below, we are of opinion that the same principle should apply as applicable to a mortgage suit by a mortgagee. Under s. 14 (4) and (7) the learned Special Judge had complete discretion in the matter of allowing costs. He has allowed proportionate costs in his Court to the claimant and we see no grounds either on the principle or on the facts of the present case to interfere with that order.

The result is that the appeals are partly allowed, the decrees passed by the learned Special Judge are modified only to this extent that in place of Rs. 60,000, Rs. 56,230-2-6 will be substituted in them. The rest of the decrees shall stand.

As regards the costs of these appeals, we order that the appellants will get their costs in this Court, but the Pleader's fee will be taxed only in one appeal, i. e. Appeal No. 82 of 1937 and not in the other appeal.

MA BLA ON—RESPONDENT

Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 41—Minor transferor entering into transaction of transfer—Alleged misrepresentation as to age—Transaction not influenced by misrepresentation—Consideration, if should be ordered to be refunded.

Where a minor by false representation as to his or her age induces another to enter into a transaction, it is just that the latter should be refunded the money that was paid to the minor as consideration. 85 Ind. Cas. 79 (3), relied on. [p. 735, col. 2.]

But where the misrepresentation of his age by the minor transferor has no influence on the transaction of the transfer and the parties would have still entered into the transaction, in spite of the misrepresentation as to transferor's age, the alleged misstatement as to the age cannot be regarded as inducement to enter into the transaction nor does it support the theory that the transferor has misrepresented his age on the occasion. In such a case it is not proper to exercise the discretion under s. 41, Specific Relief Act, in favour of a transferee from a minor upon the cancellation of the instrument of transfer on the ground of the transferor's minority at the time of the transaction, unless the transaction has been the consequence of the false representation by the minor as to age, by ordering the refund of the money paid to the transferor as consideration. Mohori Bibee v. Dharmodass Ghose (1) and 111 Ind. Cas. 175 (2), distinguished.

Sp. S. A. against the decree of the District Court, Maubin, in O. A. No. 3 of 1937.

Dr. Ba Han, for the Appellant.

Mr. U Zeya, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—This appeal has arisen out of a suit instituted by the respondent under s. 39, Specific Relief Act, for cancellation of a deed of sale on the ground that it was void on account of her minority at the time of the transaction. The appellant who contested the suit on various grounds, such as that the respondent was not a minor at the time of the transaction, also claimed that in the cancellation of the deed the respondent should be ordered to make a refund of the purchase money which he (the appellant) had paid for the land that was transferred under the deed. This claim was made under s. 41, Specific Relief Act. Both the trial Court and the lower Appellate Court decided all the points in dispute in favour of the respondent, and held that as the respondent was a minor at the time of the transaction, the transaction was void, and consequently directed the cancellation of the deed of sale. With reference to the appellant's claim under s. 41, Specific Relief Act, the trial Court upon the evidence came to the conclusion that there was active misrepresentation on the part of the respondent as to her age, which was alleged to be 19 years, and that therefore the appellant was entitled to have the amount which he paid as purchase money refunded to him by the respondent upon the cancellation of the deed of sale. The lower Appellate Court, however, came to the conclusion upon the evidence in the case that no active misrepresentation on the part of the respondent as to her age was proved and that the appellant entered into the transaction with his eyes open to the fact that the respondent was a minor, and therefore held that the appellant was not entitled to have the amount paid by him as purchase money refunded to him. Before the filing of this suit, the respondent had filed a suit to enforce an unregistered written agreement entered into at the time of the execution of the deed of sale under which the appellant promised to recover the property mentioned in the deed on the respondent paying him the purchase money with an additional sum. The appellant contested that suit which failed on the ground that the agreement relied upon by the respondent not being a registered one was invalid. Both parties to the suit led evidence upon various issues of fact which were framed in that proceeding. Therefore, in the present litigation the parties agreed in the trial Court that the evidence taken in the previous suit should be treated as evidence in the present case. In addition to such evidence the parties were given the liberty to adduce such further evidence that they desired to adduce in this case. Therefore the evidence relied on by the parties in this case has been mainly evidence which was not recorded by the learned Judge who tried this case.

In addition to the interested parties to this litigation, namely the appellant, the respondent and a cousin of the respondent named Maung Ba Maung, there are three witnesses who were examined with reference to the allegation of active misrepresentation on the part of the respondent. The evidence in the affirmative comes forth from the witnesses Po Sa and Maung Kun called by the appellant, while the evidence of Maung Nyo called by the respondent supports the denial of the respondent that there was any misrepresentation on her part as to her age. These three witnesses were admittedly present at the time of the drawing up of the deed in question. Po Sa being the writer and Maung Kun, who is related both to the appellant and the respondent who are also related as cousins, and Maung Nyo being attesting witnesses to the deed. The evidence of Po Sa and Maung Kun supports the appellant's allegation to the effect that when Po Sa was about to write the deed, Po Sa questioned the respondent as to her age and that the respondent's answer was that she was 19 years old. The evidence of Maung Nyo is to the effect that he never heard anybody questioning the respondent as to her age, nor did he hear any statement made by the respondent upon this point. It is undoubtedly a weak point in the case for the appellant that there was no circumstance which would show that there was any need for Po Sa to put the alleged question. But Po Sa says that he questioned the respondent as to her age because respondent was dwarfish, and it is perfectly clear that the question was not put by him on account of the realization on his part that a contract entered into by a minor was invalid in law. Thus the question that he put was not put in connection with the transaction of which he was about to draw the deed, but merely to satisfy his personal curiosity. Be that as it may, it must be conceded that this weak point in the appellant's case is not sufficient, in my opinion, to justify interference by the lower Appellate Court with the finding of the trial Court though the trial Court did not in this case have the ordinary advantage over the Appellate Court of having the evidence of witnesses recorded before it.

But that is not the end of the matter, because in the circumstances of the case it appears to me that the parties would have entered into the transaction even if this alleged statement was not made, and I am unable to attribute the entry of the parties into the transaction to this statement at all. The writer of the deed, Po Sa, was a petition-writer, but he confesses that he did not know what the legal effect of the deed signed by a minor would be. Therefore so far as the question of minority was concerned, it was a matter of indifference to him. The transaction was brought about by Maung Ba Maung, respondent's cousin, in whose care the respondent was living at the time. He was a fishery lessee who needed money to pay the arrears of revenue due for the fishery, therefore he approached the appellant to let him have the money upon the respondent entering into this transaction. It was only after he had made all the arrangements that the respondent was taken to the place where the deed was to be drawn up to give the transaction its finality. The appellant was also related to the respondent as a cousin and they all lived in the same village until about eight years before the suit when the appellant left this village and took up his residence elsewhere which, however, does not appear to be so distant as to render improbable their meeting with each other on some occasions during the period. The arrangements had brought the matter to the stage when the final deed was to be drawn up, and up to that time it is reasonably clear that the appellant never had in his mind the question of minority or majority of the person who was going to execute the deed of sale in his favour. Therefore, upon the facts of the case in my opinion it is safe to hold that it was not the alleged declaration of her age to be 19 that had any influence on the transaction at all, and that this transaction would have been entered into whether that statement was made or not.

The question is whether in these circumstances the Court should exercise the discretionary power under s. 41; that is whether the Court will require the respondent to make any compensation to the appellant, and it resolves itself into whether justice requires the making of such an order. In Mohori Bhee v. Dharmodass Ghose (1), it was held that a false representation made to a person who knows it to be false is not such fraud as to take away the privilege of infancy. In that case the Courts found that the agent of the mortgagee had not acted upon nor was misled by, the statement by the mortgagor as to his age but had been fully aware at the time the mortgage was executed of the minority of the mortgagor. In those circumstances their Lordships upheld the view of the Courts in India that under the circumstances of the case justice did not require them to order the return by the respondent of money advanced to him with full knowledge of his infancy. In Khan Gul v. Lakha Singh (2), a Full Bench of the Lahore High Court held, Harrison, J. dissenting, that a minor who had entered into a contract by means of a false representation as to his age, though not liable under the contract may, in equity, be required to return the benefit he had received by making a false representation as to his age. There the facts of the case showed that the minor had falsely represented himself to be a major and induced a person to enter into a contract with him. I do not think that the alleged statement made by the respondent to Maung Po Sa can be regarded as an inducement by the respondent to the appellant to enter into the transaction, because, as I have pointed out upon the facts and circumstances of the case, the appellant would have taken the sale from the respondent even if she never made that statement to Po Sa. In Muhammad Said v. Bishambhar Nath (3), at p. 649 Sir Grimwood Mears, C. J. and Piggott, J. of the Allahabad High Court pointed out that in each case the test must be the conduct of the parties, and observed in the course of the judgment:

"Purchasers or money-lenders who deal with persons who are hovering upon majority, and the ascertainment of whose age is impossible, must not complain if their cupidity leads them at times into litigation and loss."

My view as to the principle laid down by this case is where a minor by false representation as to his or her age induces another to enter into a transaction it is just that the latter should be refunded the money that was paid to the minor as consideration. In my opinion it is not proper to exercise the discretion under s. 41, Specific Relief Act, in favour of a transferee from a minor upon the cancellation of the instrument of transfer on the ground of the transferor's minority at the time of the transaction, unless the transaction has been the consequence of the false representation by the minor as to age. Before I conclude I must mention that in 1932 when Maung Ba Maung was required by the Revenue Officer to furnish security for the fishery license fees the respondent, who was then only 13 years of age, offered herself as his surety by a petition in which she stated her age to be 16. It is surprising to find that the Revenue Officer concerned accepted her suretyship and the lease was issued to Maung Ba Maung. Judging by that conduct it seems that the respondent was a person who would be willing to make a misstatement of her age at the back and call of Maung Ba Maung, but it cannot be said that she put herself forward as a major, and the circumstance does not by itself support the theory of her having actively misrepresented her age on the occasion of the transfer in question. In all the circumstances of the case, I see no sufficient reason for interfering with the judgment of the lower Appellate Court on this point. The appeal fails and it is dismissed with costs.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 142—Question of applicability of particular article—Duty of Court—Applicability of Art. 142—Whether applies to suits on proprietary title.

In order to determine the particular Article applicable to a suit, it is the duty of the Court to consider the facts and circumstances admitted and proved in the case. Where there is no allegation of dispossession in the plaint but the facts show that the defendants entered or must have entered on the land while it was in the possession of the plaintiff, the Article applicable would be Art. 142. It would be absurd to hold that a plaintiff can at his sweet will avoid the operation of Art. 142 by framing his suit in such a manner as if there was no dispossession. [p. 737, col. 1.]

Article 142, Lim. Act, is very general in its scope and application. There is no reason to confine the word "plaintiff" in this Article to plaintiffs bringing their suits on possessory title only. The Article will apply to all cases of alleged or proved dispossession whether the plaintiff's suit is based on his proprietary or his possessory title. There is nothing in the Article itself, to make it applicable to suits on possessory title only. 147 Ind. Cas. 805 (1) and 168 Ind. Cas. 309 (2), held no good law, 152 Ind. Cas. 1 (4), relied on. A. against an order of Mr. Justice Zia-ul-Hasan, dated March 1, 1937.

Mr. Murlī Manohar Lal, for the Appellants.

Mr. R. B. Lal, for Appellant No. 1.

Mr. Mohammad Ayub, for Respondents Nos. 1, 2 and 3.

Judgment.—This is a plaintiffs' appeal under s. 12 (2) of the Oudh Courts Act. The plaintiffs-appellants brought a suit for possession of three plots in dispute on the allegation that they were the proprietors of the plots in suit with which the defendants had no concern and that the defendants were in illegal possession of plot No. 582/2 for the last eight years and of plots Nos. 582/1 and 583/2 for the last ten years. The defendants-respondents alleged that they had been in adverse possession of the said plots for the last 25 years or 30 years. In para. 8 of the written statement, they pleaded that in 1910 there were proceedings under s. 145 of the Criminal P.O. between the parties in which their possession was upheld and no suit having been filed within time by the plaintiffs, their suit now was time-barred.

The trial Court framed the following issues:—

(1) Are the plaintiffs owners of the plots in suit?

(2) Whether defendants have perfected their title by adverse possession?

(3) Is the suit barred by limitation, as alleged in para. 8 of the written-statement?

(4) To what relief, if any, are plaintiffs entitled?

On issue No. 1 it held that the plaintiffs were the proprietors of the land in suit. Issue No. 2 was decided in the negative and on Issue No. 3 it was held that the plea that the suit was barred by Art. 47 of the In. Lim. Act had no force. The learned Munsif did not consider Art. 142 of the Lim. Act obviously for the reason as indicated above that it was not raised in the written statement. In the result, the suit was decreed.

In appeal the learned Subordinate Judge (now Civil Judge) of Gonda held that on the allegations in the plaint the suit was governed by Art. 142 of the Lim. Act. He framed a fresh issue as follows and remanded the case for a fresh decision of the point of limitation:—

"Have the plaintiffs been in possession of the plots in a suit within limitation?"

An appeal against the said order of remand was dismissed by a Single Judge of this Court from whom the appellants obtained leave to appeal to a Bench of this Court under s. 12 (2) of the Oudh Courts Act and the present appeal is the appeal filed in pursuance of that leave.

We have heard the learned Counsel for the parties at length. On behalf of the appellants the following points have been argued:—

(1) That the Article of the Lim. Act applicable to a suit must be discovered on the allegations in the plaint. It is not open to a Court to hold an enquiry on that point by going into evidence.

(2) That the present suit is a suit for possession on title alone and is not based upon dispossession by the defendants and is governed by Art. 144 and not by Art. 142 of the Lim. Act.

On the first point we are of opinion, that the suit is clearly based upon an allegation of dispossession of the plaintiffs by the defendants. The allegation in para. 2 of the plaint that the defendants are in illegal possession of some property in suit for the last eight years and of the rest for the last ten years amounts clearly to an allegation that the plaintiffs were dispossessed of the plots in dispute eight or ten years ago. The language of para. 2 is not capable of bearing any other interpretation. In fact one of the plaintiffs who was examined as P. W. No. 4 stated that he had been formerly in possession of the plots in dispute and the defendants had taken possession about 9 years ago. This is the view taken by the learned Single Judge of this Court who heard the second appeal and we find ourselves in full agreement with him. It is thus clear that the only Article applicable is Art. 142.

Even assuming that there was no allegation of dispossession involved in para. 2 of the plaint, we are of opinion, that the contention of the learned Counsel for the appellants that the Court in discovering the Article of the Lim. Act applicable to the suit is tied to the statements in the plaint, is incorrect. In our opinion, in order to determine the particular Article applicable to a suit, it is the duty of the Court to consider the facts and circumstances admitted and proved in the case. Where there is no allegation of dispossession in the plaint but the facts show that the defendants entered or must have entered on the land while it was in the possession of the plaintiffs, the Article applicable would be Art. 142. It would be absurd to hold that a plaintiff can, at his sweet will, avoid the operation of Art. 142, by framing his suit in such a manner as if there was no dispossession. We are aware that in some cases observations have been made to the effect that Art. 142, cannot apply to cases in which the plaintiff has not alleged in the plaint his possession and dispossession and that Art. 144, would apply to such a suit. But we are of opinion, that such a view is not correct on principle. It involves the shutting out of a defence by the defendant to the effect that on true facts the suit is governed by Art. 142.

The defendant to a suit for possession cannot on any principle be precluded from showing that on the true facts of a case the Article applicable to the suit is Art. 142. Further, the interpretation of law urged by the learned Counsel for the appellants is against the plain language of Art. 142 of the Lim. Act. Article 142 applies to suits for possession when the plaintiff while in possession of the property has been dispossessed or has discontinued the possession, i. e. when on the facts proved in a particular case the plaintiff while in possession has been dispossessed or has discontinued the possession. To accept the argument of the learned Counsel for the appellants that Art. 142 would apply where on the face of the plaint there is an allegation of dispossession would be reading certain extra words into the section which do not find a place therein.

On the second point it was argued that as the present suit was for recovery of possession on the basis of title, Art. 142 of the Lim. Act was inapplicable inasmuch that Article applied to suits on possessory title only. Article 142 is applicable on its terms and language to all suits for possession of immovable property where the plaintiff while in possession of the property has been dispossessed or has discontinued his possession. Article 144 is a residuary Article and is applicable to suits for possession not otherwise specially provided for in the Act. If Art. 142 is applicable to a case, then it is obvious that Art. 144, would be inapplicable. Article 142, is very general in its scope and application. There is no reason to confine the word "plaintiff" in this Article to plaintiffs bringing their suits on possessory title only. In our opinion, Art. 142, will apply to all cases of alleged or proved dispossession whether the plaintiff's suit is based on his proprietary or his possessory title. There is nothing in the Article itself, as we have observed above, to make it applicable to suits on possessory title only. The learned Counsel for the appellants has placed great reliance upon two decisions of this Court, Mohammad Mahmud v. Mohammad Afaq, A. I. R. 1934 Oudh 21=11 O. W. N. 104 (1) and Sheo Moorat v. Chhangoo, 1937 O. W. N. 585 (2). The latter case followed the former. The former case was decided by a Bench consisting of the late Mr. Justice Raza and the late Mr. Justice Smith. It is difficult to gather all the facts of this case except that the suit was for possession of a house in a town. It is enough to say about this case that the learned Judges based their judgment upon a decision of the Allahabad High Court reported in Kanhaiya Lal v. Giwar, I. L. R. 51 Allahabad, 1042 (3), which case has since been held as not laying down the correct law in the latest Full Bench case of that Court in Bindhyachal Chand v. Gharib Chand, I. L. R. 57 Allahabad, 278 (4). We are in full agreement with the view of law contained in the Full Bench case of the Allahabad High Court if we may say so respectfully. The second case of this Court reported in Sheo Moorat v. Chhangoo, 1937 O. W. N. 585 (2), is a Single Judge decision of this Court and followed Mohammad Mahmud v. Muhammad Afaq, 11 O. W. N. 104 (1). In our opinion, the two decisions mentioned above do not lay down correct law. The learned Counsel for the appellants also relied upon the following cases:—

Wadero Warsidino Allahdino v. Bhai Pursumal Bhai Parumal, A. I. R. 1937 Sind, 226 (5), Naru Shidu Gaikwad v. Krishna Shidu Gaikwad, A. I. R. 1938 Bombay, 210 (6), Abdul Latif v. Nawab Khajeh Habibullah, A. I. R. 1939 Cal, 354 (7) and Mehtab Singh v. Dayal Singh, A. I. R. 1939 Lahore 172 (8).

The Sind decision in Wadero Warsidino Allahdino v. Bhai Pursumal Bhai Parumal, A. I. R. 1937 Sind, 226 (5), is based upon the decision in Mohammad Mahmud v. Muhammad Afaq, 11 O. W. N. 1104 (1), about which we have already said that it does not lay down correct law. This case, therefore, need not detain us any further.

The cases reported in Naru Shidu Gaikwad v. Krishna Shidu Gaikwad, A. I. R. 1938 Bombay 210 (6) and Mehtab Singh v. Dayal Singh, A. I. R. 1939 Lahore, 172 (8), are Single Judge decisions and are not helpful on the particular point arising in this case.

Abdul Latif v. Nawab Khajeh Habibullah, A. I. R. 1939 Cal. 354 (7), was a suit in respect of lands subject to alluvion and diluvion. The land had begun to rise above water from ten or twelve years before the suit and had become fit for cultivation seven or eight years before the suit. The land had never been in the physical possession of the plaintiffs themselves or of person who held under them at any time after the land had reformed. Having regard to the nature of the land in that case, it was held that there could be no question of any possession or discontinuance of possession in the case and the suit would be governed by Art. 141. This case is clearly distinguishable from the facts of the present case.

In the result, we find ourselves in complete agreement with the view of law taken by the Single Judge of this Court, who heard the second appeal. The appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs.

An offence under s. 63, Chota Nag. Ten. Act is only committed if the landlord or his agent levies or makes certain demands over and above the rent legally due from the tenants. There is no offence if anybody other than the landlord or an agent of the landlord demands commodities from persons who are not his tenants. Where the Manager of the Court of Wards demands certain commodities or animals or birds from the tenants of the estate which he is not entitled to demand, he commits an offence under s. 63. Section 63 (1) (a) of the Chota Nag. Ten. deprive a Criminal Court of its jurisdiction to try criminal offence. [ibid.]

Under s. 59-A, Court of Wards Act, a Manager of Court of Wards is a public servant, and where according to the rules made by the Court of Wards under s. 70 of that Act such a person getting certain salary cannot be appointed without the previous sanction of the Govt., it follows that he cannot also be dismissed without the sanction of the Govt. When such a manager therefore commits an offence under s. 63, Chota Nag. Ten. Act while acting in his capacity as a manager of the estate, a sanction of the Govt. under s. 197, Criminal P. C., is necessary for his prosecution. 181 Ind. Cas. 317 (1), referred to.

Rule 115 of the rules made by Court of Wards under s. 70 of the Court of Wards Act, does not take away the power expressly given to the Court by s. 20 to appoint and remove managers but it only requires the previous sanction of Govt. Sections 69 and 70 of the Act empower the making of such a rule and it is not therefore ultra vires. [p. 41, col. 1.]

Or. Ref. made by the Deputy Commissioner of Hazaribagh, in his letter No. 12750-G, dated August 14, 1939.

Mr. B. P. Sinha, in support of the reference.

Mr. Basanta Chandra Ghosh, against the reference.

Harries, C. J.—This is a reference made by the learned Deputy Commissioner of Hazaribagh recommending that certain criminal proceedings against one Capt. Angelo which were commenced without the previous sanction of the Provincial Govt. be quashed.

On February 3, 1939, one Kandan Manjhi filed a petition before the Sub-Divisional Officer of Giridih alleging that on the previous Friday, namely, January 27, 1939, the Manager of the Court of Wards of the Ganwan Estate had demanded various commodities from the tenants who resided in the village of Chhattamar. Amongst these commodities were rice, dal, milk, ghee, oil and two fowls and one goat were also demanded. It was alleged that these commodities, fowls and goat were taken to the Manager. The petitioner alleged that other goats had been received by the Manager and that he had been directed to take them to Ganwan, the headquarters of the estate. The petitioner stated that he set out with two goats to Ganwan accompanied by a peon. On the way, it is said that he met some Congress people including a lawyer who induced him to file a complaint before the Second Officer who was at Satgawan. The Second Officer directed him to file a complaint before the Sub-Divisional Officer at Giridih and this was done. The Sub-Divisional Officer ordered a Magistrate to make an inquiry, and the learned Magistrate found that presents of small value had been given by certain persons such as are usually given to the landlord or his employees whenever they visited the village. The Sub-Divisional Officer then called upon the Manager and the peons to show cause why action under s. 63 of the Chota Nag. Ten. Act should not be taken against them. Cause was shown, and it was urged on behalf of Capt. Angelo that he was a public servant and, therefore, no cognizance of the offence alleged to have been committed by him could be taken without the previous sanction of the Provincial Govt. The learned Sub-Divisional Officer, after hearing argument on this point, came to the conclusion that Capt. Angelo was a public servant; but he further held that the acts could not be said to have been done by Capt. Angelo in discharge of his official duties. In the result he held that the sanction of the Provincial Govt. for the prosecution of Capt. Angelo was not necessary and directed the proceedings to continue. A petition was then filed on behalf of Capt. Angelo before the learned Deputy Commissioner who came to the conclusion that the sanction of the Provincial Govt. was necessary for the prosecution of Capt. Angelo, and accordingly he referred the matter to this Court with the recommendation that the proceedings pending against Capt. Angelo should be quashed.

The allegation made by the petitioner against Capt. Angelo was that he had demanded from the tenants certain gifts which he was not entitled to demand and that he had committed an offence under s. 63 of the Chota Nag. Ten. Act as amended by the Chota Nag. Ten. (Amendment) Act, 1938, (Act II of 1938).

The amended s. 63 of the Chota Nag. Ten. Act reads as follows:

"(1) (a) If a landlord or his agent levies, except under any special enactment for the time being in force, from a tenant of such landlord, any sum of money or anything in excess of the rent lawfully payable by such tenant for his tenancy and the interest payable on an arrear of such rent, or enforces compliance by any tenant with any preadial condition to which he is not lawfully entitled, such landlord or agent, as the case may be, shall be punishable with simple imprisonment for a term, which may extend to six months, or with fine which may extend to five hundred rupees, or with both.

"(b) An offence under cl. (a) shall be bailable and shall be compoundable with the leave of the Court...

"(3) If in any suit, application or proceeding under this Act or any other law, the Court or presiding officer (not being the Deputy Commissioner) has grounds for believing that any landlord or his agent is guilty of an offence under cl. (a) of sub-s. (1), such Court or Officer shall inform the Deputy Commissioner."

This section makes it an offence for a landlord or his agent to levy, except under any special enactment for the time being in force, from a tenant of such landlord, any sum of money or anything in excess of the rent lawfully payable by such tenant for his tenancy. The allegation against Capt. Angelo is that he, as Manager of the Court of Wards which was in charge of the Ganwan Estate, had demanded from the tenants something over and above the rent which was lawfully payable by them. He had demanded certain commodities and animals which it was usual in the past for landlords and their agents to demand from tenants when they were in their vicinity. There appears little doubt that demands for such commodities or birds or animals might well be an offence within this section. However, it must be remembered that an offence is only committed if the landlord or his agent levies or makes such demands. There is no offence if anybody other than the landlord or an agent of the landlord demands commodities of this kind from persons who are not his tenants.

The learned Deputy Commissioner was of opinion that Capt. Angelo was a public servant and therefore, that no Court could take cognizance of this offence except with the previous sanction of the Provincial Govt. It is common ground that the sanction of the Provincial Govt. was not obtained for instituting these proceedings against Capt. Angelo. Section 197 of the Criminal P. O. deals with the prosecution of public servants and is in these terms:

(1) When any person who is a Judge within the meaning of s. 19 of the I. P. O., or when any Magistrate, or when any public servant who is not removable from his office save by or with the sanction of a Local Govt. or some higher authority, is accused of any offence alleged to have been committed by him while acting or purporting to act in the discharge of his official duty, no Court shall take cognizance of such offence except with the previous sanction of the Local Govt.

Before the learned Deputy Commissioner it was conceded that Capt. Angelo was a public servant; but before us it has been strenuously argued that he is not a public servant. Capt. Angelo is the Manager of the Court of Wards which has assumed superintendence of the Ganwan Estate. His monthly salary is Rs. 350, and there can be no doubt that Capt. Angelo must be deemed to be a public servant for the purposes of the I. P. O. Section 59-A of the Court of Wards Act (Act IX of 1879) expressly provides that every person employed by the Court of Wards under the Act shall for the purposes of the I. P. O., be deemed to be a public servant. If the prosecution here was a prosecution for an offence under the I. P. O., it could not be argued that Capt. Angelo was not a public servant. However, it is said that the prosecution here is for an offence created by the Chol Nag. Ten. Act and not by the I. P. O. and therefore, s. 59-A of the Court of Wards Act has no application.

Section 4, sub-s. (2) of the Criminal P. O. provides that all words and expressions used in the Criminal P. O. and defined in the I. P. O., but not defined in the Criminal P. O., shall be deemed to have the meanings respectively attributed to them by the I. P. O. The term "public servant" is not defined in the Criminal P. O., and, therefore, must be deemed to have the same meaning as given in the definition of the term in the I. P. O. If, for the purposes of the I. P. O., s. 59-A of the Court of Wards Act makes a servant of the Court of Wards a public servant, it would appear to follow that he must also be a public servant with the meaning of the term as used in the Criminal P. O. However, it is not necessary to decide this question because, in my view, it is clear on the facts of the present case that Capt. Angelo is a public servant. As I have stated his monthly salary is Rs. 350. Section 70 of the Court of Wards Act authorizes the Court of Wards to make rules consistent with the Act, and r. 11 which was made under s. 70 deals with appointments to posts on duly sanctioned establishments, and this rule makes it clear that all appointments to posts carrying a monthly remuneration of over Rs. 200 including commission are to be made by the Court with the previous sanction of the Govt. It has been said that Capt. Angelo was appointed before this rule came in force; but there is nothing to show that such was the case. Under this rule, a manager whose salary is Rs. 350, could not be appointed by the Court with the previous sanction of Govt. If he could only be appointed with the previous sanction of the Govt., it necessarily follows that he cannot be dismissed without the sanction and approval of Govt. It would be an absurd position if sanction of the Govt. was necessary for an appointment by the Court while the latter could terminate at once without any reference to Govt. An officer in the position of Capt. Angelo can only, in my view, be appointed with the previous action of the Govt. and can only be dismissed with the sanction or approval of the Govt. A Manager of a Court of Wards undoubtedly performs public duties, is responsible for the management and pervision of the estate, and one of the main purposes of taking over estate is to ensure that all Govt. dues are paid. He occupies a public position, and as he cannot be appointed or dismissed without the sanction of the Govt. he is, in my view, a public servant. As I have stated earlier, this has always been conceded by the petitioner in the Courts below. It is strenuously argued that r. 115 ultra vires as s. 20, Court of Wards Act expressly gives the Court power to appoint and remove managers. The rule does not take away such power and only requires the previous sanction of Govt. In my judgment ss. 69 and 70 of the Act empower the making of such a rule and it is not ultra vires.

If he is a public servant, can a prosecution under the amended s. 63 of the Chota Nag. Ten. Act be instituted against him without the previous sanction of the Provincial Govt.? It has been urged before us that no sanction of the Provincial Govt. is necessary by reason of the fact that the Criminal P. O. can have no application whatsoever to proceedings under the Chota Nag. Ten. Act. It is said that the Chota Nag. Ten. Act is a self-contained Act and that the procedure in all proceedings under that Act is governed by the Act itself.

Section 63 (1) (a) of the Chota Nag. Ten. Act creates an offence and that offence is described in cl. (b) of that subsection as a bailable offence which can be compounded with the leave of the Court. The section is silent as to how the offence is to be tried. It has been contended that sub-s. (3) of s. 63 of the Chota Nag. Ten. Act makes it clear that the offence must be disposed of by the Deputy Commissioner. I have already set out this subsection which directs that if it is discovered that there are grounds that a landlord or his agent is guilty under sub-s. (1) (a) to s. 63 of the Act, the Court, during the suit, application or proceeding must inform the Deputy Commissioner. It is said that this sub-section means that the Deputy Commissioner is the only person who can try these offences. If that be so, then it is difficult to understand how the learned Magistrate who heard this case, had jurisdiction to proceed in the matter.

Sub-s. (3) of s. 63 does not give the Deputy Commissioner exclusive jurisdiction; it merely enjoins all Courts who have reason to believe that an offence has been committed to report the matter to the Deputy Commissioner. I am satisfied that there is nothing in s. 63 of the Chota Nag. Ten. Act which deprives the ordinary Criminal Courts of jurisdiction to try all offences under that section. Reliance in the Court below was placed upon s. 258 of the Chota Nag. Ten. Act, and it was suggested that that section deprived the Criminal Courts of jurisdiction. All that s. 258 of the Chota Nag. Ten. Act does is to bar suits in certain cases. In other words it makes the decision of the Tribunal contemplated in the Act final in certain types of proceedings. The wording of s. 258 makes it clear that only proceedings of a civil nature were in the contemplation of the Legislature and such only are made final. The concluding words of the section are :

"and every such decision, order or decree shall have the force of a decree of a Civil Court in a suit between the parties and subject to the provisions of this Act relating to appeal shall be final."

This section cannot deprive a Criminal Court of its jurisdiction to try a criminal offence.

In my judgment s. 63 (1) (a) of the Chota Nag. Ten. Act creates an offence, and if it does, prima facie the Criminal P. O. will apply to the trial of such an offence. Section 5 of the Criminal P. O. is in these terms:—

"(1) All offences under the I. P. O. shall be investigated, inquired into, tried and otherwise dealt with according to the provisions hereinafter contained; (2) All offences under any other law shall be investigated, inquired into, tried and otherwise dealt with according to the same provisions, but subject to any enactment for the time being in force regulating the manner or place of investigating, inquiring into, trying or otherwise dealing with such offences."

The offence under s. 63 of the Chota Nag. Ten. Act is an offence not under the I. P. O. but under a different Act. By reason of s. 5 (2) of the Criminal P. O. it must be investigated into and tried according to the provisions of the Code because, as I have already pointed out, there is nothing in the statute creating the crime dealing with the method in which investigation is to be made and the trial to be held. It was contended that the provisions of the Criminal P. O. would not apply to this case by reason of s. 1 (2) of the Criminal P. O. That sub-section directs that the Criminal P. O. shall extend to the whole of British India; but, in the absence of any specific provision to the contrary, nothing contained in the Code shall affect any special or local laws then in force, or any special jurisdiction or power conferred, or any special form of procedure prescribed, by any other law for the time being in force. It was argued that the Chota Nag. Ten. Act is a local law and, therefore, the Criminal P. O. would not apply. As I have already pointed, the Chota Nag. Ten. Act is silent as to how the case is to be investigated and prosecuted, and that being so, the provisions of the Criminal P. O. must apply.

Holding as I do that in the prosecution of an offence under s. 63 of the Chota Nag. Ten. Act, the provisions of the Criminal P. O. apply, then the provisions of s. 197 of the Criminal P. O. must be complied with. That section expressly states that where a public servant who is not removable from his office save by or with the sanction of the Local Govt. is accused of any offence alleged to have been committed by him while acting or purporting to act in the discharge of his official duty, no Court shall take cognizance of such offence except with the previous sanction of the Local Govt. I have already stated that Capt. Angelo is undoubtedly a public servant, and, in my view, is a servant who is not removable from his office save with the sanction of the Local Govt. In my view, as his appointment could only be made with the sanction of the Provincial Govt., his dismissal also would require such sanction. He is, therefore, in my judgment, a public servant within the meaning of s. 197 of the Criminal P. O.

The previous sanction of the Provincial Govt. is only required when the public servant is accused of an offence alleged to have been committed by him while acting or purporting to act in the discharge of his official duty and does not apply to all kinds of offences. It has been strenuously argued that the offence with which Capt. Angelo is charged is not an offence alleged to have been committed by him while acting or purporting to act in the discharge of his official duty and, therefore, it is said, previous sanction of the Govt. is not necessary. I have already stated that the amended s. 63 (1) (a) of the Chota Nag. Ten. Act makes it an offence for the landlord or his agent to levy certain dues, and it is no offence if the person levying is neither a landlord nor a landlord's agent. The charge in the present case against Capt. Angelo is that as Manager of the Court of Wards, he made the demands. If he made them as landlord or agent of the landlord, then he may have committed a crime. If he did not make them in his capacity as landlord or agent of the landlord, then no crime committed. The allegation in the present case is that whilst acting as agent of a landlord he made illegal demands, and, in my view, it is abundantly clear that Capt. Angelo was accused of an offence alleged to have been committed by him while acting purporting to act in the discharge of his official duty.

The meaning of the words

"is accused of any offence alleged to have been committed by him while acting or purporting to act in the discharge of his official duty," was considered at length by the learned Judges of the Federal Court in the case of Hori Ram Singh v. Emperor (1). In that case the learned Judges were dealing with s. 270 (1) of the Govt. of India Act. Whilst dealing with the construction to be given to the words of that section, the learned Judges also discussed the authorities under s. 197 of the Criminal P. O. At p. 55 Sulaiman, J. observed:

"Nor it is necessary to go to the length of saying that the act constituting the offence should be so inseparably connected with the official duty as to form part and parcel of the same transaction. If the act complained of is an offence, it must necessarily be not an execution of duty, but a deviation from it. What is necessary is that the offence must be in respect of an act done or purporting to be done in execution of duty, that is, in the discharge of an official duty. It must purport to be done in the official capacity with which he is clothed at the time, that is to say under the cloak of an ostensibly official act, though, of course, the offence would really amount to a breach of duty. An act cannot purport to be done in execution of duty unless the offender professes to be acting in pursuance of his official duty and means to convey to the mind of another the impression that he is so acting."

At p. 580*, Varadachariar, J. observed

"In one group of cases, it is insisted that there must be something in the nature of the act complained of that attaches it to the official character of the person doing it."

He cited a number of Indian authorities in support of that proposition. He then mentions another group of cases where much stress had been laid upon the circumstance that the official character or status of the accused gave him the opportunity.

tunity to commit the offence, and then remarked that it seemed to him that the first group of cases laid down the correct principle, and those cases insisted that there must be something in the nature of the act complained of that attached it to the official character of the person. In the present case, it is alleged, Capt. Angelo committed the act complained of in his official capacity, that is as agent of the landlord, and that being so, he committed an offence under s. 63 of the Chota Nag. Ten. Act. In my view the accusation in the present case is precisely the one contemplated in s. 197 (1) of the Criminal P. O. That being so, previous sanction of the Govt. was necessary before the learned Magistrate could take cognizance of this offence.

For these reasons I am satisfied that the learned trying Magistrate had no jurisdiction to order these proceedings to continue and that the learned Deputy Commissioner was right in referring the matter to this Court with the recommendation that the proceedings be quashed. I would, therefore, accept this reference and quash the proceedings which have been instituted against Capt. Angelo without the previous sanction of the Provincial Govt.

It will, however, be open to the Provincial Govt. after considering the facts of the case, to give their sanction to proceedings, and in such an event, a fresh complaint can be made, and proceedings can be carried on to conclusion.

Manohar Lall, J.—I agree. Capt. Angelo is the manager of an estate under the Court of Wards in Chota Nagpur. Therefore, by the operation of s. 59-A of the Court of Wards Act, 1879, he must be deemed to be a public servant within the meaning of the I. P. O. By r. 115, framed by the Court of Wards under s. 70 of the Act as Capt. Angelo is drawing a salary of over Rs. 200 per month, he cannot be removed by the Court of Wards without the sanction of the Provincial Govt. These facts being established, it follows as a necessary consequence, that the provisions of s. 197 of the Criminal P. O. come into operation: that is to say, no Court can take cognizance of any offence said to have been committed by Capt. Angelo while acting or purporting to act in the discharge of his duties as a public servant without the sanction of the Provincial Govt. The learned Advocate for the respondents strenuously argued that the offence created by the amended s. 63 (1) (a) of the Chota Nag. Ten.

Act was a special offence outside the jurisdiction of the Criminal Courts and that it cannot be tried by the ordinary Criminal Courts. He placed reliance upon the insertion and retention of s. 63 within s. 258 of the Chota Nag. Ten. Act even after the amendment in 1938. It may be that the legislature has omitted to remove s. 63, from s. 258, after the amendment of s. 63, or it may be that the section had to be retained in the category of sections enumerated in s. 258, because some proceedings, which may under the old s. 63 have started before the Act was amended, had not yet terminated. In any case the concluding words of s. 258 make it clear that an order passed under s. 63, shall have the force and effect of a decree of a Civil Court in a suit between the parties. It cannot be understood how an order passed convicting or acquitting an accused under the amended s. 63, can have the force and effect of a decree of a Civil Court in a suit between the parties. The obvious intention of s. 258, is, as was pointed out by my Lord the Chief Justice in the course of his elaborate judgment delivered just now, that the Act specifically bars the jurisdiction of any Civil Court to try a suit which would vary, set aside, alter directly or indirectly any order which may be passed under s. 63.

I am not at all impressed by the argument that although Capt. Angelo is a public servant within the meaning of the I. P. O., he is not a public servant within the meaning of the Criminal P. O. The Criminal P. O. does not create any offence; it is a procedural Act. It defines the procedure to be followed by the Courts before taking cognizance of an offence or after a Court has taken cognizance of an offence against an accused. The offence is created either by the I. P. O. or by some other law for the time being in force. In the present case the offence is created by the provisions of the amended s. 63 (1) (a) of the Chota Nag. Ten. Act. In that Act I do not find any procedure provided for the investigation of that offence; nor does the Code define the Court which would try that offence or could give sanction to compound the offence as provided by sub-s. (3). It follows, therefore, as pointed out by my Lord, the Chief Justice, that the ordinary procedure provided in the Criminal P. O. will come into operation and will guide the Courts in taking cognizance of the offence and investigating it if they possess jurisdiction to take cognizance thereof. In the present case as no sanction was obtained from the Provincial Govt., the trial Court had no jurisdiction to take cognizance of the offence.

I should have dealt with the argument of the respondents that r. 115, was ultra vires. The argument took the shape that the Court of Wards has authority under s. 70, to make only such rules as are consistent with the Court of Wards Act. Reliance was placed upon s. 20 of the Act to show that whereas by this section the Court has the power to appoint a manager and also to remove the manager so appointed irrespective of the salary which he draws, r. 115, expressly limits the power of the Court to the appointment of those managers only whose salary does not exceed Rs. 200 a month. The argument is fallacious and omits to consider the effect of s. 69. Section 69, expressly authorises that "In the exercise of the powers and in the discharge of the duties conferred and imposed respectively on the Court by this Act, the Court shall be guided by such orders and instructions as it may from time to time receive from the Provincial Govt."

The Court of Wards itself has framed r. 115, by which they have agreed to be guided by the orders of the Provincial Govts. with respect to the appointment of a manager where his salary is above Rs. 200 per mensem. I do not see any inconsistency between r. 115 and any other provision of the Act. Indeed the provisions of the Act are being carried out with greater efficiency under the control and direction of the Provincial Govt. itself.

It was also argued that the Provincial Govt. have only a power to sanction the appointment of the manager but have no power to remove the manager appointed with their consent or approval. The principle is well established that where an authority has a power to sanction the appointment, the persons so appointed cannot be removed without the sanction of that authority.

For these reasons I agree that the proceedings should be quashed, leaving it open to the parties to obtain the sanction of the Provincial Govt. if they so desire.

Second Appeal No. 41 of 1938

Mst. SAHIBZADI—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT
versus

ABDUL GHAFOOR—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT

Muhammadian Law—Marriage—Dissolution—Suit for, on ground of husband's impotency—Limitation—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 23.

Under Muhammadan Law marriage is a civil contract and the husband's impotency is a continuing breach of contract within the meaning of s. 23, Lim. Act. Consequently, a suit by the wife for dissolution of her marriage with her husband on the ground that he was impotent at the time of marriage and at the date of the suit he was still unable to perform the sexual act is incapable of being barred by limitation.

S. A. from the decree of the Additional District Judge, Shahpur at Mianwali, dated October 16, 1937.

Mr. Abdul Aziz Khan, for the Appellant.

Judgment.—The plaintiff, Mst. Sahibzadi, sued for dissolution of her marriage with the defendant, her husband Abdul Ghafoor, on the ground that he was impotent at the time of marriage and at the date of the suit he was still unable to perform the sexual act. The trial Judge found after consideration of the evidence that the defendant was impotent but he dismissed the suit as barred by time on the ground that the parties had been married ten years and the suit was governed by Art. 120, Lim. Act. He rejected the argument that the matter was covered by s. 23, Lim. Act. On appeal, the learned District Judge appeared to hold that the defendant was impotent but he agreed that the suit was barred by time. The plaintiff has come here in second appeal. The learned District Judge appeared to hold that the defendant was impotent but he did not do so definitely, holding that in any case the suit was barred by time. However, there are several expressions in his judgment which clearly imply that he believed the defendant to be impotent. The evidence leaves no doubt in my mind that the defendant was impotent. The plaintiff swore that she was a virgin, that the defendant had never had sexual intercourse with her and that he was impotent. The defendant did not go into the witness-box. There is medical evidence which supported the plaintiff. I hold under s. 103, Civil P. C. that the defendant was impotent. On the point of limitation, it is argued that under Muhammadan Law marriage is a civil con-act and that the defendant's impotency is a continuing breach of contract. Section 23, Lim. Act, runs:

"In the case of a continuing breach of contract and in the case of a continuing wrong independent of contract, a fresh period of limitation begins to run at every moment of the time during which the breach or the wrong, as the case may be, continues."

It seems to me that this section alone would justify the finding that the suit is within time. The plaintiff is and always has been unable to perform the contract and there is a continuing breach of the contract of marriage. This view is supported by authority both under the Muhammadan Law and under the ordinary civil law: for the former, see Syed Ameer Ali's Muhammadan Law, Vol. 2, p. 531; for cases under the Lim. Act, see Ghizni v. Mehran (1) which held that s. 23, Lim. Act, applies to a suit for restitution of conjugal rights. Sir Meredyth Plowen said:

"The unjustifiable withholding of her person by the wife is a breach of the contract of marriage, and a breach which continues so long as her person is withheld. And upon consideration, I can find no sufficient ground for holding that this is not a continuing breach of contract within the meaning of it is within the terms of s. 23, Lim. Act."

Later he said:

"Virtually, therefore, the suit of a Muhammadan husband against his wife for recovery of his wife is not capable of being barred by limitation."

This judgment was followed and these passages were quoted in Binda v. Kaunsilia (2) a case between Hindus, which also referred to an unpublished judgment of the Bombay High Court. Ghizni v. Mehran (1) was followed by a Division Bench of the Punjab Chief Court in Khairuddin v. Budhi (3). I therefore hold that the suit is within time and accept this appeal. I have already said that the defendant is impotent, but the case must now go back to the trial court in accordance with the rule of Muhammadan Law that after impotency is established, further hearing of the suit should be adjourned for a year in order that it may be ascertained whether the defect is removable. In this case I would hold that the year runs from the date of the lower Court's decree, April 26, 1937. The second appeal was admitted in this Court in January, 1938, and the hearing has been delayed because the husband has not been personally served. The appellant's Counsel alleges that he has been evading service. He has at last been served by substituted service but has not appeared.

I hold that the defendant is impotent, that the suit is within time and return the case to the Court of the Subordinate Judge to give the defendant an opportunity of proving that he is no longer impotent. The case is to be sent down promptly and the learned Subordinate Judge is to take prompt action. If the defendant is not personally served, he is to effect substituted service. If the defendant does not appear, the wife's statement will probably be enough to prove his continued impotency. The case is to be put before the learned Subordinate Judge, Fourth Class, Shahpur, on May 8, 1939. The parties are to bear their own costs.

Criminal Revision Applications Nos. 83 and 84 of 1939

ZIA-UL HASAN, J.

BABU—ACCUSED—APPLICANT

versus

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898) ss. 195 (1) (a), 144—Complaint under s. 195 (1) (a), absence of—Effect—There was held no complaint—Order under s. 144 against public generally—Scope of—Requirements of—Order held not in accordance with law.

The fact that no complaints required by the mandatory provisions of s. 195 (1) (a), Criminal P. O., were made makes the trials nugatory.

On a report of a Sub-Inspector of Police that certain persons had sacrificed a cow against the order passed by a Sub-Divisional Magistrate under s. 144, Criminal P. O., prohibiting such sacrifice within certain area, with a suggestion that cases under s. 188, I. P. O., should be started against those persons, the Sub-Divisional Magistrate sent the reports to the District Magistrate that those persons be prosecuted. The District Magistrate passed an order sanctioning the prosecution and making the case over to a particular Magistrate and returned the records to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate who then sent the cases to the Magistrate named:

Held, that the reports sent to District Magistrate were not complaints under s. 195 (1) (a). The mere fact that the Sub-Divisional Magistrate while giving evidence before the trying Magistrate several months after, called them complaints did not make them complaints. 148 Ind. Cas. 784 (1) and 140 Ind. Cas. 184 (2), relied on.

The scope of an order passed under s. 144, Criminal P. O., against the public generally is narrower than that passed against an individual and served personally on him. Although the word "public" has not been used with the expression "particular place" in s. 144 (3) still the law intends not only that the particular place should be specified but also that it should be a place which is frequented or visited by the public.

An order passed under s. 144, Criminal P. O., was addressed to the general public and was to the effect that nobody shall sacrifice a cow within a radius of a mile from certain villages:

(1) 60 P. R. 1879 (F. B.).

(2) 13 A. 126; A. W. N. 1891, 18.

(3) 180 P. R. 1892.

Held, that the order proclaimed was not in accordance with law. 131 Ind. Cas. 649 (3), relied on.

Or. R. App. of the order of the Additional Sessions Judge, Bahraich, dated August 23, 1939.

Mr. M. H. Kidwai, for the Applicant.

The Assistant Govt. Advocate, for the Crown.

Order.—There are two applications in revision against appellate orders of the learned Additional Sessions Judge of Bahraich upholding the convictions and sentences of the applicants under s. 188, I. P. O. Application No. 83 has been brought by Babu alone while Application No. 84 has been filed on behalf of nine persons.

It appears that on January 27, 1939, the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Nanpara in the Bahraich District took proceedings under s. 144, Criminal P. O. and proclaimed a notice that as a breach of the peace was apprehended by the Muslims of villages Shankarpur and Muqam intending to sacrifice cows against previous practice, it was ordered that from January 31, 1939, to February 3, 1939 (both days inclusive) no person should sacrifice a cow within a radius of a mile from Shankarpur and Muqam and that five or more persons should not assemble at any place except for prayers.

On February 8, 1939, the station officer of Sunwan, within whose jurisdiction Shankarpur and Muqam are situated, made a report that twenty-eight persons named in the report sacrificed cows on February 1, 1939, inside the house of Abdul Razzaq (one of the twenty-eight persons reported against) in village Shankarpur. A similar report was made on the same date against three persons one of whom is Babu applicant in Application No. 83, and in both cases, the Sub-Inspector suggested that cases under s. 188, I. P. O. be started against the persons reported against. On these reports the Sub-Divisional Magistrate sent reports to the District Magistrate on February 8, praying that the persons mentioned in the Sub-Inspector's report be prosecuted under s. 188, I. P. O. In the case of Babu, the learned District Magistrate passed the following order on the Sub-Divisional Magistrate's report :—

"The prosecution of Babu and two others under s. 188, I. P. O. is sanctioned. The case is made over to Mr. Raghubir Singh Magistrate, First Class, for disposal."

A similar order was passed against the twenty-eight persons mentioned above in the above case. Thereupon twenty-eight persons including the applicants in Application No. 84 were prosecuted under s. 188 in one case and Babu and two others in the other case. Out of the twenty-eight accused the learned trying Magistrate acquitted seventeen and convicted eleven. In the other case two were acquitted and Babu was convicted. In the first case Abdul Razzaq was sentenced to six months rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 100 and his co-accused to four months rigorous imprisonment and to a fine of Rs. 25 each. In the other case Babu was given a sentence of six months' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 25. All the convicted persons in the two cases appealed but their appeals were dismissed by the learned Additional Sessions Judge except with regard to two of Abdul Razzaq's co-accused to whom he gave the benefit of doubt and whom he acquitted. It is thus that the nine persons in one case and Babu alone in the other bring these applications for revision.

The first point taken before me is that the trial and conviction of all the applicants was illegal as no complaint as required by s. 195 (1) (a) of the Criminal P. O. had been made by the learned Magistrate who promulgated the order under s. 144. This contention appears to me to have force. The reports of the learned Sub-Divisional Magistrate in both the cases show that they were made to the District Magistrate with a view to obtaining his permission for the prosecution of the persons concerned. The learned Govt. Advocate argues that the said reports were in fact complaints under s. 195 (1) (a) but I am unable to agree with this view. Not only did the learned District Magistrate not treat these reports as complaints but the lists of papers that the learned Sub-Divisional Magistrate submitted along with his reports to the District Magistrate clearly show that the reports were not meant to be complaints but only reports for sanction of prosecution of the persons concerned. The list in one case comprises (1) the report of the station officer, (2) recovery list, (3) statements and Sub-Divisional Magistrate's orders on them to the station officer, (4) sketch of Abdul Razzaq's house, and (5) Parbhu Chaukidar's statement and in the other, (1) report of the station officer, (2) recovery list, (3) sketch (4) Lakshmi Narain's statement, and (5) statements of four persons. The lists of papers submitted were such as could enable the District Magistrate to form an opinion as to the advisability or otherwise of prosecution. It seems clear to my mind that the intention was to obtain the District Magistrate's sanction for prosecution and not to make a complaint to him under s. 195 (1) (a). It may also be noted that after recording his order on February 9, in one case and on February 11, in the other the learned District Magistrate returned the records to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate and the latter sent the cases to Mr. Raghubir Singh with an endorsement:—

"To Mr. Raghubir Singh for favour of disposal".

This also shows that the learned District Magistrate did not treat the reports as complaints under the Criminal P. O. The learned Govt. Advocate refers to the evidence of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate who proved his reports before the trying Magistrate and called them complaints; but his calling them complaints several months afterwards does not, in my opinion, make them complaints when as I have shown above they are on the face of them mere reports for sanction and when they were treated as such by the learned District Magistrate.

The fact that no complaints required by the mandatory provisions of s. 195 (1) (a) were made makes the trials nugatory. In the case of Kali Charan v. King-Emperor, (11 O. W. N. 473) (1) the facts were on all fours with those of the present case, and it was held by a learned Judge of this Court that if a Court takes cognizance of an offence under s. 185 without a complaint as required by s. 195 (1) (a), Criminal P. O. and convicts the accused, the irregularity in the procedure cannot be cured by s. 537 (a), Criminal P. O. and the conviction cannot be legally sustained. In that case a person who had failed to pay up the balance due from him on the sale of an excise licence, was prosecuted under s. 185, I. P. O. and the prosecution had started on the following order of the learned District Magistrate on the report of the Excise Officer:—

"Prosecution under s. 185 is sanctioned. Case to Syed Mohammad Zakir"

With regard to this order of the District Magistrate which it will be noted, was exactly similar to the order in the case now before me, the learned Judge remarked:—

"Now this order of the District Magistrate cannot by any stretch of language be deemed to be a complaint within the meaning of the term as defined under s. 4 (h) of the Criminal P. O."

In the case of Abdul Rahman v. Emperor (A. I. R. 1932 All. 190) (2) the facts were that the accused lodged information at the Police station to the effect that a motor lorry belonging to a certain person had been overloaded. On investigation this information was found to be false. The investigation officer then moved the Superintendent of Police for the prosecution of the accused under s. 182, I. P. O. The Superintendent of Police sent the report to the District Magistrate with the following note:—

"District Magistrate. The accused is the reader of the Tahsildar of Konch. Have you any objection to his prosecution."

The District Magistrate passed the following order:—

"I sanction the prosecution of Abdul Rahman, Judicial Moharrir, Konch. Case to Sub-Divisional Magistrate for disposal. The Moharrir will be suspended till the disposal of the case."

It was held by two learned Judges of the Allahabad High Court that there was no complaint either by the Superintendent of Police or by the District Magistrate, and consequently, the conviction of the accused was set aside.

Although the present application must be allowed on the ground mentioned above, but I consider it necessary to deal with another point raised on behalf of the applicants. It is that the order proclaimed under s. 144, Criminal P. O. was not in accordance with law. The order as I have already noted was addressed to the general public and was to the effect that nobody shall sacrifice a cow within a radius of a mile from the villages of Shankarpur and Muqam. Now looking to s. 144, Criminal P. O. it appears to me that the scope of an order passed under s. 144 against the public generally is narrower than that passed against an individual and served personally on him. Sub-s. 3 of s. 144 lays down:—

"An order under this section may be directed to a particular individual, or to the public generally when frequenting or visiting a particular place."

Now although the word "public" has not been used with the expression "particular place" still the law intends not only that the particular place should be specified but also that it should be a place which is frequented or visited by the public. In the case of (Devatha) Sriramamurthy, (A. I. R. 1931 Mad. 242) (3), it was observed:—

(2) A. I. R. 1932 All. 190; 140 Ind. Cas. 184; (1932) A. L. J. 155; (1932) Cr. Cas. 206; 33 Cr. L. J. 948; Ind. Rul. (1932) All. 633.

"The order consists of two parts, one addressed to five individuals, the other to the public generally. So far as it is addressed to the public generally, it is clearly a violation of the express terms of s. 144(3), which states that an order under this section may be addressed to the public generally when frequenting or visiting a particular place. No order can be passed against the public without that limitation as to place, namely, that it must be one, whether publicly or privately owed, which at the time when the prohibition operates, the public frequent or visit. They may have a right to frequent the place as in highways and places of public resort or they may be allowed or invited to visit it as at a public meeting held in private premises. But the place must be one which is open to the public as such. And this involves that the public cannot be prohibited from putting up flags in private houses first because those who put up the flags are owners or occupants of such houses and second because the public as such neither frequent nor visit private houses. It is a misuse of language to call house owners who use their houses members of the public for the purpose of this section, and I have not been shown any instance of such a use of the section."

The convictions and sentences of the applicants in both the cases must, therefore, be set aside and no question of re-trial arises owing to the view that I have taken of the order under s. 144, Criminal P. O.

The applications are accepted and the convictions and sentences of the applicants set aside.

PATNA HIGH COURT

Criminal Revision No. 590 of 1939

December 4, 1939

FAZI ALI, J.

RAM CHANDRA SINGH AND OTHERS—PETITIONERS

versus

BALDEO SINGH—OPPOSITE PARTY

Bihar and Orissa Village Administration Act (III of 1922), ss. 68, 53 (2)—Complaint filed before Magistrate transferred by him to Union Board—Accused wishing to get it transferred to proper Court—Procedure.

Section 68, Bihar and Orissa Village Administration Act, does not empower the Union Board to re-transfer a case to the Court of a Magistrate but it only empowers it to direct the complainant to file a complaint before the proper Court. Where the complaint had already been filed before the Magistrate and transferred by him to the Union Board under s. 53 (2), the procedure to be followed by the accused if he wishes to get it transferred to the proper Court, is to move the District Magistrate or the Sub-Divisional Magistrate under s. 53 (2) (b) of the Act.

Or. R. against an order of the District Magistrate of Saran, dated September 15, 1939, confirming an order of the Union Board, Naini, dated August 6, 1939.

Mr. Rai T. N. Sahay, for the Petitioners.

Messrs. S. N. Sahay and K. P. Varma, for the Opposite Party.

Fazi Ali, J.—The only point raised in this case is that the Union Board of Naini has acted beyond its jurisdiction in trying this case. It appears that the opposite party preferred a complaint before a Magistrate charging the petitioners with an offence under s. 323, I. P. C. The Magistrate under s. 53 (2) of the Bihar and Orissa Village Administration Act, 1922, transferred the complaint to the Union Board. The accused were then summoned, whereupon as is stated in para. 4 of this petition, they filed a petition under s. 68 of the Act, praying that the case be retransferred to the proper Court at Chapra. The Union Board, however, rejected this petition and proceeded with the trial, and ultimately convicted the petitioners and sentenced petitioners Nos. 1 and 2 to pay a fine of Rs. 5 each and the remaining three petitioners to pay a fine of Rs. 9 each. The petitioners thereupon moved the District Magistrate against their conviction and sentence, but the learned District Magistrate rejected their application on the ground that he was unable to interfere with the conviction unless there was a failure of justice, and in his view there was no failure of justice, in the present case. The petitioners thereupon filed this petition for revision in this Court.

Section 68 of the Act provides that "If the accused appears and claims to be tried by a Magistrate, the panchayat shall direct the complainant to file a complaint before the proper Court."

Now, what is stated in para. 4 of the petition is that the petitioners prayed before the Union Board that the case be re-transferred to the proper Court at Chapra. Section 68 does not empower the Union Board to re-transfer a case to the Court of a Magistrate but it only empowers it to direct the complainant to file a complaint before the proper Court. In the present case the complaint had already been filed before the Magistrate and so the procedure to be followed by the petitioners was to move the District Magistrate or the Sub-Divisional Magistrate under s. 53 (2) (b) of the Act, which provides that "the District Magistrate or Sub-Divisional Magistrate may transfer any case from one panchayat to another or to any other Court subordinate to him."

In my opinion no case has been made out for interfering with the order passed by the panchayat, and the application is, therefore, rejected.

S.

Application rejected.

KARINAGISETTI CHENNAPPA—

versus

KARINAGISETTI ONKARAPPA—

RESPONDENT

Hindu Law—Guardian—Paternal grandmother of minor—Endorsement of payment made by her, if can bind minor under s. 21, Limitation Act (IX of 1908)—Desirability in matter of appointment of guardian, when relevant—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), ss. 21, 20—Lawful guardian, who is—Acknowledgment by de facto guardian, whether prevents debt being time-barred.

The ancient texts of Hindu Law do not provide for the management of a minor's property beyond stating that the guardianship shall vest with the king. The position of the king is now taken by the Court. Custom has, however, recognized that the father of a Hindu minor, and on his death the minor's mother, is entitled to the guardianship of the minor's estate. But the custom has not extended the rule beyond the mother. Neither by Hindu Law nor custom is the grandmother recognized as the lawful guardian of the minor. No member of the family other than the father or the mother has been recognized as having the right of guardianship. All other things being equal, the nearest relative of the minor should have the position of guardian but if the father and the mother have died, no relative can become the lawful guardian without an order of the Court. It follows that neither the paternal grandmother nor any other relations beyond the mother can be regarded as possessing an inherent right to act as lawful guardians for the purposes of s. 21, Lim. Act, even if such person happens to be the minor's nearest living relation. Hence the endorsement of payment made by the minor's paternal grandmother cannot bind the minor. 106 Ind. Cas. 863, (7), overruled. Opinion of Viswanatha Sastri, J., in 92 Ind. Cas. 821 (6), disapproved. [p. 753, col. 2.]

Per Mockett, J.—Desirability can only be relevant in an application to remove the father or mother or in an application to appoint some one else.

Per Krishnaswami Ayyangar, J.—A lawful guardian can be no other than a person whom the law invests with the right and duty of protecting the property of the minor. Such a person is generally described as a de jure guardian in contrast to a de facto guardian. The law does make a real distinction between a de jure guardian and a de facto guardian. A de facto guardian may be a relation or even a mere intermeddling stranger who in fact assumes the management of a minor's property though in law he or she has no authority to do so. It is consequently impossible to regard him as a lawful guardian, notwithstanding the fact that by reason of the decision of Courts, the acts of a de facto guardian bind the estate of the minor, if done under the pressure of necessity or for the clear benefit of his estate.

An acknowledgment of a debt made by a de facto guardian of a minor does not prevent the debt from being time-barred. 179 Ind. Cas. 201 (1), relied on. [p. 750, col. 1]

S. A. against a decree of the District Court, Bellary, in A. S. No 59 of 1933.

Messrs. A. Bhujanga Rao and D. R. Krishna Rao, for the Appellant.

Mr. K. Srinivasa Rao, for the Respondent.

Leach, C. J.—This appeal raises the question whether the paternal grandmother of a Hindu minor is his lawful guardian when she happens to be his nearest living relation. From 1917 to 1921, the respondent's father had on various occasions borrowed money from the appellant. On September 18, 1924, an account was taken and it was found that the respondent's father owed the appellant an aggregate sum of Rs. 3,825 for which he executed a promissory note. The instrument was not properly stamped and therefore was not admissible in evidence. Realizing the defect, the appellant filed a suit in the Court of the District Munsif of Bellary for relief on the basis of a settled account. The date of the institution of the suit was July 16, 1932, and unless the appellant was entitled to rely on certain endorsements on the promissory notes, his suit was time-barred. I should mention that the respondent's father had died on October 4, 1924, and the suit was against the respondent as his legal representative. The respondent's mother had pre-deceased his father and on his father's death, Neelamma, his paternal grandmother, took charge of his property. On September 6, 1927, she paid to the appellant a sum of Rs. 70 in reduction of the interest due on the loans and made an endorsement to this effect on the promissory note. On November 10, 1927, the District Court of Bellary acting under the provisions of the Guardians and Wards Act appointed one Basappa, the guardian of the minor's property. On February 18, 1928, Basappa paid a sum in reduction of the amount due and made an endorsement on the promissory note recording the fact of payment. On July 18, 1929, Neelamma made another payment in reduction of the debt and this was also followed by an endorsement on the instrument. Basappa was then alive and was still the lawful guardian of the respondent, but he died a month later. The last payment to the appellant was made by Neelamma on August 25, 1929. This was a sum of Rs. 1 000 paid towards the principal. Again she made an endorsement on the promissory note recording the fact of payment. In order to save limitation the appellant has to rely on the endorsements made by Neelamma on September 6, 1927, and on August 25, 1929. The District Munsif and on appeal the District Judge of Bellary held that the suit was time-barred. The appellant then filed this second appeal which has been placed before a Full Bench in view of conflicting decisions of this Court bearing on the question whether Neelamma was under Hindu Law the lawful guardian of the minor when she made these particular endorsements. Section 20, Lim. Act, states that where interest on a debt is, before the expiration of the prescribed period, paid by the debtor or his agent duly authorized in this behalf, or where part of the principal of a debt is, before the expiration of the prescribed period, paid by the debtor or by his agent, a fresh period of limitation shall be computed from the time when the payment was made, provided that, save in the case of a payment of interest made before January 1, 1928, an acknowledgment of the payment appears in the handwriting of, or in a writing signed by, the person making the payment. Section 21 (1), states that the expression "agent duly authorized in his behalf" includes the person's lawful guardian. The fact that Neelamma was the de facto guardian of the minor would not help the appellant. It was expressly held by a Bench of this Court (Madhavan Nair and Abdur Rahman, JJ.). In Nama Nagayya v. Kalle Narasayya (1), that an acknowledgment of a debt made by a de facto guardian of a minor does not prevent the debt from being time-barred. This decision followed a previous decision of this Court to the same effect. The wording of s. 20 and s. 21, Lim. Act, leaves no room for doubt that this decision is correct. The appellant, however, says that Neelamma was the lawful guardian of the minor, except during the period when Basappa was acting in pursuance of the order passed under the Guardians and Wards Act. In support of this contention the learned Advocate for the appellant has relied on a passage in the edition of Strange's "Hindu Law" published in 1864, Edn. 4 and a passage in Macnaghten's "Principles and Precedents of Hindu Law" quoted in Kristo Kissor Neoghy v. Kader Moye Dossee (2). The passage from Strange is at p. 72* and reads as follows:

"The natural guardians of a minor are, first his father, then his mother, elder brother, paternal relatives and maternal relatives."

The passage from Macnaghten is in these words:

"A father is recognized as the legal guardian of his children, when he exists; and when the father is dead, the mother may assume the guardianship. In default of her, an elder brother of a minor is competent to assume the guardianship of him. In default of such brother, the paternal relations generally are entitled to hold the office of guardian; and failing such relatives, the office devolves on the maternal kinsmen according to their degree of proximity; but the appointment of guardians universally rests with the ruling power."

The learned Advocate would have it that these passages must be accepted as authoritative support for the proposition that the legal guardianship devolves upon the nearest paternal relative and in default of a paternal relative on the nearest maternal kinsman. I am not prepared to accept this argument. I consider that it is contrary to principle and accepted authority. It is common ground that the ancient texts of Hindu Law do not provide for the management of a minor's property beyond stating that the guardianship shall vest with the king. The position of the king is now taken by the Court. Custom has, however, recognized that the father of a Hindu minor, and on his death the minor's mother, is entitled to the guardianship of the minor's estate. This has been accepted from time immemorial, so universally that the right of the father or of the mother, as the case may be, cannot now be disputed, but it appears to be equally clear that custom has not extended the rule beyond the mother. In Kristo Kissor Neoghy v. Kader Moye Dossee (2); Garth, C. J., referring to the passage from Macnaghten which I have quoted, said:

"We do not think that this passage means that (2) 2 O L R 583.

(1) (1938) 2 M L J 501; 179 Ind. Cas. 201; A I R 1938 Mad. 853; 48 L W 268; (1938) M W N 878; 11 R M 551; 1 L R (1939) Mad. 65.

All the persons therein mentioned have in turn an absolute right to take upon themselves the guardianship of a minor, without any permission or authority from the ruling power. If it did mean this, the authorities cited would not appear to support it."

Garth, O.J., then went out to point out that Jagannathan, one of the authorities, cited after quoting from Manu this passage: "The king should guard the property which descends to an infant by inheritance, until he returns from the house of his preceptor, or until he has passed his minority," and from the Ratnacara this statement: "Wealth which descends to an infant by inheritance, and becomes the property of the minor, let the king guard; that is, let him protect it from the other heirs," and proceeded to add these observations of his own:

"Consequently, the meaning is, let him (the king) act in such manner that other heirs may not take the whole, defrauding the infant who is incapable for an age of conducting his own affairs; or the sense may be, let him commit the share of the minor in trust to any one co-heir or other guardian."

There is here authority that no one in the family is entitled as of right to act as the guardian of the minor. The right to act then depended upon the decision of the king. The judgment in Kristo Kissor Neoghy v. Kader Moye Dossee (2), is of special importance in the present case as it related to a contest between the paternal grandmother and the paternal uncle on the one side and the maternal grandmother on the other for the custody of a minor. The Court held that none of them was entitled to claim custody as the lawful guardian. The judgment in Kristo Kissor Neoghy v. Kader Moye Dossee (2) was accepted as correctly stating the law in Bhikus Koer v. Chamela Koer (3), which was also decided by the Calcutta High Court. This was a case under the Guardians and Wards Act and the contesting parties were the maternal grandmother and step-sister of a minor who were his nearest relatives. Trevelyan and Stevens, J.J., held that there was not, even before the Guardians and Wards Act was passed, any one other than the father or the mother who had an absolute right to the custody of a Hindu minor.

Kristo Kissor Neoghy v. Kader Moye Dossee (2) has been cited with approval in two decisions of this Court: Ranganayaki Ammal v. Ramanuja Iyengar (4) and Thayammal v. Kuppanna Kaundan (5). In the latter case Sadasiva Iyer, J., following Kristo Kissor Neoghy v. Kader Moye Dossee (2) and Bhikus Koer v. Chamela Koer (3), held that under Hindu Law nobody else than the father and mother of a minor "with probable exceptions in favour of the elder brother and the direct male and female ancestors of the minor" is entitled as a matter of natural right to be, and to act as, guardian of a minor's person and properties. Recourse must, he said, be had to the Court (representing the rights of the king which are paramount to even the rights of the parents) where there is no natural guardian alive. It was not indicated how exceptions might arise in favour of the elder brother or the direct male and female ancestors of a minor and the decision cannot be taken as going really beyond what was decided in the two Calcutta cases. In Seetharamanna v. Appiah (6) Viswanatha Sastriar, J. expressed the opinion that there is nothing in Hindu Law "which limits guardianship only to the father, the mother, and, failing them the king." This statement cannot be accepted as correctly stating the position. As I have already pointed out the Hindu Law, in so far as it is to be gathered from the ancient texts, only provides for the king having charge of a minor's property. There is nothing to be found in the ancient writings which can be interpreted as giving the father or the mother any right to guardianship. Their present rights in this respect are based merely on custom.

(5) 38 M 1126; 26 Ind. Cas. 179; A I R 1915 Mad. 459; 27 M L J 285.

In Kola Surayya v. Kola Subbamma (7) Devadoss and Jackson, J.J. went very far and it is this decision which has caused this appeal to be placed before a Full Bench. They decided that under the Hindu Law, in the absence of the father and the mother, the paternal grandmother is the natural guardian of the grandchildren. They said that there was no direct authority for the contention that the paternal grandmother was not the natural guardian of her grandchildren in the absence of their father and mother, but they did not consider the bearing of the two Calcutta cases to which I have referred. The basis of their decision that the paternal grandmother is the natural guardian of her grandchildren is to be gathered from this statement in the judgment:

"Considering the habits and customs of the people of this part of the country, there is no reason why the paternal grandmother should not be considered as the natural guardian of her grandchildren in the absence of their father and their mother."
(6) 49 M 765; 92 Ind. Cas. 627; A I R 1928 Mad. 457; 50 M L J 689; 23 L W 285; (1928) M W N 238.

(7) 53 M L J 677 106 Ind. Cas. 863; A I R 1928 Mad. 42; (1927) M W N 911.

The short answer to this statement is that neither by Hindu Law nor custom is the grandmother recognized as the lawful guardian of the minor. No member of the family other than the father or the mother has been recognized as having the right of guardianship and this statement receives full support from Mayne, Ed. 10, p. 299, from Mulla's Principles of Hindu Law, Edn. 8, p. 565 and from Trevelyan's "Hindu Law" Edn. 3, p. 231. The Bombay High Court in effect expressed the same opinion in In re Gulbai and Lilbai (8). Of course all other things being equal, the nearest relative of the minor should have the position of guardian but if the father and the mother have died, no relative can become the lawful guardian without an order of the Court. I hold that the Courts below were right in refusing to recognize Neelamma as the guardian in law of the minor and in rejecting the claim that her endorsements bound him. It follows that I consider that Kola Surayya v. Kola Subbamma (7) was wrongly decided and therefore should not be followed. I would dismiss the appeal with costs.

Mockett, J.—I entirely agree and am only adding a few words in view of the fact that we are differing from a Bench of this High Court. After the very full investigation into this subject which has been made to-day—the learned Counsel for the appellant referred to all the relevant decisions—I think it is clear that at least at some period of time which it is difficult to fix, the only guardian of a minor was "the king," as he is so described in the texts. But to-day undoubtedly it cannot be argued that the father and in his absence the mother are not the legal guardians. They have been so recognized by usage and custom. Indeed the position of the father is impliedly recognized by statute under s. 19, Guardians and Wards Act. How all this came about is attractively put in the latest edition of Mayne on Hindu Law, para. 231, at p. 299. The learned author envisages the natural delegation to the parents by the king of duties so intimately affecting their son, but that idea, as has been pointed out in the authorities to which my Lord has referred, although now having attained the force of law, has never been extended beyond the parents by the Courts with the exception of the decision in Kola Surayya (8) 32 B 50; 9 Bom. L R 923.

v. Kola Subbamma (7). In the case of persons other than the parents, an express delegation or appointment is required and this has been done and is to-day done through the machinery of the Court of Wards. With all respect, I think the learned Judges who decided Kola Surayya v. Kola Subbamma (7) confused the two positions, namely a consideration as to who was the most desirable person to be appointed as guardian of a minor with a consideration of whether desirability constituted a person a legal guardian automatically. The difference between the two positions is fully recognized by Davar, J. in In re Gulbai and Lilbai (8) and it seems to me that if these two distinctions are kept apart, this subject presents very little difficulty. Desirability can only be relevant in an application to remove the father or mother or in an application to appoint some one else. I agree that the decision of my learned brothers Devadoss and Jackson, JJ. in Kola Surayya v. Kola Subbamma (7) is not in conformity with authority, and that this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Krishnaswami Ayyangar, J.—It is scarcely necessary for me to add anything after, if I may say so with the utmost respect, the full and elaborate consideration that the matter has received at the hands of my Lord. The question, in short, is whether a paternal grandmother can by reason of her relationship alone be held to be a lawful guardian within the meaning of s. 21, Lim. Act. She may in a sense be regarded as a natural guardian as her relationship to the minor is so close that she may be expected naturally to watch over and guard his interests. It is, however better to avoid the use of the expression for the present purpose, as we are not concerned with finding whether in the ordinary course of nature she is or is not a fit and proper person to protect the minor's interest in the absence of a nearer relation. The statute has used the expression lawful guardian and the introduction of the term natural guardian cannot scarcely elucidate discussion, but on the contrary may divert the attention.

The Act does not define the expression 'lawful guardian.' But it is obvious, that we must resort to the personal law of the minor or to other enactments, if any to ascertain its meaning. The only enactment having a bearing is the Guardians and Wards Act, 1890, which does no more than define the word 'guardian' simpliciter. We have, therefore, to fall back on the personal law of the minor, i.e. the Hindu Law, to get at the meaning of the expression with which we are concerned. If a person has been appointed or declared a guardian by Court under the Guardians and Wards Act, he or she is undoubtedly a lawful guardian. The difficulty arises only when no such appointment has been made. A lawful guardian can be no other than a person whom the law invests with the right and duty of protecting the property of the minor. Such a person is generally described as a de jure guardian in contrast to a de facto guardian. The law does make a real distinction between a de jure guardian and a de facto guardian. A de facto guardian may be a relation or even a mere intermeddling stranger who in fact assumes the management of a minor's property though in law he or she has no authority to do so. It is consequently impossible to regard him as a lawful guardian, notwithstanding the fact that by reason of the decision of Courts, the acts of a de facto guardian bind the estate of the minor, if done under the pressure of necessity or for the clear benefit of his estate.

There is in the texts of Hindu Law no warrant for regarding a paternal grandmother or indeed even the parents, themselves for that matter, as the lawful guardians of a minor entitled to manage his property as of right. The texts bearing upon the point are few, and do not throw any direct light on the point under consideration. They only seem to establish the proposition that it is the king alone who as parens patriæ is the universal and supreme guardian of all the minors and their estates in the kingdom. He of course has the power to delegate his authority and to appoint guardians, and that power is now vested in the Courts established by law by a process of legislative delegation, if I may so call it. As has been pointed out by my Lord, the parents of a minor have been so long and so consistently regarded as lawful guardians by the Courts no less than by the community that an exception in their favour must be held to have been engrafted on the primeval law of the Hindu text writers. The father and in his absence the mother must accordingly be regarded as lawful guardians, not requiring an appointment for acting as such, and this has now to be treated as an integral rule of the law itself. But such a custom is wholly lacking in the case of other remoter relations not excluding the paternal grandmother, however much they may be interested in the welfare of the minor. In the passages cited from Macnaghten and Strange, there would seem to be at the first look a statement of the order of lawful guardianship which includes other relations besides the father and the mother.

It is, however, clear to my mind that the enumeration was not intended to declare the persons to be recognized as lawful guardians under the Hindu Law without reference to an appointment by Court. It seems to me that it will be more in consonance with the spirit of the law to hold that what was intended by the enumeration was but an indication of the order of preference which the Court should bear in mind in making the choice of a guardian among the available relations, the dominant consideration being the welfare of the minor. It follows that neither the paternal grandmother nor any other relations beyond the mother can be regarded as possessing an inherent right to act as lawful guardians for the purposes of s. 21, Lim. Act. I have the less hesitation in assenting to this view, as I consider that it will tend to the better protection of the minors' properties than if I were to hold that a series of relations commencing from the elder brother and including the paternal and the maternal relations have the inherent right directly and without an appointment by the Court to assume charge of a minor's estate and proceed to keep alive debts on his behalf. Such an expansion of the rule is, it seems to me, fraught with dangerous consequences, and in the absence of binding authority, should not be upheld. I concur in the judgment just now pronounced by my Lord.

Criminal Miscellaneous Application No. 108 of 1939

December 11, 1939

THOMAS, O. J. AND RADHA KRISHNA, J.
DISTRICT MAGISTRATE, SULTANPUR

—COMPLAINANT—APPLICANT

versus

MR. RAMJAS YADAVA AND MR. RAM
NARESH SINGH—OPPOSITE PARTIES

Contempt of Court—During pendency of proceedings under s. 107, Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), against certain persons, an M. L. A. writing to Magistrate to withdraw proceedings against one of them—Contempt of Court held committed.

No member of the Legislative Assembly has any right to interfere in the course of administration of criminal justice.

While proceedings under s. 107, Criminal P. O., against certain persons were pending in the Court of a Magistrate, a member of the Legislative Assembly wrote a letter to the Magistrate with the intention that the proceedings against one of the persons should be withdrawn:

Held, that the latter grossly offended against the law of contempt of Court.

Cr. Mis. App. for taking action under Contempt of Courts Act.

The Assistant Govt. Advocate, for the Crown.

Mr. M. H. Kidwai, for the Accused.

Order.—This is a case for contempt of Court against Ram Naresh Singh, M. L. A., and Ram Jas Yadava, President of the District Congress Committee of Sultanpur, on the complaint of the District Magistrate of Sultanpur.

As there was fear of communal disturbance, two separate cases were started against 12 Hindus and 12 Muhammadans under s. 107, Criminal P. O., in the Court of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Kadi-

Magistrate bound down both the parties on June 5, 1939. On appeal, the learned Sessions Judge of Fyzabad, on July 21, 1939, remanded both the cases for further evidence. The learned Sub-Divisional Magistrate fixed the cases for further evidence on August 31, 1939. It appears that on the same date about two hours before the hearing of the cases Ram Naresh Singh, M. L. A., wrote the following letter to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate and Ram Jas Yadava took it and gave it to the Magistrate. It is as follows:

"My dear Deputy Sahib,

I have nowadays been touring in Kadipur Tahsil in connection with Congress work. In this tour I had the chance of visiting Dostpur also. Then I came to know that proceedings under s. 107, are again going to be started against the same 24 persons. I also fully approve of this proceeding. But I have realised one thing. Certain mischief-mongers have been left from prosecution and some innocent persons have been entrapped. So I thought to suggest to you to amend the list, if possible. The famous Leader Barrister Inayatullah and one Shya Baran may be included, and one Benchu Rai, who is the President of the Mandal Congress Com. and who was not actual at Dostpur on the day of the scuffle and whom I have greatly reprimanded and have taken under promise to do nothing without my permission, may be deleted from the list. I hope you will take it in public service spirit and try to act according to my suggestion. The bearer of the letter is the President of the D. C. C. and a statement in detail can be had with him.

Soliciting a reply,

Yours sincerely,

(Sd.) Ram Naresh Singh."

Benchu Rai, who is mentioned in the letter, was a member of the Dostpur Congress Mandal and was one of the persons against whom proceedings under s. 107 had been taken. The intention of the accused Ram Naresh Singh in writing the letter was that the proceedings under s. 107 should be withdrawn against Benchu Rai and we have no doubt that the accused when he wrote the letter thought that in his position as a member of the Legislative Assembly entitled him to write the letter to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate.

It is not necessary for us to deal with the matter at length because the accused have admitted their guilt, but we may point out that the letter grossly offends against the law of Contempt of Court. It was written at a time when the proceedings were pending in the Court of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, and it was clearly an attempt to influence the Magistrate to drop the proceedings against Benchu Rai. No member of the Legislative Assembly has any right to interfere in such a manner in the course of administration of criminal justice.

When the case came up for hearing before us, the accused tendered the following written apology:

"The humble application of Ram Naresh Singh and Ram Jas Yadava respectfully sheweth:

1. That notice has been issued to the applicants to show cause why proceedings should not be taken against them under s. 2 of the Contempt of Courts Act (XII of 1926).

2. That the applicants greatly regret that their action has been an interference with pending judicial proceedings. For this action of theirs, they tender to Your Lordship a full and unqualified apology and undertake never to repeat the offence.

"Wherefore they throw themselves at Your Lordship's mercy."

The question for consideration is whether we should act under the first proviso to s. 3 of the Contempt of Courts Act which provides that "the accused may be discharged or the punishment awarded may be remitted on apology being made to the satisfaction of the Court" or whether we should compel Ram Naresh Singh and Ram Jas Yadava to purge their contempt by payment of a fine or the undergoing of a sentence of imprisonment.

The accused were present in Court and we put certain questions to them and have come to the conclusion that the apology is genuine.

We accordingly while convicting Ram Naresh Singh and Ram Jas Yadava of contempt of Court with respect to the Court of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Kadiapur consider that the undertaking given by them is sufficient to meet the circumstances of this case, accept the apology of the accused and order that they be discharged. We make no order as to costs.

Order accordingly.

Malabar Law—Family property—Acquisition by manager—Presumption.

In the absence of evidence that the family possessed property with the income of which the new acquisition might have been made, there is no presumption that the property acquired by the manager is family property. The fact that an item, the character of which is in dispute is mortgaged along with another item proved to be family land, will not raise a presumption that the disputed item was also family land unless it be shown that the mortgage itself was a borrowing for the benefit of the family. 179 Ind Cas. 344 (I), relied on.

A. against remand order of the District Court, North Malabar, dated July 25, 1936.

Facts.—The suit is to recover possession of two items of property from the defendant held by him under registered marupat, Ex. A, dated January 17, 1919, executed by him in favour of one R, the then karnavan of the plaintiff's tavazhi, on the ground that they belong to the tavazhi and was dismissed under Ex. A to the defendant. The defendant set up a gift in his favour by the previous karnavan, Ex. B of 1922. The trial Court decreed the suit. In appeal, the lower Appellate Court held on the evidence that item No. 2 was tavazhi property and decreed possession. As regards Item No. (1), the evidence was that it was purchased by R in his name, and there was no evidence that when R purchased the property, there was sufficient income from the tavazhi out of which he could have made the purchase. The only evidence contra was that R clubbed this item with the tavazhi property in the transaction Ex. A. On this evidence the lower Appellate Court held that Item No. (1) was the private property of R and the gift in favour of the defendant was valid, and that the plaintiff could not recover it and remanded the suit to the trial Court for disposal. Against this decision the plaintiff preferred this appeal.

Mr. K. Kuttikrishna Menon, for the Appellant.

Judgment.—In the absence of evidence that the family possessed property with the income of which the new acquisition might have been made, there is no presumption that the property acquired by the manager is family property : Vythinatha Ayyar v. Varadaraja Ayyar (1). The fact that an item the character of which is in dispute is mortgaged along with another item proved to be family land will not raise a presumption that the disputed item was also family land unless it be shown that the mortgage itself was a borrowing for the benefit of the family. On both these points the evidence is lacking. The appeal has, therefore, to be dismissed.

Oudh Laws Act (XVIII of 1876), s. 9—Pre-emption—Preferential right by drawing of lots, when determined—Ordinary tenant, whether member of under-proprietary village community—Sale of plot also transfers well situated on it.

The last sentence of s. 9, Oudh Laws Act, lays down the procedure of determining the order of preference where several persons having equal right of pre-emption have exercised their right of pre-emption by instituting a suit.

An ordinary tenant in a village cannot be said to be a member of the under-proprietary village community in a village.

The sale of a plot carries with it a transfer of the well situated on the plot when it is not sold as a separate entity.

S. C. A. against the order of the Additional Civil Judge, Lucknow, dated October 3, 1936.

Mr. R. B. Lal, for the Appellant.

Mr. Anwarul Hasan, for Respondent No. 1.

Judgment.—This appeal arises out of a pre-emption suit.

On May 22, 1935, defendants Nos. 1 and 2 who are respondents Nos. 2 and 3 in this Court, executed a sale deed for a sum of Rs. 125 in favour of defendants Nos. 3 and 4 who are appellants here, in respect of plot No. 623 of an area of 1 bigha 5 biswas in village Saras, Pargana Nigohan, District Lucknow. The suit has been decreed by the two Courts below and the vendees, i. e. defendants Nos. 3 and 4 have come up in appeal. The following contentions have been raised in support of the appeal:—

(1) That there are other under-proprietors in the village and the plaintiff's preferential right could be determined only after the drawing of lots among all of them and for this purpose the other under-proprietors should have been impleaded in the suit.

(2) That the appellants are also members of the village community because they with one Misri Lal, who is the father of the appellant No. 1 and the uncle of the appellant No. 2, formed a joint Hindu family and are tenants of the plot in suit.

(3) That the plot in dispute was sold along with one well and as the transfer of well is not pre-emptible, so there could be no pre-emption in respect of the plot as the well and the plot have both been transferred by the same sale deed.

As regards point No. 1, it has been contended that the right of pre-emption is available to all persons mentioned in s. 9 of the Oudh Laws Act, but where there are several persons who are equally entitled to that right, the particular person out of them whose right can be given effect to must be determined by lot between all those persons. The argument is that where there are persons in a village of equal status, none of them can pre-empt unless he has had his right determined either out of Court or in the suit by drawing lots. Reliance is placed upon the last sentence of s. 9 of the Oudh Laws Act. The two Courts below have held that the application of this sentence arises only amongst rival claimants to pre-emption and not against those persons who never thought of pre-empting the property at all.

The right of pre-emption is defined in s. 6, as a right to acquire immovable property in preference to all other persons. Section 9 gives a list of persons who in the order of preference are entitled to pre-empt when property sold or foreclosed is a proprietary or under-proprietary tenure. The language of s. 9 would indicate that the order of preference mentioned in that section comes into play only when more than one person mentioned in that section actually exercise that right. The right is there in all the persons mentioned therein but the order of preference is laid down to regulate the exercise thereof. The last sentence shows that where all rival pre-emptors are equally entitled to exercise the right then the Court shall determine the right by drawing a lot. The words "to exercise" and "the Court" in this sentence exclude any idea of the determination of preference amongst several intending pre-emptors out of Court.

Section 10 also indicates that the question of preference has to be decided in the suit when several persons have exercised the right of pre-emption. Notice of a proposal to sell or foreclosure has to be given to all the persons who have a right of pre-emption irrespective of the order of preference. Section 11 lays down that a person having a right of pre-emption in respect of any property proposed to be sold, shall lose such right, unless within three months from the notice mentioned in s. 10, he tenders the price to the person proposing to sell. If the right of pre-emption is lost on failure to tender the price, it goes without saying that it is equally lost where no suit for pre-emption has been filed. In my opinion, the sentence in dispute of s. 9 lays down the procedure of determining the order of preference where several persons having equal right of pre-emption have exercised their right of pre-emption by instituting a suit and the view taken by the two Courts below in respect of this contention is upheld.

As regards the second point, the lower Appellate Court has held that there is no evidence that the holding of Misri Lal is a joint family holding. Further, an ordinary tenant in a village cannot be said to be a member of the under-proprietary village community in a village. This contention has no force.

The last contention has been raised in this Court by a petition dated August 14, 1939. It was not raised in any of the Courts below. On a perusal of the sale deed it would appear that the well was not sold as a separate entity. It was part of the plot sold. The words main ek dahan chah pukhta are words of description or better specification of the plot actually sold. The definition of immovable property in s. 4 (23) of the U. P. General Clauses Act (I of 1904) is as follows:—

"Immovable property" shall include land, benefits to arise out of land and things attached to the earth, or permanently fastened to anything, attached to the earth, but shall not include standing timber, growing crops or grass."

The sale of the plot in dispute carried with it a transfer of the well situated on that plot. It was not sold as I have said above as a separate entity. The argument is an afterthought and has no substance.

In my opinion, there is no force in this appeal and I dismiss it with costs.

As the appeal has been dismissed, I reject Civil Miscellaneous Application No. 535 of 1939.

Execution sale—Attachment and sale of judgment-debtor's movable property by decree-holder—True owner recovering such property from auction-purchaser—Auction-purchaser, if can recover from decree-holder money paid by him on ground of total failure of consideration—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 93, s. 60—O. XXI, r. 93, whether creates new right—Non-owner disposing of goods not belonging to him—His action vis-a-vis true owner, nature of—Execution sale—What passes—Sale of Goods Act (III of 1930), s. 30—Scope of.

Per Full Bench.—If a decree-holder attaches and sells in execution of a decree against a judgment-debtor (the sale proclamation saying that the right, title and interest only of the judgment-debtor is being sold) movable property, and such property is subsequently recovered by its true owner from the auction-purchaser, the auction-purchaser is entitled to recover from the decree-holder the money which he has paid on the ground that there has been a total failure of consideration. 6 Ind. Cas. 672 (S), explained.

[Case-law referred to.]

Per Baguley, J.—There is a difference between a sale in which the judgment-debtor has some interest in the property sold and a sale in which he has no interest in the property sold. If the judgment-debtor has some interest in the property sold, there is no guarantee by any party or by the Court as to the extent of that interest, and, if that interest is sold, the sale becomes absolute and no more can be said or done about it in the absence of misrepresentation, fraud, etc. On the other hand, when the judgment-debtor has no attachable interest at all, nothing has been sold, and if nothing is sold, there is no sale. There is, therefore, nothing to become absolute and nothing to be set aside. There is simply a payment of money in return for nothing and the money having thus passed is returnable. [p. 764, col. 1.]

Per Sharpe, J.—The whole basis of a sale of movable property, be it a sale by the Court or not, is that something is sold. That basis is unchanged even in cases where the sale is by the Court in execution of a decree, the sale proclamation saying that only the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor is being sold. In those cases in which it transpires that nothing whatever is in fact sold, there is, if the purchaser has paid the purchase money, a total failure of consideration. [p. 764, col. 2.]

Per Roberts, C. J.—The Civil P. C., is adjective

law as opposed to substantive law and O. XXI, r. 93 does not create a new right but merely gives a new and summary remedy in respect of immovable property to enforce that right. Order XXI, r. 93, only comes into operation if an order setting aside a sale has been passed under r. 92 and it does not provide the exclusive remedy of the auction-purchaser, and these rules have no application where an auction-purchaser has been deprived of the property purchased by him after the sale has been confirmed and by reason of the intervention of the true owner upon the ground that the judgment-debtor had no saleable interest in the property. [p. 763, col. 1.]

Per Baguley, J., (in order of reference):—If the non-owner does, dispose of goods which do not belong to him, his action vis-à-vis the true owner is in the nature of a tort and it is quite incredible that under s. 60, Civil P. O., the law entitles a creditor to attach and sell his judgment-debtor's right to commit a tort and clearly no right to commit a tort can be envisaged. [p. 759, col. 1.]

In the case of all sales in execution of decrees only the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor passes. [p. 758, col. 2.]

The general principle of law is that only the owner can give a good title to another of his own property and the law has always done its best to protect the rights of the legal owners. The power given by s. 30 (2), Sale of Goods Act, is in a sense of compromise which enables, in certain circumstances, a person, who is not a legal owner, to transfer the title. [p. 759, col. 1.]

O. Ref. arising out of S. A. No. 279 of 1938, from the judgment of the District Court, Amherst, in Civil Appeal No. 4-A of 1938.

Order of Reference to a Full Bench

Baguley, J.—Omitting the unnecessary points, the bare facts of the present case are as follows: Messrs. A. Scott & Co. sold an engine to Saw Yu Hoe on the hire-purchase system and under the agreement, the engine remained the property of Messrs. A. Scott & Co. until the price had been paid in full. Kin Mun, got a decree against Saw Yu Hoe and in execution of that decree, he attached the engine which was in Saw Yu Hoe's possession. The engine was put up for sale and sold to U Aye Maung. Messrs. A. Scott & Co. knew nothing about the attachment until after the sale; so, they brought the present suit against Saw Yu Hoe, Kin Mun and Aye Maung. The suit is headed as a suit for possession of the engine or in the alternative for Rs. 800, its value. The exact nature of the case seems slightly obscure. The suit for possession of the engine can only be brought against the person in whose possession it is. The prayer for a decree for Rs. 800 in the alternative seems to me simply an alternative to getting possession of the engine and also on that basis, it could only be claimed from the persons in whose possession it originally was. I think, however, that the suit is really in the nature of a combined suit, using the old terms of law, against Aye Maung for trover and against Kin Mun for trespass against property. I cannot suggest that it is also filed against Saw Yu Hoe for balance of purchase-money. That would be misjoinder of too glaring a kind. The trial Court gave a decree against Saw Yu Hoe only for Rs. 354 being the balance of the unpaid purchase-money. Messrs. A. Scott & Co. appealed and the Additional District Judge gave a decree against Aye Maung only for the engine or its value, Rs. 370. The monetary amounts of the decrees given are interesting. Rupees 354 seems to be the balance of the unpaid purchase money and Rs. 370 seems to have been fixed as the unpaid balance of the purchase money after allowing a certain payment of Rs. 16 to be credited towards interest. The present appeal is filed by Aye Maung.

Of the three grounds of appeal argued, the first is that under O. XXI, r. 77, when movable property is sold on payment of the purchase money, the sale becomes absolute and appellant's claim is that, the engine being movable property, as soon as he paid the purchase money, he got a complete title. It is pointed out that rr. 74 to 81 apply to sales of movable property and r. 82 onwards apply only to immovable property and the sale had been made absolute by payment of the money. There is no provision among the rules relating to movable property corresponding to r. 91 which applies to immovable property. The answer to this argument seems to me to be that in the case of all sales in execution of decrees only the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor passes. This is specifically stated in the sale proclamation and is, I think, common knowledge to all who take part in these sales. The appellant's next line of argument, and, if I may say so, a very ingenious argument it is, is that s. 30 (2), Sale of Goods Act, applies. Although Saw Yu Hoe was regarded merely as the hirer in possession, he had really agreed to buy the engine ultimately and with the consent of the seller he was in possession of the engine. If, therefore, he were to have sold the engine to some person who bought it in good faith and without notice of any right of the original seller to the goods, the buyer will get a clear title. Section 30 (2), Sale of Goods Act, is based upon English Law, s. 9, Factors Act, 1899, and the leading case on this is Lee v. Butler (1). In that case

"L, being in possession of furniture under a hire and purchase agreement made with the plaintiff, sold and delivered the furniture, before the last payment had accrued due or been paid, to the defendant, who received it in good faith and without notice that the plaintiff had any right in respect of it."

And it was held that the sale and delivery were valid. It is argued, therefore, that if Saw Yu Hoe had sold this engine to Aye Maung, Aye Maung would have got the title. Therefore, it is argued, since Saw Yu Hoe's creditor has attached the engine and sold it in execution of the decree, the sale must be good because Saw Yu Hoe's interest in the engine included his power of disposal, and therefore when Kin Mun attached and sold Saw Yu Hoe's interest he got his power of disposal under s. 30, Sale of Goods Act. The argument, as I have said, is ingenious but I cannot accept it. The general principle of law is that only the owner can give a good title to another of his own property and the law has always done its best to protect the rights of the legal owners. The commercial world, however, is more interested in removing restrictions upon trade and it is quite clear that business would be impossible if every time a purchaser wished to buy goods, he had to examine the title of his vendor. So, the power given by s. 30 (2), Sale of Goods Act, is in a sense of compromise which enables, in certain circumstances, a person, who is not a legal owner, to transfer the title.

If the non-owner does, in this way, dispose of goods which do not belong to him, is action vis-a-vis the true owner is in the nature of a tort and it is quite incredible that under s. 60, Civil P. O., the law entitles a creditor to attach and sell his judgment-debtor's right to commit a tort and clearly a right to commit a tort can be envisaged. The machine belonged to Messrs. A. Scott & Co. It was in Saw Yu Hoe's possession legally and under a contract which is of a common nature. Being their property and having found its way into the hands of Aye Maung, they are entitled to follow it there and claim to recover it. Equitable considerations, however, require the Court not to allow Messrs. A. Scott & Co. to make a profit out of this transaction, so, fortunately for the other people, although the engine is their property their beneficial interest in it really was no more than to recover Rs. 370 from Saw Yu Hoe. The decree against Aye Maung in favour of Messrs. A. Scott & Co., therefore, should be not for the return of the engine or its value of Rs. 30, but for the return of the engine. Execution by seizure of the engine is not to be granted if defendant No. 3 pays into Court or to Messrs. A. Scott & Co. the sum of Rs. 370 in lieu of the engine, and their costs.

The appellant, however, also asks that the decree if not set aside against him should direct the payment by Kin Mun's representative to him of the purchase price they received from him. I am aware that in all cases in which property is sold at a Court auction, there is not necessarily a warranty of title and in a Single Judge ruling of this Court Maung Pa v. Abdul Ganni (2) this was laid down. In this case a reference was made to Maung Tun v. Ma Ngan (3) a decision of a Full Bench of the late Chief Court. This lays down that:

"When movable property is sold in execution of a decree and it is subsequently found that the judgment-debtor had no saleable interest in the property, and the purchaser is thereupon deprived of the property, the purchaser is not, in the absence of fraud, entitled to recover the price paid from the decree-holder."

In the judgment of the Bench, Fox, C. J. at p. 63*, remarked in passing:

"It may seem inequitable that he should not have a right to recover his money from the man who can only have received it wrongly, but in the face of their Lordships' decision in Dorab Ally Khan v. The Executors of Khajah Moheesooddeen (4) and in the absence of any legislative provision contemplating such a right, I am constrained to hold that he has none. It cannot be assumed that their Lordships overlooked the rule that the Courts of India are bound to decide according to justice, equity and good conscience, and it must be assumed that in appeals from the Indian Courts, their Lordships themselves follow that rule."

Now without speculating with regard to what their Lordships may or may not have overlooked, it is, I fear, clear that the learned Chief Judge must have overlooked one important point. Towards the end of the judgment there is a passage:

"There is, no doubt, a further question whether the plaintiff has shown a case which, if proved, would entitle him to recover back the purchase money as money had and received to his use as upon a total failure of consideration."

The facts in Dorab Ally Khan v. The Executors of Khajah Moheesooddeen (4) were shortly that in execution of a decree obtained in the late Supreme Court of Judicature at Fort William a writ of fiery facias was issued to the Sheriff of Calcutta in 1866 directing him to recover from the movable and immovable property of the judgment-debtor within Bengal, Bihar and Orissa, and Benares and certain other places, a certain sum of money. The Sheriff, however, proceeded outside the large area in which he was authorized to execute and seized some property in Oudh. The only question before the Judicial Committee was whether the purchaser could sue for damages against the Sheriff and the attaching creditor. They held that on the facts as stated, the suit would lie. The law which had to be administered was the Common Law of England and I fear I know little or nothing about a writ of fiery facias and the powers of the Sheriff under English Law. There is a passage in the judgment which indicates that special rules would apply in such cases:

"The rule itself cannot properly be held applicable to sales by the Sheriff which are governed by rules peculiar to such sales."

The facts upon which this case was based date from the year 1861. The learned Chief Judge in Maung Tun Ma v. Ngan (3) quotes from Dorab Ally Khan v. The Executors of Khajah Moheooddeen (4).

"Now it is of course perfectly clear that when property has been sold under a regular execution, and the purchaser is afterwards evicted under a title paramount to that of the judgment-debtor, he has no remedy against either the Sheriff or the judgment-creditor."

When, however, we see that the Judicial Committee were applying a rule which has no applicability whatsoever to ordinary sales in execution under the Civil P. O., I confess I fail to understand why the rule laid down for Sheriff's sales by the Privy Council should be made the one governing factor upon which to ascertain the rights of the parties who are litigating under another law. Proceeding further on, in the judgment, the learned Chief Judge said:

"By the Civil P. O. of 1877 the Legislature gave a remedy to auction-purchasers of immovable property when the judgment-debtor has no saleable interest in the property sold, and when for that reason the purchaser is deprived of it. Under s 315 the auction-purchaser might get back in execution proceedings his purchase money and possibly interest on it, from the person to whom it had been paid."

He goes on to point out that there was no provision similar to ss. 313 and 315 applying to movable property from which he deduces that the buyer of movable property has no remedy whatsoever. With due respect, this reasoning does not seem to me to be sound. He has used the correct word, the section of the Civil P. O. gives a summary remedy, but what we are concerned with here is the right of the purchaser and, as I have had occasion to point out in other cases, the Civil P. O. is a Code of civil procedure. It merely gives means whereby a party may proceed to exercise a right which he has aliunde; it never gives a substantive right; so where the Civil P. O. gives a remedy, by giving the remedy it seems to me to recognize a pre-existing right. If a purchaser has a remedy to recover his purchase money when the judgment-debtor is shown to have no interest at all, then that recognizes the existence of a right to recover the purchase money under these circumstances, and it seems to me that in principle there can be no difference between the right to recover the purchase money under similar circumstances whether the property sold is movable or immovable. The fact that no provision corresponding to s. 313 exists in regard to movable property simply means, so far as I understand it, that the purchaser of immovable property under these circumstances has a short remedy by way of an application, in addition to his intrinsic remedy of filing a regular suit to enforce his right, whereas the short remedy of an application to the executing Court does not exist for the benefit of the purchaser of movable property; but he also, it seems to me, must be regarded as having the means of enforcing his right by a regular suit and this, I will submit, is what their Lordships of the Privy Council were referring to, in the passage which I have quoted in Dorab Ally Khan v. The Executors of Khajah Moheooddeen (4). As far back as 1877, in Framji Besenji Dustr v. Hormasji Pestanji Framji (5), where the property sold in execution of the decree was certain shares, which are movable property, the right to file a suit in consequence of the judgment-debtor having no interest in the shares was recognized, the sale was set aside, and the purchase money was ordered to be repaid to the auction-purchaser. This suit, it may be mentioned, was decided on August 10, 1877, long before the Code of 1882, came into existence. It was therefore decided under the Code of 1859, and the Code of 1859 had no section corresponding even to ss. 313 and 315 of the Code of 1882. There was no corresponding section in the Codes of 1877 or 1859. Returning again to Maung Tun v. Ma Ngan (3), Irwin, J. who wrote the second judgment took the same view of Dorab Ally Khan v. The Executors of Khajah Moheooddeen (4), as I do, namely that as the law applicable to that case was quite different to the law applicable to this country, he did not think "their Lordships would approve of the dictum being held to be binding on Courts which have to administer a different law." Leaving aside therefore this case he said he could find no authority to say that in the mofussil either the bailiff or the decree-holder gives any warranty of title. He seems to be under the impression that because paras. 2, 3 and 4, s. 315 of the 1882 Code did not apply to movable property, therefore the purchaser of movable property had no means of obtaining relief. This, it seems to me, regards the right as having been given by the Civil P. O. and my contention is that rights are not given by the Code of procedure.

Hartnoll, J. who followed took his stand on Dorab Ally Khan v. The Executors of Khajah Moheooddeen (4). Robinson, J. who wrote the next judgment, considered that the dictum in Dorab Ally Khan v. The Executors of Khajah Moheooddeen (4) was a general statement of the law which would apply to the case of a sale by the Court's bailiff. He did accept the argument that s. 109, Contract Act, showed that the Law of England when the Privy Council ruling was passed had not been adopted in India but says that s. 109 was in existence when the Privy Council ruling was passed. It is quite true that the Contract Act came into force on September 1, 1872, and the Privy Council case was decided in 1878, but the facts which gave rise to the case started with an application for a warrant in June, 1866. The last judgment is by Bell, J. He refers to Dorab Ally Khan v. The Executors of Khajah Moheooddeen (4) which notices that it did not refer to the law of India but says that that does not seem to him to detract from its value as guide of the decisions on the Indian law. He first refers to Sowdamini Chowdrain v. Kishen Kishore Poddar (6). This, of course, was decided before the Contract Act came into force. He says that the subsequent enactment of s. 109, Contract Act, did not detract from its value because, he says, the argument that s. 109 altered the existing law is in direct opposition to the views expressed by the Privy Council in Dorab Ally Khan v. The Executors of Khajah Moheooddeen (4) but, as I have said, the facts on which Dorab Ally Khan v. The Executors of Khajah Moheooddeen (4) arose were earlier than 1872. He says that "caveat emptor" applies. Now, s. 109, Contract Act, is a considerable limitation to the principle of "caveat emptor" and since then s. 109 again has been repealed, and now the law is to be found in s. 14, Sale of Goods Act. Even in England the principle of "caveat emptor" has been riddled with exceptions and according to Lord Campbell in Sims v. Marryatt (7) at p. 289 "the exception well nigh eat it up."

My own view is that when, as in the present case, in the execution proceedings the sale proclamation states that "intending purchasers are warned that only the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor is going to be sold" there is an implied warranty that the judgment-debtor has some interest. There are no apt words saying that what is being sold is "the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor, if any," or "the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor, if he has one," and I think that as all the parties concerned are before the Court and this appeal has been filed by the auction-purchaser making the decree-holder party, it is only right that all the rights and liabilities of the parties as against others in this matter should be finally decided in this case. See O. XLI, r. 33. If the view that I take of this law is correct, I would give Messrs. Scott & Co. a decree against Maung Aye Maung for the return of the machine with costs, the decree not to be executed if he do pay to them the sum of Rs. 370 and costs, the sum of Rs. 370 representing the unpaid portion of the purchase money. Whatever in the event Maung Aye Maung has to pay to Messrs. Scott & Co. he is entitled to be reimbursed together with his own costs by the attaching creditor, now the legal representatives of the deceased Kin Mun. When these transactions have been carried out, there will remain the question of what alteration must be made with regard to the amount that must be regarded as having been received in part satisfaction of the decree as between the legal representatives of Kin Mun as decree-holder on the one hand, and Saw Yu Hoe, the judgment-debtor on the other hand. This cannot be determined in this suit but will have to be decided under s. 47, Civil P. O., by the executing Court. In this Court no order of any kind will be passed with regard to Saw Yu Hoe, save that he do bear his own costs throughout. In view, however, of the five Judge ruling of the late Chief Court, I hardly see how, sitting as a Single Judge, I can overrule it. I therefore refer to a Full Bench of as many Judges as my Lord the Chief Justice may think fit, the question: "If a decree-holder attaches and sells in execution of a decree against a judgment-debtor (the sale proclamation saying that the right, title and interest only of the judgment-debtor is being sold) moveable property, and such property is subsequently recovered by its true owner from the auction-purchaser, is the auction-purchaser entitled to recover from the decree-holder, the money which he has paid on the ground that there has been a total failure of consideration?"

Mr. Aiyangar, for the Appellant.

Roberts, C. J.—The question of law referred to this Full Bench is in the following terms:

"If a decree-holder attaches and sells in execution of a decree against a judgment-debtor (the sale proclamation saying that the right, title and interest only of the judgment-debtor is being sold) moveable property, and such property is subsequently recovered by its true owner from the auction-purchaser, is the auction-purchaser entitled to recover from the decree-holder the money which he has paid on the ground that there has been a total failure of consideration?"

The facts of the case which gave rise to it are that the first defendants, Messrs. A. Scott & Co., delivered to Saw Yu Hoe, defendant No. 2, an engine upon a hire-purchase agreement; by the terms of the agreement the engine was to remain the property of the vendors until the purchase price was paid in full. One W. Kin Mun, since deceased (whose heirs are defendants Nos. 3 and 4) obtained a money decree against Saw Yu Hoe and purported in execution thereof to attach this engine which was in the judgment-debtor's possession but was the property of the first defendants, Messrs. Scott & Co. It was then ostensibly put up for sale and purchased by the appellant Maung Aye Maung. When the appellant discovered that the engine which he thought he had bought and for which he had paid the purchase price, belonged to Messrs. A. Scott & Co. and that he was obliged to return it to them, he sought to recover the purchase price from someone or other of the defendants. The learned Judge who made the reference did so by reason of the judgment of five Judges in the Chief Court of Lower Burma in Maung Tun v. Ma Ngan (3). In that case it was held that the purchaser of movable property at a Court sale bought the property put up for sale subject to any existing incumbrances; no more could be sold in execution of the decree than the right, title and interest of the judgment debtor and such purchaser was not entitled to recover the price paid by the decree-holder when deprived of the property by reason of a second sale under a mortgage decree.

The case in Dorab Ally Khan v. The Executors of Khajah Moheooddeen (4) was quoted in their decision. In that case the Sheriff who was entitled to seize property in Bengal, Bihar and Orissa, Benares and certain other districts under a writ of fieri facias exceeded his jurisdiction and seized certain property in Oudh. Their Lordships of the Privy Council pointed out (at p. 813*) that sales by the Sheriff were governed by rules peculiar to such sales, but that the plaint directed by the purchaser at the Sheriff's sale, who had subsequently been evicted, against the judgment-creditor had not wholly failed to disclose a cause of action. It was observed that there was the question whether the plaintiff had shown a case which, if proved, would entitle him to recover back the purchase money as money had and received to his use as upon a total failure of consideration. The Chief Court of Lower Burma laid stress upon the following passage in the judgment:

"Now it is of course perfectly clear that when the property has been so sold under a regular execution and the purchaser is afterwards evicted under a title paramount to that of the judgment-debtor, he has no remedy against either the Sheriff or the judgment-creditor. This, however, is because the Sheriff is authorized by the writ to seize the property of the execution-debtor which lies within his territorial jurisdiction and to pass the debtor's title to it without warranting that title to be good."

Page, J. in Rishikesh Laha v. Manik Molla (5), observed:

"That is the general rule, but in a case where property in which the judgment-debtor has no saleable interest has been purchased in execution of a decree and the circumstances are such that in accordance with the equitable rules obtaining in that behalf it would be against reason and conscience that the person to whom the purchase price has been paid should retain the purchase money as against the auction-purchaser, the auction-purchaser is entitled to recover such money as money had, and received to, his use. If he did not possess such a right, he be exposed to loss resulting from fraud or collusion at the sale between an execution-creditor and the judgment-debtor, and yet remain without redress. But against loss sustained in such circumances the law does not leave him defenceless and the auction-purchaser may recover the purchase price which he has paid if he can bring himself within the equitable principles which justify a suit for money had, and received, upon the ground that it is unconscionable at the defendant should retain the money as against a plaintiff."

Now in England the execution of a decree or money is entrusted to the Sheriff, an officer who is bound to use his own discretion and is directly responsible to those interested for the illegal seizure of goods which do not belong to the judgment-debtor: see Kissorimohun Roy v. Harsakh Das (9), at p. 443. But it was pointed out by Jai Lal, J. in Mehr Chand v. Milkhi Ram (10), at p. 652 that:

"While it is true that when selling the property of the judgment-debtor the Court does not guarantee any title, it does proclaim and communicate to the intending purchasers that according to the representation of the decree-holder, the judgment-debtor has some interest in the property to be sold; the extent of that interest is not investigated nor is it guaranteed by the Court but the existence of some interest is affirmed by the decree-holder. It is inconceivable that the Court would proceed to sell the property in respect of which the decree-holder has not made a representation, express or implied, that the judgment-debtor has a saleable interest in it."

Although the case cited related to immovable property, it was most carefully explained in the decision of the Full Bench that the Civil P. O. is adjective law as opposed to substantive law and that s. 315 (the provisions of which are now incorporated in O. XXI, r. 93) did not create a new right but merely gave a new and summary remedy in respect of immovable property to enforce that right. Order XXI, r. 93 only comes into operation if an order setting aside a sale has been passed under r. 92 and it does not provide the exclusive remedy of the auction-purchaser, and these rules have no application where an auction-purchaser has been deprived of the property purchased by him after the sale has been confirmed and by reason of the intervention of the true owner upon the ground that the judgment-debtor had no saleable interest in the property.

The question whether the auction purchaser can recover back the purchase price from the decree-holder depends therefore upon whether there has been a total failure of consideration. A suit based upon such failure of consideration for the recovery of money paid is maintainable in this country:

Chaitanya Das v. Ranjit Pal Chaudhuri (11), and in my opinion the answer to the question raised in the reference must therefore be given in the affirmative: Advocates' fee 15 gold mohurs.

Baguley, J.—I agree with the answer proposed by my Lord the Chief Justice but as I made the reference myself, I would like to add a few remarks particularly as part of the remarks are in the nature of criticism of the reference actually made. The wording of the reference that I made would have applied perfectly to the case of Maung Tun v. Ma Ngan (3), which was mentioned so often in the course of this argument; but the question which really arose in this present reference was not quite the same, and it would have been better had I referred the same question as was referred in that case. The question which was referred in the case in Maung Tun v. Ma Ngan (3) did not really apply to the case which was before the late Chief Court of Lower Burma. In that case the judgment-debtor whose boat was sold had got an interest in the boat and the purchaser at the Court auction did get some benefit from the purchase. The boat was sold by the Court in August, 1905, and it was not until the following December that a mortgage decree was passed against the boat and in consequence the purchaser at the Court auction was deprived of it. In that case certainly the judgment-debtor had an attachable interest; so the question which I actually referred would have applied to that case and the question which was referred in that case would apply to the present reference because the question there asked applied to cases in which judgment-debtors had no saleable interest in the property. However, throughout the argument of the present reference it was assumed that the judgment-debtor had no saleable interest in the property.

It was unfortunate that at the time the case was argued before me as a Single Judge, my attention was not drawn to certain cases which were dealt with before this Full Bench. I refer to Rishikesh Laha v. Manik Molla (8), Chaitanya Das v. Ranjit Pal Chaudhuri (11), and Mehr Chand v. Milkhi Ram (10). Had I known of these cases, I would probably have followed them and refused to follow the Bench ruling of the late Chief Court. I would like to refer to one point that was emphasized in the argument, namely that in O. XXI, in the rules referring to the sale of movable property, there is nothing which corresponds to r. 91 which refers to sales of immovable property, and r. 77 (2) states that

"on payment of the purchase money, the officer or other person holding the sale shall grant a receipt for the same, and the sale shall become absolute."

It is argued that when the sale becomes absolute there can be no return of the purchase money without a setting aside of the sale. The argument, if I may say so, is quite fair, but for a sale to become absolute, there must have been a sale; for a sale to take place, there must be something sold and a price paid or promised and this, in my opinion, shows the difference between a sale in which the judgment-debtor has some interest in the property sold and a sale in which he has no interest in the property sold. It is conceded that if the judgment-debtor has some interest in the property sold; there is no guarantee by any party or by the Court as to the extent of that interest, and, if that interest is sold, the sale becomes absolute and no more can be said or done about it in the absence of misrepresentation, fraud, etc. On the other hand, when the judgment-debtor has no attachable interest at all, nothing has been sold, and if nothing is sold, there is no sale. There is, therefore, nothing to become absolute and nothing to be set aside. There is simply a payment of money in return for nothing.

It will be noted in Dorab Ally Khan v. The Executors of Khajah Moheooddeen (4), their Lordships (at page 816*) considered the question whether it could be said that in the case before them there had been a total failure of consideration because the purchaser had been for nearly two years in possession of the property in question and might be assumed during that time to have gained some benefit from his purchase, in which case they said that it could not be stated that consideration had wholly failed, but that in view of the fact that if the sale was in fact a complete nullity, he would become liable to the true owner for all the rents and profits which he had received, it would be impossible to say that he had received any substantial benefit, for everything which he might receive by virtue of his irregular position was liable to be taken away from him by the true owner. I am certainly of opinion that when the decree-holder asked the Court to attach property in execution of the decree against his judgment-debtor he must be held to be representing that his judgment-debtor had some interest in that property. There is not in the ordinary course a representation that he is in full ownership of the property and there is certainly no guarantee that this is the case; but unless the decree-holder has made a representation that the judgment-debtor has some interest, he could not ask the Court to attach it. In the result if the judgment-debtor had any interest in the property that interest went to the purchaser at the Court auction and even if the purchaser finds he has got a much smaller interest than he expected or hoped to get, he has ordinarily no cause of action against any one. If, however, the judgment-debtor has no attachable interest at all, when he had a right to expect that he would get something, he has got absolutely nothing and, as I have suggested, there is no sale; therefore no sale became absolute and there is no sale which need or can be set aside and the money having passed for no consideration is recoverable.

Sharpe, J.—I agree that the question referred, which is one involving a purely abstract proposition of law, must be answered in the affirmative. I propose to state my reason quite shortly. In my judgment, the whole basis of a sale of movable property, be it a sale by the Court or not, is, as my brother Baguley has just pointed out, that something is sold. That basis is unchanged even in cases where the sale is by the Court in execution of a decree, the sale proclamation saying that only the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor is being sold. In those cases in which it transpires that nothing whatever is in fact sold, there is, if the purchaser has paid the purchase money, a total failure of consideration. It is clear from the judgment of Sir James Colville in Dorab Ally Khan v. The Executors of Khajah Moheooddeen (4)—indeed it is almost stated there in express terms—that here, as in England, a plaintiff is entitled to recover back purchase money as money had and received to his use in the case of a total failure of consideration. To my mind that is sufficient to dispose of this reference. A consideration of the terms of O. XXI, Civil P. C., is, in my opinion, unnecessary and only tends to confuse the real point of the case, for, as has been pointed out by my Lord the Chief Justice, and also by Baguley, J. when referring this question, that Code is purely adjective, as opposed to substantive law.

Revision Application No. 28 of 1938

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 10, 115
—Order under s. 10 refusing stay—Revision, if maintainable.

No revision is maintainable against an order of a Judge under s. 10, Civil P. O., refusing to stay proceedings and directing a suit to proceed. 27 Ind. Cas. 917 (5), explained.

(Case-law relied on.)

R. App. from the order of the First Class Sub-Judge, Hyderabad, dated March 19, 1938.

Mr. Fatehchand Assudomal, for the Applicant.

Mr. Dipchand Chandumal, for the Opponents.

Davis, J. C.—This is an application in revision against an order of the learned First Class Subordinate Judge, Hyderabad, dated March 19, 1938, in which he refused to stay Suit No. 103 of 1936 in his Court. It was argued that s. 10, Civil P. O., prevented his proceeding with the trial of the suit before him, there being another suit prior in point of time between the same parties or parties litigating under the same title in which the same matters directly and substantially in issue, filed in the Bombay High Court. The learned Judge dealt with this objection carefully and at length, as he and other Judges have dealt carefully and at length with other objections raised in this Suit No. 103 of 1936, which to this day, May 17, 1939, has made no appreciable progress. But we think the preliminary objection taken that revision application will not lie against an order of the Judge rejecting an objection under s. 10, Civil P. O., and ordering the suit shall proceed before him must succeed, for such an order is not a case decided within the provisions of s. 115, Civil P. O. A Bench of this Court in the judgment reported in Zenab Sukhio v. Muhammad Haji Allahdino (1) have pointed out that s. 115, Civil P. O., does not in terms refer to interlocutory orders; it refers to a case decided and it was in Zenab Sukhio v. Muhammad Haji Allahdion (1) laid down that the point whether a case is or is not decided within the provisions of s. 115, Civil P. O., must be determined upon the facts of each case. In the case of an order of a Judge refusing to stay proceedings under s. 10, Civil P. O., there is authority that such an order does not fall within the provisions of s. 115, Civil P. O., in Bal Krishna v. Ram Kishun (2) while in Sultanat Jhan Begam v. Sundar Lal (3) it was decided that an order staying a suit on an application under s. 10, Civil P. O., was also not a case decided within the meaning of s. 115, Civil P. O.

In Kalwant Rai v. Fonseca & Co. (4) it was also held that an order staying a suit under s. 10, Civil P. O., is not a case decided within the meaning of s. 115, Civil P. O. It is true that in Sivaprasad Ram v. Tricomdas Coverji Bhoja (5) the Calcutta High Court set aside an order of the Subordinate Judge staying a suit under s. 10, Civil P. O., but in that case the power of the Court to interfere under s. 115, Civil P. O., was not considered at length. It merely stated that the Court had ample power to interfere with an interlocutory order, even if that power only lay under s. 15 of the Charter Act.

The view of the Madras High Court in certain cases in unauthorized law reports is to the effect that revision will lie against an order passed under s. 10, Civil P. O. There is, therefore, on this point conflict of judicial decisions; but our own view is that where a Court refuses to stay proceedings under s. 10, Civil P. O., it cannot be said to be a decided case within the meaning of s. 115, Civil P. O. Rather it might be said it did not decide a case but merely allowed the suit to proceed and to be decided in accordance with law. It is true that a Bench of this Court held in Zenab Sukhio v. Muhammad Haji Allahdino (1) that an order setting aside a decree under O. IX, r. 13, was an order deciding a case. So did a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court in Radha Mohan Datt v. Abbas Ali (6) and yet the decision of that same High Court in cases under s. 10, Civil P. O., is that no revision will lie. So that there is, at least, an authority besides our own for the view that there is no necessary conflict between a decision that an order under s. 10, Civil P. O., allowing a suit to proceed is not a case decided within the provisions s. 115, Civil P. O., while an order setting aside a decree under O. IX, r. 13, Civil P. O., is. This Court has recently in a Full Bench decision in R. A. No. 12 of 1937 [Kishinchand Changomal v. Takhitram Tulsidas (7)] held that no revision under s. 115, Civil P. O., lies against an order of the Court setting aside an award and directing the suit to proceed. That decision seems in accord with our present decision that no application in revision will lie against an order of a Judge under s. 10, Civil P. O., directing a suit to proceed. This revision application must be dismissed with costs accordingly.

Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), Sch. II, Art. 17 (vi)— Appeal not relating to amount of decree but to manner of its execution—Art. 17 (vi), Sch. II applies.

Where an appeal does not relate to the amount for which the decree has been passed but to the manner in which the decree can be enforced or executed, the appeal falls under Art. 17 (vi) of the Second Schedule of the Court Fees Act. 90 Ind. Cas. 629 (1), 62 Ind. Cas. 979 (2), 154 Ind. Cas. 330 (3) and 171 Ind. Cas. 13 (4), relied on.

O. Misc. App. and F. C. A. dated October 2, 1939, for enhancement of court-fee in the First Civil Appeal No. 43 of 1937, filed on behalf of the respondent, the following order was passed by this Hon'ble Court.

Rai Bahadur H. S. Gupta, for the Applicant-Respondent.

Messrs. M. Wasim and Ali Hasan, for the Appellant-Opposite Party.

Order.—This is an application by the respondent to an appeal filed under s. 45 of the Encumbered Estates Act alleging that there is a deficiency of court-fee on the appeal and praying that the appellant be ordered to pay the proper court-fee and to amend the valuation of his appeal.

The applicant filed an application under s. 4 of the Encumbered Estates Act, and the appellant brought a claim before the Special Judge amounting to Rs. 2,09,087 the foot of a mortgage of property held by the applicant. The learned Special Judge gave the appellant a decree for the amount claimed, but as the applicant was a transferee from the original mortgagor, the learned Judge added a condition to the decree in the following terms:

"The actual liability of the landlord will, however be limited to the extent of the transfer value of mortgaged property which might be fixed by the Collector".

The claimant was awarded costs Rs. 25,000. Future and pendente lite interest was awarded to him, at Rs. 3-12 per cent. per annum.

Against this decree the claimant filed an appeal to this Court. In paras. 1 to 3 of the grounds of appeal he objected to the condition imposed by the Special Judge in para. 4 he claimed full costs in the Court below and in para. 5 he claimed interest from the date of the application at the rate of 4½ per cent. per annum. The entire appeal was valued at Rs. 2,09,087. The office made a report that the appellant had not put any valuation on grounds Nos. 4 and 5 of the memorandum of appeal, and that he might be asked to put proper valuations on the relief claimed by him. Thereupon the learned Counsel for the appellant amended the memorandum of appeal mentioning a sum of Rs. 1,525 as the cost claimed by him in para. 4 and Rs. 1,045 as the difference of interest claimed. He reduced the valuation of the appeal to the total of these amounts, namely Rs. 2,570 and paid a court-fee of Rs. 10 on grounds Nos. 2 to 3 of his appeal. The office reported that the valuation and the court-fee paid were correct, and the appeal was fixed for hearing. It could not, however, be taken up on the date fixed and on that very date the learned Counsel for the respondent filed the application with which we are now dealing.

We have heard the learned Counsel for the parties and are of opinion that there is no deficiency in the court-fee now. The learned Counsel for the applicant argues that as by the decree of the Special Judge it has been ordered that the appellant would be entitled to realise the amount of his decree to the extent of the transfer value of the property, which the respondent says is Rs. 24,164-12-3, it should be assumed that the appeal relates to an amount equivalent to the difference between Rs. 2,09,087 and Rs. 24,164-12-3. We are unable to accept this argument. The Court below has already given the appellant a decree for Rs. 2,09,087 and it is not the amount of the decree given to him that is in any manner in dispute in this appeal. What the appellant objects to is the condition imposed by the learned Special Judge in the decree granted to him. It is, we think, a case which comes under Art. 17 (vi) of the Second Schedule of the Court Fees Act in that it is not possible to estimate the subject-matter of the appeal at a money value.

In Radha Krishna v. Mehtab Mian, (90 Ind. Cas. 629, (1), Harcharan Das v. Sukhraj Das, (62 Ind. Cas. 979) (2), Jagannath Ravji Kondkar v. Laxmibai Anant Kondkar (1. L. R. 59 Bom. 439) (3) and Sobha Ram Chela Ram v. Bainsiram Janjiram, (171 Ind. Cas. 13) (4), it was held that where an appeal does not relate to the amount for which the decree has been passed but to the manner in which the decree can be enforced or executed, the appeal falls under Art. 17 (vi) of the Second Schedule of the Court Fees Act.

We, therefore, hold the court-fee paid by the appellant sufficient and dismiss the respondent's application with costs.

Agra Tenancy Act (III of 1928), ss. 44, 242 (3)
 (a)—Suit under s. 44 by person alleging himself to be zamindar—Defendant admitting plaintiff to be proprietor and himself to be thekadar—Question of proprietary rights, whether in issue in suit—Appeal, whether lies to Commissioner or to District Judge.

Under the Agra Tenancy Act, a lease is hardly a transfer of proprietary interest in land, for the Act speaks of leases by landholders to tenants and by tenants to sub-tenants. Even a thekadar has been defined as a farmer or other lessee of proprietary rights and not as a transferee of proprietary rights in some form or another. Although a thekadar is not expressly included in the definition of tenant, the provisions relating to tenants apply in the majority of cases to thekadar as well. It will, therefore, be inappropriate to say that, when in a suit under s. 44 a defendant admits that the plaintiff is the proprietor of the holding and the defendant is a thekadar, a question of proprietary right is in issue between the plaintiff and the defendant claiming such right. Hence an appeal from the decision in the suit lies to the Commissioner and not to the District Judge.

Misc. Case from the reference submitted by the District Judge, Ghazipur, as per his letter dated May 16, 1938.

Messrs. Haribans Sahai and Janaki Prasad, for the Applicant.

Mr. K. L. Misra, for the Opposite Party.

Bajpal, J.—This is a reference by the District Judge of Ghazipur under s. 267 (2), Agra Ten. Act. The reference has been made in connection with an appeal pending in his Court. The suit has been dismissed by a Revenue Court and the appeal had been first filed by the plaintiff in the Commissioner's Court. The defendant there raised a preliminary objection and said that the appeal ought to be returned for presentation to the Civil Court, and the Commissioner upheld the preliminary objection and said that "the proper forum of the appeal was the District Judge's Court." The appeal thus came to the District Judge and curiously enough the defendant again raised a preliminary objection and said that the appeal lay to the Commissioner. This is an inconsistent attitude adopted by the defendant but this has very little bearing on the reference except perhaps on a question of costs, and we have to decide the reference as made by the learned District Judge.

The facts may now be stated. The plaintiff alleging himself to be a landholder of certain plots, sued the defendants under s. 44, Agra Ten. Act. Defendant No. 1 was said to be a trespasser and defendants Nos. 2 to 5 were said to be in possession of the land through defendant No. 1. The case of the defendant No. 1 was that he was the heir of one Mewa Gir who held the land under a perpetual lease from the zamindar of the holding and the case of defendants Nos. 2 to 5 was that they were in possession through defendant No. 1. The learned Assistant Collector held that defendant No. 1 was an heir of Mewa Gir, that Mewa Gir was a permanent lessee of the holding in question and therefore defendant No. 1 could not be treated as a trespasser and the plaintiff's suit was, therefore, dismissed.

The plaintiff in appeal once again raised the question that the defendant was a trespasser and was not a permanent lessee. What we have got to decide is whether the appeal lies to the District Judge or to the Commissioner. The suit was a suit under s. 44, Agra Ten. Act and is mentioned at serial No. 2 in group B of Sch. IV, Agra Ten. Act. It is provided there that the suit is triable by an Assistant Collector of the First Class and an appeal shall ordinarily lie to the Commissioner. Appeals lie to the District Judge under s. 271, Agra Ten. Act, or under s. 242 (1) or 242 (3), Agra Ten. Act. It is conceded that s. 271, Agra Ten. Act, has no application because no issue was referred by the Revenue Court to the Civil Court. Section 242 (1) has also no application and the only relevant provision of law is s. 242 (3) (a). Under that provision an appeal shall lie to the District Judge in all suits except suits under Ch. XI, in which :

"a question of proprietary right has been in issue between the parties claiming such right in the Court of first instance, and is in issue in the appeal"

There can be no doubt that what was in issue between the parties in the Court of first instance was also in issue in the appeal, and the only thing that we have got to decide is whether a question of proprietary right has been in issue between the parties claiming such right. It is of some importance to note that under the former Tenancy Act (Local Act II of 1901) the words used in the corresponding section (s. 177) are :

"a question of proprietary title has been in issue in the Court of first instance and is a matter in issue in the appeal."

The words "between the parties claiming such right" did not find a place in s. 177. We have, therefore, got to decide whether any question of proprietary right has been in issue between the plaintiff and the defendant who have been claiming such right in the Court of first instance and are claiming the same right in the appeal. The plaintiff alleges himself to be the zamindar and the defendant admits that the plaintiff is a zamindar. The defendant further pleads that he is a lessee of proprietary rights or, in other words, a thekadar as defined in s. 199, Tenancy Act. The word 'lease' has not been defined in the Tenancy Act except in the interpretation clause s. 3 (13) where it is said that it includes a qabuliyat, but it is clear that under the Tenancy Act a lease is hardly a transfer of proprietary interest in land, for the Act speaks of leases by landholders to tenants and by tenants to sub-tenants. Even a thekadar has been defined as a farmer or other lessee of proprietary rights and not as a transferee of proprietary rights in some form or another, and in Ch. XIII, more particularly in s. 220, it is provided that suits between a thekadar and his lessor shall be instituted in the Revenue Court. Although a thekadar is not expressly included in the definition of tenant, the provisions relating to tenants apply in the majority of cases to thekadars as well. It will, therefore, be inappropriate to say that, when a defendant admits that the plaintiff is the proprietor of the holding and the defendant is a thekadar, a question of proprietary right is in issue between the plaintiff and the defendant claiming such right. We, therefore, think that the view taken by the learned District Judge is correct and our order is that the appeal be returned for presentation to the Commissioner. As we indicated before, the attitude taken by the defendant was inconsistent, and we direct that the parties will bear their own costs of this reference.

Order accordingly.

Judgment.—The only point urged by Mr. V. Ramaswami Ayyer is that his clients should have been given relief under s. 41, T. P. Act, by non-suiting the plaintiff. I do not think this contention is tenable. Under s. 41 it must be shown that defendant No. 1 was the ostensible owner with the consent, express or implied, of the person interested in the property. There is no evidence of tacit consent. The mere fact that an entry was made in the survey register cannot be relied on as such consent. I therefore dismiss the second appeal with costs. Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XLVII, rr. 4 (1), 7, O. XLIII, r. 1 (w), s. 115—Interpretation of O. XLVII, r. 4 (1), — Appeal under O. XLIII, r. 1 (w), if subject to O. XLVII, r. 7—Revision, when permissible.

Sub-rule (1) of r. 4, O. XLVII, Civil P. O., cannot be interpreted to mean that its provision is contravened if the Court grants the application though there is not sufficient ground for a review. Whether there is no such ground must appear to the Court which hears the application. If the Court considers that the application should be granted, the case falls under sub-r. 2.

The right of appeal granted by O. XLIII, r. 1 (w), Civil P. O., is subject to the grounds set out in O. XLVII, r. 7, 94 Ind. Cas. 591 (2) and 116 Ind. Cas. 645 (3), dissented from, 163 Ind. Cas. 992 (4) and 35 Ind. Cas. 15 (5), followed.

Under s. 115, Civil P. O., revision is permissible only where the order complained of is not appealable.

Misc. A. from the original order of the Sub-Judge at Darbhanga, dated March 5, 1937.

Messrs. B. N. Mitter, R. Chowdhury and Ajit K. Mitter, for the Appellants.

Mr. Bhabananda Mukharji, for the Respondents.

Chatterji, J.—This appeal arises out of proceedings in a partition suit instituted so far back as in the year 1917. Without going into the long history of the case, it will be enough to state that in pursuance of the preliminary decree which was passed in 1919, a Commissioner was appointed who eventually submitted his report on April 26, 1925. According to his findings, the plaintiffs were entitled to get various sums from the defendant who was the karta of the joint family. The defendant filed objections to the report and those were disposed of by the Subordinate Judge by his order dated January 17, 1936. Accepting the Commissioner's report in part, he passed a final decree. Before the final decree was actually prepared, the defendant made an application on February 17, 1936, for review of the judgment dated January 17, 1936. In the application certain items in the Commissioner's report were specifically referred to and it was prayed that "those items should be re-considered with a view to rectify the mistakes and inequities that have crept in owing to a misapprehension." This application was presented to and heard by the same Judge who passed the final decree on January 17, 1936. He granted the application by his order dated March 5, 1937, and by the same order he passed a fresh final decree. The present miscellaneous appeal is directed against that order in so far as it granted the application for review. The substantial point urged in this appeal is that there were no sufficient grounds upon which the learned Subordinate Judge could review the final decree which was passed on January 17, 1936. In support of his contention Mr. Mitter has relied upon the decision of the Privy Council in Chhajju Ram v. Neki (1) where their Lordships laid down that "any other sufficient reason" in O. XLVII, r. 1, Civil P. O. means a reason sufficient on grounds at least analogous to those specified immediately previously. In the present case, however, the learned Subordinate Judge has held that there was an error apparent on the face of the record or something analogous to it. If that is so, certainly the review was permissible under the express provisions of O. XLVII, r. 1. But let us assume that the Subordinate Judge was wrong in his view of the facts with which he was dealing. The question is whether in this appeal we can examine the propriety of his decision. Indeed under O. XLIII, r. 1, (w) an order granting an application for review is appealable; but O. XLVII, r. 7, specifies certain limits within which such an appeal can be entertained. The relevant portion of O. XLVII, r. 7, runs as follows:

"An order of the Court rejecting the application shall not be appealable; but an order granting an application may be objected to on the ground that the application was : (a) in contravention of the provisions of r. 2, (b) in contravention of the provisions of r. 4, or (c) after the expiration of the period of limitation prescribed therefor and without sufficient cause. Such objection may be taken at once by an appeal from the order granting the application or in any appeal from the final decree or order passed or made in the suit."

Thus it is clear that an order granting an application for review can be objected to only upon the three grounds specified in the above rule and no other. Now in the present case, the first and the third grounds unquestionably do not exist. An attempt was made by Mr. Mitter to support the appeal on the second ground, namely that the application was in contravention of the provisions of r. 4. That rule runs as follows :

"(1) Where it appears to the Court that there is not sufficient ground for a review, it shall reject the application.

(2) Where the Court is of opinion that the application for review should be granted, it shall grant the same ; Provided that (a) no such application shall be granted without previous notice to the opposite party, to enable him to appear and be heard in support of the decree or order, a review of which is applied for; and (b) no such application shall be granted on the ground of discovery of new matter or evidence which the applicant alleges was not within his knowledge, or could not be adduced by him when the decree or order was passed or made, without strict proof of such allegation."

Sub-r. (1) does not obviously apply as it refers to a case where the Court rejects the application. It cannot be interpreted to mean that its provision is contravened if the Court grants the application though there is not sufficient ground for a review. Whether there is no such ground must appear to the Court which hears the application. If the Court considers that the application should be granted, the case falls under sub-r. 2. Mr. Mitter wanted to rely on proviso (b) of that sub-rule, but the application was not based on the ground of discovery of any new matter or evidence nor was it granted on any such ground. The position therefore is that none of the grounds on which the order granting the application for review could be attacked by way of appeal exists in the present case. Mr. Mitter has referred us to a decision of the Bombay High Court in Daso Keshav Panchbhavi v. Karbasappa Kariyappa (2) and to the decision of the Nagpur Court in Mukundsa v. Motiram, 116 Ind. Cas. 645 (3). In both these cases it was no doubt held that the right of appeal granted by O. XLIII, r. 1 (w) is not restricted by the grounds set out in O. XLVII, r. 7. But there are decisions of this Court on this point in Jadunandan Singh v. Shankar Sahu (4) and Sundar Lal v. Upendra Nath (5). In the latter case, though it was a decision of a Single Judge, it was held that an appeal under O. XLIII, r. 1 (w) is subject to the provisions of O. XLVII, r. 7. It was further held that an order granting a review merely for sufficient ground is not appealable. In Jadunandan Singh v. Shankar Sahu (4) a Division Bench of this Court held that when a review is granted, an appeal is permissible only on the grounds specified in O. XLVII, r. 7. The High Courts of Calcutta, Rangoon and Lahore have also taken the same view as this Court. This being the state of the authorities on the point, I am afraid we are unable to follow the decisions of the Bombay High Court and the Nagpur Court referred to. It is to be observed that the Bombay High Court subsequent to its aforesaid decision deleted O. XLIII, r. 1 (w) by virtue of its rule-making power.

Mr. Mitter further contends that the order now under appeal being the final judgment in the suit, it may be attacked on grounds other than those specified in O. XLVII, r. 7. The answer to this is that this is not a regular appeal against the final decree but a miscellaneous appeal from the order granting the application for review and it cannot be treated as a regular appeal in view of the fact that the question of court-fee would arise. Mr. Mitter has asked us to treat the appeal as a regular appeal on payment of the deficit court-fee; but it is now too late to accede to that prayer. The appeal was presented on July 19, 1937 and was not properly constituted as a regular appeal being insufficiently stamped. There is no justification for converting it into a regular appeal so long after the expiration of the prescribed period of limitation. Mr. Mitter lastly asked us to treat the memorandum of appeal as an application in revision as was done in Sikandar Khan v. Baland Khan (6). Under s. 115, Civi

P. O., revision is permissible only where the order complained of is not appealable. In the present case the order sought to be revised amounts to a final decree and as such is appealable. Consequently, s. 115 cannot come in. In the Lahore case, where the facts were quite peculiar, there was no such appealable decree or order. I would dismiss the appeal, but in the circumstances, the parties should bear their own costs.

Provincial Insolvency Act (V of 1920), ss. 6 (b), (c), 9, 53, 54—Partition between brothers, if transfer to defeat or delay creditors—S. 6 (b), applicability—If applies where transfer has effect of preferring one creditor over other—Transfer in good faith and for valuable consideration—If void under s. 53—S. 54, applicability.

The partition between the brothers constituting a joint Hindu family, of the family houses cannot be treated as a transfer with intent to defeat or delay the creditors. When the debts are incurred by some of the brothers only, on account of a new business started by them, the share of the other brothers is not liable for such debts and the partition does not prejudice the creditor, 128 Ind. Cas. 404 (1), distinguished.

Clause (b) of s. 6 would apply only to those cases where transfer is intended to defeat all the creditors as a whole. It has no application to the case where the transfer has the effect of preferring some creditors over others.

Transfer of property to a third person made in good faith and for valuable consideration is not void under s. 53, even if it has the effect of preferring some creditors over others.

Section 54 covers transfers in favour of creditors only.

App. for revision of the order of the District Judge of Lucknow, dated May 1, 1937.

Messrs. Haider Husain and Ali Zaheer, for the Applicants.

Messrs. Makund Behari Lal and Govind Behari Lal, for the Opposite Parties.

Order.—This is the creditors' application in revision under s. 75, proviso (1) against an appellate order of the District Judge of Lucknow.

The applicants made an application praying that the Opposite-parties Nos. 2 and 3 and their brothers, Opposite-parties Nos. 1 and 4, be adjudged insolvents. This application was made under s. 9 of the Provincial Insolvency Act.

Here it is necessary to state that the family of Opposite-parties Nos. 2 and 3 owned two houses situated in Sarojini Devi Lane, city Lucknow. On December 16, 1936, a voluntary partition of that property was carried into effect by which the two houses were divided in six shares, one each for Opposite-parties Nos. 1 to 4, and one each for the two minor brothers of Opposite-parties not parties to this application. In appeal the application against Opposite-parties Nos. 1 and 4 was withdrawn and pressed only as regards Opposite-parties Nos. 2 and 3.

The two Courts below have dismissed the application.

The grounds of the application were, firstly that a voluntary partition had been carried into effect between the Opposite-parties Nos. 2 and 3 and their brothers within three months before the presentation of the petition with an intention to defraud the creditors, and secondly, that on January 12, 1936, Opposite-parties Nos. 2 and 3 had sold their shares in the two houses to their mother for a consideration of Rs. 1,000. Out of the sale consideration Rs. 600 and Rs. 150 were paid to Lachhman Prasad and Ganga Charan, creditors. The object of this sale was to prefer two creditors over others.

A creditor is entitled to make an application to have a debtor declared insolvent under conditions mentioned in sub-cl. (a) to (c) of cl. (1) of s. 9. It is admitted that the conditions laid down in cl. (a) and (b) have been fulfilled and the only question in controversy was whether any act of insolvency had occurred within three months before the presentation of the petition. The two acts of insolvency alleged were the partition dated December 16, 1936, evidenced by Ex. 1, and the sale deed dated January 12, 1937, evidenced by Ex. 2. Acts of insolvency are defined in s. 6 of the Provincial Insolvency Act. The partition between the brothers of the two family houses on December 16, 1936, cannot be treated as a transfer with intent to defeat or delay the creditors. So far as the debt due to the applicants is concerned, it has been found that it had been incurred by Opposite-parties Nos. 2 and 3 only on account of a new business started by them. The share of other brothers was by no means liable for the payment of this debt. The share of Opposite parties Nos. 2 and 3 being alone liable, the partition of 1936 did not prejudice the creditors of Opposite parties Nos. 2 and 3 in any way.

Reliance was placed in the Court below, as well as in this Court, on a decision of the Nagpur High Court in Bajirao v. Daulatrao reported in 128 Ind. Cas. p 404 (1). This was a case where the father in a joint Hindu family had allowed a partition between himself and his sons. The interests of the sons were liable for the debt of the father's creditors and on that footing it was held that transferring the share by partition from the possession of the father into the possession of the sons amounted to a transfer with an intent to defeat or delay the creditors. That case has obviously no application to the facts of the present case.

As regards the sale deed, dated January 12, 1937, it appears to me that the contention in the two Courts below that the said transfer fell within cl. (b) of s. 6 but that clause is excluded on the admitted case of the creditors, that out of the consideration money Rs. 750 had been paid to two of the creditors. Clause (b) of s. 6 in my opinion would apply only to those cases where transfer is intended to defeat all the creditors as a whole. It has no application to the case where the transfer has the effect of preferring some creditors over others.

The learned Counsel for the applicants has placed reliance upon cl. (c) of s. 6 and has urged that the debtors have in the present case made such a transfer as is liable to be avoided as a fraudulent preference under ss. 53 and 54 of the Provincial Insolvency Act. This argument does not seem to have been pressed before any of the Courts below. After examining ss. 53 and 54, I am of opinion that the contention must fail. The transfer in question would not be void under s. 53 for the simple reason that there is evidence in the case that the transfer was made in good faith and for valuable consideration, the entire amount of which was paid in cash before the Sub-Registrar. As regards s. 54, I am of opinion that it would cover transfers in favour of a creditor only. It has been argued that in effect the transfer is in favour of a creditor because on January 12, 1937, two transactions took place simultaneously, one the sale deed in favour of the mother and the other the mortgage deed by the mother in favour of Raj Dulari, the wife of Lachhman Prasad, the creditor, and that as a result of these two transactions, Lachhman Prasad became the transferee of the shares of Opposite parties Nos. 2 and 3 by a mortgage and gained to the extent of Rs. 600. The argument could only be considered if this case had been properly put in the Courts below and attempt had been made to prove that the mother of the Opposite parties Nos. 2 and 3 and the wife of Lachhman Prasad were mentioned in the transactions fictitiously and that the real transferors were Opposite parties Nos. 2 and 3 and the real transferee was Lachhman Prasad. In the absence of any evidence to that effect, it is not possible to give effect to this contention.

It is not possible, therefore, to hold on the facts found by the two Courts below that the act of insolvency complained of falls within s. 6 (c). The result is that no act of insolvency as required by sub-cl. (c) of s. 9 (1) of the Provincial Insolvency Act has been established in the present case.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Corporation—Extraneous structure brought on to highway—Negligence of Municipality in maintaining it in good repairs—Person suffering injury, if can sue for damages.

An extraneous structure brought on to a highway must be maintained in good repair by the authority bringing that structure on to the highway, and where a Municipality is negligent in doing so and owing to it, a person suffers injury, he is entitled to sue the Municipality for damages. White v. Hindley Local Board of Health (2), followed.

S. A. from the decree of the Senior Sub-Judge, Ambala, dated May 9, 1938.

Facts.—The plaintiff owned a tonga and a horse and pined it for hire, Abdul Gani being the driver. On November 13, 1936, while the tonga was passing over the culvert near the water reservoir and opposite the grain market, Ambala City, the hind leg of the horse got entangled in the broken grating and thus sustained injuries which incapacitated the horse for a period of 13 days and permanently reduced its value by one-half. The total loss claimed including the medical expenses and loss of hire and depreciation in the value of horse was Rs. 100. Notice was served on the Municipal Committee on January 18, 1937, but the Committee refused to pay any damages.

Mr. Mahmud Ali, for the Appellant.

Mr. Qabul Chand Mittal, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—The only question arising for decision in this case is whether the case falls within the purview of Achraailal Harilal v. Ahmedabad Municipality (1), which itself follows a certain class of cases where it has been held that omission to repair a highway does not entitle a person to sue the Corporation or other authority responsible for the maintenance of the highway, or whether the case falls within the purview of the other class of cases wherein it was held that an extraneous structure brought on to a highway must be maintained in good repair by the authority bringing that structure on to the highway and, therefore, the plaintiff could in the present case sue the Municipality for damages. The distinction between the cases is often difficult, but the general principle appears to me to be clear. On this particular point there is a case, White v. Hindly Local Board of Health (2), which is exactly in point and on all fours with the present case. Nothing has been pointed out on either side as to why this case should not be followed or why it does not apply. Following therefore this case, I would accept the appeal and hold that the plaintiff is entitled to sue for damages. The amount of damages has been fixed at Rs. 40 by the learned Senior Subordinate Judge and this is a finding of fact which I see no reason to disturb. The plaintiff's suit is, therefore, decreed for Rs. 40 with proportionate costs throughout.

s. 144—He must exercise discretion conferred by s. 523 in respect of property seized by Police—Proper order to be made—Discretion not judicially exercised—Interference by High Court.

Where a Magistrate after having refused to take proceedings under s. 144, Criminal P. C., thinking that he was not competent to investigate the question as to who was in possession of the property seized, directs the Police to retain it in their custody: and, if it was liable to decay, to sell it, and deposit the money in safe custody pending orders from a proper Court, he has not judicially exercised the discretion which s. 523 confers on him and the High Court can, therefore, interfere with his order. In such a case he must exercise the discretion conferred by s. 523 and if he decides that one or other of the parties was in possession at the time the Police seized the property, the proper order to be passed will be to restore that party to possession. If the Magistrate is unable to decide who is in possession, it will be his duty to issue a proclamation under sub-s. (2) of s. 523 and proceed in accordance with the provision of that sub-section.

Cr. R. form an order of the Sub-Divisional Officer, Patna City, dated May 22, 1938, January 20 and March 15, 1939.

Messrs. Harishwar Prasad Sinha, D. P. Sinha and R. P. Jaruhar, for the Petitioners.

Messrs. K. Sahay and J. Rahman, for the Opposite Party.

Order.—In 1933 a certain plot of land was settled with the petitioners by the landlord for one year. Although the settlement was for this limited period, it appears that the petitioner did not give up possession on the expiry of the period. In 1938, the landlord purported to settle the land with the opposite party. The present proceedings date from a letter which the landlord wrote to the Police informing them that the petitioners were cutting the unripe paddy growing on the plot. On receipt of this information, the Sub-Inspector went to the plot in question and found both parties there and that the crop had been cut. In view of the allegations in the landlord's letter to the Police it would appear that the crop had been cut by the petitioners.

The Police reported the matter to the Magistrate apprehending that there might be a breach of the peace and suggesting that proceedings should be taken under s. 144, Criminal P. C. As the crop had already been cut, the Magistrate disagreed with the Police suggestion that there might be a breach of the peace. He ordered that the paddy should be returned to the person from whom it had been recovered. The Police thereupon reported that they had not recovered the paddy from any of the parties, meaning that they had merely taken it from the land on which it had been lying after having been cut. They therefore asked for the Magistrate's direction. The Magistrate then observed that it was not possible to pass an order about the disposal of the property without coming to a definite conclusion about its possession. He considered that, having refused to take proceedings under s. 144, Criminal P. O. he was not competent to investigate the question as to who was in possession of the paddy. He therefore directed the Police to retain it in their custody; and, if it was liable to decay, to sell it, and deposit the money in safe custody pending orders from a proper Court. It is against that order that the petitioners have moved this Court. The sections of the Criminal P. O. empowering a Police Officer to seize property are ss. 51, 54, 165, 166 and 520. The last mentioned section is in these terms:

"Any Police Officer may seize any property which may be alleged or suspected to have been stolen, or which may be found under circumstances which create suspicion of the commission of any offence."

It is clear that neither s. 51 nor s. 54 nor s. 165 nor s. 166 applied to the facts of this case. On the other hand the landlord had written to the Police, informing them that the petitioners were cutting unripe paddy on land which did not belong to them. This allegation, if true, was an allegation that the petitioners were committing mischief and therefore would have entitled the officer to seize the paddy under s. 520, Criminal P. O. As there appears to be no other authority for the seizure of the paddy in this case, it must be presumed that it was in the exercise of the powers under this section that the Police acted. The question now is as to how the money which represents the paddy that was seized is to be disposed of. The only section of the Code which appears to have any application is s. 523. The material portion of the first sub-section of that section is as follows:

"The seizure by any Police Officer of property taken under s. 51 or found under circumstances which create suspicion of the commission of any offence, shall be forthwith reported to a Magistrate, who shall make such order as he thinks fit respecting the disposal of such property or the delivery of such property to the person entitled to the possession thereof, or, if such person cannot be ascertained, respecting the custody and production of such property."

The second sub-section is in this language:

"If the person so entitled is known, the Magistrate may order the property to be delivered to him on such conditions (if any) as the Magistrate thinks fit. If such person is unknown, the Magistrate may detain it and shall, in such case, issue a proclamation specifying the articles of which such property consists, and requiring any person who may have a claim thereto to appear before him and establish his claim within six months from the date of such proclamation."

Had the Magistrate in this case purported to act under the powers conferred by this section, this Court would not have interfered with his order. But as the Magistrate has taken the view that he has no power at all to deal with the matter, it is clear that he has not judicially exercised the discretion which the section confers on him. The case must therefore go back to the Magistrate to enable him to exercise the discretion conferred on him by s. 523, Criminal P. O. In considering the matter, the Magistrate will bear in mind s. 110, Evi. Act, which provides:

"When the question is whether any person is owner of anything of which he is shown to be in possession, the burden of proving that he is not the owner is on the person who affirms that he is not the owner."

If the Magistrate decides that one or other of the parties was in possession at the time the Police seized the property, the proper order to be passed will be to restore that party to possession. If the Magistrate is unable to decide who is in possession, it will be his duty to issue a proclamation under sub-s. (2) of s. 523 and proceed in accordance with the provision of that sub-section. The order of the Magistrate complained against is set aside and the case will be sent back to be disposed of in accordance with the directions given in this judgment.

ODUH CHIEF COURT

First Civil Appeal No. 8 of 1938

U. P. Regulation of Sales Act (XXVI of 1934), ss. 5, 3, 4—Ss. 3, 4 and 5, whether repugnant to s. 20, Oudh Laws Act (XVIII of 1876)—S. 5, if excludes application of s. 20, Oudh Laws Act.

There is no repugnancy between the provision of s. 20, Oudh Laws Act requiring permission of the Local Govt to a sale of ancestral property and the provisions whereby the Deputy Commissioner executes a decree under the U. P. Regulation of Sales Act. It is true that it does not appear at what stage the permission of the Local Govt. is to be obtained, but it seems obvious that permission must be taken after the valuation has been carried out. The provisions of the earlier Act are capable of being combined with the provisions of the latter Act, and the mere fact that the provisions of s. 5 of the Regulation of Sales Act have a mandatory tone, does not exclude the application of s. 20 of the Oudh Laws Act. *Rajdei v. F. O. A. against the order of the Additional Special Judge, First Grade, Bara Banki, dated December 15, 1937.

Messrs. M. Wasim, Durga Dyal and Ali Hasan, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Mazzam Ali and Hyder Husain, for Respondent No. 1.

Judgment.—This is a first civil appeal from the decree of the Additional Special Judge, first grade, Bara Banki, dismissing the claim of the claimant appellant under the provisions of s. 11 of the Encumbered Estates Act. This is a claim with reference to a 16-annas zamindari share of mahal Gur Bakhsh Singh, village Baddupur, Pargana Fatehpur, district Bara Banki. This property was mortgaged in favour of one Jagannath on February 10, 1919. On May 1, 1921, it was again mortgaged to Hargobind Prasad, the present claimant. It appears that both Hargobind Prasad and Jagannath filed suits on foot of their mortgages, the latter making Hargobind Prasad a party to his suit. Hargobind Prasad got a preliminary decree on July 19, 1929, and a final decree for Rs. 31,125 on October 25, 1930. Jagannath got a decree on August 27, 1932. The final decree of Hargobind Prasad was transferred to the Deputy Commissioner under the provisions of s. 68 of the Civil P. O., on November 17, 1933. Proceedings were still pending in the Deputy Commissioner's Court when Mst. Mahraj Kuar as owner of the property filed an application under s. 4 of the Encumbered Estates Act. In due course Hargobind Prasad in whose favour the Deputy Commissioner had made an order of transfer of this very property on August 22, 1935, under the provisions of s. 5 read with ss. 3 and 4 of the U. P. Regulation of Sales Act (Act XXVI of 1934), filed a petition under s. 11 of the Encumbered Estates Act, because Mst. Mahraj Kuar had in her written statement under s. 8 (1) (b) of the latter Act, included this property in the statement of the nature and extent of her proprietary rights in land. This transfer to Hargobind Prasad had been made at the figure of Rs. 40,093-2-11. Under s. 3 of the Regulation of Sales Act, an appeal is provided to the Board of Revenue from the decision of the Collector fixing the net profits or the multiple of such net profits under sub-s. (2). Mst. Mahraj Kuar filed a review application which was dismissed on October 24, 1935. She either subsequently or contemporaneously filed an appeal which was dismissed by the Board of Revenue on August 24, 1936. Meanwhile on November 2, 1935, Hargobind Prasad got a sale certificate, and on February 28, 1936, he got this sale certificate registered. The procedure in regard to these matters has since been altered and a regular sale-deed is now executed by the Collector or Deputy Commissioner when an order of transfer is made under s. 5 of the Regulation of Sales Act. That procedure, however, was not in force at this time.

Mst. Mahraj Kuar had also on September 3, 1935, applied for amendment of the final decree for sale in favour of Hargobind Prasad under the provisions of the U. P. Agriculturists' Relief Act, but that application was dismissed by the Subordinate Judge, on November 18, 1935, and an appeal from this order was dismissed by the District Judge on September 26, 1936. The Subordinate Judge held that the sale was complete with the passing of the order of transfer under s. 5 of the Regulation of Sales Act, and that in consequence the decree had been satisfied and could not be amended. The District Judge did not agree with the Subordinate Judge being of opinion that the transfer order of August 22, 1935, did not effect a transfer of the property which was only affected by the issue of the sale certificate on November 2, 1935, but he was of opinion that the decree could not be amended unless and until the transfer made on November 2, 1935, was set aside. As the Civil Court had no jurisdiction to interfere and set aside the sale made by the Collector, he was of opinion that even if he set aside the order of the Subordinate Judge, it would not help the appellant unless and until the sale was set aside.

The contention of the claimant Hargobind Prasad under s. 11 of the Encumbered Estates Act was that by virtue of the transfer of August 22, 1935, he had become sole proprietor of the property in question, that Mst. Mahraj Kuar applicant under the Encumbered Estates Act had no title to the property, and was therefore not entitled to show it as her property in the statement filed under s. 8. He further contended that Mst. Mahraj Kuar was estopped from denying his title in view of the decisions of the Revenue Courts and that she could not in the Special Judge's Court challenge the transfer made by the Deputy Commissioner. The defence put forward was that the title of the claimant objector had never been perfected, that before he obtained his sale certificate the application under the Encumbered Estates Act had been made, and therefore the proceedings of the Revenue Court came within the mischief of s. 7 of the Encumbered Estates Act, and were ultra vires. It was also contended that the transfer under s. 4 of the Regulation of Sales Act conferred no title on Hargobind Prasad because the provisions of s. 20 of the Oudh Laws Act had not been complied with. That section provides as follows :

"So much of s. 60 of the Civil P. O., 1908, as renders land liable to sale in execution of a decree shall be subject to the following restrictions :—

"No ancestral land shall be sold in satisfaction of a decree without the permission of the Lieutenant-Governor" For Lieutenant-Governor we may now read the Local Govt."

A number of issues were framed. On Issue No. 4 (a) "Was the permission of the Local Govt. necessary to complete the transfer under the Regulation of Sales Act," the learned Additional Special Judge held that the permission of the Local Govt. was necessary to complete the sale or transfer in favour of the decree-holder Hargobind Prasad as required by s. 20 of the Oudh Laws Act. On Issue No. 4 (b), "if so, can the transfer be questioned by the applicant-debtor in this Court", he held that the applicant-debtor could question and challenge the sale or transfer, and he held that the order of August 22, 1935, was ultra vires and a mere nullity. On Issue No. 3 he held that the principle of res judicata did not apply so as to bar the applicant-debtor from denying Hargobind Prasad's title. On Issue No. 2 he held that the order of August 22, 1935, being ultra vires, the transfer thereby and the subsequent grant of the sale certificate on November 2, 1935, did not confer any title on Hargobind Prasad. He accordingly held on Issue No. 1 that the property in question was liable to attachment, mortgage, or sale in satisfaction of the debts of Mst. Maharaj Kuar applicant under the Encumbered Estates Act.

A number of points have been raised in the grounds of appeal, but only two questions have been argued before us. It is contended in the first place that s. 20 of the Oudh Laws Act cannot be held to be applicable to sales or transfers of land effected under the provisions of s. 5 of the Regulation of Sales Act. The second point is in answer to a contention put forward on behalf of the respondent that there was in any case no effective sale resulting from the order of the Deputy Commissioner of August 22, 1935, and that the transfer having really been effected only by the issue of sale certificate on November 2, 1935, was null and void, as falling within the mischief of s. 7 of the Encumbered Estates Act, because that sale or transfer was effected subsequent to the application under the Act.

The gist of the contention of the learned Counsel in regard to s. 20 of the Oudh Laws Act is that the procedure prescribed in ss. 3, 4 and 5 of the U. P. Regulation of Sales Act leaves no scope whatsoever for the permission of the Local Govt. and it must, therefore, be held that this Act by implication repeals s. 20 of the Oudh Laws Act. He observes that the object of s. 20 was to protect owners of ancestral land from sales of their property by public auction for grossly inadequate prices, and that the Regulation of Sales Act has the same object in view, but substitutes a new procedure. He further observes that the provisions of this Act are clearly mandatory and must be presumed to be all embracing. Learned Counsel has referred us to Halsbury's Laws of England, Second Edition, Vol. 31, para. 684 at p. 524 and para. 759 at p. 561. Stated shortly, he contends that the provisions of the U. P. Regulation of Sales Act are so inconsistent with the provisions of s. 20 of the Oudh Laws Act that they must be regarded as by implication repealing that section. For this proposition he has to contend that the provisions of the Oudh Laws Act are plainly repugnant to those of the U. P. Regulation of Sales Act. It will be useful to quote some passages from Halsbury's Laws of England. In para. 684, p. 524, we find it stated :

"The common law gives place to statute law, and an older statute to one more recent, where the language and the objects of the latter are inconsistent with those of the former. Even though the words of a later statute taken strictly and grammatically repeal a former statute, they ought not to be so construed where it is clear that the intention of Parliament is that they should not be so construed; no statute operates to repeal or modify the existing law whether common or statutory, or to take away rights which existed before the statute was passed, especially if it involves a drastic departure from the principles of law existing when it was passed, unless the intention is clearly expressed or necessarily implied Prima facie a later statute, which is supplementary to and intended to be read with an earlier statute dealing with the same matter, is not of wider application than the earlier statute."

Paragraph 685 runs as follows :

"Affirmative statutes do not repeal precedent affirmatives statutes unless they are contrary or repugnant to them; for without negative or repealing words, expressed or implied, the intention of Parliament to alter what already existed is not apparent, and it is always to be presumed that there was no such intention."

In para. 759 at p. 561 in the Chapter dealing with "Repeals" it is stated:

"A statute is repealed by implication in the following cases, namely:

(1) If its provisions are plainly repugnant to those of a subsequent statute;

(2) If the two standing together would lead to wholly absurd consequences;

(3) If the entire subject-matter of the first is taken away by the second.

Repeal by implication, which, whenever it occurs, is the consequence of inconsistent legislation, is never to be favoured, and should not be imputed to Parliament. It is not to be implied from a mere recital, or schedule, or from non-user, and the mere omission in a later statute of an exception in an earlier one cannot by itself have the result of a substantive affirmation. It is necessary to see how the law would have stood without the original exception and the terms in which the repealed sections are re-enacted."
